This section (as well as secs 234, 236 and 239) applies not only to warrant cases, but also to summons cases, although it is not necessary to frame a charge in the latter cases. Therefore, the joint trial and conviction of 19 accused persons for 19 distinct offences in a summons case is contrary to the provisions of sec. 233-239 and is illegal—San Dun, 3 L.B.R. 52 (F.B.), 2 Cr.L.J. 739 (741, 744). See also Amolak, 34 Cr.L.J. 1175, 146 I.C. 116, 16 N.L.J. 196, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 368, 1933 Cr.C. 1552. The trial of a person for several distinct offences under the Bengal Excise Act in a summons case is illegal under this section—Upendra Nath, 41 Cal. 694 (702), 22 I.C. 425, 19 C.L.J. 53, 15 Cr.L.J. 73, 18 C.W.N. 486. See also Lakshmana, 33 Cr.L.J. 589, 138 I.C. 317, 1932 M.W.N. 1157, 1932 Cr.C. 501, 35 M.L.W. 661, A.I.R. 1932 Mad 497, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 553. In summons cases, the intimation prescribed by sec 242 takes the place of a formal charge, and each such charge has to be separately tried—Manna, 9 N.L.R. 42, 14 Cr.L.J. 230 (231). This section also applies where the accused is charged with a summons case and a warrant case—Maung Gale, 3 L.B.R. 113, 3 Cr.L.J. 350.

Not only does this section apply to original trials, but the Appellate Court is also bound by it; thus, an Appellate Court acting under section 423 (1) (b) and altering the finding cannot act in contravention of the provisions of section 233—Sahib Singh, 1905 P.R. 38, 2 Cr.L.J. 694.

Distinct offences:—When two offences are committed and each of these two offences has no connection with the other, they are distinct offences—Ram Subheg, 19 C.W.N. 972, 16 Cr.L.J. 631.

745. What are distinct offences:—(1) Offences falling under different sections of the I. P. C., e.g., theft and escape from lawful custody—Po Hla, 3 L.B.R. 221, 4 Cr.L.J. 369; kidnapping a boy and assaulting the mother who demanded the boy—Chekutty, 26 Mad. 454, theft and receiving stolen property—Karu Kalal v. Ram Charan, 28 Cal 10; Bishnu, 1 C.W.N. 35; receiving stolen property, and habitually dealing in stolen property—Uttom, 8 Cal. 634; criminal misappropriation and cheating—Parameshwar, 13 C.W.N. 1089, 10 Cr.L.J. 476; offences under secs 167 and 466, I. P. C.—Sreenath, 8 Cal 450; offences under secs 411 and 489C, I. P. C.—Mohendra, 29 Cal 387, 6 C.W.N. 550; offences under secs 380 and 457, I. P. C.—Krishnaji Anant, 34 Bom.L.R. 590; 33 Cr.L.J. 619; offences under secs 182 and 500, I. P. C.—Ram Sebak, 37 Cal. 604; offences under sec. 352 and sec. 504, I. P. Code—Krishnamurthi v. Narayanaswami, 49 M.L.J. 93, 26 Cr.L.J. 1618; offences under secs. 170 and 175, I. P. Code—Mathusami, 34 Cr.L.J. 1183, 146 I.C. 195, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 434, 1933 Cr.C. 662; theft in a dwelling house, and abetment of criminal breach of trust—Nikunja, 5 C.W.N. 294; abetment of falsification of document, and fraudulent destruction of document—Krishnasami, 26 Mad 125; theft and receiving illegal gratification for the restoration of stolen property—Nga Tvet, 4 L.B.R. 121, 7 Cr.L.J. 87; offences under secs 411 and 458, I. P. C.—Jagga, 1905 P.R. 51, 3 Cr.L.J. 76; simple hurt under sec. 323, I. P. C., and grievous hurt under section 325, I. P. C.—Radha Nath, 50 Cal 94 (97), 71 I.C. 120, A.I.R. 1922 Cal 573, 24 Cr.L.J. 72, 36 C.L.J. 149; Mendi Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 935, 149 I.C. 231, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 244, 11 O.W.N. 680; simple hurt to two different persons—Ram Subheg, 19 C.W.N. 972, 16 Cr.L.J. 641; offences under secs 160 and 323, I. P. Code—Ram Sukh, 47 All. 284, A.I.R. 1924 All. 299, 86 I.C. 64, 26 Cr.L.J. 688, 23 A.L.J. 8; Sankatha Rai, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 503, 163 I.C. 29, 37 Cr.L.J. 785; embezzlement of money (sec 409, I. P. C.) and falsification of accounts (sec 477A, I. P. C.) covering items other than those embezzled—Kalka Prosad, 38 All 42, 13 A.L.J. 1059. The offence of fabrication of false evidence relating to items partly or wholly unconnected with the charge of criminal breach of trust is undoubtedly a distinct offence—Ramchandra Rango v. Emp, 40 Cr.L.J. 579 (588), 181 I.C. 870, A.I.R. 1939 Bom 129, 41 Bom.L.R. 98.

Offences of giving false evidence by making two false statements on two different subjects, although in the course of one and the same deposition, must be tried separately as they are two distinct offences—Seymal Punamachand, 51 Bom 310, 29 Bom.L.R. 170, 28 Cr.L.J. 373. See Notes 723 and 775.

(3) Offences committed against different persons—Moharuddi v. Jadunath, 11 C.W.N. 54, 4 Cr.L.J. 415; e.g., misappropriation of three sums of money from three distinct persons—Tilakdhari, 6 C.L.J. 757, 6 Cr.L.J. 442 (443); or cheating three persons—Musai Singh, 41 Cal 66; or hurt caused to two persons—Ram Subheg, 19 C.W.N. 972, 16 Cr.L.J. 641; wrongful confinement of several persons on several occasions—Kumaramuthu, 25 M.L.T. 379, 20 Cr.L.J. 354; cheating ten different persons on different occasions—Girjadaya, 25 O.C. 151, 23 Cr.L.J. 687, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 250.

(4) Offences in respect of distinct sums of money, e.g., misappropriation of two sums of money collected on different dates—Asgar Ali, 40 Cal. 846; misappropriation by the accused of three sums of money collected in accordance with their duty as

Illustration.

A is accused of a theft on one occasion, and of causing grievous hurt on another occasion. A must be separately charged and separately tried for the theft and causing grievous hurt.

743. Object of section:—The object of this section is to see that the accused is not bewildered in his defence by having to meet several charges in no way connected with one another—Ram Subheg, 19 C.W.N. 972, 16 Cr.L.J. 641 (654). Another object is to see that the mind of the Court is not prejudiced against the prisoner if he were tried in one trial upon different charges resting upon different evidence. It might be difficult for the Court trying him on one of the charges not to be unduly influenced by the evidence against him on the other charges—Juala Prasad, 7 All. 174; Ram Subheg, supra. If in any case the accused are likely to be bewildered in their defence by having to meet many disconnected charges, or the prospect of a fair trial is likely to be endangered by the production of a mass of evidence directed to many matters and tending by its mere accumulation to induce an undue suspicion against the accused, then the propriety of combining the charges may be questioned—Fakirapa, 15 Bom. 491; Rasul, 3 Luck. 664, 5 O.W.N. 612, 29 Cr.L.J. 801 (802).

The general law as to the trial of accused persons is embodied in this section which provides for separate trial of each accused person for every distinct offence, and the exceptions are laid down in secs. 234, 235, 236 and 239 which must be strictly construed, so as not to defeat the right of independent trial conferred by the general law—Tepanidhi, 5 P.L.J. 11, 1 P.L.T. 180, 21 Cr.L.J. 161.

744. Scope of section:—These sections (233-239) relating to joinder of charges refer to the trial of the accused. The ruling in Subrahmaniya Aiyar's case, 25 Mad 61 (cited below) cannot be extended to preliminary inquiries held by Magistrates committing a case to the Sessions, so as to render the commitment itself illegal on the ground of misjoinder of offences or offenders at the preliminary inquiry—Gowunda, 26 Mad. 592; Sessions Judge, 35 M.L.J. 259, 20 Cr.L.J. 514. See Notes under sec 215. In a warrant case the trial proper does not begin until the accused is charged and called upon to answer. The stage up to then is only an inquiry and not a trial; and therefore where the accused are discharged under sec. 253 (i.e., before frame of charge), no question of illegality of joint trial arises—Manbodh v. Jhaboolal, 30 Cr.L.J. 404, 115 I.C. 164, A.I.R. 1929 Nag 237, Ind Rul. 1929 Nag. 100.

This section (as well as secs 234, 236 and 239) applies not only to warrant cases, but also to summons cases, although it is not necessary to frame a charge in the latter cases. Therefore, the joint trial and conviction of 19 accused persons for 19 distinct offences in a summons case is contrary to the provisions of sec. 233-239 and is illegal—San Dun, 3 L.B.R. 52 (F.B.), 2 Cr.L.J. 739 (741, 744). See also Amolak, 34 Cr.L.J. 1175, 146 I.C. 116, 16 N.L.J. 196, A.I.R. 1933 Nag 368, 1933 Cr.C. 1552. The trial of a person for several distinct offences under the Bengal Excise Act in a summons case is illegal under this section—Upendra Nath, 41 Cal. 694 (702), 22 I.C. 425, 19 Cr.L.J. 53, 15 Cr.L.J. 73, 18 C.W.N. 486. See also Lakshmana, 33 Cr.L.J. 589, 138 I.C. 317, 1932 M.W.N. 1157, 1932 Cr.C. 501, 35 M.L.W. 661, A.I.R. 1932 Mad 497, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad 553. In summons cases, the intimation prescribed by sec. 242 takes the place of a formal charge, and each such charge has to be separately tried—Manna, 9 N.L.R. 42, 14 Cr.L.J. 230 (231). This section also applies where the accused is charged with a summons case and a warrant case—Maung Gale, 3 L.B.R. 113, 3 Cr.L.J. 350.

Not only does this section apply to original trials, but the Appellate Court is also bound by it; thus, an Appellate Court acting under section 423 (1) (b) and altering the finding cannot act in contravention of the provisions of section 233—Sahib Singh, 1905 P.R. 38, 2 Cr.L.J. 694.

Distinct offences:—When two offences are committed and each of these two offences has no connection with the other, they are distinct offences—Ram Subheg, 19 C.W.N. 972, 16 CrLJ. 631

745. What are distinct offences:—(1) Offences falling under different sections of the I. P. C., e.g., theft and escape from lawful custody—Po Hla, 3 L.B.R. 221, 4 CrLJ 369, kidnapping a boy and assaulting the mother who demanded the boy—Chekutty, 26 Mad 454, theft and receiving stolen property—Karu Kalal v. Ram Charan, 28 Cal 10; Bishnu, 1 C.W.N. 35; receiving stolen property, and habitually dealing in stolen property—Uttom, 8 Cal 634; criminal misappropriation and cheating—Parameswar, 13 C.W.N. 1089, 10 CrLJ 476; offences under secs 167 and 466, I. P. C.—Sreenath, 8 Cal. 450; offences under secs 411 and 489C, I. P. C.—Mohendra, 20 Cal 387, 6 C.W.N. 550; offences under secs 380 and 457, I. P. C.—Krishnaji Anant, 34 Bom.L.R. 590; 33 CrLJ. 619; offences under secs. 182 and 500, I. P. C.—Ram Sebak, 37 Cal. 604; offences under sec 352 and sec. 504, I. P. Code—Krishnamurthi v. Narayanaswami, 49 M.L.J. 93, 26 CrLJ. 1618; offences under secs 170 and 175, I. P. Code—Mathusami, 34 CrLJ 1183, 146 I.C. 195, A.I.R. 1933 Mad 434, 1933 CrC. 662; theft in a dwelling house, and abetment of criminal breach of trust—Nikunja, 5 C.W.N. 294; abetment of falsification of document, and fraudulent destruction of document—Krishnasami, 26 Mad 125; theft and receiving illegal gratification for the restoration of stolen property—Nga Tuet, 4 L.B.R. 121, 7 CrLJ 87; offences under secs. 411 and 458, I. P. C.—Jagga, 1905 P.R. 51, 3 CrLJ. 76; simple hurt under sec. 323, I. P. C. and grievous hurt under section 325, I. P. C.—Radha Nath, 50 Cal. 94 (97), 71 I.C. 120, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 573, 24 CrLJ 72, 36 CLJ. 149; Mendi Lal, 35 CrLJ. 935, 149 I.C. 231, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 244, 11 O.W.N. 680; simple hurt to two different persons—Ram Subheg, 19 C.W.N. 972, 16 CrLJ. 641; offences under secs 160 and 323, I. P. Code—Ram Sukh, 47 All 284, A.I.R. 1924 All 299, 86 I.C. 64, 26 CrLJ 688, 23 ALJ 8; Sankatha Rai, A.I.R. 1936 Pat 503, 163 I.C. 29, 37 CrLJ. 785; embezzlement of money (sec 409, I. P. C.) and falsification of accounts (sec 477A, I. P. C.) covering items other than those embezzled—Kalka Prosad, 38 All 42, 13 ALJ. 1059. The offence of fabrication of false evidence relating to items partly or wholly unconnected with the charge of criminal breach of trust is undoubtedly a distinct offence—Ramchandra Rango v. Emp., 40 CrLJ 579 (588), 181 I.C. 870, A.I.R. 1939 Bom 129, 41 Bom.L.R. 98

(2) Offences committed on different occasions, even though the offences be of the same kind (i.e., falling under the same section of the I. P. C.); e.g., two attempts to cheat committed on two different dates—Johan, 10 C.W.N. 520, 3 CrLJ. 111; or wrongful confinement and torture committed at several distinct times and places—Kumaramuthu, 20 CrLJ 354, 25 M.L.T. 379; receiving stolen articles on different occasions though the articles were the proceeds of a single burglary—Padmanabha, 2 P.L.T. 47, 21 CrLJ 619; offences under secs. 380 and 457, I. P. C., on different dates—Krishnaji Anant, 33 CrLJ 619, 34 Bom.L.R. 590, 1932 CrC 389, A.I.R. 1932 Bom 277.

Offences of giving false evidence by making two false statements on two different subjects, although in the course of one and the same deposition, must be tried separately as they are two distinct offences—Sejmal Punamachand, 51 Bom 310, 29 Bom.L.R. 170, 28 CrLJ 373. See Notes 723 and 775

(3) Offences committed against different persons—Moharuddi v. Jadunath, 11 C.W.N. 54, 4 CrLJ 415; e.g., misappropriation of three sums of money from three distinct persons—Tilakdhari, 6 CLJ 757, 6 CrLJ 442 (443); or cheating three persons—Musai Singh, 41 Cal 66; or hurt caused to two persons—Ram Subheg, 19 C.W.N. 972, 16 CrLJ. 641; wrongful confinement of several persons on several occasions—Kumaramuthu, 25 M.L.T. 379, 20 CrLJ. 354; cheating ten different persons on different occasions—Girjadayal, 25 O.C. 151, 23 CrLJ 687, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 250.

(4) Offences in respect of distinct sums of money, e.g., misappropriation of two sums of money collected on different dates—Asgar Ali, 40 Cal. 846; misappropriation by the accused of three sums of money collected in accordance with their duty as fax-collectors from three persons, even though on the same date—Tilakdhari, 6 C.L.J. 757, 6 Cr.L.J. 442 (443). Forgery of two withdrawal cheques and withdrawal of money from the bank on the basis of the same—Sachchidananda, 34 Cr.L.J. 592, 14 P.L.T. 580, 1933 Cr.C. 1030, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 488, 144 I.C. 936.

(5) Offences under sec. 19 (d) of the Indian Arms Act and under sec. 411, I. P. C., are distinct offences which cannot be tried together in one trial, provisions of secs. 234, 235, 236 and 239 being not applicable to a case like this—Onkar Singh, 35 Cr.L.J. 1417, 151 I.C. 840, 11 O.W.N. 1206, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 457, 1934 Cr.C. 1308.

(6) Where the accused was charged with fraudulently or dishonestly using as genuine a forged transit pass-book, specially mentioning three transit passes, held that there should have been a separate charge with regard to each transit pass and it was improper to frame a charge with respect to the whole book specifying three particulars of forgery in it and that this would not be adequate ground for interference as the accused was not misled by the error—Supdt. and Rembr. of Legal Affairs, Bengal v Daulat Ram, 59 Cal. 1233, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 504, 138 I.C. 705, 33 Cr.L.J. 685, 36 C.W.N. 505, 55 C.L.J. 349, 1932 Cr.C. 337, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 390.

(7) The trial of the accused in respect of the offences of his being the author, the editor, the printer and the publisher of the offending article in one trial is illegal as these are distinct offences under sec. 3 (1) of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922, and are not so connected together as to form the same transaction—Diwan Singh, 36 Cr.L.J. 744 (752), 155 I.C. 197, A.I.R. 1935 Nag 90, 1935 Cr.C. 418.

(8) Swearing a false affidavit and using that false affidavit are distinct offences even though they are parts of the same transaction—Abdul Hamid, 37 Cr.L.J. 492, 161 I.C. 763, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 174, 14 Rang. 24, 1936 Cr.C. 271.

(9) Where the accused were divided into two groups, playing at different places and there is nothing so to connect them as to allow it to be said that they were all engaged in one and the same transaction, the charge discloses against the accused two distinct and separate offences under sec. 12, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (IV of 1887) which cannot be tried together in one trial—Shivalomal, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 304, 172 I.C. 80, 39 Cr.L.J. 59, 10 RS 135, 32 S.L.R. 30.

(10) No less than six counts of bribery relating to different dates and different persons and six counts of false personation relating to different persons but to different times of the same day are distinct offences which cannot be tried together in one trial—Appalaswami v Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 209.

746. What are not distinct offences:—Offences of the same kind committed on one occasion though consisting of parts are not different offences but are to be treated as constituting one offence, e.g., the making of any number of false statements in the same deposition is one aggregate case of perjury, and charges need not be multiplied according to the number of false statements—Rakhal Chandra, 36 Cal 808, 10 Cr.L.J. 150.

The stealing of several bullocks from the same man at the same time is but one offence, and there need not be as many charges as the number of bullocks stolen—Raghu, 1881 A.W.N. 154. Theft of two articles belonging to two different persons, committed at one and the same time, constitutes only one offence of theft and not two; and hence two convictions and sentences are not legal—Krishna Shahaji, Ratanlal 927; Bhura, 26 Cr.L.J. 1495 (Nag.).

Receiving on one occasion various items of stolen property, the result of various thefts is only one offence under sec. 411, I. P. C.—Irapa, 3 Bom.L.R. 187. If a person is found in possession of a number of stolen articles, the offence committed by the accused (receiving stolen property) is a single offence and not a number of offences, and it makes no difference whether the articles belong to a single owner or to different owners. But if there were evidence that the accused received the articles at different times or from different thieves, the case would be different—Sheo Charan, 45 All. 485 (486), A.I.R. 1923 All. 547, 73 I.C. 520, 24 Cr.L.J. 632; Ramnath, 36 Cr.L.J. 342, 153 I.C. 423, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 483, 13 Pat. 161, A.L.R. 1934 Pat. 273, 1934 Cr.C. 1074, dissenting.

from Ram Sarup, 9 C.W.N. 1027, 2 Cr.L.J. 847. A person should not be charged, tried and convicted in two separate trials merely because two bullocks found in his possession belonged to two separate owners, although they were stolen from a grazing ground at the same time—Nga Po E, 37 Cr.L.J. 530, 162 I.C. 137, A.I.R. 1936 Rang 94, 1936 Cr.C. 118, following Nga Po, (1872-1892) L.B.R. 168. The mere fact that property stolen on two different occasions is found at one and the same time in the possession of an accused is not of itself sufficient to prove that the accused has committed two different offences under sec. 411, I. P. C. (retaining stolen property), as it is quite possible that the property though stolen on two different occasions may have been received from the same thief at the same time—Makhan, 15 All 317. So also, the mere fact that the goods stolen from two different persons are found in the possession of the accused, will not be sufficient to try the accused on two separate charges under sec. 411, I. P. Code (receiving stolen property) and to sentence him for each of the charges, unless there is proof that he received at different times or from different thieves. All the goods in the possession of the accused may have been stolen by the same thief and may have been delivered to the accused by him at the same time though stolen on different occasions. If the accused received all these goods at the same time, that would constitute only one offence—Ishan Muchi, 15 Cal 511; Nga Kywet, 1 L.B.R. 39. Where several items of stolen property were found in the possession of the accused on the same date, held that the accused committed only one offence and in the absence of evidence that the different articles were received at different times, he could not be charged separately for each item of stolen property; consequently, the trial of the accused in respect of some of the stolen articles barred a second trial in respect of the remaining article—Ganesh Shaha, 50 Cal 594; Bishun Singh, 3 Pat. 503 (519), 5 P.L.T. 319, 25 Cr.L.J. 738, 81 I.C. 226, A.I.R. 1925 Pat 20, 1924 P.H.C.C. 126; Hayat, A.I.R. 1928 Lah 637, 110 I.C. 673, 29 P.L.R. 541, 29 Cr.L.J. 737; Chanan Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 752. See also Ramnath, supra. For contra see Dadlomal, 27 Cr.L.J. 1256, 98 I.C. 104, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 53.

Misappropriation of several books of account in respect of the same estate though on different occasions is but one offence, the several books of account forming one set of books—Promothanath, 17 C.W.N. 479, 14 Cr.L.J. 219. So also, misappropriation of several sums of money on several occasions in regard to one individual is one offence—Jagat Chandra v. Lal Chand, 5 C.W.N. 332. Theft of a box and a bicycle from one person committed at the same time is one offence—Bijoy v. Satish, 21 Cr.L.J. 682 (Cal.).

747. Separate charge:—For every distinct offence there shall be a separate charge. Even though the offences have been committed in the same transactions, there should be a distinct charge for each distinct offence, though they can be tried together under sec. 235—Gul Mahomed v. Cheharu, 10 C.W.N. 53, 3 Cr.L.J. 141; Fattu, 26 All, 195. One charge framed against two persons for cheating the complainant and two others on three different occasions is bad in law—Srishi, 13 C.W.N. 1067, 10 Cr.L.J. 469, 4 I.C. 16. Where the accused was charged in one charge with two attempts to cheat on two different dates, held that there should have been two charges and that the defect cannot be cured by sec. 537, Cr. P. C.—Ishan Sabarna, 10 C.W.N. 520. See also the cases cited under heading 'What are distinct offences' above (Note 745). In almost all these cases, it has been held that the framing of one charge in respect of several distinct offences is not merely an irregularity but an illegality, and the conviction on such a charge must be set aside. But where the offences, though distinct, can be tried jointly by virtue of the provisions of secs. 234, 235 and 239, the error in framing one charge instead of separate charges in respect of the several offences is an error in form rather than of substance, and is not an illegality but a mere irregularity covered by sec. 537—Moharuddi v. Jadunath, 11 C.W.N. 54, 4 Cr.L.J. 415 (417); Musai, 41 Cal. 66 (68); Ram Subhag, 19 C.W.N. 972, 16 Cr.L.J. 641 (654); Radhanath, 50 Cal. 94; Ajgar, 30 Cr.L.J. 799, 48 C.L.J. 138, 117 I.C. 596, A.I.R. 1928 Cal 700, 32 C.W.N. 839 (842). See also Rasul, 111 I.C. 305, 5 O.W.N. 612, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 401, 3 Luck. 664, 29 Cr.L.J. 801. Where offences which ought to have been separately charged are joined together but the specific offences are satisfactorily proved by competent evidence corroborated in all necessary respects and there is no miscarriage of justice, the irregularity is cured under secs. 225 and 537, Cr. P. C., by the finding that the accused has not been prejudiced—Babulal Choukhani v. King-Emp., A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 130 (135), 65 I.A. 158, 32 S.L.R. 476, 1938 O.L.R. 189, 1938 O.A. 398, 1938 M.W.N. 505, 19 P.L.T. 343, 1938 A.L.R. 309, 10 R.P.C. 250, 4 B.R. 490, 39 Cr.L.J. 452, 67 C.L.J. 161, 40 Bom.L.R. 787, 174 I.C. 1, 42 C.W.N. 621, 1938 A.W.R. (P.C.) 116, 1938 P.W.N. 320, 1938 A.Cr.C. 27, 1938 O.W.N. 416, 1938 A.L.J. 382, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 647 (P.C.); Balumul Hotchand, 39 Cr.L.J. 890 (893), 177 I.C. 346, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 171; Chandra Narain Jha v. The King-Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 523 (525), A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 603, 6 B.R. 564, 187 I.C. 862, 1940 P.W.N. 557. Where the charges under sections 452, 323 and 379, I. P. C., are mentioned together but not only the sections of the I. P. C., but also the alleged charges under those sections are specifically and separately mentioned, the charge-sheet does not contravene the provisions of this section—Madho Singh v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 725 (726), 189 I.C. 258, 1940 O.W.N. 607. In a petty case, the irregularity of the Magistrate in specifying three distinct offences in one head of charge, instead of framing three separate charges, may be excused under sec. 537, where the accused had not been prejudiced—Bachchu v. Piyara, 2 Luck. 430, 28 Cr.L.J. 409 (410). See also first paragraph of Note 748 under the heading "Effect of misjoinder of charges".

748. Join trial illegal:—The accused was charged and tried at one trial for several distinct offences extending over more than one year, contrary to the provisions of secs. 233 and 234, and the Full Bench held that the trial was an irregularity curable by sec. 537. But the Privy Council laid down that the disobedience of an express provision of law relating to a mode of trial is not a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537, but an illegality, and that such illegality cannot be made good even if there is enough left upon the indictment upon which a conviction might have been supported—Subrahmanya Ayyar, 25 Mad. 61 (P.C.).

Where the Magistrate heard the prosecution against several persons (charged with distinct offences) together and afterwards called upon them to plead separately in defence, it was held that such a trial was in substance a joint trial of all the prisoners, and therefore illegal, and a retrial was ordered—Paw Tha, 3 L.B.R. 280, 5 Cr.L.J. 417. So also, where the Magistrate framed distinct charges and numbered them as distinct cases, but when the witnesses came to be cross-examined, he lost sight of the necessity of keeping the two trials separate, and allowed the witnesses to be cross-examined promiscuously in respect of both the charges, it was held that the joint trial offended against the provisions of this section and the illegality could not be cured by sec. 537—Kudiri Kaya, 39 Mad. 527, 29 M.L.J. 101, 16 Cr.L.J. 593.

"Except.....Section 234", etc.:—The broad rule enunciated in sec. 233 (viz., that for every distinct offence there should be a separate charge and every charge should be tried separately) is made subject to four exceptions. But a Court cannot and ought not to treat a case as an exception to the general rule, unless it is satisfied that in the case before it the charge should be within one of the four exceptions; and it would be safer if the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge recorded in his charge-sheet or judgment his reasons for treating the case as falling under one of the exceptions—Shanker, 11 A.L.J. 188, 14 Cr.L.J. 116 (117).

Effect of error in the charge:—See sections 225 and 537, Cr. P. C., and the Notes thereunder.

Any defect or omission from the charge as actually framed would not be fatal unless it has occasioned a failure of justice—Muhammad Yakub, 33 Cr.L.J. 373, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 270, 137 I.C. 73, 1932 Cr.C. 93, A.I.R. 1932 All. 73. Irregularities in a charge have no effect unless they have prejudiced the accused in their defence—Baurar Shah, 37 Cr.L.J. 1039 (1042), 164 I.C. 899, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 172.

Effect of misjoinder of charges:—What their Lordships of the Privy Council have decided in Subrahmanya Ayyar's case (25 Mad. 61 at p. 97, 28 I.A. 257, 11 M.L.J.

233, 8 Sar 160) is that if the law has expressly provided a particular mode of trial, a disobedience of that law vitiates the whole trial. But it is doubtful if the framing of a charge is a "mode of trial," but the joint trial of charges as to distinct offences would be a mode of trial. And so, the joinder in one charge of two distinct offences in contravention of the provisions of sec 233 is not an "illegality" within the mischief of the rule laid down in the above Privy Council case, but is only an irregularity curable by sec. 537—Ram Subheg, 19 C.W.N. 792, 16 Cr.L.J. 641 (654); Abdul Rahaman, 4 Bur.L.J. 213, 27 Cr.L.J. 669 (673), 94 I.C. 717, A.I.R. 1926 Rang 53; Tamezkhan v. Rajjabali, 31 C.W.N. 337 (339), 45 C.L.J. 591, 28 Cr.L.J. 347, 100 I.C. 827, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 330; Farzand Ali, 27 Cr.L.J. 909, 96 I.C. 221, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 347, 1936 Pat. H.C.C. 207, distinguishing Asgar Ali, noted below. In such a case the defect is one of "duplicitv", not of misjoinder. It is not the mode of trial that is wrong; it is merely the form of the charge. A trial under such a charge is not bad unless the accused has been prejudiced thereby—Musai Singh, 41 Cal 66. See also Mendi Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 935, 149 I.C. 231, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 244, 11 O.W.N. 686; Bachchu v. Piyara, 2 Luck. 430, 28 Cr.L.J. 409 (410) and Note 747. A failure to comply with the provisions of this section may or may not be fatal according to the circumstances of the case—Ramdin Lal, 38 Cr.L.J. 97 (98), 165 I.C. 970, A.I.R. 1937 Pat 176, 18 P.L.T. 91, 3 B.R. 117, 9 R.P. 246. In a case like this failure to comply with sec 233 would be condoned where the offences are committed in one transaction, where the evidence is identical and where care has been taken to consider each item of charge separately and arrive at a distinct finding regarding each one of the offences charged—Sachchidanand, 34 Cr.L.J. 892 (894), 14 P.L.T. 580, 1933 Cr.C. 1030, A.I.R. 1933 Pat 488, 144 I.C. 936; Ramdin Lal, supra. In Supdt and Rembr, Bengal v Daulat Ram, A.I.R. 1932 Cal 390 (392), 59 Cal. 1233, 36 C.W.N. 505, 1932 Cr.C. 337, 55 C.L.J. 319, 138 I.C. 705, 33 Cr.L.J. 685, Ind. Rul 1932 Cal 504, it has been laid down that this would not be an adequate ground for disturbing the order of conviction, for there is no reason whatever to hold that the accused was misled by the error or that it occasioned any failure of justice. For contra see Asgar Ali, 40 Cal 846, 17 C.W.N. 827, 14 Cr.L.J. 449, 20 I.C. 609, where it has been laid down that the joinder of two distinct charges under one charge is an illegality which is fatal to the proceedings. See Note 747.

Section 233, Cr. P. C., is mandatory—Sita Ahir, 40 Cal 168 (170). Disregard of the provisions of sec 233, Cr. P. C., is not an irregularity that could be remedied by sec. 537, Cr. P. C., but is altogether illegal—Ali Mahomed, 30 Cr.L.J. 1073 (1074), 119 I.C. 532, A.I.R. 1930 Sind 62, Ind. Rul 1929 Sind 212, following Fattu, 26 All. 195, 1 Cr.L.J. 346, 1903 A.W.N. 231 and Paresh Nath, 33 Cal 295, 2 C.L.J. 516, 3 Cr.L.J. 153; Dubri Misir, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 86, 6 Luck 441, 8 O.W.N. 92, 1931 Cr.C. 214, 130 I.C. 350, 32 Cr.L.J. 540. See also Thakur Singh v Emp, A.I.R. 1939 All. 665 (667), 1939 A.L.J. 547. The joint trial of charges as to distinct offences not committed in the course of same transaction is an illegality not curable under sec 537, Cr. P. C.—Ganno, 35 Cr.L.J. 1048, 149 I.C. 959, 11 O.W.N. 731. A misjoinder of charges for distinct offences cannot be cured under sec 537, Cr. P. C.—Ramchandra Rango v. Emp, 40 Cr.L.J. 579 (588), 181 I.C. 870, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 129, 41 Bom.L.R. 98. Where a person is charged with two distinct offences in the same trial not covered by any of the exceptions to sec 233, Cr. P. C., that is not a mere irregularity, but it is an illegality which cannot be cured by sec 537, Cr. P. C. The irregularity contemplated by sec. 537 is an irregularity in the procedure and not a substantive error of law or a disregard of the mandatory provisions of the Code—Krishnaji Anant, 138 I.C. 520, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 277, 1932 Cr.C. 389, 33 Cr.L.J. 619, 34 Bom.L.R. 590, Ind. A different view seems to have been taken in the following rulings where stress has been laid upon the question of prejudice to the accused. Thus, it has been held that the illegality with regard to sec. 233 does not necessarily vitiate the trial as a whole—Dur Mahomed, 35 Cr.L.J. 1337 (1341), 151 I.C. 494, 28 S.L.R. 119, 1934 Cr.C. 628, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 57, following Radhanath, 71 I.C. 120, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 573, 24 Cr.L.J. 72, 50 Cal 94, 36 C.L.J. 149. See Raj Bahadur, 35 Cr.L.J. 1496, 152 I.C. 103, 1934 Cr.C. 1308, 11 O.W.N. 1206, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 457, where a fresh trial was not ordered as the Counsel of the accused did not desire it and no prejudice resulted to the accused on account of joint trial of two distinct offences of murder, the irregularity being condoned under sec. 537. See also Narain, A.I.R. 1936 All. 129 (130); Bhawani Pathak, 37 Cr.L.J. 496, 161 I.C. 869, A.I.R. 1936 All. 253, 1936 Cr.C. 237.

Where persons who committed different offences not committed in the course of the same transaction are jointly charged and tried, the trial is illegal. To a case of this nature sec. 537, Cr. P. C., would not apply—Pattu, 34 Cr.L.J. 863, 144 I.C. 974, 1933 A.L.J. 1595, A.I.R. 1933 All. 354, 1933 Cr.C. 627; Muhammadi, 28 Cr.L.J. 357, 100 I.C. 965, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 274; Fasih-ud-Din, 28 Cr.L.J. 459, 101 I.C. 491, 9 L.L.J. 100, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 737; Jethalal, 29 Bom. 449 (455), 2 Cr.L.J. 480, 7 Bom.L.R. 527; Meeriah, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 90, 8 Rang. 632, 1931 Cr.C. 378, 132 I.C. 548, 32 Cr.L.J. 930; Tamkin Hiu, 35 Cr.L.J. 1234, 151 I.C. 99, 36 Bom.L.R. 495, 1934 Cr.C. 946, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 255; Gobind Koeri, 29 Cal. 385, 6 C.W.N. 468. It is, of course, well-settled that the infringement of the provisions of sec. 239 (d), Cr. P. C., would, if made out, constitute an illegality as distinguished from an irregularity, so that the conviction would require to be quashed, and that sec. 537, Cr. P. C., can be of no avail to remedy the defect—Nathu Chaudhury v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 499 (500), 41 Cr.L.J. 452 (453), 6 B.R. 461, 187 I.C. 361, 1940 P.W.N. 454. Where accused persons are charged and tried in the same trial for different offences not committed in the course of the same transaction, the misjoinder renders the trial invalid, being a disregard of an express provision of law as to the mode of trial, and not a mere curable irregularity: Vide the well-known ruling of Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Subramania Iyer v. Emp., 25 Mad. 61, 28 I.A. 257, 2 Weir 271, 2 Sar. 160 (P.C.); S. Pillay v. Shaikh Thumby Sahib, 41 Cr.L.J. 790, 189 I.C. 705, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 113.

Section 537 applies to a case of an irregularity in a charge where it has, in fact, not occasioned a failure of justice. Where there is no irregularity in the framing of a charge but the matter goes further and covers an irregularity in a trial which is prohibited by law that section can have no application. When a trial is not warranted by any enactment or rule, such a trial is more than an irregularity and is entirely illegal—Sewak, 30 Cr.L.J. 214, 113 I.C. 721, 26 A.L.J. 623, A.I.R. 1928 All. 714. But see Faiz Alam, 35 Cr.L.J. 1410, 151 I.C. 816, 1934 Cr.C. 1317, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 112 where a different view seems to have been taken as there was no prejudice to the accused and the objection was waived in the trial Court; and Bhagga, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 327, 1935 O.W.N. 408, 1935 O.L.R. 210, 154 I.C. 901, 36 Cr.L.J. 602, where it has been laid down that it is not every breach of any provision in the Cr. P. C., that amounts to an illegality and vitiates the trial and that where the irregularity committed has not occasioned a failure of justice, nor has it prejudiced the accused in his defence on the merits, the whole trial is not illegal and void ab initio. Where the misjoinder has not occasioned a failure of justice, the defect or illegality or whatever it may be called, is curable by reason of the provisions of sec. 537, Cr. P. C.—Mathuri, 37 Cr.L.J. 794 (803), 163 I.C. 253, A.I.R. 1936 All. 337, 1936 A.L.J. 518, 1936 Cr.C. 401, following the observations of Mukherji, Actg. C.J., in *Kapoor Chand v. A joint trial in violation of the express provisions of sec. 239, Cr. P. C., is not illegal or void ab initio, if it has not occasioned a failure of justice and has not prejudiced the accused in his defence on the merits—Wali Jan v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 853, 177 I.C. 74, 1938 O.W.N. 748, 11 R.O. 23, 1938 O.L.R. 370, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 216 See, however, Jethalal, supra, where it has been laid down that no consent of the accused or his pleader will cure any want of jurisdiction or any irregularity in the trial which may have affected the result so as to cause a failure of justice See also Ramraju, 32 Cr.L.J. 30, 127 I.C. 654, 1930 M.W.N. 377, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 857, Ind Rul 1930 Mad 1038, 53 Mad 939, 32 M.L.W. 894, 59 M.L.J. 945, 1930 Cr.C. 1033

It makes no difference whether the acts charged are forty-one, fourteen or four, provided they exceed the statutory number and are not covered by the provisions of sec. 234, Cr. P. C., or the following provisions relating to the joinder of charges; the misjoinder of charges is a vital defect in the trial which cannot be cured by the provisions of sec. 537, Cr. P. C. It does not appear that the Board's judgment in Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 54 I.A. 96, 5 Rang 53, 100 I.C. 227, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 44, 28 Cr.L.J. 259, 31 C.W.N. 271, 25 A.L.J. 117, 1927 M.W.N. 103, 8 P.L.T. 155, 4 O.W.N. 283, 6 Bur.L.J. 65, 52 M.L.J. 585, 29 Bom.L.R. 813, 45 C.L.J. 441 (P.C.), gives any countenance to the argument that Subramania Aiyar v. King-Emp., 28 I.A. 257, 25 Mad. 61, 8 Sar. 160, 3 Bom.L.R. 540, 5 C.W.N. 866, 11 M.L.J. 233, 2 Weir 271 (P.C.), was wrongly decided That decision still binds Courts on the question of the misjoinder of charges—Chuharmal Nirmaldas v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 881 (885), 177 I.C. 280, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 164, 11 R.S. 53.

The question was again considered by Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent case of Babulal Choukhani v. King-Emp., A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 130 (132), 65 I.A. 158, 32 S.L.R. 476, 1938 O.L.R. 189, 1938 O.A. 398, 1938 M.W.N. 505, 19 P.L.T. 343, 1938 A.L.R. 309, 10 R.P.C. 250, 4 B.R. 490, 39 Cr.L.J. 452, 67 C.L.J. 161, 40 Bom.L.R. 787, 174 I.C. 1, 42 C.W.N. 621, 1938 A.W.R. (P.C.) 116, 1938 P.W.N. 320, 1938 A.Cr.C. 27, 1938 O.W.N. 416, 1938 A.L.J. 382, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 647 (P.C.), where Lord Wright, J., observed "It has been taken as settled law on all sides throughout these proceedings that the infringement of sec. 239 (d) would, if made out, constitute an illegality, as distinguished from an irregularity, so that the conviction would require to be quashed under the rule stated in 28 I.A. 257 (i.e., Subramania Aiyar v. King-Emp., supra), as contrasted with the result of an irregularity, as to which 54 I.A. 96 (i.e., Abdul Rahman v. Emp., supra) is an authority Their Lordships will assume that this is so, without thinking it here necessary to discuss the precise scope of what was decided in 28 I.A. 257, because in their understanding of sec. 239 (d) that question does not arise."

Where there has been a misjoinder, to quash the charges against the accused would not validate the trial which has proceeded on the wrong lines from the very beginning The whole trial so far is void and the whole proceedings should be set aside—Dhaneshram, 27 Cr.L.J. 1099, 97 I.C. 363, A.I.R. 1927 Nag 22 Where the trial is illegal on account of joint trial of two charges, the defect in the trial cannot be cured by the Court acquitting the accused in respect of one of those charges—Jai Singh, 19 Cr.L.J. 100, 43 I.C. 324, A.I.R. 1918 Lah 148, 44 P.R. 1917 (Cr.) See also Dhan Singh, A.I.R. 1934 Lah 630, A.L.R. 1934 Lah 524, 35 P.L.R. 653, 1934 Cr.C. 965, 36 Cr.L.J. 676, 155 I.C. 163; Fitzmaurice, 27 Cr.L.J. 793, 95 I.C. 393, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 193 and Choragudi, 33 Mad. 502 (505).

See Note 754 under the heading "Effect of non-compliance, etc."

748A. When objection as to misjoinder may be taken:—See Explanation, sec. 537, Cr. P. C. If a joint trial is bad it is open to an accused, who has been convicted at such a trial, to take the point at any time even if it was not taken before in either of the Courts below and there is no obligation on an accused if a joint trial is not permissible to prove prejudice. The trial is either good or bad and if it is bad no question of prejudice arises—Dalsuk, 25 Cr.L.J. 807, 81 I.C. 343, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 248; Nanda Kumar, 11 C.W.N. 1128 (1131), where it was held that the illegality could not be cured by the fact that no objection was taken to the procedure adopted either in the first or in the Sessions Court, the illegality having affected the jurisdiction of the Court. See also Jethalal, 29 Bom. 449 (455), 2 Cr.L.J. 480, 7 Bom.L.R. 527, Shyambar Koyal v. King-Emp, 19 C.L.J. 633; Asmat v. Emp, 44 C.W.N. 315., The objection as to the legality of a joint trial may be taken for the first time in appeal—Venkata, 1933 M.W.N. 326. There is ample authority for the proposition that an objection with regard to the legality of a trial can be taken in a Court of revision or appeal, even though it was never taken in the Court of first instance at all. In cases of prejudice alleged to have been caused by a certain procedure it is very doubtful whether, when an accused person does take an objection at the earliest possible moment, he can be debarred from raising it subsequently in a Court of appeal or revision merely because he did not come up straightway to the High Court—C. S. Joseph v. Emp, 41 C.W.N. 251 (254). The fact that the Counsel of the accused gave consent does not make any difference—Jethalal, supra. See also Ghulam Haider, A.I.R. 1929 Lah 542, 10 Lah 837, 30 P.L.R. 192, 116 I.C. 329, 30 Cr.L.J. 623, 1929 Cr.C. 85.

749. Counter cases:—It is illegal to try two counter cases between the same parties at one and the same trial, and a conviction at such a trial must be set aside, even though the cross cases were so tried together with the consent of the parties—Mamsa, 13 Bur.L.T. 245, 22 Cr.L.J. 707. But a simultaneous trial of two counter cases is not the same thing as a joint trial, and is not prohibited by this section or by sec. 239. In certain cases and under certain circumstances a simultaneous trial may be irregular and improper, but that will not entitle the accused to have the whole trial set aside unless it is clearly shown that the procedure adopted has prejudiced him in his defence—Dhako, 1 P.L.T. 498, 21 Cr.L.J. 739. The proper course is to try the case after the other. But both the cases must be tried by one and the same Magistrate. The simultaneous trial of two counter cases in two different Courts over one and the same occurrence is undesirable and unsatisfactory—Sheikh Samir v. Beni Madhab, 37 C.L.J. 410; Judhistir v. Sheik Samir, 27 C.W.N. 700. See Notes 830A and 1023.

234. (1) When a person is accused of more offences than

Three offences of same kind within year may be charged together. one of the same kind committed within the space of twelve months from the first to the last of such offences, whether in respect of the same person or not, he may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, any number of them not exceeding three.

(2) Offences are of the same kind when they are punishable with the same amount of punishment under the same section of the Indian Penal Code or any special or local law:

Provided that, for the purpose of this section an offence punishable under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code shall be deemed to be an offence of the same kind as an offence punishable under section 380 of the said Code, and that an offence punishable under any section of the Indian Penal Code, or of any special or local law, shall be deemed to be an offence of the same kind as an attempt to commit such offence, when such an attempt is an offence.

Change:—The italicised words have been added by sec 62 of the Criminal Proce-

Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below under heading "Proviso."

750. Object of section:—Sections 234, 235, etc., are exceptions to the broad and general rule enunciated in sec. 233. The object of these exceptions is to avoid the necessity of the same witnesses giving the same evidence two or three times over in different trials, and to join in one trial those offences with regard to which the evidence would overlap. But even when several criminal acts can be included in the same transaction (sec. 235), no joinder of trials should be permitted which will result in bewildering the accused in his defence—Gulam, 1 SLR 73, 8 CrLJ 191 (195). "The reason of the provision (i.e., the provision contained in sec. 234 limiting the number of offences) is obviously in order that the jury may not be prejudiced by the multitude of charges and the inconvenience of the hearing together of a large number of instances of culpability and the consequent embarrassment both to Judges and accused"—Subrahmanya Ayyar, 25 Mad 61 (PC). This ruling is in no manner affected by the later Privy Council case—Abdul Rahaman, (5 Rang 53, 31 C.W.N. 271, 100 IC 227, AIR 1927 PC 44, 25 ALJ 117, 28 CrLJ 259, 45 CLJ 441) Viraswami Naidu, 31 CrLJ 1195, 127 IC 295, AIR 1930 Mad 508.

The provisions of sec. 234, Cr P Code, limiting the number of charges to three are particularly wise and salutary. The object of these provisions is to prevent any risk of the Court being satisfied by anything less than complete proof of the offences charged, and if the attention of the Court is limited to three offences, it is not very likely that it will be satisfied with anything less than full proof. But when a great number of charges are brought against an accused person, it might very often happen that the accused may be convicted not on actual proof of a particular offence, but more on suspicion and reputation owing to the fact that in a great number of cases offences are half-proved against him. It is, therefore, very important that the Magistrates framing charges particularly in offences relating to criminal misappropriation and receiving stolen property should pay attention to this provision of the law—Hyder, 20 SLR 3, 27 CrLJ 32.

751. Scope of section:—This section says that trial must be limited to three offences; it does not say that the trial must be limited to three charges. The same offence may be charged under different sections of the I P C, and any number of such charges can be tried in one and the same trial—Tribhuvan, 33 Bom 77.

Again, this section simply limits the number of offences that can be charged and tried in one trial. But this does not mean that the prisoner cannot be charged and tried separately in one day for more than three distinct offences of the same kind committed during the year—Dhanonjoy, 3 Cal 540.

This section does not permit of three offences being lumped together so as to treated as one offence but merely permits of the trial of the three separate offences at the same trial—Chetumal, 36 CrLJ 608 (610), 154 IC 937, AIR 1934 Sind 185, 1934 CrC 1932, 28 SLR 336.

Moreover, this section refers to trial and not to commitment. Where the Magistrate committed the accused to the Sessions on six charges of criminal breach of trust, and three of falsification of accounts, all the offences having been committed within a year, it was held that the order of committal was not illegal but merely irregular, and the irregularity could be cured by the Sessions Judge trying the charges separately—Krishna Murthi, (1916) 2 MWN 179, 17 CrLJ 369.

This section evidently refers to different acts done by the same individuals or same set of individuals as against the same complainant or complainants so connected with each other that they may in law be taken to be one person. The section allows a joinder of charges under certain circumstances; such as in cases of cheating, criminal breach of trust or criminal misappropriation and offences of like nature—Nanda Kumar, 11 C.W.N. 1128 (1130).

This section contemplates a joint trial for offences committed within one year; if the offences extend over a period exceeding one year, the joint trial of the charges is illegal. Thus, the joint trial of 41 charges of extortion committed during a period of two years, contravenes the rule of sec. 234 and is illegal—Subrahmanya Ayyar, 25 Mad. 61 (P.C.). A charge of several acts of falsification of accounts or theft or breach of trust committed during a period of two years is contrary to the provisions of this section—Mali Lal, 26 Cal 560 (563); Salimullah, 32 All. 57 (58); Raman Lal, 49 All. 312, 28 Cr.L.J. 171 (172).

This section applies, where a person is accused of more offences than one; it does not apply where a person is charged for one offence only, e.g., an offence under sec. 401, I. P. C. (belonging to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft) and the trial is not therefore illegal if the period over which the association extends exceeds one year—Kasem Ali, 47 Cal. 154, 31 C.L.J. 192, 21 Cr.L.J. 386. But see Kalu Mian, 32 Cr.L.J. 195, 128 I.C. 816, 34 C.W.N. 959, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 357, 1931 Cr.C. 384, where a contrary view seems to have been taken.

And lastly, this section refers to offences and not to transactions. It does not provide that all offences committed in a year in three different transactions may be tried in one trial—Gehmal, 10 S.L.R. 192, 18 Cr.L.J. 664; Kasi Viswanathan, 30 Mad. 328. The operation of the two sections 234 and 235 cannot be combined; and, therefore, a joint trial in respect of two sets of separate and independent transactions in which different offences have been committed, is not permissible. Thus, where two girls were kidnapped on different occasions, and were passed off as girls belonging to a high caste and married to persons who gave money in return, the offences of kidnapping and cheating with respect to each of the girls should not be tried jointly with the other—Faujdar, 48 All. 236, 24 A.L.J. 239, 27 Cr.L.J. 143.

The provisions of sec. 234, Cr. P. C., cannot be evaded by the omission to name the offences and sections in the charge where in fact the accused has been charged and convicted of two offences—Mohanlal Bhanalal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Sind 293 (295), 39 Cr.L.J. 123, 172 I.C. 374, 10 R.S. 149, 32 S.L.R. 87.

Sections 222 (2), 234 :—The combined effect of secs. 222 (2) and 234 is this: Where there has been misappropriation in respect of different items of money, the Court can combine some of the items in one lump sum, under sec. 222 (2), and the defalcation of this lump sum will be treated as one offence under sec. 234; then the Court can combine some other items in another lump sum, and the defalcation of this lump sum will constitute another offence; in this way the Court can make out three lump sums, the charge in respect of each lump sum being a charge of a separate offence; and the three charges in respect of the three lump sums will thus be treated as charges of three separate offences (of the same kind). These three separate offences can be tried jointly under sec. 234, but the Court has an option to try them separately; and if the Court at first tried one offence (in respect of one lump sum), it is not debarred by sec. 403 from subsequently trying another offence in respect of another sum—Kashinath, 12 Bom.L.R. 226, 11 Cr.L.J. 337; followed in Nagendra Nath, 50 Cal. 632, 27 C.W.N. 578 (581).

Where the total amount misappropriated within a period of twelve months is divided into three gross sums made up of separate items and the accused is tried at the same trial on three separate charges of criminal breach of trust in respect of those three gross sums, the trial cannot be held to be bad for misjoinder—Madhusudan v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 175. See also Note 1092 in this connection.

Sections 234 to 239 :—There is no apparent reason for holding that the four exceptional cases mentioned in secs. 234, 235, 236 and 239 are mutually exclusive. Certainly, there is no more reason for holding that secs. 234 and 235 are mutually exclusive than that one or other of these provisions and either sec. 236 or sec. 239 is mutually exclusive or that sec. 236 and sec. 239 are so. There is no reason why secs. 234 and 235 are not to be recorded as cumulative in their effect in a proper case—Ramkishoon, 35 Cr.L.J. 676 (878), 148 I.C. 900, 15 P.L.T. 126, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 239, 1934 Cr.C. 461. For contra see Dhaneshram, 27 Cr.L.J. 1099, 97 I.C. 363, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 22, where it has been laid down that secs. 234 and 235 must be construed apart and that there is nothing in the Code which would allow the two to be added together, so to speak, in order to provide for one person on more than three charges, even though some of the charges may have formed one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction.

752. Offences committed by several persons:—This section does not apply where several persons committing offences of the same kind are jointly charged; it applies to the trial of one accused only—Budhai, 33 Cal 292, 10 C.W.N 32, 3 Cr L.J. 126; Mahbub Ali, 12 Cr L.J. 266, 10 I.C. 331, 168 P.L.R. 1911, 37 P.W.R. 1911 (Cr.); Tulsi, 1917 P.R. 17, 18 Cr L.J. 282 (283); Sayad Lal, 20 Cr L.J. 7 (Nag); Nga San, 21 Cr.L.J. 794 (Bur.); Ram Prasad, 19 A.L.J. 796, 22 Cr L.J. 657. The trial of several accused committing offences of the same kind is now provided for in clause (c) of sec. 239.

753. Offences of the same kind:—See sub-section (2) for the definition of this expression. Where a person is found in possession of several items of stolen property, he has committed 'offences of the same kind' under sec. 411, I. P. C., and they do not cease to be so merely because the stolen articles are of very diverse character (e.g., stamps, carpets, buckets, padlocks)—Bishun Singh, 3 Pat. 503 (509), 5 P.L.T. 319, 25 Cr.L.J. 738.

The following are not offences of the same kind —Adultery and bigamy—Vithayee, Ratanlal 4; Falsification of accounts and criminal breach of trust—Kasi Viswanathan, 30 Mad 328; Murder and hurt—Shanker, 11 A.L.J. 188, 14 Cr L.J. 116 (117); Murder and grievous hurt; Afsaruddin Naseraddi, 40 Cr L.J. 290, 179 I.C. 910, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 32, 67 C.L.J. 580, 42 C.W.N 1235; Forgery and giving false evidence—Gehmal, 10 S.L.R. 192, 18 Cr.L.J. 664; Offences under sec. 380, I. P. C., and offences under sec. 457, I P. Code—Krishnaji Anant, 138 I.C. 520, A.I.R. 1932 Bom 277, 1932 Cr.C. 389, 33 Cr.L.J. 619, 34 Bom L.R. 590, Ind Rul 1932 Bom 383; Offence under sec. 393 and offence under sec. 394, I P Code—Ajaib Singh, 34 Cr L.J. 402, 142 I.C. 820, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah 275, 1933 Cr.C. 771, 34 P.L.R. 498, A.I.R. 1933 Lah 512 For other examples, see Note 745 in sec. 233, under heading "Distinct offences."

754. Not exceeding three:—Where the accused is charged with committing several offences of the same kind, e.g., several acts of falsification of accounts, the charge should specify the number of acts of falsification (having regard to this section which allows only three such offences to be tried together) A general allegation of falsification of accounts committed between such and such dates is not sufficient—Mati Lal, 26 Cal 560 (563). An accused can only be charged and tried at one trial for any number of offences of the same kind not exceeding three Therefore, a trial of 41 charges of extortion is contrary to the provisions of this section, and is not merely an irregularity covered by sec. 537, but is an illegality—Subrahmanya Ayyar, 25 Mad 61 (P.C.) It is illegal to try together eight acts of theft or criminal breach of trust, even though one charge has been framed in respect of the eight offences—Raman Lal, 49 All 312, 28 Cr.L.J. 171 (172). One charge under sec. 124A, I P C., in respect of one article in a newspaper, one charge under sec. 124A, I P C., in respect of the same article, and a third charge under sec. 124A, I P C., in respect of another article, can be tried together—Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 33 Bom. 221.

The accused was charged with using as genuine eleven forged receipts which were put in by him in sets on three occasions, each set with a written statement in three suits pending against him. A charge was framed against him in respect of the using of each set of receipts, and he was tried on these three charges and convicted and sentenced. Held that as the "using" charged was the putting in of each set of documents with the respective written statements in three suits, and as there was nothing to show that any of the document had been used at any other time, there was only one using in respect of each set of documents and that there was, therefore, no valid ground for questioning the conviction—Q-E. v. Raghunath Das, 20 Cal 413.

Where the accused committed two separate and distinct offences under secs. 408, I. P. C., and two separate and distinct offences under sec. 420, I P. C., there is a misjoinder of charges, vitiating the trial—Sera Subramanian, 32 Cr L.J. 1068, 133 I.C. 489, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 161, 1931 Cr.C. 657, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang 265.

The joinder of charges of three offences under sec. 411, I. P. C., and three offences under sec. 414, I. P. C., is bad—Chetto Kaluar, 49 Cal. 555. A charge under sec. 411, I. P. C., of having received six specific animals belonging to five specific persons and stolen by the different acts of theft, is illegal and wholly vitiates the trial—Hyder, 20 S.L.R. 3, 27 Cr.L.J. 32. If a man is charged with three alternative charges of embezzlement or abetment thereof, the charge is really for six offences and the trial is entirely illegal—Janeshar, 51 All. 544, 30 Cr.L.J. 687 (689), 1929 A.L.J. 329, A.I.R. 1929 All. 202, 116 I.C. 789. Three charges of criminal misappropriation (sec. 409, I. P. C.) and a charge under sec. 210, I. P. C., cannot be tried together—Rajendra, 22 C.W.N. 596, 19 Cr.L.J. 868, 27 C.L.J. 311, 47 I.C. 64.

Every publication or circulation of a libel constitutes a fresh and distinct act and therefore, a separate offence. Where, therefore, the accused was put on his trial for publishing or circulating the offending article at six different places on six different occasions, the proceedings were entirely void and not merely irregular—Divan Singh, 36 Cr.L.J. 744 (752), A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 90, 155 I.C. 197, 1935 Cr.C. 418.

Where the Tax Dāroga of a Municipality realised a certain amount as taxes in respect of four different holdings and was tried under a single charge regarding the entire amount, held that the charge did not contravene the provisions of this section as the amount was realised at the same time and one receipt was originally granted by the accused for the whole amount, though the amount was composed of different sums payable in respect of four different holdings—Harendra, 28 Cr.L.J. 469, 101 I.C. 597, 45 C.L.J. 207, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 409.

Having regard to the provisions of this section there is no misjoinder of charges when an accused is charged under sec. 420, I. P. C., for having cheated three different persons on three different occasions in the course of the same month—Farzand Ali, 27 Cr.L.J. 909, 96 I.C. 221, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 347, 1926 Pat.H.C.C. 207.

Three charges, each comprising offences under clause (a) (iii) and clause (b) (ii) of sec. 103 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909) cannot be tried together—Khimchand, 35 Cr.L.J. 1477, 151 I.C. 934, 36 Bom.L.R. 639, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 303, 1934 Cr.C. 1036.

Each evasion of the toll is a separate act. The trial of six such distinct acts committed on six different dates in one trial contravenes the provisions of this section—Suleman Abba, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 24, 36 Bom.L.R. 1124, 36 Cr.L.J. 516, 154 I.C. 556, 1935 Cr.C. 25.

Falsification of accounts :—Every act of falsification of a book or account (sec. 477A, I. P. C.), is a separate offence, and only three such offences (committed within a year) can be charged and tried together—Mati Lal, 26 Cal. 560 (563), 3 C.W.N. 412; Fitzmaurise, 27 Cr.L.J. 793 (796), 95 I.C. 393, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 193. See also Jibon Kristo, 40 Cal. 318, 20 I.C. 412, 14 Cr.L.J. 428. Where the accused was charged and tried at one trial for five acts of falsification of accounts, the trial was illegal, and a retrial must be held on proper charges—Salimullah, 32 All. 57 (58), 4 I.C. 808, 6 A.L.J. 977, 11 Cr.L.J. 53. See also Fitzmaurise, supra. But a series of falsification of accounts made to cover a single act of misappropriation may be laid in one charge under sec. 477A, as it does not constitute offences merely by reason of a plurality of false entries intended to cover the same misappropriation. But the two cannot be combined, that is, it is not permissible to try three charges of misappropriation and a series of falsification of accounts referring to the three acts of misappropriation—Raman Behari, supra; Shama Shastri, 44 M.L.J. 67, 24 Cr.L.J. 462, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 435, 72 I.C. 622, 1922 M.W.N. 476; Nagendra Nath, 36 C.W.N. 542 (543), 33 Cr.L.J. 265, 1932 Cr.C. 478, 136 I.C. 136, 55 C.L.J. 111, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 486. But a charge of criminal breach of trust cannot be legally tried together with one of falsification relating to a distinct act of misappropriation committed in a separate transaction—Jiban Kristo, supra. Where several acts of criminal breach of trust and falsification of accounts, some of them unconnected with the rest, were charged against the accused, the trial was illegal—Nathalal, 4 Bom.L.R. 433. Where the falsification did not relate to the items involved in the charge of criminal breach of trust but was intended to cover the amount which related to entirely different items, the joint trial in respect of charges of falsification and criminal breach of trust was illegal—Ramchandra Rango v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 579 (589), A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 129, 181 I.C. 870, 41 Bom.L.R. 98, dissenting from the view expressed in Kashiram v. Hurdut Rai, infra.

It is clear from the terms of sec. 235 (1), Cr. P. C., that a person may be lawfully tried for one offence of misappropriation joined with a charge of falsification which was carried out as one of the series of acts constituting the transaction by which the misappropriation was effected. Where a clerk or cashier sets out to rob his employer, having regard to the fact that sec. 222 (2), Cr. P. C., provides that he may be charged with having misappropriated the total of whatever sums he may have appropriated in course of any one year, it is not unreasonable to say that for the purposes of the section the year's illicit operations can be regarded as one transaction. He may, therefore, be lawfully tried for one offence of misappropriation of a gross sum as provided in sec. 222 (2), Cr. P. C., together with a charge of falsification which was carried out as one of the series of acts constituting the transaction by which the misappropriation was effected—Kashiram v. Hurdut Rai, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 312, 1935 Cr.C. 463, 39 C.W.N. 703, 156 I.C. 192, 62 Cal. 808. (In this case a joinder of one charge of misappropriation of a gross sum with two charges of falsification which was carried out as part of the series of acts constituting the transaction by which the misappropriation was effected, was held legal). The view of Sir Courtney Terrell, Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Adam in Michael John, infra, and of Mr. Justice Mullick

The joinder of charges of three offences under sec. 411, I. P. C., and three offences under sec. 414, I. P. C., is bad—Chetto Kalwar, 49 Cal. 555. A charge under sec. 411, I. P. C., of having received six specific animals belonging to five specific persons and stolen by the different acts of theft, is illegal and wholly vitiates the trial—Hyder, 20 S.L.R. 3, 27 Cr.L.J. 32. If a man is charged with three alternative charges of embezzlement or abetment thereof, the charge is really for six offences and the trial is entirely illegal—Janeshar, 51 All. 544, 30 Cr.L.J. 687 (689), 1929 A.L.J. 329, A.I.R. 1929 All. 202, 116 I.C. 789. Three charges of criminal misappropriation (sec. 409, I. P. C.) and a charge under sec. 210, I. P. C., cannot be tried together—Rajendra, 22 C.W.N. 596, 19 Cr.L.J. 868, 27 C.L.J. 311, 47 I.C. 64.

Every publication or circulation of a libel constitutes a fresh and distinct act and therefore, a separate offence. Where, therefore, the accused was put on his trial for publishing or circulating the offending article at six different places on six different occasions, the proceedings were entirely void and not merely irregular—Dinan Singh, 36 Cr.L.J. 744 (752), A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 90, 155 I.C. 197, 1935 Cr.C. 418.

Where the Tax Dároga of a Municipality realised a certain amount as taxes in respect of four different holdings and was tried under a single charge regarding the entire amount, held that the charge did not contravene the provisions of this section as the amount was realised at the same time and one receipt was originally granted by the accused for the whole amount, though the amount was composed of different sums payable in respect of four different holdings—Harendra, 28 Cr.L.J. 469, 101 I.C. 597, 45 C.L.J. 207, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 409.

Having regard to the provisions of this section there is no misjoinder of charges when an accused is charged under sec. 420, I. P. C., for having cheated three different persons on three different occasions in the course of the same month—Fazand Ali, 27 Cr.L.J. 909, 96 I.C. 221, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 347, 1926 Pat.H.C.C. 207.

Three charges, each comprising offences under clause (a) (iii) and clause (b) (ii) of sec. 103 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909) cannot be tried together—Khimchand, 35 Cr.L.J. 1477, 151 I.C. 934, 36 Bom.L.R. 639, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 303, 1934 Cr.C. 1036.

Each evasion of the toll is a separate act. The trial of six such distinct acts committed on six different dates in one trial contravenes the provisions of this section—Suleman Abba, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 24, 36 Bom.L.R. 1124, 36 Cr.L.J. 516, 154 I.C. 556, 1935 Cr.C. 25.

Falsification of accounts :—Every act of falsification of a book or account (sec. 477A, I. P. It is clear from the terms of sec. 235 (1), Cr. P. C., that a person may be lawfully tried for one offence of misappropriation joined with a charge of falsification which was carried out as one of the series of acts constituting the transaction by which the misappropriation was effected. Where a clerk or cashier sets out to rob his employer, having regard to the fact that sec. 222 (2), Cr. P. C., provides that he may be charged with having misappropriated the total of whatever sums he may have appropriated in course of any one year, it is not unreasonable to say that for the purposes of the section the year's illicit operations can be regarded as one transaction. He may, therefore, be lawfully tried for one offence of misappropriation of a gross sum as provided in sec. 222 (2), Cr. P. C., together with a charge of falsification which was carried out as one of the series of acts constituting the transaction by which the misappropriation was effected—Kashiram v Hurdut Rai, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 312, 1935 Cr.C. 463, 39 C.W.N. 703, 156 I.C. 192, 62 Cal 808. (In this case a joinder of one charge of misappropriation of a gross sum with two charges of falsification which was carried out as part of the series of acts constituting the transaction by which the misappropriation was effected, was held legal). The view of Sir Courtney Terrell, Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Adami in Michael John, infra, and of Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Buxton in Gardiner, India, was correct with regard to the mere materiality test.

The Privy Council has taken a different view in the matter. It has laid down that it is quite lawful to charge a person under sec. 405 I.P.C. with criminal intent of trust in respect of a lump sum of money made up of three different parts and to lay with that a charge of falsification under sec. 454A I.P.C., each of which charges under sec. 454A is united with one of the items of embezzlement under the charge under sec. 405 provided the charges of embezzlement under sec. 405 are linked together into one sum and that linking together also affects the charges of falsification—Gardiner, 22 Cr.L.J. 250, 61 I.C. 622, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 775; Mahabadi John, 22 Cr.L.J. 250, 61 I.C. 631, 21 Pat. 452, 22 P.L.T. 595, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 349, Ind. Pat. 151 Pat. 371, 1926 Cr.C. 757; Ramsbottom, 25 Cr.L.J. 375, 145 I.C. 371, 25 P.L.J. 22, 22 Pat. 171, 22 P.L.T. 325, 5 P.P. 925, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 222, 1924 Cr.C. 451, where the charge under sec. 405 I.P.C. enumerated separately three sums of money without mentioning the gross sum.

Therefore, the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay, Allahabad, Madras and the Chief Court of Lucknow are unanimous that the trial of three charges of embezzlement and of corresponding charges of falsification of accounts together is illegal. The only Court which has taken the contrary view is the High Court of Patna. The Nagpur Court has also accepted the view of the majority and has laid down that the underlying principle is that although one particular item embezzled and the falsification of accounts relating to that particular item may be considered to be one transaction for the purposes of sec. 225 (1), Cr. P.C., any other item of embezzlement, or more correctly in view of the provisions of sec. 220, Cr. P.C., the particular falsification with respect to another item of embezzlement is not part of the same transaction along with the former one and that the term "same transaction" cannot be used to cover a whole series of acts in pursuance of a conspiracy or by an individual in carrying out a studied policy of fraud. Therefore a number of distinct charges of falsification of account cannot be tried together with the charge of embezzlement comprising the items to which the falsifications relate at one trial. One item of falsification or one series of items connected with one item of embezzlement alone might be tried but no more—Ramsbottom, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 172, 26 Cr.L.J. 1216. The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has also taken the same view in Mohammad Ismail, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 1, 34 Cr.L.J. 224, 155 I.C. 845, 9 P.S. 155, 30 S.L.R. 391.

Effect of non-compliance with the provisions of this section:—The legal effect of non-compliance with the provisions of this section is not merely an irregularity but an illegality which vitiates the trial—Francis, 51 Cr.L.J. 1185, 17 I.C. 255, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 598; Kalu Mien, 22 Cr.L.J. 195, 123 I.C. 815, 34 C.W.N. 579, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 357, 1931 Cr.C. 384; Suleman Abba, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 24, 26 Bom.L.R. 1124, 35 Cr.L.J. 515, 154 I.C. 555, 1935 Cr.C. 25; Nga Sen Mya, 34 Cr.L.J. 1179, 145 I.C. 176, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 225, 1923 Cr.C. 1172. Where the charge is neither in conformity with sec. 222 nor in conformity with the provisions of sec. 224, Cr. P.C., neither sec. 225 nor sec. 537, Cr. P.C., can cure the defect—Pierre Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 518, 154 I.C. 329, 1935 O.W.N. 185. See also Ramon Lal, 49 All. 312, 23 Cr.L.J. 171, 99 I.C. 603, 25 All.J. 217, A.I.R. 1927 All. 223. See Note 748.

Illegality cannot be cured by striking off a charge:—A trial of the accused for four offences is altogether illegal, and the illegality cannot be cured by the Judge striking out one of the charges after the trial has closed—Manarala, 29 Mad. 599, 5 Cr.L.J. 49; Chetto, 49 Cal. 555, 24 Cr.L.J. 85, 71 I.C. 214; Filammaric, 27 Cr.L.J. 793, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 193, 95 I.C. 393. See also Dubri Misir, supra; Jai Singh, 19 Cr.L.J. 109, 43 I.C. 324, A.I.R. 1918 Lah. 148, 44 P.R. 1917 (Cr.). Although the Judge has power under sec. 227 to alter a charge before judgment is pronounced, still he cannot cure an illegality—Manarala, supra. But the Judge can strike off a charge before the trial begins, as was done in the case of Bal Gangadhar Teltak, 33 Bom. 221, 2 I.C. 277, 10 Bom.L.R. 973, 9 Cr.L.J. 225, where in the trial before the High Court Sessions, four charges were at first framed against the accused, but the Advocate General withdrew one of the charges, and then the trial proceeded on three charges

755. Offences against several persons:—There was a conflict of opinion as to whether this section applied where the offences were committed against several persons. In the following cases it was held that the words 'offences of the same kind' were not limited to offences against the same person; an accused could be charged with and tried at the same trial for offences of the same kind though committed against different persons—Chhatradhari, 43 Cal. 13, 19 C.W.N. 557; Babu Lal, 2 P.L.J. 209; Raja Rao, 20 M.L.T. 234, 17 Cr.L.J. 479; Bechan, 38 All. 457; Jagardeo, 38 All. 458 (Note); Shri Bhagwan, 13 C.W.N. 507; Dhondi, Ratanlal 331; Krushnappa, 20 Cr.L.J. 71 (Nag); Nga Po, 11 L.B.R. 45, 23 Cr.L.J. 740, 69 I.C. 628. But the contrary view was taken in Nanda Kumar, 11 C.W.N. 1128, 6 Cr.L.J. 321; Ali Mahomed, 13 C.W.N. 418, 9 Cr.L.J. 277 (278).

The present amendment has removed this conflict of opinion by adding the words "whether in respect of the same person or not," which make it clear that an accused person may be charged at one trial with three offences of the same kind though committed against different persons. Thus, in a case under the amended section, where an accused person was charged with cheating under sec. 420, I.P. Code, held that there was no misjoinder of charges—Farzand Ali, 27 Cr.L.J. 909 (Pat.). See also Rahim Baksha, 34 C.W.N. 901 (903), 129 I.C. 359, 32 Cr.L.J. 321, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 717, 1930 Cr.C. 1117, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 167; Nga Po Kym, 23 Cr.L.J. 740, 69 I.C. 628, 11 L.B.R. 45.

Proviso:—This proviso overrules Rahman v Mobarak, 20 C.W.N. 672, 17 Cr.L.J. 224, and Hari Singh, 20 Cr.L.J. 751 (Nag) where it was held that theft in a building (sec. 380, I.P.C.) and theft of paddy in a field (sec. 379, I.P.C.) were not offences of the same kind. The proviso also lays down specifically that an attempt to commit an offence, where such an attempt is penalised by any law, is of the same kind as the actual offence.

235. (1) If, in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, more than one offence is committed by the same person, he may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, every such offence.

(2) If the acts alleged constitute an offence falling within two or more separate definitions of any law in force for the time being by which offences are defined or punished, the person accused of them may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, each of such offences.

(3) If several acts, of which one or more than one would by itself or themselves constitute an offence, constitute when combined a different offence, the person accused of them may be charged with and tried at one trial for the offence constituted by such acts when combined, and for any offence constituted by any one, or more, of such acts.

(4) Nothing contained in this section shall affect the Indian Penal Code, Section 71.

Illustrations.

to sub-section (1)—

(a) A rescues B, a person in lawful custody, and in so doing causes grievous hurt to C, a constable in whose custody B was. A may be charged with and convicted of offences under sections 225 and 333 of the Indian Penal Code.

(b) A commits house-breaking by day with intent to commit adultery, and commits in the house so entered adultery with B's wife. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 454 and 497 of the Indian Penal Code.

(c) A entices B, the wife of C, away from C, with intent to commit adultery with B, and then commits adultery with her. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 498 and 497 of the Indian Penal Code.

(d) A has in his possession several seals, knowing them to be counterfeit and intending to use them for the purpose of committing several forgeries punishable under section 466 of the Indian Penal Code. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, the possession of each seal under section 473 of the Indian Penal Code.

(e) With intent to cause injury to B, A institutes a criminal proceeding against him, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding; and also falsely accused B of having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such charges. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, two offences under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code.

(f) A, with intent to cause injury to B, falsely accuses him of having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such charge. On the trial A gives false evidence against B, intending thereby to cause B to be convicted of a capital offence. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 211 and 194 of the Indian Penal Code.

(g) A, with six others, commits the offences of rioting, grievous hurt and assaulting a public servant endeavouring in the discharge of his duty as such to suppress the riot. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 147, 325 and 152 of the Indian Penal Code.

(h) A threatens B, C and D at the same time with injury to their persons with intent to cause alarm to them. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, each of the three offences under section 506 of the Indian Penal Code.

The separate charges referred to in illustrations (a) to (h) respectively may be tried at the same time.

to sub-section (2)—

(i) A wrongfully strikes B with a cane. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 352 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code.

(j) Several stolen sacks of corn are made over to A and B, who know they are stolen property, for the purpose of concealing them. A and B thereupon voluntarily assist each other to conceal the sacks at the bottom of a grain pit. A and B may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 411 and 414 of the Indian Penal Code.

(k) A exposes her child with the knowledge that she is thereby likely to cause its death. The child dies in consequence of such exposure. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 317 and 304 of the Indian Penal Code.

(l) A dishonestly uses a forged document as genuine evidence, in order to convict B, a public servant, of an offence under section 167 of the Indian Penal Code. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 471 (read with 466) and 196 of the same Code.

in sub-section (3)—

(m) A commits robbery on B, and in doing so voluntarily causes hurt to him. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under sections 323, 392 and 394 of the Indian Penal Code.

755A. Scope:—This section must not be taken as controlled by the words "not exceeding three" occurring in sec 234; there is nothing in this section to warrant the rule that not more than three offences can be combined even if those offences have been committed in the same transaction—Sanuman, 19 A.L.J. 392, 22 Cr.L.J. 641. If the offences are committed in the course of the same transaction, a charge is not illegal by reason of its containing more than three offences spread over a period longer than a year—Gan Mallu, 49 Mad 74, 48 M.L.J. 308, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513 (1523). The question of applicability of sec 235 arises only where separate offences, that is offences of a different nature, may form part of the same transaction and not where the question of different offences of the same nature is under consideration—Ramsheshan, 36 Cr.L.J. 1216 (1218), A.I.R. 1935 Nag 178.

Section 235 (1) and sec 236, Cr. P. C., are mutually exclusive, and if a case is governed by one of them it cannot be governed by the other—Srirangachariar, 35 Cr.L.J. 1503, 152 I.C. 154, 40 M.L.W. 586, 67 M.L.J. 583, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 673, 1934 M.W.N. 994, 1934 Cr.C. 1307. For contra see Note 762.

Joint trials, except where they are clearly authorized by law, do not save time in the long run and further the ends of justice. Where the legality of the joinder of charges is doubtful, the proper course is to hold a trial clearly authorized by the law—Abdur Rahim, 32 Cr.L.J. 611 (613), 130 I.C. 796, 12 P.L.T. 12, 1931 Cr.C. 230, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 102.

The word 'offence' as defined in sec. 4 (a) includes an act in respect of which a complaint may be made under sec. 20, Cattle Trespass Act. Consequently, a joinder of a charge under sec. 504, I.P. Code, with a charge under sec. 20, Cattle Trespass Act, is not illegal, where the two offences form parts of the same transaction—Deendayalu v. Ratna, 50 Mad 841, 52 M.L.J. 251, 28 Cr.L.J. 301 (302).

The law is clear that secs 235 and 239, Cr. P. C., which deal with the joinder of charges of different offences and the joint trial of a number of accused persons, are not controlled by the latter part of sec. 233 or by sec. 234, Cr. P. Code. If the offences are committed in the course of the same transaction they may be tried together, although they are more than three in number and extend over a period of more than one year. But there is nothing in sec. 235 or sec. 239 to suggest that they are not governed by sec. 222 or the first part of sec. 233, Cr. P. Code. On the contrary, the Illustrations to sec. 235 make it clear that when different offences are tried together, they must be separately charged—Karamallu Gulamalli, 40 Cr.L.J. 118 (121), 178 I.C. 706, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 481, 40 Bom.L.R. 1092, I.L.R. 1939 Bom. 42. See also Babulal Choukhani v. King-Emp., in Note 778.

756. Same transaction:—The expression "the same transaction" is used in sec. 235 in the same sense in which it is used in sec. 239, Cr. P. Code—Abdur Rahim, 32 Cr.L.J. 611, 130 I.C. 796, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 102, 12 P.L.T. 12, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 204, 1931 Cr.C. 230. "The expression 'same transaction' used in secs. 235 and 239 is an expression which from its very nature is incapable of exact definition, and must have been advisedly used because it had this quality. That during the years since the expression first appeared in the Statute Book, the combined wisdom of all the High Courts in India has failed to definitely fix its meaning, is sufficiently convincing that the task is impossible. The illustrations, however, make sufficiently clear the intention of the Legislature"—per Crouch, A.J.C. in Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191 (195). It is neither necessary nor advisable to attempt to define the expression "same transaction" which the Legislature has left undefined. Each particular case must be tried by common sense and a common knowledge of language—Ramaraju, 53 Mad. 937, 32 Cr.L.J. 30 (31), A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 857, 1930 Cr.C. 1033, 127 I.C. 654, 1930 M.W.N. 377, Ind. Rul. 1930 Mad. 1038, 32 M.L.W. 894, 59 M.L.J. 945, following Choragudi Venkatadri, 33 Mad. 502, 5 I.C. 847, 20 M.L.J. 220, 1910 M.W.N. 65. The word "transaction" is rather a vague term. It is not defined in the Cr. P. C., and no doubt it was advisedly left undefined. It is not intended to be interpreted in any artificial or technical sense. Common sense and the ordinary use of language must decide whether on the facts of a particular case it is one transaction or several transactions—Shapurji Sorabji, 37 Cr.L.J. 688 (690), 162 I.C. 399, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 154, 38 Bom.L.R. 106, 60 Bom. 148, 1936 Cr.C. 338. It has a wider significance for which a synonym may be found in the word "affair"—Ramnath, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 483 (485), 36 Cr.L.J. 342, 153 I.C. 423, 13 Pat. 161, 1934 A.L.R. 273, 1934 Cr.C. 1074. It is not possible to enunciate any comprehensive formula of universal applicability for the purpose of determining whether two or more acts constitute the same transaction, but circumstances which bear on the determination of the question in any individual case can be indicated by saying that proximity of time, unity or proximity of place, continuity of action and community of purpose or design are the principal criteria for deciding whether certain acts form part of the same transaction or not. The real and substantial test for determination whether several offences were so connected together as to form one transaction, depends upon whether they are related together in point of purpose, or as cause and effect, or as principal and subsidiary acts so as to constitute one continuous action—Raj Bahadur, 35 Cr.L.J. 1496 (1499), 152 I.C. 103, 11 O.W.N. 1309, 1934 Cr.C. 1379, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 499. The expression "the same transaction" suggests not necessarily proximity in time so much as continuity of action and purpose—Ganesh Prasad, 32 Cr.L.J. 478, 1931 Cr.C. 148, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 52, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 173, 130 I.C. 269, following Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49, 2 Cr.L.J. 578, 7 Bom.L.R. 633. See also Balwantsingh, 4 N.L.R. 71, 8 Cr.L.J. 11; Hari Raot, 2 N.L.R. 147, 4 Cr.L.J. 420; Rego, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 136, 1933 Cr.C. 610, 143 I.C. 17, 34 Cr.L.J. 505, 29 N.L.R. 251; Chhotey Miyani, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 250; Provincial Govt., C. P. & Berar v. Dinanath, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 263, 1939 N.L.J. 373. To determine whether or not a series of acts would form parts of the same transaction, the most important points to be considered are whether there was a common purpose and design and continuity of action—Ali Hussain, 56 C.L.J. 73 (75). It is for the Court to decide whether in each case there is sufficient continuity of purpose between the acts of jointly tried accused, to justify it in finding that the transaction was in reality a single one, though composed of separate acts by the different accused—Mezarali, 34 Cr.L.J. 870 (872), 144 I.C. 985, 35 Bom.L.R. 474, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 266, 1933 Cr.C. 678, 57 Bom. 400.

The question whether the acts are so connected together as to form part of the same transaction is a question of fact in each particular case—Tamez Khan v. Rajabali, 31 C.W.N. 337, 28 Cr.L.J. 347 (348); Bishan Sahai, A.I.R. 1937 All. 714 (717), 1937 A.W.R. 748, 1937 A.L.J. 1073, I.L.R. 1937 All. 779, 1937 A.L.R. 935, 171 I.C. 994, 1937 A.Cr.C. 119; Ghasiram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 542, 168 I.C. 450, 9 R.N. 255, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 188; and the area of facts covered by the expression 'same transaction' varies with the circumstances of each case—Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191 (200); Woodward, 18 S.L.R. 199, 27 Cr.L.J. 257. No comprehensive formula of universal application can be stated to determine whether two or more acts constitute the same transaction, but circumstances which must bear on the determination of the question in an individual case can be indicated; they are: proximity of time, unity or proximity of place, continuity of action and community of purpose or design—Amrita Lal, 42 Cal. 957 (983); Madhab Laxman, 43 Bom. 147, 20 Bom.L.R. 607; Kushai Mallik, 50 Cal. 1004 (1008); Banga Chandra v. Anando, 35 C.L.J. 527; Tamez Khan v. Rajabali, 31 C.W.N. 337, 28 Cr.L.J. 317 (348), 45 C.L.J. 591, 100 I.C. 965. Those criminal acts which are in English and Indian law regarded as subsidiary to an offence are included in the 'same transaction' as the offence. If a series of acts are so connected together by proximity of time, community of criminal intention, continuity of action and purpose or such subsidiary acts as would make the co-accused perceptus criminis or an accessory after the fact, or by the relation of cause and effect, as to constitute, in the opinion of the Court, one transaction, then the accused may be tried at one trial for every offence committed in such series of acts—Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191 (195, 196); Lukman, 21 S.L.R. 107, 27 Cr.L.J. 1233 (1239). But it is not necessary that all these elements should be present to make the several incidents parts of the same transaction. The most essential tests are continuity of action and community of purpose; that is, there should be a continuous operation of acts leading to the same end, and a common purpose should run through all the acts—Lockley, 43 Mad. 411 (413); Gan Mallu, 49 Mad. 74, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513 (1523); Choragudi Venkatadri, 33 Mad. 502; Virupana, 28 M.L.J. 397, 16 Cr.L.J. 323; Ram Subheg, 19 C.W.N. 972, 16 Cr.L.J. 461; Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49; Pahlad, 1 Lah. 562; Pepehidhi, 5 P.L.J. 11, 21 Cr.L.J. 161; Krishnasami, 26 Mad. 125. The real and substantial test for determining whether several offences are so connected together as to form one and the same transaction depends upon whether they are related together in point of purpose, or as cause and effect, or as principal and subsidiary acts, as to constitute one continuous action—Sherufalli, 27 Bom. 135; Sanuman, 19 A.L.J. 392, 22 Cr.L.J. 641; Krishna Aiyar, 8 L.W. 225, 1918 M.W.N. 525; Hari Raot, 2 N.L.R. 147, 4 Cr.L.J. 420; Gunwant, 13 N.L.R. 35, 18 Cr.L.J. 339 (342); Nag Lu, 19 Cr.L.J. 34 (Bur.); Woodward, 18 S.L.R. 199, 27 Cr.L.J. 257; Husainbai, 20 S.L.R. 74, 27 Cr.L.J. 456. In order that a series of acts be regarded as the same transaction, they must be connected together in some way. The Courts have indicated various tests to be employed to decide whether different acts are parts of the same transaction or not, namely, proximity of time, unity of place, unity or community of purpose or design and continuity of action. Proximity of time is not essential, though it often furnishes good evidence of what unites several acts into one transaction and, as Illus. (d) to this section shows, it may often be a very important factor in determining whether different offences of the same kind are to be treated as part of one transaction. The main test must really be continuity of action. It cannot mean merely doing the same thing or similar things continuously or repeatedly, for a recurring series of similar transactions is not according to the ordinary use of language, the same transaction. Continuity of action in the context must mean thus: the following up of some initial act through all its consequences and incidents until the series of acts or group of connected acts comes to an end, either by attainment of the object or by being put an end to or abandoned. If any of those things happens and the whole process is begun over again, it is not the same transaction but a new one, in spite of the fact that the same general purpose may continue—Shapurji Sorabji, 37 Cr.L.J. 688 (690), 162 I.C. 399, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 154, 38 Bom.L.R. 106, 60 Bom. 148, 1936 Cr.C. 338, 8 R.B. 415.

The first element to establish is a "series of acts," which would necessarily imply the acts being "connected together," but this will not be enough it will have to be shown further that the acts "form the same transaction." Mere sequence in time may establish the first element, but not necessarily the other. The expression "so connected together as to form the same transaction" has purposely and wisely been left undefined, but the words must be given a reasonable and rational meaning, and cannot be stretched to include a series of acts which have no relation to each other as cause and effect or as principal and subsidiary, or which are not shown to follow, the one from the other, as a necessary or natural sequel or concomitant. There must be one continuous thread of a common purpose running through the acts to support a joinder of charges in respect thereof. Mere difference in time or place between the commission of one offence and of another will not necessarily import want of such continuity: they may yet be linked together by a community or continuity of purpose, and thus form the same transaction—Kamala Kanta v. Emp., 41 C.W.N. 1112 (1117).

The test for applying sec. 235, Cr. P. C., is to see whether the acts alleged form a series that can be regarded as one transaction and it is difficult to see how this question can be answered in the negative when the evidence to prove the one offence, is identical with that by which the other is to be established—Mayadhar Pothal, 40 Cr.L.J. 625 (627), 181 I.C. 1001, 20 P.L.T. 420, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 577, 18 Pat. 450, 1939 P.W.N. 300.

The word "transaction" is usually used to include the steps leading to a conclusion or resulting in action, though often transaction emphasizes the fact of something done or brought to a conclusion. To ascertain whether a series of acts are parts of the same transaction, it would be essential to see whether they are linked together to present a continuous whole. The expression "same transaction" as judicially interpreted signifies "related to one another in point of purpose, or as cause and effect, or as principal and subsidiary acts as to denote one continuous and completed action" The idea of completion cannot be divorced from the interpretation of the expression The question is at what stage the act alleged has been done or completed—Ramchandra Rango v. Emp, 40 Cr.L.J. 579 (590), 181 I.C. 870, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 129, 41 Bom.L.R. 98.

The mere fact that two offences are committed at the same time or place is, however, neither necessary nor decisive as an indication of their being so connected as to form the same transaction—Abdur Rahim, 32 Cr.L.J. 611, 130 I.C. 796, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 102, 12 P.L.T. 12, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 204, 1931 Cr.C. 230, following Krishnasami, 26 Mad. 125, 2 Weir 295. Nor are offences so regarded merely because they may be inspired by one and the same general object, such as that of deceiving the public or plunder—Abdur Rahim, supra, following Choragudi, 5 I.C. 847, 33 Mad. 502, 11 Cr.L.J. 258, 1910 M.W.N. 65, 7 M.L.T. 299, 20 M.L.J. 220 and Ram Narain, 52 I.C. 481, 20 Cr.L.J. 657, 21 Bom.L.R. 732. So distinct acts of embezzlement committed in the course of several years by the managers of a Company formed with the object of defrauding the public, cannot be said to form part of the same transaction by reason of such general object, for separate acts to form parts of one and the same transaction, the purpose in view must be something particular and definite and where each act is a completed act in itself and accomplishes the original general design of defrauding the public so far as it goes, such acts cannot be tried together under sec. 235 (1)—Charagudi, supra. Where the accused, who was a Chaukidari Tahsildar of a village, told the villagers that their chaukidari assessment had been increased but that if they paid him the excess for one year, he would let the old rate stand, realised various sums of money on this representation from a number of villagers, was charged in respect of no less than 80 acts of cheating and convicted in one trial, held that the acts of cheating were distinct and unconnected, though the motive underlying all the offences was the same, and the joint trial was entirely illegal—Abdur Rahim, supra. The distinction between acts committed in pursuance of a conspiracy and acts committed merely in pursuance of a general policy of deception, plunder and the like is that the former may form one transaction but not the latter—Ram Narain, supra.

Under sec. 235 (1), Cr. P. C., the transaction itself need not be a criminal transaction. Offences can be committed in the course of a transaction whose aim is perfectly legitimate. The acts must be so related to each other in point of purpose, or as cause and effect, or as principal and subsidiary acts, as to constitute one continuous action. The test to be applied is not so much proximity in time as continuity of action and purpose. Where, however, criminal acts are separated by an interval of time, the length of the interval may be an important indication that such continuity is wanting. It is not necessary that of the offences committed in the course of the same transaction one should be a logical sequence to the others; as for instance when house-breaking is committed with the object of committing adultery and that object is subsequently attained; reiteration of the same offence or the commission of similar offences in the course of the same transaction also brings the case within the section—Ruikar, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 149, 31 N.L.R. 318, 157 I.C. 618, 1935 Cr.C. 834, 36 Cr.L.J. 1153, following Fakirappa, 15 Bom. 491; Harri Raol, 2 N.L.R. 147, 4 Cr.L.J. 420;

Gunwant, A.I.R. 1916 Nag. 73, 38 I.C. 723, 18 Cr.L.J. 339, 13 N.L.R. 35 and Rameshwar, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 327, 1933 Cr.C. 1328, 144 I.C. 94, 34 Cr.L.J. 673. The expression "same transaction" means a series of acts connected together so as to amount to what human perception regards as a proceeding begun, continued and ended—Balwant Singh, 4 N.L.R. 71, 8 Cr.L.J. 11.

When a proposal for the boycott is made by the President of an Association, and shortly afterwards the secretary and a member of that Association take joint action to boycott the person against whom the resolution is directed, the inference is that they are acting in furtherance of a common purpose, or in other words, they are taking part in a conspiracy. Acts done in pursuance of such a conspiracy must be deemed to be parts of the same transaction—Nga Aung, 1 Rang. 604, 25 Cr.L.J. 270, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 98.

Mere proximity of time between two acts does not necessarily constitute them as parts of the same transaction—Son Daik, 1 L.B.R. 361; Nga Tha, 5 Bur.L.T. 101, 13 Cr.L.J. 485. The test to be applied to find out whether a series of acts forms part of the same transaction is not so much the proximity of time as the community of purpose or progressive action towards a single object—Monmohan, 19 C.W.N. 672, 29 I.C. 513, 16 Cr.L.J. 497, 21 C.L.J. 331; Kushai, 50 Cal. 1004; Pahlad, 1 Lah. 562, 21 Cr.L.J. 626; Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49 (54); Hari Raot, 2 N.L.R. 147, 4 Cr.L.J. 420; Gunwant, 13 N.L.R. 35, 18 Cr.L.J. 339 (342); Gam Mallu, 49 Mad. 74, 48 M.L.J. 308, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513 (1523); and a mere interval of time between the commission of one offence and another does not necessarily import want of continuity, though the length of the interval may be an important element in determining the question of the connection between the two—Sherufali, 27 Bom. 135, 4 Bom.L.R. 930; Pahlad, 1 Lah. 562; Kushai, 50 Cal. 1004; Gam Mallu, supra; Varupana, 28 M.L.J. 397, 16 Cr.L.J. 323. A series of acts separated by intervals are not excluded from the 'same transaction,' if the accused started together for the same goal—Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49; Ganesh Narain, 14 Bom.L.R. 972, 13 Cr.L.J. 833.

Where two or more acts were committed on different dates, and there was no connection between the two so as to make them the same transaction, a joint trial is illegal—Shafi, 21 A.L.J. 859, 25 Cr.L.J. 964, A.I.R. 1924 All. 211. Two acts of theft committed on different occasions, at an interval of 24 hours between the two acts, and in different places are not parts of the same transaction and cannot be tried jointly, e.g., where the accused cut away logs of trees on two days from different parts of a forest, and there was no suggestion that the accused endeavoured to remove a certain number of logs forming a particular batch, and came back next day to remove the remainder of the logs which he could not remove on the previous day—Tamez Khan v. Rajabali, 31 C.W.N. 337, 100 I.C. 827, 28 Cr.L.J. 347 (348). A charge under sec. 120B, I.P.C., of being a party to a criminal conspiracy to commit theft can be jointly tried with a charge under sec. 413, I.P.C., of being a habitual receiver of property stolen in pursuance of the conspiracy, but cannot be jointly tried with a charge of being a habitual dealer in property which is stolen in a transaction outside the conspiracy—Maung Ba Chit, 7 Rang. 821, 31 Cr.L.J. 387 (390, 391).

757. Instances of 'same transaction':—(1) Theft of a cart from one house, and theft of two bullocks from another house in order to remove the cart—Hari Raot, 2 N.L.R. 147, 4 Cr.L.J. 420.

(2) Cheating by false personation, forging a letter to support the false personation, and further cheating on the strength of that forged letter—Sri Narain, 11 C.W.N. 715, 5 Cr.L.J. 481 (487). Cheating and perjury—Abdul Hamid, 37 Cr.L.J. 492, 161 I.C. 763, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 174, 14 Rang. 24, 1936 Cr.C. 271.

(3) Receiving some property stolen on a particular occasion, and assisting to conceal some other property stolen on the same occasion—Mian Jan, 28 All. 313.

(4) Rioting with a deadly weapon, causing hurt to one person and grievous hurt to another person by a dangerous weapon in the riot—Dunger Singh, 7 All. 29; Katwari, 39 All. 623, 18 Cr.L.J. 788. An offence under sec. 147, I.P.C., has been made a substantive offence by the Indian Penal Code, and there is no illegality in the accused being charged under that section in addition to charges under secs 323 and 325, I. P. C.—Manni Lal v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 341, 173 I.C. 386, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 95, 1938 O.W.N. 218, 1938 O.L.R. 117, 1938 O.A. 158, 1938 A.Cr.C. 14, 10 R.O. 222.

(5) Conspiracy to wage war, and concealing the existence of such conspiracy from the authorities—Barindra, 37 Cal. 467, 14 C.W.N. 1114. See Notes 723 and 778.

(6) Dacoity in one place, and the previous murder of a person in another place who had found out the dacoits while they were going to commit the dacoity—Punya, 4 Bom L.R. 789.

(7) Wrongful confinement of several persons for extorting money, extortion of money, and further wrongful confinement on a subsequent day for extortion of further amount of money—Kailash, 42 Cal. 760, 19 C.W.N. 181, 10 Cr.L.J. 120.

(8) Forgery, abetment of forgery, and use of the forged document in a Civil Court—Jivram, 40 Bom. 97, 17 Bom L.R. 881, 16 Cr.L.J. 761, 31 I.C. 361.

(9) Causing grievous hurt (by a police officer) to a person (for extorting confession) who died of the injuries, and making false entries in the official records attributing another cause for the death of that person—Baiwant, 14 Bom L.R. 41, 13 Cr.L.J. 137; causing of hurt and wrongful confinement by a police-officer to extort confession, and then making false entries in the Case-diary in order to save himself from the consequences of his acts—Sanjiv Rainappa, 55 Bom. 488, 1932 Cr.C. 777 (778), 34 Bom L.R. 1090, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 545.

(10) Conspiracy to commit an offence, and the commission of that offence in pursuance of the conspiracy—Amrita Lal, 42 Cal. 957, 29 I.C. 513, 16 Cr.L.J. 497, 21 C.L.J. 331, 19 C.W.N. 676; Monmohan, 19 C.W.N. 672, 16 Cr.L.J. 3, 26 I.C. 307, 21 C.L.J. 195; Abdul Rahman, 4 Bur L.J. 213, 27 Cr.L.J. 669 (672), 3 Rang. 95; Harsha Nath, 26 I.C. 313, 42 Cal. 1153, 16 Cr.L.J. 9, 21 C.L.J. 201, 19 C.W.N. 706; Dur Mahomed, 35 Cr.L.J. 1337 (1340), 151 I.C. 494, 28 S.L.R. 119, 1934 Cr.C. 628, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 57; Ochhavilal Bhikhabhai, 35 Cr.L.J. 112, 146 I.C. 587, 35 Bom L.R. 985, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 447, 1933 Cr.C. 1406. See Notes 723 and 778.

(11) Criminal misappropriation or breach of trust, and falsification of accounts in order to screen the misappropriation—Jiban Krishna, 40 Cal. 318, 14 Cr.L.J. 428, 20 I.C. 412; Mangal Sein, 11 Lah L.J. 384, 30 Cr.L.J. 958. Thus, where a police-officer, who took charge of certain ornaments of a deceased lady, misappropriated those ornaments and altered the entries in the police diary regarding the ornaments and substituted some fresh pages to show that the ornaments were never placed in his charge, held that he could be tried for offences under secs. 218, 409 and 477A, I. P. C., as they were committed in the same transaction—Bilas Chandra, 27 C.W.N. 626, 25 Cr.L.J. 343.

(12) Illegal possession of opium, and illegal possession of cocaine for the purpose of carrying on business of selling contraband—Nga Lu, 19 Cr.L.J. 34 (Bur.).

(13) Receipt of stolen property, sale of that property by the accused to his employer for Rs 3,000, out of which the accused misappropriated Rs 1,000 and paid only Rs 2,000 to the person from whom the accused received the stolen property, which act amounts to cheating the employer; here the act of receiving stolen property and the act of cheating form parts of the same transaction—Lockley, 43 Mad 411 (413), 21 Cr.L.J. 297, 38 M.L.J. 209.

(14) Possession of stencil plates for the purpose of selling them (sec 486, I. P. C.)—Sherufali, 27 Bom. 135.

(15) Kidnapping a minor girl with intent to marry her to somebody (sec. 366, I. P. C.), and cheating somebody by false representation and inducing him to take the girl in marriage and to part with money to consideration of marriage with the girl (sec. 420, I. P. C.)—Husainbai, 20 S.L.R. 74, 27 Cr.L.J. 456.

(16) M sent a telegram to America to Mrs. P asking her to send a certain sum of money wording the telegram as though it was despatched by P. Held that M was guilty of three distinct offences, under sec. 468, I. P. C., when he wrote the telegram, under sec. 29, Telegraph Act, when he sent the telegram, and under sec. 420, I. P. C., when Mrs P received telegram and sent the money; and these offences were committed in the same transaction—Mahomed Rafiq, 25 SLR 9, 1931 CrC. 734 (735), A.I.R. 1931 Sind 116, 134 I.C. 1004, Ind. Rul. 1931 Sind 156.

(17) Where blackmailing was evidently the common purpose in pursuance of which money was realised on two different dates Held that the second realisation was in continuation of the action in the first and both were in fulfilment of that common design of blackmailing and were parts of one and the same transaction and that offences regarding both the incidents may be tried together—Ali Hussain, 56 CLJ. 73 (75).

(18) The personation of a Police-officer and the acts in that character forming the backbone of a series of frauds which the accused was thereby enabled to commit, are parts of one and the same transaction and can be tried together—Raj Jagdish v Atma Ram, 15 C.W.N. 732, 12 CrLJ. 346, 10 I.C. 946

(19) Where the accused were charged with two acts of criminal trespass and house trespass on two successive nights in respect of property over which they asserted right of possession Held that the trial in one trial of these offences was legal as these acts were not distinct but were carried out in furtherance of a common purpose—Maung Kaung Kywe, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 357, 37 CrLJ. 3, 159 I.C. 57, 1935 CrC. 1081.

(20) A single trial for the offences under sec 353, I. P. C., and sec. 295, U. P. Municipalities Act, is competent—Chhote Lal, A.I.R. 1936 All 74, 37 CrLJ. 382, 160 I.C. 1089, 1936 CrC. 100.

(21) When the accused himself had killed a person in order to foist a false case of murder upon his enemies and immediately after committing murder went to prefer a false complaint, it cannot be said that strictly speaking a joint trial held for the two offences under secs 302 and 211, I. P. C., was illegal. It can fairly be contended that the two acts were connected together and formed part of the same transaction. But it is quite obvious that offences of this nature ought not to be tried together. It is obviously very embarrassing to the accused to have to answer a charge of murder at the same time as a charge of wilfully preferring a false complaint of murder. It is also embarrassing to the prosecution and may lead to failure of justice—Uppara Dodda Narasa, A.I.R. 1939 Mad 59, 48 MLW 601, 1938 MWN. 1116, (1938) 2 MLJ 771, 1938 MCrC. 331, 40 CrLJ 211, 179 I.C. 518

(22) Where the murder of the deceased and the robbery were parts of the same transaction and were simultaneously done and the alleged stolen property found in the possession of the accused was property stolen in that very robbery done at the time of the murder, there is ample authority in sec 235, Cr P C., and the succeeding sections of the Code for the trial of the accused, at one trial for all the offences under secs. 302, 392 and 411, I. P. C.—Mayadhar Pothal, 40 CrLJ 625 (627), 181 I.C. 1001, 20 P.L.T. 420

(23) Where what the prosecution alleged was that the accused having made up his mind to obtain insurance money from the Insurance Company by fraud, had to that end set fire to his shop and after the fire had put in a claim for the money, it is not possible to say that the attempt to cheat was not essentially connected with the arson. In such a case the framing of the two charges under sec 420/511 and 436/34, I. P. C., in the same trial does not amount to a misjoinder—Ahmadar Rahaman v Emp., 44 CWN 340 (343).

758. Acts not forming same transaction:—(1) Kidnapping a boy, and after a day or two, assaulting the boy's mother who came to demand of the boy—Chakutty, 26 Mad 451

(2) The accused was entrusted with a sum of money payable to a Railway Company as freight for certain goods to be taken delivery of; he took delivery of the goods from the Railway Company without making payment, and absconded. Held that the misappropriation and cheating were not parts of the same transaction—Parmeshwar, 13 C.W.N. 1089, 10 CrLJ 476, 4 I.C. 28

(3) Criminal trespass into the house of the complainant, and assault on the complainant on a subsequent day while he was going to inform the Police of the criminal trespass—Nga Tha, 5 Bur.L.T. 101, 13 Cr.L.J. 485; see also Virupana, 28 M.L.J. 397, 16 Cr.L.J. 323'. Criminal trespass into the shop of the complainant and rioting when there was no finding when the accused was put into possession by the rioters nor any allegations even that it was the object of the riot forcibly to transfer the possession from the complainant to the accused—Ganauri Mia, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 248, 16 P.L.T. 847.

(4) Abetment of falsification of account-book, fraudulently destroying and secreting other documents and criminal breach of trust, do not constitute same transaction when there is nothing to show that the account-book was falsified in order to conceal the destruction of documents or that the documents were destroyed in order to prevent the falsification of account being detected—Krishnasami, 26 Mad. 125.

(5) Cutting and misappropriation of a large number of trees on eight or nine separate occasions at intervals extending over several months—Raghavendra, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 467, 12 Cr.L.J. 567.

(6) Criminal misappropriation or breach of trust, and falsification of accounts relating to another distinct act or misappropriation or breach of trust—Jagatram, 19 Cr.L.J. 987 (Lah.); Jiban Kristo, 40 Cal. 318, 14 Cr.L.J. 428.

(7) Theft of eight necklaces at different periods extending over two years, though from the same person—Raman Lal, 49 All. 312, 28 Cr.L.J. 171 (172), 99 I.C. 603, 25 A.L.J. 217, A.I.R. 1927 All. 223.

(8) Forgery of a document, and subsequent presentation of the forged document to a Loan office in order to induce that office to grant a loan, are not parts of the same transaction—Birendra, 30 Cal. 822 (829, 830). Forgery and giving the false evidence in respect of service of summons, and false evidence in respect of another summons on a different occasion—Gehimal, 10 S.L.R. 192, 18 Cr.L.J. 664.

(9) Five murders committed in one day, three in one village in the forenoon and two in another village in the afternoon, without there being any apparent connection between the two sets of murder—Fauja, 17 A.L.J. 614, 20 Cr.L.J. 353. See Note 723 under the heading "Culpable homicide."

(10) Preparation of false balance-sheet by a Company for the year 1912, and preparation of another false balance-sheet for the year 1913 are distinct and separate acts, and cannot be said to form parts of the same transaction—Ram Narayan, 21 Bom.L.R. 732, 20 Cr.L.J. 657.

(11) Manufacturing denatured spirit, possessing such spirit without license, bottling it for the purpose of sale, selling similar spirit from time to time, and attempting to render denatured spirit fit for human consumption, do not constitute the same transaction—Upendra Nath, 41 Cal. 694 (702), 18 C.W.N. 486.

(12) Offences under secs 406 and 174, I. P. C.—Dhan Singh, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 630, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 524, 35 P.L.R. 653, 1934 Cr.C. 965, 36 Cr.L.J. 676, 155 I.C. 163.

(13) Offences of murder, robbery and cheating by personation are distinct offences not committed in the course of the same transaction when the charge of cheating was based upon an incident which had taken place about a year previous to the commission of murder and robbery when the accused, who was a Mohammadan, induced the complainant to take him into his service as a cook by masquerading as a Brahmin—Kamala Kanta v. Emp., 41 C.W.N. 1112.

(14) Where two distinct offences of theft in two separate houses were tried at one and the same trial, and the alternative charges under sec. 411, I. P. C., were also in respect of each of those transactions, the trial was not according to law because the charges were wrongly joined—Boya Lingadu, 41 Cr.L.J. 581, 188 I.C. 381, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 509, 1940 M.W.N. 239, 51 M.L.W. 321, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 428, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 509 (510), 1940 M.Cr.C. 79.

759. Separate trial not illegal:—This is an enabling section, and not imperative. Though it provides for a joint trial of offences committed in the same transaction, yet a separate trial for each of the offences is not illegal—Ameruddin v. Farid Sarkar, 8 Cal. 481; Abdul Hamid, 6 Pat. 208, 27 Cr.L.J. 1100; Ram Deoji, 30 Bom.L.R.

636, 29 Cr.L.J. 981 (1982). And a conviction or acquittal in respect of one of the offences is no bar to the trial of another—Baldeo, 3 A.L.J. 2, 3 Cr.L.J. 93. If in any case either the accused are likely to be bewildered in their defence by having to meet many disconnected charges or the prospect of a fair trial is likely to be endangered by the production of a mass of evidence directed to many different matters and tending by its mere accumulation to induce an undue suspicion against the accused, then the propriety of combining the charges may well be questioned—Q-E. v Fakirapa, 15 Bom. 491; Rasul 111 I.C. 305, 5 O.W.N. 612, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 401, 3 Luck. 664, 29 Cr.L.J. 801. Where it is likely that the joinder of charges will result in bewildering the accused, such joinder should not be permitted even though the offences were committed in the same transaction—Gulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191 (195); Alimuddin, 52 Cal 253, 29 C.W.N. 173, 26 Cr.L.J. 487, 40 C.L.J. 451, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 341, 85 I.C. 231. The words "any number of them" in section 235 must not be construed too literally. The Legislature has not, as in the case of charges falling under section 234 restricted the number of charges which can be tried in one trial but that does not mean that the accused can be bewildered in their defence or prejudiced in the eyes of the jury by having a multitude of accusations hurled against them at one and the same time—Dur Mahomed, 35 Cr.L.J. 1337 (1339), 151 I.C. 491, 28 S.L.R. 119, 1934 Cr.C. 628, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 57. In a Calcutta case, where several offences were committed in the same transaction, and a joint trial of several charges was held in the lower Court, the High Court, to be on the safe side, upheld the conviction and sentence on only one of the charges, setting aside the conviction on the other charges—Radha Nath, 50 Cal. 95 (99), 36 C.L.J. 149, 24 Cr.L.J. 72, A.I.R. 1932 573, 71 I.C. 120. See also Dur Mahomed, supra.

In Jabanullah, 33 C.W.N. 365, 57 Cal 1162, 32 Cr.L.J. 111, the High Court condemned the practice of having a long series of charges in a case triable by jury as it is likely to confuse them.

760. Offences requiring complaint of Court:—If, during the course of the same transaction, several offences are committed, some requiring complaint of Court under sec 195, and others not, and the Court refuses to make any complaint in respect of the offences requiring complaint, the accused may be separately charged and tried for those offences for which no complaint is necessary—Krishna Pillai v Krishna Konun, 31 Mad. 43 (44). See also Note 614D.

760A. Sub-section (2):—According to sub-sec (2) of sec 235, if the accused committed abetment of an offence under sec 122, I. P. C. (collecting men to loot the treasuries, slaughter the Englishmen, etc., and by the same speech instigated the offence of dacoity (secs 395 and 116, I. P. C.), he could be tried for each of these offences. But the offence under sec 122, I. P. C., required the sanction of the Government under sec 196 of this Code, and if no sanction of the Government was obtained, the accused could be charged with and convicted of the offence of instigation of dacoity (secs 395 and 116, I. P. C.)—Anant Purask, 25 Bom. 90 (98). So also, where the act of the accused amounts to an offence under sec 411, I. P. C. (dishonest receipt of stolen property) as also to an offence under sec 414, I. P. C. (concealment or disposal of that property), he can be charged with and convicted of both the offences. See Illustration (7) to this section. And so, a person who might be charged, but is not charged, under sec. 411, I. P. C., can be charged and convicted under sec 414, I. P. C.—Abdul Gani, 49 Bom 878, 27 Bom.L.R. 1373, 27 Cr.L.J. 114 (119).

Sub-section (3):—One of the counts in the charge against the accused under trial for waging war (sec. 121, I. P. C.) was that they had committed dacoity under secs. 395 and 397, I. P. Code. This count was struck off as being too vague, and the accused were convicted under sec. 121, I. P. C. Held that the validity of the conviction under sec. 121, I. P. C. was not affected by the striking off of the charge for other offences forming component parts of the offence of waging war, as the acts of dacoity were all merely some of the series of incidents which went to make up the continuing offences of waging war within the meaning of sec. 235 (3), Cr. P. Code—Gam Mallu, 49 Mad 74, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513 (1515).

761. Sub-section (4)—Section 235 shall not affect sec. 71, I. P. C.— (For the text of sec. 71, I. P. C., see Notes under sec. 35, ante). Although in cases falling under sec. 235, a joint trial of several offences may be held, still in awarding punishment, Courts are to be guided by the provisions contained in sec. 71, I. P. C. Therefore, where an offence comes within two sections of the I. P. C., the accused may be charged with and tried at one trial for two offences, under sub-sec. (2), but the punishment cannot be cumulative.—Francis Xavier, Ratanlal 506; Wazir Jan, 10 All. 58. So also, where several acts, each of which would by itself constitute an offence, constitute when combined a different offence, the person accused of them may be charged with and tried at one trial for the comprehensive offence or for any one of the offences, but the whole punishment should not be more severe than the punishment for the gravest offence provided.—Chandra Kant, 12 Cal. 495

It should be noted that sec. 71, I. P. C., refers only to cases falling under sub-secs. (2) and (3) of this section and does not apply to cases under sub-sec. (1). Therefore, where offences are committed in the course of the same transaction under sub-sec. (1), the Court is not precluded from passing sentence on every such offence—Wazir Jan, 10 All. 58; Nurichan, 12 Mad 36; Loke Nath, 11 Cal. 349; Kali Das, 38 Cal. 453 (457); but a concurrent sentence would be more proper—Kali Das, supra.

236. If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences.

Where it is doubtful what offence has been committed.

Illustrations.

(a) A is accused of an act which may amount to theft or receiving stolen property or criminal breach of trust or cheating. He may be charged with theft, receiving stolen property, criminal breach of trust and cheating, or he may be charged with having committed theft, or receiving stolen property or criminal breach of trust or cheating.

(b) A states on oath before the Magistrate that he saw B hit C with a club. Before the Sessions Court A states on oath that B never hit C. A may be charged in the alternative and convicted of intentionally giving false evidence, although it cannot be proved which of these contradictory statements was false

762. Application of section:—Section 236 applies only to a case in which there is a single act or a series of acts of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences is constituted by the criminal act or acts—Akram Ali, 18 C.L.J. 574, 15 Cr.L.J. 41 (42), 22 I.C. 185. The section is only applicable when there is a doubt as to which offences has been committed—Kanhaiya, 31 Cr.L.J. 716, 124 I.C. 553, A.J.R. 1930 All. 481. This section contemplates a state of facts which constitute a single offence, but where it is doubtful whether the act or acts involved may amount to one or other of several cognate offences—Croft, 23 Cal. 174 (177); Damodar, 8 Pat. 731, 1929 Cr.C. 413; Ganesh, 5 S.L.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 224 (per Pratt, J.C.). This section applies only to those rare cases in which the prosecution cannot establish exclusively any one offence—Mahomed Rafiq, AIR 1931 Sind 116 (117), 25 S.L.R. 9, Ind. Rul. 1931 Sind 156, 134 I.C. 1004, 1931 Cr.C. 734. This section deals with a transaction which raises a doubt as to the offences that has been committed. There must not be any doubt as to "the single act or series of acts" which constitute the transaction, that is to say, there must not be any doubt as to the facts. The doubt must be as to the inferences to be deduced from these facts, thus making it "doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute"—Meher Sheikh, 59 Cal. 8, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 414, 35 C.W.N. 945, 32 Cr.L.J. 892, 132 I.C. 254, 1931 Cr.C. 510, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 574, Where it is not at all doubtful which of several offences the facts found would constitute, i.e., where there is no doubt which of several offences has been committed by the accused, this section does not apply—Croft, supra; Thakar v. Chatter, 20 P.R. 1910, 11 Cr.L.J. 420 (421); Akram Ali, supra. Thus, where there is no doubt that the offence committed is an offence of causing hurt under sec. 323, I P C., and not an offence under sec. 147, I. P. C., this section has no application—Genu Manjhi, 18 C.W.N. 1276, 15 Cr.L.J. 704 (705).

The doubt contemplated by the sections must arise at the time of charge. In order to decide whether such a doubt exists as will attract the provisions therein contained, the Judge must know at that time what facts "can be proved" Therefore, this expression must mean facts about which there is evidence in the hands of this prosecution. Where the evidence is circumstantial, and the decision depends upon the question whether the Court will draw a possible inference, or which of several possible inferences, there exists a doubt within the meaning of this section—Istahar Khondkar, 39 C.W.N. 620 (623), 62 Cal. 956, 37 Cr.L.J. 701, 162 I.C. 927, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 796, 1936 Cr.C. 1132.

Section 236 does not apply where there is any doubt as to the facts, but applies where there is a doubt as to the law applicable to certain set of facts which have been proved—Po Thin, 7 Rang. 96, 30 Cr.L.J. 750, 117 I.C. 244, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 209, 1929 Cr.C. 256, Ind. Rul. 1929 Rang. 180; Abdul Hamid, 37 Cr.L.J. 492, 161 I.C. 763, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 174, 14 Rang. 24, 1936 Cr.C. 271; Nga Po, 6 Bur.L.J. 83, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 254, 28 Cr.L.J. 759, 103 I.C. 839; Partapa, 11 PR 1913, 14 Cr.L.J. 664. Section 236, Cr. P. C., is generally regarded as limited in its application it is not intended to be applied to a case where the facts are left in doubt or to enable the Judge to leave the facts in doubt and thus escape that responsibility and duty of making up his mind which the law places on him it applies to a case where the facts are not in doubt, but it is doubtful which provision of the law applies to these facts—Ghulam Hyder Imam Baksh v. Emp, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 63, 31 SLR 480, 174 I.C. 497, 39 Cr.L.J. 460, 10 R.S. 254. An alternative charge under this section can be framed only in those cases in which the prosecution cannot establish exclusively any one offence but are able on the facts to exclude the innocence of the accused and to show that the accused must have committed one of two or more offences—Ganesh, 5 SLR 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 224 (226), 10 I.C. 168. This section applies only when the facts being ascertained it is doubtful which of two or more offences those facts constitute. If the facts are in doubt or if the ascertained facts are consistent with the innocence of the accused, this section does not apply—Paul De Flonder, 35 C.W.N. 809 (811), 32 Cr.L.J. 1167, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 528, 134 I.C. 433, 1931 Cr.C. 680, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 817; Khudiram, 12 C.W.N. 530; Meher Sheikh, 35 C.W.N. 945, 132 I.C. 254, 59 Cal. 8, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 414, 1931 Cr.C. 510, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 574, 32 Cr.L.J. 892, Baluchami, 35 Cr.L.J. 76, 146 I.C. 475, 1933 M.W.N. 718, 38 M.L.W. 760. But see Nga Po Kyone, 35 Cr.L.J. 41 (42), 146 I.C. 392, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 236, 1933 Cr.C. 907, 11 Rang. 354, where it has been laid down that, secs. 236 and 237 do not say that they are applicable only when the facts are clear but the law is doubtful. Sections 236 and 237 are merely provisions against the defeat of justice on technical grounds. Where an offence is proved by the evidence, but its legal definition is doubtful or has been incorrectly given in the charge, then sec. 236 or sec. 237 may be resorted to. They really deal with instances which the language of sec. 235 might fail to cover—Mahadeo Gir, 9 N.L.R. 26, 14 Cr.L.J. 135.

Therefore this section is applicable where the doubt exists as to whether the accused had committed murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder, such a doubt being based on facts only—Khan Muhammad, 1887 P.R. 11; Ganesh, supra. So again, where the accused was charged under two heads of charge with committing dacoity in each of two adjoining houses, and it was doubtful as to which house he entered, an alternative charge that the accused committed dacoity either in A's house or in B's house is illegal—Dewji, Ratanlal 20. Even though the Magistrate frames alternative charges in a case where the facts are in doubt, still he is not entitled, at the conclusion of the trial, to compromise his doubts as to the true facts of the case by convicting in the alternative. He is bound to come to a distinct finding as to the facts, and then only if the law applicable to the facts which he considers to have been proved is doubtful, he may convict in the alternative—Po Thin, 7 Rang. 96, 30 Cr.L.J. 750, 1929 Cr.C. 356. See Babu Ram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 All. 754, 39 Cr.L.J. 152, 1937 A.L.J. 1214, 172 I.C. 617, 1938 A.L.R. 6, 1937 A.W.R. 885; Ghulam Hyder Imam Baksh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Sind 63, 31 S.L.R. 480, 174 I.C. 497, 39 Cr.L.J. 460. But see Istahar Khondwar, 39 C.W.N. 620 (624), 62 Cal. 956, 37 Cr.L.J. 701, 162 I.C. 927, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 796, 1936 Cr.C. 1132, 8 R.C. 665, where it has been laid down that though an accused may be charged in the alternative under sec. 236, judgment under sec. 237 cannot be passed in the alternative, that is to say, the accused cannot be convicted of two or more offences in the alternative.

If the Magistrate is not able to find for certain that facts exist which justify conviction, he should of course acquit the accused, but where the Magistrate has found that facts do exist which establish that the accused person must have committed some offence, although it is doubtful exactly what that offence was, a conviction for the least serious offence is perfectly good. The most that can be said is that there cannot be an alternative conviction or for that matter an alternative charge where the facts are doubtful but only where the deductions from the facts are doubtful. The accused is certainly not entitled to escape punishment merely because it is not possible to say which of two offences he committed, when it is clear that he is guilty of one of them—Babu Ram v. Emp., supra. See Note 1048.

Sections 236 and 237, Cr. P. C., contemplate cases where at the commencement of the trial there is uncertainty whether the facts which the prosecution expect or undertake to prove, if proved, will constitute offence A or B or C and the uncertainty is resolved at the end of the trial, showing which particular offence out of these was actually committed. In such a case, it is provided that the accused may be charged with any one or more of such offences, but may be finally convicted of one other or others of them though not actually charged. The uncertainty must necessarily be an uncertainty arising out of a postulated set of facts, not an uncertainty regarding the facts which the prosecution may be ultimately able to establish. Section 237, Cr. P. C., does not deal with a case where the evidence falls short of proving the offence which the prosecution had set out to prove; that would be governed by sec. 238, Cr. P. C., if it could be made to apply—Gotoke Behari Takal v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 161 (178), 173 I.C. 65, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 51, 66 C.L.J. 225, 42 C.W.N. 129, 10 R.C. 411, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 290.

This section only authorises a charge in the alternative when it is doubtful which of the several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, and not where there may be a doubt as to the facts which constitute one of the elements of the offence—Wafader, 21 Cal. 955; Nayamulla, 26 Cr.L.J. 594 (Cal.); Ganesh, 5 S.L.R. 16, 10 I.C. 168, 12 Cr.L.J. 221 (227) (per Pratt, P.C.).

It is no doubt true that in the circumstances postulated by sec. 236 any number of such charges may be tried at once. But this provision does not do away with the obligation so to state the charge as to give the accused a sufficient notice of the matter which they have to meet—Allahrakhio, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 164 (166), 1934 Cr.C. 1266, 152 I.C. 1061, 36 Cr.L.J. 231, 152 I.C. 106.

This section does not apply where the two offences are distinct and separate, the one offence being committed subsequent to the other; thus, the offence of abetment of forgery and the offence of using the forged document (which has been committed subsequent to the abetment of forgery) must be separately charged—Harun Rashid, 53 Cal. 466, 30 C.W.N. 432, 27 Cr.L.J. 606.

This section provides for cumulative as well as for alternative charges. A Cumulative charge can be framed in case of offences of the same kind but which differ in degree. The difference in degree depends upon some added circumstance of aggravation, e.g., that the thief was the servant of the complainant, or upon some difference in the intention imputed to the accused, as in the case of murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder. In an alternative charge, the circumstance of aggravation or the intention imputed to the accused must not be left in doubt. In other words, an alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of cognate offences when the difference is one of degree, i.e., as to the intention imputed to the accused or as to some circumstance of aggravation. An alternative charge can be framed when the prosecution establishes a corpus delicti or the facts which can be proved, and there are certain subsidiary facts which cannot be proved and so it becomes doubtful under which penal provision the delictum falls—Ganesh, 5 S.L.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 224 (226). Thus, for instance, an alternative charge can be framed in case of theft or dishonest receipt of stolen property; here the fact that the accused is found in possession of stolen property is the corpus delicti; whether the accused stole it himself or received it from the thief are subsidiary facts which only affect the question whether his delictum falls under sec 379 or 411, I. P. C. Take another instance, an accused may be charged in the alternative with murder or abetment of murder; here the corpus delicti are the facts showing the murder and the accused's connivance; whether he did the murder with his own hand or by the hand of another is a subsidiary fact which is left in doubt—Ganesh, supra; Purshottam, 45 Bom. 834 (861, 862) (F.B.). So also, a charge of murder may be joined in the alternative with a charge of causing evidence of murder to disappear—Begu, 6 Lah. 226 (P.C.), 30 C.W.N. 581, 26 Cr.L.J. 1059; Hanmappa, 25 Bom.L.R. 231, 25 Cr.L.J. 1349; Chinna Gangappa, 54 Mad. 68, 32 Cr.L.J. 263 (265); Andal, 18 S.L.R. 185, 26 Cr.L.J. 909; Bauva Maghmdas, 4 S.L.R. 474, 11 Cr.L.J. 731 (The contrary view expressed in Tarap Ali, 22 Cal. 638; Partapa, 11 P.R. 1913, 14 Cr.L.J. 664, and Samanta, 20 C.W.N. 166 are overruled by the Privy Council case of Begu, supra) See Rego, 34 Cr.L.J. 505 (509), 143 I.C. 17, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 136, Ind. Rul. 1933 Nag. 153, 1933 Cr.C. 610, 29 N.L.R. 251. See also Swanta, cited in Note 766. On charges under sec 489A (counterfeiting a currency note) and sec. 410 (cheating by means of a forged currency note), the High Court directed the conviction to be in the alternative—Hira, 15 A.L.J. 587, 18 Cr.L.J. 790 (791). An accused may be charged with an offence under sec 395, I. P. C., alternatively with an offence under sec. 457, I. P. C.—Bikram Ali, 57 Cal. 801, 31 Cr.L.J. 610, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 139, 50 C.L.J. 467, 1930 Cr.C. 139, 124 I.C. 66. A charge of kidnapping and abduction in the alternative is not illegal—Prafulla, 57 Cal. 1074, 31 Cr.L.J. 903 (905); but it is desirable to frame a separate charge for kidnapping and a separate charge for abduction, specially where the age of the girl is in question—Ramizullah, 37 C.W.N. 1071 (1072); Rajabuddin, 37 C.W.N. 1074 (1075). See also Note 723 under the heading "Abduction and Kidnapping".

Under this section the offences arise out of a single act or out of a series of acts. This section does not apply to distinct offences—Ganesh, 5 S.L.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 224 (225). It refers to cognate offences, such as theft and criminal breach of trust, and does not relate to offences of so distinct a character as murder and theft—Narotam, 1888 A.W.N. 95. An alternative charge should not be framed in respect of such distinct offences as offences under secs 182 and 211, I. P. Code—Thakar Singh v Chattrar, 20 P.R. 1910, 11 Cr.L.J. 420 (421).

When illustrations to sec 236, Cr. P. C., are looked for, the first ones that come to mind will generally be those about sections which fall under the same chapter of the Indian Penal Code, but this is not essential and there may be border-line cases where the two offences concerned do fall under different chapters. Wrongful restraint is probably such a border-line case, because, although it is under the chapter dealing with offences to the body, it is not necessary that anything be done directly to the body at all: it may be by locking a door or by building a wall, or something of that kind. There is, therefore, no necessary obstacle to the application of sec. 236, Cr. P. C., that the two sections involved fall under different chapters of the Code—Rafi Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 989, 170 I.C. 909, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 250, 10 R.R. 115.

When it is doubtful as to whether the offence was under a certain section of the Penal Code or under a section of any other law (e.g., Post Office Act), the charge should be cumulative. An alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of an offence under the Penal Code and an offence under a special law—Ganesh, 5 S.L.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 224 (228), 10 I.C. 168. See also Nga Shwe, 4 Rang. 355, 27 Cr.L.J. 1360. But see Manhari, 45 Cal. 727, 22 C.W.N. 199, and Tulsi Telini, 50 Cal. 564, 24 Cr.L.J. 372, where it has been held that a charge under sec. 380, I. P. C., may be framed alternatively with a charge under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act. The Patna High Court also holds that a charge under sec. 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act may be framed alternatively with a charge under sec. 338, I. P. C.—Maksuddan, 2 P.L.T. 31, 22 Cr.L.J. 63, A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 22.

Where the accused may be charged alternatively under two sections, it is not illegal to charge him under those sections cumulatively. Compare Illustration (a)—Damodar, 8 Pat. 731, 1929 Cr.C. 413. Thus, it is not illegal to charge an accused both under secs 380 and 414, I. P. Code—Damodar, supra. But if charges are framed cumulatively, and the framing of charge is illegal, the illegality cannot be cured by saying that if the charges had been framed alternatively it would have been valid. Thus, a joinder of charges of three offences under sec. 411, I. P. C., with a charge of three offences under sec. 414, I. P. C., is illegal, because sec. 234 does not allow a joinder of charges of more than three offences; but this illegality cannot be corrected by the argument that if the charges had been framed in the alternative under sec. 236 there would have been no defect in the trial—Chetto, 49 Cal. 555, 24 Cr.L.J. 86, 71 I.C. 214, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 401. Similarly, if charges are framed in the alternative, e.g., with embezzlement or abetment thereof, they must be treated not as one charge but as two different charges, as the accused has to meet two distinct sets of circumstances. When in three separate cases he is charged in the alternative, he has to meet six different sets of circumstances. This would be against the spirit of sec. 233, and would not be covered by sec. 234. The joint trial on these six charges would be illegal—Janeshar Das, 51 All. 541, 1929 A.L.J. 329, 30 Cr.L.J. 687 (689).

Alternative charges may be properly run against an accused person on the same set of facts, but alternative charges which include offences which do not arise out of the same set of facts as those with which they are linked, even though tried in the same proceedings, ought to be made clear to the accused before the trial and clearly dealt with in the Judge's final decision—Jodha, 27 Cr.L.J. 592, 81 I.C. 80, A.I.R. 1923 All. 285.

Sections 235 and 236—Sections 235 and 236 are not mutually exclusive, but one can supplement the other. It cannot be said that whenever a person is tried for two or more offences committed in the course of the same transaction, sec. 236 must be deemed to have been expunged from the Code. Thus, the accused instigated a boy to commit theft (secs 109 and 379, I. P. C.) and received stolen property from the boy (sec. 411). These offences were undoubtedly committed in the same transaction, and can be charged together under sec. 235 (1). But the offences can also be charged together under sec. 236; and consequently, under the provisions of sec. 237, if the accused is charged only with an offence under sec. 109/379, I. P. C., he can be convicted for an offence under sec. 411, I. P. C.—Shib Charan, 53 All. 233, 1931 A.L.J. 1015, 32 Cr.L.J. 1007 (1009), A.I.R. 1931 All. 49, 133 I.C. 140, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 588, doubting Janeshar Das, supra; Kashinath, 54 All. 337, 33 Cr.L.J. 122 (123), 135 I.C. 225, 1932 A.L.J. 113, 1932 Cr.C. 34, A.I.R. 1932 All. 25, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 49. For contra see Srirangachariar cited in Note 755A.

Charges must be separate—Alternative charges under two sections cannot be combined together in one head of charges. If the Magistrate desires to charge the accused in the alternative, he must frame two separate alternative charges—Po Thin, 7 Rang. 96, 30 Cr.L.J. 750, 1929 Cr.C. 356.

763. Contradictory statements:—Illustration (b) shows that contradictory statements constitute the offence of giving false evidence, although it cannot be proved which of the two statements is false.

When a person is charged with making two contradictory statements, one before the Police and another before the Magistrate, two separate charges ought to be framed one relating to each statement, and such evidence as is procurable should be adduced to prove the falsity of one or other of the two statements. A conviction on only one charge relating to both the statements is not sustainable—Kali Vannan, 2 Weir 299 (300). An alternative charge in respect of two contradictory statements can be framed under this section only when it is found impossible to say which of the two statements is false and the two cannot be reconciled—Muthu Vannan, 2 Weir 300.

To attract the applicability of this section and justify a charge in the alternative in respect of contradictory statements, it is essential to remember that it is only when the statements constitute a series of acts that an alternative charge can be framed under this section. Thus, there is a common relation between a police investigation and a trial; or between a police investigation and a preliminary inquiry before a committing Magistrate; or between a preliminary inquiry before the committing Magistrate and the trial in the Sessions Court; and statements made at these different stages would form a series of acts and an alternative charge of perjury can be framed in respect of these statements—Purshottam, 45 Bom. 834 (864, 865), 23 Bom.L.R. 1, 22 Cr.L.J. 241 (F.B.) (overruling Ningappa, 18 Bom. 377); Patraji, 2 O.W.N. 637, 26 Cr.L.J. 1457; Saleh Shah, 27 Cr.L.J. 1195, 82 I.C. 59, 16 S.L.R. 285, A.I.R. 1924 Sind 1 (3). But there is no common relation between a police investigation relating to a murder and a civil suit for possession of the property of the murdered man; statements made at these two proceedings would not fall under the category of "series of acts" consequently, no alternative charge of perjury can be framed in respect of these statements—Saleh Shah, supra.

If a witness makes a statement and later in the course of the same deposition contradicts it and says it was untrue, the whole deposition amounts to no more than the second statement. He cannot be convicted of perjury in the alternative, in one or other of the two statements, and if the first can be proved to be false he cannot be convicted of more than an attempt to commit perjury. Resort to the expedient of an alternative charge is only justified when it is difficult to establish the falsity of one of the two statements—Local Government v Gambhir, 103 I.C. 101, 28 Cr.L.J. 645, 23 N.L.R. 35, A.I.R. 1927 Nag 189. See also Note 723.

Where it is difficult to find which of the two conflicting statements made by the accused, who is admittedly a liar, is true, in the absence of other evidence besides the statement of the accused and there is no charge under sec. 236, Cr. P. C., in the alternative, the conviction cannot be sustained—Charandas Kanavalal v Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 707, 182 I.C. 914, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 170, 1939 Kar 280, following Bakshali v Emp., 5 S.L.R. 136, 13 I.C. 220, 13 Cr.L.J. 28.

764. Sentence:—When the conviction is in the alternative, the Court should pass the maximum sentence provided for the lesser of the two alternative charges—Hira, 15 A.L.J. 587, 18 Cr.L.J. 790 (791).

237 (1) If, in the case mentioned in section 236, the

When a person is charged with one offence, he can be convicted of another.

accused is charged with one offence, and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it.

(2) (Omitted).

Illustration.

A is charged with theft. It appears that he committed the offence of criminal breach of trust or that of receiving stolen goods. He may be convicted of criminal breach of trust or of receiving stolen goods (as the case may be), though he was not charged with such offence.

Change:—By Act XVIII of 1923, sub-section (2) has been omitted from this section but has been re-enacted as sub-section (2A) of sec. 238, as it should be more appropriately placed under that section.

765. Scope of section:—Section 237 has to be read with sec. 236. It applies to cases where sec. 236 applies. If the facts of the case do not fall under sec. 236, sec. 237 has got no application—Genu Manjhi, 18 C.W.N. 1276, 15 Cr.L.J. 704 (705); Harun Rashid, 53 Cal. 466, 30 C.W.N. 432, 27 Cr.L.J. 606; Akram Ali, 18 C.L.J. 574, 15 Cr.L.J. 41 (42); Raghunath, 24 A.L.J. 168, 27 Cr.L.J. 152; Thakur v. Chatter, 20 P.R. 1910, 11 Cr.L.J. 420 (421); Srirangachariar, 35 Cr.L.J. 1503, 152 I.C. 154, 40 M.L.W. 586, 67 M.L.J. 583, A.I.R. 1934 Mad 673, 1934 M.W.N. 994, 1934 Cr.C. 1307; Meher Sheikh, 35 C.W.N. 945, 32 Cr.L.J. 892, 132 I.C. 254, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 574, 1931 Cr.C. 510, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 414; Istahar Khondkar, 39 C.W.N. 620, 62 Cal. 956, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 795, 1936 Cr.C. 1132, 37 Cr.L.J. 701, 162 I.C. 927. Thus, sec. 237 does not apply where the facts themselves are in doubt, or where on the facts alleged the offence is not in doubt—Meher Sheikh, supra, following Akram Ali, supra, Kali Charan, 22 I.C. 148, 41 Cal. 537, 15 Cr.L.J. 4, 18 C.L.J. 514, 18 C.W.N. 309; Bhowanath, 43 I.C. 618, 19 Cr.L.J. 202, 4 P.L.W. 40 and Sheoradni, 54 I.C. 252, 21 Cr.L.J. 44. It is an enabling section which empowers the Court to convict the accused of offences for which no charge has been framed but for which a charge could have been framed under sec. 236—Bhowanath, 19 Cr.L.J. 202 (Pat.).

766. Conviction for different offence:—If on the facts found, of which the accused may be taken to have notice, another offence appears to have been committed by him, and if on these facts it seems doubtful as to which offence the accused has committed, he may be convicted, under secs. 236 and 237, of the other offence—D'bakar v. Saktidhar, 54 Cal. 476, 31 C.W.N. 527, 28 Cr.L.J. 401. The true test is whether the facts are such as to give the accused notice of the offence for which he is going to be convicted though he was not charged with it, so that he is not prejudiced by the mere absence of a specific charge—Meher Sheikh, supra.

Abetment of forgery:—A person charged with the offence of abetment of forgery cannot be convicted of the offence of using a forged document, because the latter offence is a distinct and different offence from the former, and was committed subsequent to it. The abetment of forgery was complete when the document was written and signed; the use of the forged document was a subsequent act, and was a different offence for which the accused should be separately charged—Harun, 53 Cal. 266, 27 Cr.L.J. 606, 94 I.C. 270, 30 C.W.N. 432, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 581.

Attempt to murder:—A person charged with an offence under sec. 307, I. P. C., may be convicted of an offence under sec. 506, I. P. Code—Sukkirappa, 1931 M.W.N. 861.

Adultery:—A conviction on a charge under sec. 498, I. P. C., only cannot be altered to a conviction under sec. 366A or 373, I. P. C., as these offences are major offences—Mehandi, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 122, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 796, 1934 Cr.C. 239, 36 Cr.L.J. 423, 153 I.C. 721.

Conspiracy:—Where five persons are charged under sec. 420/120B, I. P. C., on the allegation that they combined to deceive another and four are given the benefit of doubt, the position of the remaining accused who is found guilty of deception is not affected. The participation of the others being eliminated, he is the only person who was responsible for deception which ex-hypothesi did take place. His conviction under sec. 420, I. P. C., although he was charged only under sec. 420/120B, I. P. C., is not vitiated by the fact that four of his co-accused, who were said to have conspired with him, were acquitted—Jia Lal, A.I.R. 1936 All. 357, 1936 A.L.J. 413. See also Abdul Rahiman Akram Din in Note 769. But when two persons are charged with conspiracy and one is acquitted, the other cannot be convicted of the same offence—Osman Sardar, 39 C.L.J. 256; Gulab Singh, 14 A.L.J. 680. But where an accused is charged with conspiracy and with having committed cheating in pursuance of that conspiracy, it is open to the Court to convict him of cheating even though the conspiracy is not proved as the words 'in pursuance of the conspiracy' in the charge of cheating are nothing but words of surplusage—Satya Narain Mahata v. Emp., 29 Cr.L.J. 1022, 55 Cal. 858, 112 I.C. 350, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 675, 32 C.W.N. 319.

A conspiracy to commit a particular offence or offences having been charged, it would not be open to the prosecution to prove a different conspiracy. Nor can the prosecution, conspiracy failing, ask for a conviction for one or more of the offences alleged to constitute the object of the conspiracy, or for any minor offence. The words "minor offence" have not been defined in the Code and the reported decisions do not lay down a uniform test. Where a conspiracy with two different objects is charged, it is by no means certain that a conspiracy with only one of these objects will be a "minor offence"; each would be a distinct conspiracy by itself involving a distinct agreement as the gist of the offence and not related to the other as principal or subsidiary to it. Nor can it be said that where an offence is alleged to constitute the object of a conspiracy as charged, a conspiracy to commit a minor offence will be a minor offence within the meaning of sec. 238, Cr. P. Code. Much less can it be contended that an offence (or an offence minor to it) alleged to constitute the object of a conspiracy is a minor offence to the offence of conspiracy—Goloke Behari Takal v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 161 (177, 178), 173 I.C. 65, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 51, 66 C.L.J. 225, 42 C.W.N. 129, 10 R.C. 441, 11 R.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 290.

Criminal Breach of Trust—A person charged with criminal breach of trust (sec. 405, I.P.C.) may be convicted of the offence of criminal misappropriation (sec. 403, I.P.C.)—Dwarkanadas, 30 Bom.L.R. 1270, 30 Cr.L.J. 329 (330), 111 I.C. 399, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 521, Ind. Rul. 1929 Bom. 255. See also Mangal Prasad, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 4 (5), 11 O.W.N. 1392, 1934 O.L.R. 859, 152 I.C. 463. A person charged under sec. 409, I.P.C., cannot be convicted under sec. 409, I.P.C., or in the alternative, under sec. 427, I.P.C., when there was no charge under the latter section as mischief is not a minor form of criminal breach of trust—U Ka Doe, A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 158, 8 Rang. 13, 1930 Cr.L.J. 590, 125 I.C. 271, 31 Cr.L.J. 799.

Dacoity and robbery—Where the circumstances of a case were such that it was open to the Crown to have charged the accused under secs. 457, 395 or 392 of the I.P. Code, and the accused were charged under sec. 395, but convicted under sec. 457, I.P.C., although there was no fresh charge under the latter section, held that the conviction was not illegal in view of the provisions of secs. 236 and 237, Cr. P. C.—Mathura, 2 Luck. 444, 28 Cr.L.J. 460, 101 I.C. 492, 4 O.W.N. 442, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 195. The accused and certain other persons were charged with an offence under sec. 395 I.P.C., and although it appeared in evidence that the acts of the accused amounted to lurking house-trespass by night after making preparations for assault, and causing grievous hurt in the course of that trespass, yet it did not appear that he was accompanied by the other persons who were put on their trial with him. The accused was convicted under secs. 458 and 459 I.P.C., without charges under those sections. Held that the offences of which the accused was found to be guilty did not differ in nature from the offence with which he had been charged, and it was, therefore, not necessary for the Court to alter the charge, as the provisions of sec. 237, sub-sec. (1), Cr. P. C., clearly covered the case—Gulab Singh, A.I.R. 1935 All. 458, 36 Cr.L.J. 1291, 158 I.C. 38, 1935 Cr.C. 486, 1935 A.L.J. 843.

Persons charged with dacoity cannot be convicted of receiving stolen property—Gopala, Ratanlal 34. Where if the facts as alleged by the prosecution are established, the accused were clearly guilty of dacoity and not of dishonestly receiving property stolen in a dacoity, they cannot be convicted of the latter offence on a charge of dacoity—Istahar Khondkar, 39 C.W.N. 620 (626), 62 Cal. 956, 37 Cr.L.J. 701, 162 I.C. 927.

Dacoity is an offence against property, whereas sec. 325, I. P. C., is an offence affecting human body. It is, therefore, not open to a Court to charge the accused under sec. 392/397, I. P. C., and to convict them of an offence under sec. 325, I. P. C.—Rameshwar, 29 Cr.L.J. 763, 110 I.C. 795, 5 O.W.N. 601, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 373; or to charge the accused under sec. 395, I. P. C., and to convict them under secs. 448 and 323, I. P. C.—Meher Sheikh, 35 C.W.N. 945, 32 Cr.L.J. 892, 132 I.C. 254, 1931 Cr.C. 510, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 414, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 574. But see Mutyalu, 37 Mad. 236, 17 I.C. 51, 13 Cr.L.J. 739, where it was held that when an accused was charged merely for an offence under s. 397, I. P. C., it was open to the jury to convict him under sec. 326, I. P. Code. This view was adopted following—Queen-Emp v. Anga Valayan, 22 Mad. 15, King-Emp v. Krishna, 24 Mad. 641 and Pattikadan, 26 Mad. 243. Similar view was also taken in Penumatcha, 35 Cr.L.J. 783, 148 I.C. 844, 1934 M.W.N. 41, 39 M.L.W. 433, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 311, 66 M.L.J. 653, 47 Mad. 554, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 1, 1934 Cr.C. 604. See also Basdeo, 34 Cr.L.J. 385, 142 I.C. 702, 10 O.W.N. 134, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 162, 8 Luck. 474, 1933 Cr.C. 317, where the Oudh Chief Court altered a conviction under sec. 395, I. P. C., to one under sec. 323, I. P. C., in appeal.

As the offences under secs 398 and 392, I. P. C., are cognate offences, therefore sec. 237, Cr. P. C., read with sec 236, Cr. P. C., justifies the conviction under sec. 398, I. P. C., being altered to one under sec. 392, I. P. C.—Chandra Nath, 33 Cr.L.J. 926 (929), 139 I.C. 742, 9 O.W.N. 152, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 103, 1932 Cr.C. 166, 7 Luck. 543, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 387. A person charged under sec. 392, I. P. C., may be convicted under sec. 379, I. P. C.—Narinjan, 36 Cr.L.J. 244, 152 I.C. 1036, 35 P.L.R. 595. A person charged with robbery under sec. 392, I. P. C., can be convicted of cheating under sec. 420, I. P. Code—Narinjan, supra; but not under sec. 183, I. P. Code—Nachiappa, 1932 M.W.N. 247. But a person charged with robbery under sec. 392, I. P. C., cannot be convicted under sec. 458, I. P. C., which is a graver offence than one under sec. 392, I. P. Code—Nga Kaung Nyein, 13 Cr.L.J. 429, 14 I.C. 973, U.B.R. (1911) 1, 98.

House-trespass:—A person charged under sec. 452, I. P. C., cannot be convicted of an offence under sec. 19, Arms Act, because the latter offence is an offence under a special Act and the accused was not charged with it and had no opportunity of meeting it—Nga Shwe, 4 Rang. 355, 27 Cr.L.J. 1360, 98 I.C. 480, A.I.R. 1927 Rang 32.

Conviction under sec. 448, I. P. C., can be altered to one under sec. 341, I. P. Code—Rati Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 989, 170 I.C. 909, 10 R.R. 115, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 250.

A person who was charged only under sec. 457, I. P. C., may be convicted under sec. 411, I. P. Code—Deorao, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 173, 28 N.L.R. 218, 1932 Cr.C. 908, 34 Cr.L.J. 66, 140 I.C. 431, dissenting from Mula, A.I.R. 1926 All 33, 90 I.C. 150, 26 Cr.L.J. 1494.

Where the accused was originally charged under sec. 452, I. P. C., but was convicted under sec. 426, I. P. C., the procedure is clearly sanctioned by sec. 238, Cr. P. Code—Munnay, 25 Cr.L.J. 1087, 81 I.C. 911, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 89.

Hurt:—It is not illegal to convict a man of an offence under sec. 452, I. P. C., in a case in which he has been charged under sec. 323, I. P. C., in the light of the wording of secs. 236 and 237, Cr. P. C., but the question which is to be decided in each case is whether the accused has or has not been prejudiced in his trial by the fact that the charge was framed under a wrong section—Shankar Dayal, 39 Cr.L.J. 937, 177 I.C. 616, 1938 O.W.N. 960, 1938 O.L.R. 432, 11 R.O. 59, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 263, 1938 O.A. 740, 1938 A.Cr.C. 100.

Kidnapping and Rape:—In a recent Allahabad case, the High Court altered a conviction of kidnapping into a conviction of rape, under the provisions of this section —Abdul, 1932 A.L.J. 776, 1932 Cr.C. 698 (699), 34 Cr.L.J. 100, 141 I.C. 127, A.I.R. 1932 All. 580.

A person charged with rape (sec 376, I P. C.), cannot be convicted of kidnapping (sec. 366, I. P. C.), since the two offences involve different elements and different questions of facts—Sakharam, 8 Bom.L.R. 120, 3 Cr.L.J. 240; C. C. Sircar, 3 Rang. 68, 26 Cr.L.J. 1119 (1120), 88 I.C. 287, 4 Bur.L.J. 29, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 230.

A conviction under sec: 376, I. P. C., cannot be altered into one under sec. 323, I P. C, by the Appellate Court—Manique, 34 P.L.R. 787.

When a charge was framed under sec. 368, I. P. C, conviction under sec. 366A, I. P. C, may be made even though no specific charge was framed under that section—Ganpat, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 259, 1933 Cr.C. 930, 29 N.L.R. 365, 35 Cr.L.J. 28, 146 I.C. 332.

See also Note 723 under the heading "Abduction and Kidnapping"

Murder—The two offences (i.e., the offence charged and the offence of which the accused is convicted) must be cognate offences. Sections 236 and 237 refer to cognate offences such as theft and criminal breach of trust, and do not relate to offences of so distinct a nature as murder and theft—Narotam, 1888 A.W.N. 95. When the accused was charged with an offence of murder only, they cannot be convicted under sec. 411, I. P. Code—Daulat Ram, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 315 (321), 35 Cr.L.J. 10, 146 I.C. 465, 8 Luck. 518, 1933 Cr.C. 698, 10 O.W.N. 466; or under sec. 385, I. P. Code—Thakur Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All. 665 (667), 1939 A.L.J. 547, 40 Cr.L.J. 948, 184 I.C. 409; or under one of the sections dealing with offences against the property—Wallu, 27 Cr.L.J. 385, 77 I.C. 433, 4 Lah. 373, 6 L.L.J. 59, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 109. It is not possible for the appellate Court to alter a conviction under sec. 302 read with sec. 114, I. P. C, to one under sec. 379 read with sec. 511, I P C, when there was an acquittal of a charge under sec. 392, I. P. C., in the original Court—Paw Tha U, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 512.

A person charged with murder (sec 302, I P. C), may be convicted of causing evidence of murder to disappear (sec 201, I. P. C), without any charge in respect of the latter offence, because the accused might have been charged with the two offences in the alternative under sec. 236, Cr. P. C.—Begu, 6 Lah. 226, 30 C.W.N. 581, 27 Bom.L.R. 707, 23 A.L.J. 636, 48 M.L.J. 643, 26 Cr.L.J. 1059, 88 I.C. 3, 2 O.W.N. 447, 41 C.L.J. 437, 3 Pat.L.R. 95 (Cr), A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 130, 1925 M.W.N. 418, 7 L.L.J. 324, 52 I.C. 191 (P.C.); Rannun, 7 Lah. 84, 27 Cr.L.J. 709, 94 I.C. 901, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 88, 27 P.L.R. 583; Umed Sheikh, 30 C.W.N. 816, 27 Cr.L.J. 1011, 96 I.C. 867, 45 C.L.J. 581; Durlav, 59 Cal. 1040, 36 C.W.N. 373, 33 Cr.L.J. 546, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 297, 1932 Cr.C. 266, 138 I.C. 116, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 417; Dal Singh, 29 Cr.L.J. 457 (458), 108 I.C. 905 (Lah). Where the accused were charged under sec. 302/149, I. P. C, they may be convicted under sec. 201, I. P. C.—Sohan, 1932 A.L.J. 801, A.I.R. 1933 All. 178, 141 I.C. 116, 54 All. 792, 34 Cr.L.J. 107, 1933 Cr.C. 332; Nagan v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 544. As regards Begu's case Lord Williams, J., observed: "With great respect for the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Begu, I think that the decision will require to be reconsidered by them upon some future occasion. The facts which could be proved in that case against each of the accused clearly constituted both offence of murder and an offence under sec 201 of the Indian Penal Code, and, in my opinion, no doubt arose within the meaning of sec. 236, Criminal Procedure Code."

An accused may be tried together both under secs 302 and 201, I. P. C., and may be acquitted under sec 302 and convicted under sec 201, I. P. C.—Sawanta, 33 Cr.L.J. 283, 136 I.C. 376, A.I.R. 1932 All. 71, 1932 Cr.C. 91, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 200; Durlav, supra. See also Mitta Venkatamma, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 748, 56 Mad. 63, 1932 M.W.N. 461, 139 I.C. 725, 33 Cr.L.J. 814, 36 M.L.W. 798, 1932 Cr.C. 923, 64 M.L.J. 153. But the addition of the minor charge under sec. 201, I. P. C., with the main charge of murder under sec. 302, I. P. C., would only give the jury an excuse to evade their duty—Abdul Gafur v. Emp., 41 C.W.N. 414.

See also Uppara Dodda Narasa in Note 757 where the question of a joint trial of offences under secs. 302 and 211, I. P. C., has been discussed.

A person charged with murder (sec. 302, I. P. C.), can be convicted under sec. 193, I. P. C., of fabricating false evidence in respect of the murder in order to throw off suspicion from himself—Ismail, 52 Bom 385, 29 Cr.L.J. 403 (405), 108 I.C. 501, 30 Bom L.R. 330, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 130. In Appaya Baslingappa, 25 Bom L.R. 1318, 25 Cr.L.J. 394, 84 I.C. 938, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 246, it was held that the Sessions Judge could not convict the accused, who was charged with abetment of murder, of an offence under sec. 201, I. P. C. (causing evidence of murder to disappear). This ruling is no longer good law in view of the Privy Council decision of Begu, cited supra. See the observations of Fawcett, J., in Ismail, supra. A person charged with murder may be legally convicted under sec. 194, I. P. C. (fabrication of a false charge in order to fasten the guilt on another person), but it is improper to do so, because an offence under sec. 194 brings into the field an entirely different set of circumstances which are in no way involved in a charge of murder; especially where no reference was made, during the trial, to the offence under sec. 194, either in the charge-sheet or in the examination of the accused, nor was the accused called upon to plead to a charge under sec. 194—Qabul, 1932 A.L.J. 1079, 1933 Cr.C. 41 (42), A.I.R. 1933 All. 30, 34 Cr.L.J. 445, 142 I.C. 803, Ind. Rul. 1933 All. 154. But see Achhut Rai, 27 Cr.L.J. 1351, 98 I.C. 471, A.I.R. 1927 All. 75 where it has been held that when a man is charged with an offence under sec. 302, I. P. C., he cannot, without a charge being framed against him, be convicted of an offence under sec. 194, I. P. C.

The Patna High Court maintained a conviction under sec. 302, I. P. C., although the accused were charged under 302 read with sec. 149, I. P. C.—Rashbehari Lal, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 440, 34 Cr.L.J. 83, 140 I.C. 846, 1932 Cr.C. 774.

Where the accused were charged under sec. 302|149, or in the alternative, under sec. 396, I. P. C., their conviction under sec. 304 (2) read with sec. 149, I. P. C., and also under sec. 379, read with sec. 34, I. P. C., is not illegal—Bawar Shah, 37 Cr.L.J. 1039 (1042), 164 I.C. 899, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 172.

When the enquiring Magistrate committed the accused under sec. 304, I. P. C., but the Sessions Judge altered the charge to one under sec. 302, I. P. C., so far as regards the section itself without making any alteration as regards the substance of the charge, held that the conviction under sec. 302, I. P. C., could not be upheld and that sec. 537, Cr. P. C., did not cure the defect—Satnarain Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 1506, 158 I.C. 1129, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 431, 16 P.L.T. 526, 1935 Cr.C. 1102.

Rioting and hurt :—A person who is charged under secs. 149 and 325, I. P. C., with having constructively committed the offence of grievous hurt, by being a member of an unlawful assembly, cannot be convicted under sec. 325, I. P. C., of causing grievous hurt with his own hands—Panchu Das, 34 Cal 698, 5 Cr.L.J. 427, 11 C.W.N. 666; Reazuddi, 16 C.W.N. 1077, 13 Cr.L.J. 502, 15 I.C. 646; Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 662, 15 Cr.L.J. 155, 22 I.C. 731, A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 292. But the Madras High Court is of opinion that if a person is charged with being a member of an unlawful assembly, one of the members of which caused grievous hurt in pursuance of the common object, there is no necessary implication that the particular member (who caused the grievous hurt) is not himself. Consequently if he is charged under secs. 326 and 149, I. P. C., with causing grievous hurt by implication by reason of his being a member of an unlawful assembly, and it is found that he himself caused the grievous hurt he may be convicted under sec. 326, I. P. C., alone of the substantive offence of causing grievous hurt himself—Theethumalai, 47 Mad. 745, 47 M.L.J. 221, 25 Cr.L.J. 1297, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1, 82 I.C. 463 (F.B.); Ghousbux, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 34, 28 S.L.R. 201, 36 Cr.L.J. 598, 151 I.C. 915. See also Rashbehari Lal, supra. The accused were convicted by a Magistrate under secs. 326 and 149, I. P. C. The Sessions Judge on appeal found that the element of unlawful common object in the assembly as a whole, which is required to convict the accused under sec. 326 read with sec. 149, was wanting, but as the petitioners had the common intention to cause grievous hurt, he convicted them under sec. 326 read with sec. 34, I. P. Code, without framing a specific charge under those sections. Held that the conviction was not bad—Bhondu Das, 7 Pat. 758, 113 I.C. 676, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 11, 30 Cr.L.J. 205 (208). In this case it was further held that the contrary view taken in Reazuddi, supra, must be deemed as overruled by the Privy Council case of Barendra, 52 Cal. 197, 29 C.W.N. 181, A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 1, 85 I.C. 47, 52 I.A. 40, 27 Bom.L.R. 148. In Rama Boyan, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 565, 1934 M.W.N. 241 the Madras High Court adopted the view in Bhondu Das's case. See Note 770.

Conversely a person, who is charged with a substantive offence, cannot be convicted of that offence read with sec. 149, I. P. C., when sec. 149, I. P. C., was not mentioned in the charge and the accused had no notice of their constructive liability—Thaikkottathil, 25 Cr.L.J. 212, 76 I.C. 644, 18 M.L.W. 946, 33 M.L.T. 210, 1924 M.W.N. 47, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 338, Govinda, 1933 M.W.N. 910. But see Deoji, 27 Cr.L.J. 830 (832), 95 I.C. 606, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 459 where a contrary view seems to have been taken.

Although the charge framed against an accused person specifies only the principal section under which he is charged, he may be convicted of the offence with which he is charged read with either sec. 34 or 114, I. P. C., although he has not been so charged—Mitha, A.I.R. 1934 Snd. 89 (91), 28 S.L.R. 12, A.L.R. 1934 Snd. 88, 151 I.C. 976, 1934 Cr.C. 748, following Barendra's case, supra; Patilbuva, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 512, 57 I.C. 737, 27 Cr.L.J. 1153, 28 Bom.L.R. 1029. See also Ranchhod, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 502, 87 I.C. 600, 49 Bom. 84; Khuda Dad, 34 Cr.L.J. 721, 34 P.L.R. 699, 1933 Cr.C. 547, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 313, 144 I.C. 300, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 437. The omission by the Magistrate to mention sec. 34 in the charge-sheet is cured by the operation of sec. 535, Cr. P. C.—Nura, 35 Cr.L.J. 1386, 151 I.C. 741, 1934 Cr.C. 458, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 227. Conversely if a person is charged with an offence read with sec. 34, I. P. C., he may be convicted of the substantive offence—Dastardli, 32 Cr.L.J. 1004, 133 I.C. 190, 58 Cal. 822, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 654, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 625, 1931 Cr.C. 809.

Offences under secs. 147 and 160, I. P. C., respectively are obviously ejusdem generis. Thus being so there is no impropriety whatever in convicting the accused under sec. 160, I. P. C., when they were merely charged under sec. 147, I. P. C.—Gulabchand, 28 Cr.L.J. 189, 99 I.C. 861, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 163, distinguishing Sreeramulu, 81 I.C. 42, 47 Mad. 61, 1923 M.W.N. 814, 18 M.L.W. 711, 46 M.L.J. 120, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 375, 25 Cr.L.J. 554 where a contrary view was taken. See also Sabir Husan, 19 A.L.J. 487. An accused cannot be convicted under sec. 160, I. P. C., when he was merely charged under secs. 325 and 323, I. P. C.—Baluchani, 35 Cr.L.J. 76, 146 I.C. 475, 1933 M.W.N. 718, 28 M.L.W. 760, 1933 Cr.C. 1520, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 843, 65 M.L.J. 723.

When the accused was charged and convicted under sec. 147, I. P. C., with the common object of assaulting the Police, it was not legal for the Appellate Court to convict them under sec. 353, I. P. C., while acquitting them under sec. 147, I. P. C.—Har Naran, 18 C.W.N. 1274. See also—Yatubzli v. Lethu Thakur, 30 Cal. 288.

Theft.—A person charged with theft may be convicted of receiving stolen property, if the evidence shows that the facts proved lead to the inference that the offence, rather than theft, was committed—Kuppan Anbalam, 17 M.L.J. 219; Supdt. & Rem. of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Raghubal, 39 C.W.N. 741, 62 Cal. 946. Where a Magistrate framed a charge against the accused under sec. 379, I. P. C., and convicted him under sec. 426, I. P. C., having found that the Kalai that was cut and taken away was unripe, the conviction for mischief was fully justified—Kalachand v. Talu, 50 C.L.J. 285. The alteration of finding must not be such as to prejudice the accused by making him answer a charge of an entirely different character, necessitating a distinct defence altogether. Thus, where the accused was charged with theft of a tree, he could not be convicted under sec. 143, I. P. C., on the ground that he had gone with his men to the spot armed with lathis, as the defence for the two charges must be distinct, and the accused must be held to have been prejudiced by the alteration of charge—Dibakar v. Sakridhar, 54 Cal. 476, 31 C.W.N. 527, 28 Cr.L.J.

404, 101 I.C. 180, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 520. But a person charged under sec. 380, I. P. C., can be convicted under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act—Tulsi Telmi, 50 Cal. 564, 24 Cr.L.J. 372, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 516.

When an accused is charged with an offence under sec. 19 (f) of the Arms Act he can be convicted under sec. 19 (f) read with sec. 20 of the same Act—Yashpal, 35 Cr.L.J. 573, 147 I.C. 1193, A.I.R. 1933 All. 627, 1933 Cr.C. 1006, 55 All. 681; But see Bhawani Prosad, 39 C.W.N. 334 (349). A person charged under sec. 278, I. P. C., may be convicted under sec. 290, I. P. C.—Shiva Dat, 3 Luck. 680, 5 O.W.N. 641, 29 Cr.L.J. 893 (894), A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 402, 111 I.C. 573.

A person charged under sec. 295, I. P. C., may be convicted under sec. 297, I. P. C.—Amir Hassan v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 810 (811), 189 I.C. 867, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 414, 21 P.L.T. 121.

Where a charge brought against the accused originally was under sec. 64A of the Indian Stamp Act (II of 1899), he cannot be convicted under sec. 64B of the same Act—Maya Shah, 35 Cr.L.J. 291, 146 I.C. 1055, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 959, 1933 Cr.C. 1411.

Where the accused is tried on a charge under sec. 4B of the Explosive Substances Act (VI of 1908), he can be convicted under sec. 5 of the same Act, although the sanction that was obtained from the Local Government was only for prosecution of the accused under sec. 4B of the said Act—Nathu Ram, 36 Cr.L.J. 266, 153 I.C. 147, A.I.R. 1934 All. 982, 1934 Cr.C. 1302, 1934 A.L.J. 1088, 57 All. 398. See also Madhu, 37 C.W.N. 934 (936).

Alteration of charge necessary:—When a person is charged with one offence and is convicted of a different offence, the Court should alter the charge under sec. 227, and the altered charge must be read and explained to the accused under sec. 227 (2). Secs. 227 and 237 go together, and a Court is not empowered to convict an accused of an offence of which he has not been told anything. Unless this is done, the conviction on the altered charge will be set aside—Dhum Singh, 23 A.L.J. 436, 26 Cr.L.J. 1057; Raghunath, 24 A.L.J. 168, 27 Cr.L.J. 152.

766A. Conviction in the alternative:—See Note 762, paragraphs 4 and 5 and Notes 763 and 764.

766B. Effect of non-compliance with the provisions of this section:—The disregard of an express provision of law as to the mode of trial is not a mere irregularity which could be remedied by sec. 537, Cr. P. C.—Thakur Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All. 665 (667), 1939 A.L.J. 547, 1939 A.W.R. (H.C.) 577, 184 I.C. 409, 40 Cr.L.J. 948.

767. Power of Appellate Court:—See sec. 423. An Appellate Court has power to convict the accused of an offence, though he was not charged with and tried for that offence in the original Court—Lala Ojha, 26 Cal. 863; Kalicharan, 41 Cal. 537, 18 C.W.N. 309; Jawad Husain, 2 Luck. 503, 28 Cr.L.J. 673; Ismail, 52 Bom. 385, 29 Cr.L.J. 403 (405). And the Appellate Court can do so not only under this section, but also under sec. 423 (b) (2) in case of an appeal from a conviction—Krishnan, (1916) 2 M.W.N. 267, 17 Cr.L.J. 384; and under sec. 423 (a) in case of an appeal from an acquittal—Ismail, supra. The Appellate Court has jurisdiction to convert a conviction from one under sec. 408, I. P. C., to sec. 403, I. P. C., by virtue of the provisions of sec. 423 read with sec. 237 (1), Cr. P. C.—Mangal Prosad, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 4, 11 O.W.N. 1392, 1934 O.L.R. 859, 152 I.C. 463; or from one of cheating to one of criminal breach of trust—Jagannath, 1932 Cr.C. 941, 34 Cr.L.J. 419, 142 I.C. 704, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 26, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pat. 170; or from one under sec. 181 to one under sec. 193, I. P. C., although the Civil Court launched prosecution under sec. 181, I. P. C.—Nathu Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 263, 1936 Cr.C. 1025.

If the prosecution establishes certain acts constituting an offence, and the trial Court misapplies the law by charging and convicting an accused person for an offence other than that for which he should have been properly charged, and if notwithstanding such error the accused has by his defence endeavoured to meet the accusation of the commission of these acts, then the Appellate Court may alter the charge or finding and convict him of an offence which those acts properly constitute, provided the accused is not prejudiced by the alteration in the finding. Such an error is one of form rather than of substance—Lala Ojha, 26 Cal 863, 3 C.W.N 653; Rat Ram v Emp, 38 Cr.L.J. 989, 170 I.C. 909, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 250, 10 R.R. 115. Thus, the accused was convicted by the trial Court for theft of a tree, under sec. 379, I P. C. The lower Appellate Court found that the accused bona fide believed the tree to be his own, set aside the conviction for theft but convicted the accused under sec. 143, I. P. C., on the ground that he had gone with his men to the spot armed with lathis; held that the conviction by the Appellate Court was illegal, inasmuch as the defence in the two charges must be distinct and the accused must be held to have been prejudiced by the alteration of conviction into one under sec. 143, I P. Code—Dibakar v. Saktidhar, 54 Cal 476, 31 C.W.N. 527, 28 Cr L.J. 401; Jatu Singh v Mahabir Singh, 27 Cal. 660. See Note 766.

238. (1) When a person is charged with an offence consisting of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence, and such combination is proved, but the remaining particulars are not proved, he may be convicted of the minor offence, though he was not charged with it.

(2) When a person is charged with an offence and facts are proved which reduce it to a minor offence, he may be convicted of the minor offence, although he is not charged with it.

(2A) When a person is charged with an offence, he may be convicted of an attempt to commit such offence although the attempt is not separately charged.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize a conviction of any offence referred to in section 198 or section 199 when no complaint has been made as required by that section.

Illustrations

(a) A is charged, under section 407 of the Indian Penal Code, with criminal breach of trust in respect of property entrusted to him as a carrier. It appears that he did commit criminal breach of trust under section 406 in respect of the property, but that it was not entrusted to him as a carrier. He may be convicted of criminal breach of trust under section 406.

(b) A is charged, under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code, with causing grievous hurt. He proves that he acted on grave and sudden provocation. He may be convicted under section 335 of the Code.

Change:—By section 64 of the Cr P. C Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) sub-section (2) of sec 237 has been transferred to the present section and re-enacted as sub-sec (2A), it being more appropriate under this section than under sec. 237.

768. Principle of section:—Where an offence consists of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence, the graver charge gives notice to the accused of all the circumstances going to constitute the minor offence of which he may be convicted. The latter is arrived at by mere subtraction from the former. But when the circumstances constituting the major charge do not, necessarily and according to the definition of the offence imputed by that charge, constitute the minor offence also, the principle no longer applies, because notice of the former does not necessarily involve notice of all that constitutes the latter—Chand Nux, 11 B.H.C.R. 240.

Though a Magistrate has power under this section to convict the accused of a different offence from what he was originally accused of, still this must be done only in cases where the accused is not in any way prejudiced by the conviction on the new charge. The accused person is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact nature of the charge brought against him, and unless he has this knowledge, he must be seriously prejudiced in his defence—Balkeshwar, 3 P.L.T. 322, 23 Cr.L.J. 114, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 5. But where the accused is charged under sec. 457, I. P. C., for criminal trespass with intent to commit theft, it is open to the Magistrate to convict him under sec. 456, I. P. C., for criminal trespass with intent to carry on an intrigue with a woman, and the accused cannot be in any way prejudiced by such conviction, because to sustain a conviction under sec. 456, I. P. C., it is not necessary to specify the criminal intention; it is sufficient if a guilty intention is proved such as is contemplated in sec. 441, I. P. C.—Karali, 44 Cal. 358 (364), 17 Cr.L.J. 424, 20 C.W.N. 1075, 35 I.C. 984, A.I.R. 1917 Cal. 824; Jadab, 61 I.C. 922, 2 P.L.T. 240, A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 217.

But the Patna High Court holds in a similar case that on a charge of criminal trespass with intent to commit theft the accused cannot be convicted of criminal trespass with intent to commit adultery, because he will be prejudiced by such a conviction—Balkeshwar, supra; Raghu, 56 I.C. 592, A.I.R. 1920 Pat. 590, 21 Cr.L.J. 496, 1 P.L.T. 221. For contra see Jadab, supra. The Calcutta High Court took a similar view in Mahomed Hosain, 41 Cal. 743, 18 C.W.N. 1217, 15 Cr.L.J. 190, A.I.R. 1914 Cal. 663, 22 I.C. 766. In a recent case the Patna High Court, following the view expressed in Karali's case and Jadab's case, held that a person charged under sec. 454, I. P. C., for committing trespass with the intention of committing theft, may be convicted under sec. 447, I. P. C., for trespass committed with the object of committing an offence—Nihara, 36 Cr.L.J. 829, 155 I.C. 620, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 129, 1935 Cr.C. 329.

"Minor offence":—Minor offence is not defined anywhere in the Code and should be understood in its ordinary and not in any technical sense—Sitanath, 22 Cal. 1005. It means an offence deserving a lesser degree of punishment.

There is no definition of the expression 'minor offence.' The expression 'major offence' is not used in the section but it is convenient to adopt it in the present context. The test by which an offence is deemed in sec. 238 (1), Cr. P. C., to be major or minor is not the gravity of punishment incurred. The sub-section does not refer to the gravity of punishment at all; it merely refers to the number of particulars constituting the offence. If a number of particulars is needed to constitute the offence, then for the purposes of sec. 238 (1), Cr. P. C., it may be called the major offence. If a combination of some only of such particulars constitutes a complete offence, then that offence is referred to in sec. 238 (1), Cr. P. C., as the minor offence. It is not, however, to be overlooked that sec. 238 (2), Cr. P. C., speaks of the proof of additional facts reducing an offence to a minor offence, and this does not accord with the view that the minor offence must always consist of fewer particulars than the major offence. But this is only a new form that the situation takes—Abdul Rahuman Akramdin, 37 Cr.L.J. 753 (756), 162 I.C. 950, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 193, 38 Bom.L.R. 153, 1936 Cr.C. 573, 60 Bom. 485, 8 R.B. 437.

This section enables a Court to convict a person of a minor offence, although he was charged with a major offence; but it does not enable a Court to do the contrary, i.e. to convict of a major offence when the accused was charged with a minor one—Durga, 1 Bom.L.R. 513; Ngga Po, 23 Cr.L.J. 710, 69 I.C. 628, 11 L.B.R. 45.

769. Cases under this section:—An offence under sec. 355, I. P. C., can be said to be a minor offence as compared with secs. 366 and 376, I. P. C., and a person charged under secs. 366 and 376 can be convicted of an offence under section 356, even though he was not charged with it—Sitanath, 22 Cal 1006 A person charged with an offence of dacoity can be convicted of theft under this section—Khoda, 17 Bom. 359 (372).

Where the graver offence of robbing was not proved, the Magistrate was competent to try the accused for the lesser offence of assault—Paṭadu, 7 Mad. 454. A person charged under sec. 302, I. P. C., may be convicted under sec. 304, I. P. C.—Q-E v. Devji, 20 Bom 215 Where the accused is charged with offences under secs 304 and 325, I. P. C., he may be convicted under sec. 323, I. P. Code—Dasarath, 31 Cal 325 When an accused is charged only under sec. 304, I. P. C., he may be convicted under sec. 325, I. P. C., without altering the original charge under sec. 304, I. P. C., and without adding a specific charge under sec 325, I. P. C.—Mohammad Nabi, 35 Cr.L.J. 943 (1951), 149 I.C. 343, A.L.R. 1934 Oudh 165, 11 O.W.N. 693, 1934 Cr.C. 710, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 251. Where the accused were charged under sec. 302|149, I. P. C., for being liable for murder of a person, they may be convicted under sec 323, I. P. C., for causing hurt to the companion of the deceased in the course of the same transaction although they were not specifically charged under sec 323, I. P. C.—Jogindar, A.I.R. 1931 Lah 566, 1931 Cr.C 854 Apart from the question whether a charge of causing grievous hurt with a cutting instrument is or is not a minor offence to an offence under sec. 307, I. P. C., when specific allegation made against the accused was that he caused hurt to the complainant by stabbing him with a knife and it was contained in the charge framed under sec 307, I. P. C., upon which the trial was originally held, there could be no prejudice to the accused by reason of his conviction for the offence of stabbing the complainant with the knife, simply because no formal charge under sec 326, I. P. C., was drawn up—Sr Idris v Emp, 43 C.W.N 782 An offence under sec. 211, I. P. C., includes an offence under sec 182, I. P. C., and, therefore, it is competent for the Magistrate to convict under sec 182, though the accused may be charged under sec 211, I. P. Code—Khubonai, 8 S.L.R 179, 16 Cr.L.J 104 Where the common object of an unlawful assembly is to commit criminal trespass, a person charged under sec 147, I. P. C., for being a member of an unlawful assembly can be convicted under sec 447, I. P. C., (criminal trespass), because the latter offence is a minor one and included in the former—Ariff, 18 C.W.N 992, 15 Cr.L.J. 188, 22 I.C. 764. Where the charge is under sec 430, I. P. Code (mischief by cutting the embankment of a reservoir), the conviction can be under sec 426, I. P. Code (mischief)—Banamali, 6 P.L.T. 39, 26 Cr.L.J 682

In the trial of an offence which is triable with the aid of assessors, it is competent to the Sessions Judge to convict the accused of a minor offence though that offence is triable only by a jury—Changanda, 45 Bom 619, 22 Cr.L.J 51, 22 Bom.L.R 1241, 59 I.C. 195. Similarly, an accused charged under sec 412, I. P. C. (triable by jury) can be convicted under sec 411, I. P. C. (triable with the aid of assessors) though not separately charged with the latter offence—Gulabchand, 27 Bom.L.R. 1416, 27 Cr.L.J. 650, 91 I.C. 602. So also an accused charged under sec. 397, I. P. C. (triable by jury) can be convicted under sec 326 or 323, I. P. C. (triable with the aid of assessors) though not separately charged with the latter offence—Mutyalu, 37 Mad 236, 17 I.C. 51, A.I.R. 1914 Mad 425, 13 Cr.L.J 730, Haria Dholi, 39 Cr.L.J 156 (158), 172 I.C. 780, A.I.R. 1937 Pat 662, 18 P.L.T 857, 10 R.P. 315, 4 B.R. 165, 1937 P.W.N. 868

A person charged under sec 353, I. P. C., can be convicted under sec 352 or 358, I. P. C., but it is doubtful whether he can be convicted under sec 323, I. P. Code—Dip Chand, A.I.R. 1934 All 872, 3 A.W.R. 699, 36 Cr.L.J 765, 155 I.C. 540, 1934 Cr.C. 1031

A person charged with cheating in pursuance of a conspiracy can be convicted of cheating only when the evidence showed that the offence of cheating was committed without conspiracy—Abdul Rahiman Akramdin 37 Cr.L.J 753 (755), 162 I.C. 950, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 193, 38 Bom.L.R. 153, 1936 Cr.C 573 See Note 766 under the heading "Conspiracy."

770. Cases not under this section:—A charge of rape (sec. 376, I. P. C.) cannot be altered into a conviction for kidnapping (sec. 366, I. P. C.), because the two offences involve different elements and different questions of fact, and the latter cannot be said to be minor to or included in the former—Sakharam, 8 Bom L.R. 120, 3 Cr.L.J. 240; followed in C. C. Sirkar, 3 Rang. 68, 26 Cr.L.J. 1119 (1120), 4 Bur.L.J. 29. Where the accused was charged with murder, a conviction for an offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship could not be sustained—Savari Aye, 2 Weir 302. An offence under sec. 202, I. P. C., is not a minor offence included in the offence under sec. 201, I. P. C., and, therefore, a conviction for the former offence cannot be had where the charge was under the latter section only—Rino, 5 S.L.R. 123, 13 Cr.L.J. 18. A person charged with dacoity and riot cannot be convicted for house-trespass, the latter offence not being a part of the former—Salamut Ali, 23 W.R. 59. See also Meher Sheikh in Note 766. A person charged with dacoity or house-breaking by night cannot be convicted of dishonestly receiving stolen property; because none of the particulars which go to make up the offence of dacoity or house-breaking constitute by themselves the offence of receiving stolen property; and so the latter offence cannot be considered as a minor offence included in the dacoity or house-breaking—Achpal, 26 Cr.L.J. 1361, 89 I.C. 449, 1 Lah. Cas. 92, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 132. But see Balu, Ratanlal 293. A person charged with robbery cannot be convicted of house-breaking by night and theft in a dwelling-house, because all the particulars constituting the latter offences are not included in the definition of robbery with which the accused was charged—Dala, Ratanlal 211. A person charged with murder cannot be convicted of robbery—Wallu, 4 Lah. 373, 25 Cr.L.J. 385.

Rioting and hurt, etc.—Where the accused were charged with rioting, they could not be convicted of criminal trespass and hurt, because none of the latter offences was a necessary ingredient of the offence of rioting and it was not proved that the common object of rioting was criminal trespass or hurt—Mongalu, 18 Cr.L.J. 860 (Mad.). A charge of rioting under sec. 149, I. P. C., does not include as a minor offence any specific act of violence by an individual accused so as to authorise a conviction under sec. 352, I. P. Code—Mallu Gope, 10 P.L.T. 875, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 712, 9 Pat. 642, 118 I.C. 323, 1929 Cr.C. 584, 30 Cr.L.J. 891 (892); Kanta, 12 Cr.L.J. 82 (Cal.). Where the accused is charged with being a member of an unlawful assembly and with committing grievous hurt by implication (secs. 149 and 325, I. P. C.), he cannot be convicted of the substantive offence of causing grievous hurt under sec. 325 by his individual act; because under no reasonable construction of this section can the substantive offence of causing grievous hurt individually be regarded as minor to or included in the charge under secs. 325 and 149, I. P. C., or causing grievous hurt by implication—Panchu, 34 Cal. 698; Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 662; Dasarath, 34 Cal. 325; Reazuddi, 16 C.W.N. 1077. Where the only charge against the accused persons was one under sec. 304, I. P. C., read with sec. 149, I. P. C., and they were found guilty of an offence punishable under sec. 326, read with sec. 34, I. P. C., the conviction under sec. 326, read with sec. 34, I. P. C., was bad in the absence of a charge under those sections and it would be impossible to say that in such circumstances the accused persons were not misled in their defence—Kalai Bepari v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 651. Contra—Theethumalai, 47 Mad. 746 (F.B.), cited in Note 766 under sec. 237.

771. Sub-section (2A)—Attempt:—Under this sub-section, when an accused is charged with an offence he may be convicted of having attempted to commit that offence although the attempt was not separately charged—Sadho Lal, 1 P.L.J. 391, 17 Cr.L.J. 272; Bilinghurst v. Blackburn, 27 C.W.N. 821 (851), 25 Cr.L.J. 1313; Dora'suami, 48 Mad. 774, 48 M.L.J. 190, 26 Cr.L.J. 755; Bhikhari, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 561 (563), 36 Cr.L.J. 17, 1934 Cr.C. 1215, 13 Pat. 729, 152 I.C. 282, 15 P.L.T. 523; Sheo Narain, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 44, 1935 O.W.N. 1177, 158 I.C. 915, 1935 O.L.R. 630, 37 Cr.L.J. 12.

Abetment:—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a person charged with a substantive offence can be convicted of abetment of that offence, when he was not charged with the latter offence. In Padmanabha, 33 Mad. 261; Varayal, 13 Cr.L.J. 223, 14 I.C. 319; Profulla, 50 Cal 41 (47); Sheoraini, 21 Cr.L.J. 44 (Pat.), 54 I.C. 252; Darbari, 22 Cr.L.J. 311, 60 I.C. 999, Muthu Karakku, 1922 M.W.N. 182, 23 Cr.L.J. 206; Raghya, 81 I.C. 959, 26 Bom L.R. 323, 25 Cr.L.J. 1135; Hulas, 44 C.L.J. 216, 28 Cr.L.J. 2; Mahabir, 49 All. 120, 27 Cr.L.J. 1118; Chand Nur, 11 B.H.C.R. 240; Ratna, 1932 M.W.N. 1216 and Ponnuswami Servai, v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 465, 174 I.C. 776, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 315, 1938 M.W.N. 223, 10 R.N. 742, it has been held that it is improper for a Court to find a man guilty of the abetment of an offence, on a charge of the substantive offence only; because when a man is accused of a substantive offence, he may not be conscious that he will have to meet an imputation of collateral circumstances constituting an abetment of it, which may be quite distinct from the circumstances constituting the substantive offence itself. A charge for the substantive offence as such gives no intimation of a trial to be held for the abetment. But in Joseph, 3 Rang 11, 26 Cr.L.J. 492 (498); Punamchand, 30 Cr.L.J. 224, 113 I.C. 881, A.I.R. 1930 Nag 145, Ind Rul 1929 Nag 33; Yeditha, 23 M.L.J. 772, 13 Cr.L.J. 453; Samuel John, A.I.R. 1935 All. 935, 1935 A.L.J. 1079, 36 Cr.L.J. 247, 160 I.C. 163; Suraj Bhan, 36 Cr.L.J. 1438, 158 I.C. 618, A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 67, 1935 Cr.C. 449; Keher Singh, 11 P.W.R. 1921, 59 I.C. 913, 22 Cr.L.J. 161, Bhikari, supra, and S. P. Ghosh, 16 Cr.L.J. 676, 30 I.C. 724 (F.B.), it has been said that if on the facts proved two charges can be framed under the provisions of sec. 236, viz., the commission of the principal offence and the abetment thereof, the accused can be convicted of the offence of abetment, though it was not separately charged against him. The Calcutta High Court observes that it cannot be laid down as a universal rule that a person charged with a substantive offence only cannot be convicted of abetment thereof; the answer depends on the facts of each case, and it must be seen in each case whether or not prejudice has been caused to the accused by such conviction—Kadira, 112 I.C. 677, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 468, 29 Cr.L.J. 1093 (1095); Debi Prosad, 59 Cal 1192, 33 Cr.L.J. 720, 139 I.C. 242, 1932 Cr.C. 335, A.I.R. 1932 Cal 455, Ind Rul 1932 Cal 584, 36 C.W.N. 595 (597); Inanada Charan, 34 C.W.N. 198, 57 Cal 807, 1929 Cr.C. 595 (596), A.I.R. 1929 Cal 807; Indar Chand, 42 Cal 1094 (1133). The same view has been taken in Khuman, Ind Rul 1931 Oudh 289, 132 I.C. 529, 1931 Cr.C. 634, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 274, 8 O.W.N. 755, 32 Cr.L.J. 905 (907, 908) and Mutha, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 89 (91), 28 S.L.R. 12, A.L.R. 1934 Sind 88, 151 I.C. 976, 1934 Cr.C. 748.

There would no doubt be cases where abetment is only a minor offence as compared with the substantive offence. But where the facts which would constitute the offence of abetment are quite different from the facts which would constitute the offence of manufacturing counterfeit coin, the Magistrate is not justified in convicting the accused of being an abettor, although he has been charged with being the principal in the manufacture of counterfeit coin—Dhanpat Rai v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah 112, 42 P.L.R. 12, 41 Cr.L.J. 540, 188 I.C. 64.

An accused may be convicted of a substantive offence though he was charged only with abetment of that offence; see Lal Chand, 1912 P.W.R. 17, 13 Cr.L.J. 252, 14 I.C. 604, 44 P.L.R. 1912. See also Suraj Bhan, supra. The conversion by the Appellate Court of a conviction from one under secs. 430 and 114 to one under sec. 430 read with sec. 34, I.P.C., is not illegal—Sambasiva, 32 Cr.L.J. 753 (755), 131 I.C. 458, 1930 M.W.N. 1041, 1931 Cr.C. 321, A.I.R. 1931 Mad 225, Ind Rul 1931 Mad 522, 35 M.L.W. 98; Suraj Bhan, supra.

772. Sub-section (3):—When minor offence requires complaint—See sub-section (3). A person charged with one offence cannot be convicted of a minor offence, if the latter offence requires a complaint by a particular person mentioned in secs. 198 and 199. Thus, a prosecution for the offence of adultery requires a complaint by the husband (see sec. 199), and, therefore, a person charged with rape or abduction cannot be convicted of adultery, in the absence of a complaint by the husband—Kallu, 5 All. 233 (235); Cheman, 29 Cal. 415 (416); Bongaru Asari, 27 Mad. 61 (62); Isap Mahomed, 31 Bom 218 (220); Iman Khan, 14 Bom L.R. 141, 13 Cr.L.J. 287 (288). But see Note 654 under sec. 199.

773. Powers of Appellate Court and High Court:—The powers under this section may be exercised by Appellate Courts; an Appellate Court can alter a conviction for a major offence into a conviction for a minor offence—Hanuman, 20 A.L.J. 213, 23 CrLJ 198, A.I.R. 1922 All. 143.

Where the jury acquitted the prisoners of certain offences and found some other facts upon which the jury could have convicted them of some other offence, but did not convict, the High Court has power to convict the prisoners of the latter offence—Harai Mirdha, 3 Cal. 189.

What persons may be charged jointly.

239. The following persons may be charged and tried together, namely:—

(a) persons accused of the same offence committed in the course of the same transaction;

(b) persons accused of an offence and persons accused of abetment, or of an attempt to commit such offence;

(c) persons accused of more than one offence of the same kind within the meaning of section 234 committed by them jointly within the period of twelve months;

(d) persons accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction;

(e) persons accused of an offence which includes theft, extortion, or criminal misappropriation, and persons accused of receiving or retaining, or assisting in the disposal or concealment of, property possession of which is alleged to have been transferred by any such offence committed by the first named persons, or of abetment of or attempting to commit any such last named offence;

(f) persons accused of offences under section 411 and 414 of the Indian Penal Code or either of those sections in respect of stolen property the possession of which has been transferred by one offence; and

(g) persons accused of any offence under Chapter XII of the Indian Penal Code relating to counterfeit coin, and persons accused of any other offence under the said Chapter relating to the same coin, or of abetment of or attempting to commit any such offence;

and the provisions contained in the former part of this Chapter shall, so far as may be, apply to all such charges.

Change:—This section has been redrafted by sec. 65 of the Cr. P. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. But the actual change brought about by this amendment is the addition of clauses (c), (e), (f) and (g). The illustrations have been repealed by the amendment.

774. Scope and Application:—See Karamalli Gulamalli in Note 753A, and Babulal Choukhani v. King-Emph. in Note 778. This section lays down certain general principles for the combination of charges in a joint trial of several persons. The object of these principles is to avoid the likelihood of bewildering the accused in their defence by having to meet many disconnected charges and of endangering the prospect of a fair trial by the production of a mass of evidence directed to many matters tending by its mere accumulation to induce an undue suspicion against the accused persons—Sanuman, 19 A.L.J. 392, 22 Cr.L.J. 641. The general principle is that it is always necessary to justify a joint trial and to point out provisions under which it can be held. Separate trial is the rule and the joint trial is the exception and such a joint trial can only be justified if the provisions of sec 239, Cr. P. C., can be applied—Bhaggan, 35 Cr.L.J. 602, 154 I.C. 901, 1935 O.W.N. 408, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 327, 1935 Cr.C. 684, 1935 O.L.R. 210. It is always for the prosecution to justify a joint trial. A separate trial is the rule and a joint trial is the exception—Durga Prosad, 20 A.L.J. 981, 24 Cr.L.J. 149, 71 I.C. 501, A.I.R. 1923 All. 126, 45 All 223 (224); Gancshi Lal, 24 Cr.L.J. 155, 71 I.C. 507, 20 A.L.J. 967, A.I.R. 1923 All 88.

The clauses of sec. 239, Cr. P. C., are mutually exclusive in the sense that they cannot be added one to another so as to bring some of the persons charged under one clause and some under another and so to put them upon their trial all together at one and the same time, but they are not mutually exclusive in the sense that persons accused of an offence and persons accused of abetment or of an attempt can only be tried at one trial because their case comes under cl (b). Their case might for instance, come under cl (d). Clause (e) refers also to attempts or abetments of offences within the meaning of sec. 234 and sec. 239 (c). It is now amended to include attempt; but if more than one person are to be tried and charged together, their case must be brought within one of the clauses of sec 239, Cr. P. C., before they can be tried together, or the trial is contrary to law—Chukarmal Nirmaldas v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 881 (884), 177 I.C. 280, 11 RS 53, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 164.

Whenever the applicability of sec. 239 is doubtful, it is far better it should not be applied and that accused should be tried separately—Samullah, 27 Cr.L.J. 1381 (1383), 98 I.C. 597, 51 M.L.J. 692, 24 M.L.W. 948, A.I.R. 1927 Mad 177, 38 M.L.T. 37; Nga Htwe, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 474, 38 Cr.L.J. 183, 166 I.C. 419, 1936 Cr.C. 964, 9 R.Rang 253. But it is wrong to acquit an accused against whom a prima facie case has been made out by the prosecution evidence, merely because of this technical difficulty—Nga Po Htwe, supra. Joint trials, except where they are clearly authorized by the law, do not save time in the long run and further the ends of justice. Where the legality of a joinder of charges is doubtful, the correct course is to hold trial clearly authorized by the law—Abdur Rahim, 32 Cr.L.J. 611, 130 I.C. 796, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 102, 12 P.L.T. 12, Ind Rul 1931 Pat 204, 1931 Cr.C. 230.

This is the last exception to sec 233 which lays down the general principle that every offence must be charged and tried separately. This is the only section which authorises a joint trial of several persons under the circumstances specified in this section. Except in all cases falling under this section, a joint trial of several accused renders the trial invalid—Balwant Singh, 4 N.L.R. 71, 8 Cr.L.J. 11, the trial thus taking place is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by the provisions of sec 537—Lachchu, 1 O.L.J. 141, 15 Cr.L.J. 420, or by any waiver or consent of parties or their pleaders—Hussein Baksh, 6 Cal. 96. But where the irregularity, if any, in the joint trial of several persons at one and the same trial is not one which in the actual facts of the case caused any prejudice to the accused or by itself entailed any failure of justice, it is no ground for quashing the proceedings, the more so, when no protest or complaint is made by or on behalf of the accused against the course adopted by the Magistrate—Sanyasi Gain v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 1018 (1019), 171 I.C. 183, 10 R.C. 235, A.I.R. 1937 Cal 269, Rash Behari Shaw v. Emp., A.I.R. 1936 Cal 753, 168 I.C. 657, 1936 Cr.C. 1043, 41 C.W.N. 225, 38 Cr.L.J. 545, 9 R.C. 853. Where a person accused of murder is tried jointly with others also for conspiracy to commit atrocities, there is every probability that the jury would be influenced in each case against him by the evidence not strictly relevant to the murder charge introduced by the trial under secs 120B, 395, I. P. Code. The joint trial would prejudice him but not others who are tried for conspiracy only—ibid.

This section confers a discretion upon a Magistrate to try persons accused of an offence before him either jointly or separately. That is clear from the expression "may" which appears in this section. But at the same time it cannot possibly be disputed that the discretion vested in the trying Magistrate is to be exercised by him judicially, and according to certain well established principles. The process of splitting up a case in order to enable the prosecution to examine an accused as a witness against a co-accused person is not a proper exercise of discretion—Dholimal Karoomal, 37 Cr.L.J. 716, 162 I.C. 863, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 47, 1936 Cr.C. 319. But see Karamalli Gulamalli below under the heading "Case:—Splitting up of." See also Note 1304.

Where each of two persons accused is throwing blame on the other, sec. 239 is not inapplicable to such cases—Mahbub Ali, 12 Cr.L.J. 266, 10 I.C. 331, 168 P.L.R. 1911, 37 P.W.R. 1911 (Cr.). But it is no part of the duty of the prosecution to call defence witnesses and if the case is put in such a way that some of the prosecution witnesses are also defence witnesses, then the accused should be tried separately—Nga Mya Sein v. The King, A.I.R. 1937 Rang 512, 172 I.C. 868, 39 Cr.L.J. 198, 10 R.R. 284; Nga Sar Kee v. The King, A.I.R. 1939 Rang 390, 41 Cr.L.J. 153, 185 I.C. 303. See also Dalsuk Roy Agarwalla v. Emp., 25 Cr.L.J. 807, 81 I.C. 343, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 248 and Keshowdas, 35 Cr.L.J. 205, 146 I.C. 936, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 390, 1933 Cr.C. 1430.

This section applies to trials and not to inquiries. Therefore, in a joint commitment of several accused it is not necessary that the conditions of this section should be fulfilled—Nelluri Chencia, 42 Mad. 561, 36 M.L.J. 295, 20 Cr.L.J. 379. The sections of the Cr. P. C., relating to joinder of charges, viz., 233 to 239, refer to trial of the accused. The ruling of the Privy Council in Subrahmanya Ayyar's case (25 Mad. 61) cannot be extended to preliminary inquiries held by Magistrate committing a case to the Sessions Court, so as to render the commitment illegal owing to misjoinder of offences or of offenders in the preliminary inquiry—Govindu, 26 Mad. 592.

Legality of joint trial depends on the accusation and not on the result of the trial—Ram Ras, 35 Cr.L.J. 1349 (1354), 151 I.C. 442, 1934 Cr.C. 130, 1934 A.L.J. 852, A.I.R. 1935 All. 61; Datto Hanmant, 2 Cr.L.J. 578, 7 Bom.L.R. 633, 30 Bom. 49 (54); Baburao Tatyarao, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 379, 38 Bom.L.R. 946; Gopala Raghunath, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 128, 53 Bom. 344, 31 Bom.L.R. 148, 30 Cr.L.J. 588, 116 I.C. 243; Abdul Salim, 49 Cal. 537; Abdul Rahaman, 3 Rang 95 (105); Mohammad Yakub, 33 Cr.L.J. 373; *Kali Kumar v. The provisions of this section are intended to deal with the position as it exists at the time of charge, and not with the result of the trial—Supdt. & Rem. of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Raghulal, 39 C.W.N. 741 (743), 62 Cal. 946, 37 Cr.L.J. 728, 8 R.C. 675, 162 I.C. 913; Abdullah, 27 Cr.L.J. 93.

Section 239, Cr. P. C., admits of the joint trial when more persons than one are accused of different offences committed in the same transaction. It suffices for the purpose of justifying a joint trial that the accusation alleges the offences committed by each accused to have been committed in the same transaction—Datto Hanmant, supra. So long as the accusation against all the accused persons is that they carried out a single scheme by successive acts, the necessary ingredients of a charge regarding the one transaction would be fulfilled, and the fact that the conspiracy was not established, would not vitiate the trial as regards those acts for which the evidence was sufficient for proof—Gopala Raghunath, supra. In this connection Lord Wright, J. observes: "To put it more exactly, is it enough if the conspiracy is to be found in the accusation or must it be found in the eventual result of the trial? Is the relevant point of time that of the accusation, or that of the eventual result? For the former view there is an unbroken series of authorities in the Indian Courts, but the matter has not until now come before the Judicial Committee and must now be decided by them. It is a question of principle, or, perhaps more correctly, construction. Their Lordships are of opinion that the view adopted in India is correct, as the High Court have held in the present case. The clause [i.e., sec. 239 (d), Cr. P. Code] deals with three matters, accusation, charge, trial. It says nothing about verdict. The condition is expressed in the words "persons accused of different offences etc." It does not say "rightly accused" or "accused and convicted." It is on the basis of what appears on the face of the accusation that the Court may proceed to charge and try—Babulal Choukhani v King-Emp., AIR 1938 P.C. 130 (133), 65 IA 158, 32 S.L.R. 476, 1938 O.L.R. 189, 1938 O.A. 398, 1938 M.W.N. 505, 19 P.L.T. 343, 1938 A.L.R. 309, 10 R.P.C. 250, 4 B.R. 490, 39 Cr.L.J. 452, 67 C.L.J. 161, 40 Bom.L.R. 787, 42 C.W.N. 621, 1938 A.Cr.C. 27, 1938 O.W.N. 416, 1938 A.L.J. 382, 174 I.C. 1, 1938 A.W.R. (P.C.) 116, I.L.R. (1938) 2 Cal 295, 1938 P.W.N. 320, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 647 (P.C.). The relevant point of time in the proceedings at which the condition as to sameness of transaction must be fulfilled is the time of accusation and not that of the eventual result—Parmanand v. Emp., AIR. 1940 Nag 340 (343), 1940 N.L.J. 459. See also Provincial Govt., C. P. & Berar v. Dinanath, AIR. 1939 Nag 263, 1939 N.L.J. 373, 41 Cr.L.J. 27, 184 I.C. 412, I.L.R. 1939 Nag 644.

A Court of Appeal or Revision in dealing with a question of misjoinder must look to the position as it appeared when charges were framed. But it does not follow that a Magistrate must wait till the stage of framing charges before he makes up his mind whether to split a case up. Such a course is most inconvenient, and it should ordinarily be possible for a Magistrate to decide the question of joinder after the case has been opened by the Public Prosecutor—Akhil Bandhu Ray v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 596 (599), 175 I.C. 409, AIR 1938 Cal 258, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal 588. See also Sanyani Gain, supra.

Where the accused persons are being tried together under sec. 239, it is possible to have an alternative charge against one of those accused persons. There is no necessity to read secs. 239 and 236 in such a way as to produce a different result—Tota Meah, 56 Cal 1106, AIR. 1926 Cal 298, 30 Cr.L.J. 1015, 119 I.C. 139.

This section cannot give jurisdiction to a Magistrate who has not jurisdiction under the provisions of any of the sections in Chap. XV of the Cr. P. C.; in other words, the point may be put in this way—If a conspiracy is entered into in District A and acts are committed in pursuance of the conspiracy in District B, the Magistrate of District A can try the conspiracy but cannot try the accused in the same trial for acts committed outside his district—Bissesswar, 28 C.W.N. 975, 26 Cr.L.J. 207, 83 I.C. 911. See Note 560.

This section is applicable to inquiries under Chapter VIII. The main principles applicable to a criminal trial regarding joinder of charges and the joint trial of accused persons are also applicable to proceedings under Chapter VIII—Pran Krishna, 8 C.W.N. 180 (181); Bachu Molla v. Sia Ram, 14 Cal 358; Hubdar, 10 O.W.N. 325, 1933 Cr.C. 557, 34 Cr.L.J. 852, 144 I.C. 944, AIR 1933 Oudh 251; Abdul Kadir, 9 All. 452. And a joint inquiry of several persons under Ch. VIII may, according to the circumstances of the case, be a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537—Bachu Molla, supra; Abdul Kadir, supra; or a grave illegality rendering the proceeding invalid—Pran Krishna, supra; Gaiba, Ratanlal 585 (586). See Note 290.

Again, this section does not apply to trials of cross-cases. The trial of the accused in the two cross-cases ought to be separate. But a simultaneous trial is not altogether invalid but somewhat irregular—Sahadeb, 8 C.W.N. 344; Chokowri v. Mali, 13 C.L.R. 275. See Note 749.

If persons can properly be charged and tried together under sec. 239, Cr. P. C., there is nothing to prevent other charges being added against one or more of such persons if the addition of such charges is permissible by the Code—Maruthi, 37 Cr.L.J. 794 (800), 163 I.C. 253, A.I.R. 1936 All. 337, 1936 A.L.J. 518, 1936 Cr.C. 401, following Niranjana, 1934 A.L.J. 658, 150 I.C. 1140, A.I.R. 1934 All. 811, 1934 Cr.C. 996, 35 Cr.L.J. 1224, Tota Meah, 56 Cal. 1106, 119 I.C. 139, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 298, 30 Cr.L.J. 1015, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 747 and dissenting from Ram Sahai, 19 A.L.J. 610, 61 I.C. 525, 22 Cr.L.J. 397 and Ram Prosad, 19 A.L.J. 796, 63 I.C. 449, A.I.R. 1921 All. 246, 22 Cr.L.J. 657.

Case:—(a) Splitting up of.—Section 239, Cr. P. C., is an enabling section. The Magistrate has a discretion to order a separate trial. The Magistrate does not act unjudicially in ordering a separate trial of a co-accused, even though the avowed object of the prosecution is to enable him to give evidence—Karamalli Gulamalli, 40 Cr.L.J. 118 (120), 178 I.C. 706, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 481, 40 Bom.L.R. 1092, I.L.R. 1939 Bom. 42. But see Dholimal Karoomal, 37 Cr.L.J. 716, 162 I.C. 863, A.I.R. 1936 Sind. 47, 1936 Cr.C. 319, quoted above in para. 51 under Note 774. Where in a case of conspiracy to commit criminal breach of trust and cheating the Magistrate, at the time of the framing of the charge, finds that in order to avoid probable prejudice to the accused persons by a misjoinder of charges it is desirable that the case should be split up into separate ones against groups of accused and separate trials held and accordingly forms two groups of the accused persons and orders a de novo trial of the second group, held that in the circumstances the Magistrate acts rightly in the exercise of his inherent power in ordering a de novo trial, and that there is no reason to set aside his order—Akhil Bandhu Ray v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 596, 175 I.C. 409, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 258, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 588. See also Mayadhar Potthal, 40 Cr.L.J. 625 (627), 181 I.C. 1001, 20 P.L.T. 420; Jagdish Prosad Basu v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 90, 11 R.C. 382, 43 C.W.N. 23, 178 I.C. 576, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 697. See Notes 759 and 783.

(b) Consolidation of.—Where, in a case under sec. 401, I. P. C., a number of independent charge-sheets are originally filed against the accused and two Sessions case. However, in considering whether the revision petition should be allowed on that trials and to frame only one charge, but convenient and proper; for, if all the accused are members of one gang, they ought to be tried together in one trial—Arumugam v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 355 (357), A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 858 (861), 1938 M.W.N. 595, 48 M.L.W. 639.

Where there are three cases, those three cases should be kept distinct, evidence let in each case separately, and conclusions drawn on the evidence let in each particular case. However, in considering whether the revision petition should be allowed on the ground, one has to consider whether the petitioners suffered any prejudice by the three cases being clubbed together. In most cases of improper clubbing together of cases, it would undoubtedly be held that the accused had suffered prejudice by being called upon to meet three cases at the same time, but where it was only necessary to produce a few documents and to examine one witness, it could not be said that the petitioners were prejudiced in their defence by such irregular procedure—Mustafa Sahib, 39 Cr.L.J. 935, 177 I.C. 737, 1938 M.W.N. 855, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 382, 48 M.L.W. 350, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 910, 1938 M.Cr.C. 155.

775. Clause (a)—“Persons accused of the same offence”:—The words “same offence” imply that both the accused should have acted in concert or association; and, therefore, where the allegation was that either one or the other committed the crime, this section does not apply and the two accused must be tried separately—Azinuddin, 6 Bur.L.T. 191, 7 L.B.R. 68, 14 Cr.L.J. 563. Where it is merely shown that part of the stolen property was found in the possession of one person, and another part was found in the possession of another, it would probably be illegal to try the two men together; but if the two men were acting in concert in retaining and concealing the stolen property and were in joint control of the stolen property, their joint trial would not be illegal—Jadunandan, 1 P.L.J. 64, 17 Cr.L.J. 234; Musai Khamat, 1 P.L.T. 431, 58 I.C. 341 (343), 21 Cr.L.J. 757. Two persons found in possession of stolen properties cannot be tried together on a charge under sec. 411, I. P. C., where there was no suggestion that either or both of them were the original thieves, and the only connecting link between them was that each of them retained some property stolen from the same complainant—Moosan, 20 A.L.J. 563, AIR 1922-All. 459. Unless the receiving of stolen property is joint, persons cannot be tried jointly under this section for receiving stolen property, merely because the goods were stolen in one theft, inasmuch as the acts of receiving in such a case by different persons on different occasions at different places are not only different offences but different transactions in themselves—Balgovind, 17 Cr.L.J. 477 (All.); Abdul Majid, 33 Cal 1256 (1257), 10 C.W.N. 912; Jiwan, 19 A.L.J. 815, AIR. 1921 All. 206, 23 Cr.L.J. 409. But see 6 Pat. 583, cited in Note 781 under clause (f) below.

Where two persons were charged with criminal misappropriation with respect to a certain sum of money, held that there was a misjoinder of charges because it is impossible to hold that two persons can be guilty of misappropriation of the same parcel of money. The charges against them must be of misappropriation by one accused and abetment by the other. It is also open to the Court to frame the charges against each of them in the alternative, i.e., of misappropriation or of abetment—Girwar, 16 C.W.N. 600 (602), 13 Cr.L.J. 506 (507), 15 IC 650; Meersah, 8 Rang. 632, 32 Cr.L.J. 930 (932), 1931 Cr.C. 378, AIR 1931 Rang 90, 132 IC 548, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang 180.

There is nothing in the section specifically stating that as regards one or more of the persons accused, there should be no application to that person or persons of the previous section such as sec. 234. Therefore, where a charge under sec. 411, I. P. C.; was framed against several accused and two other distinct charges under sec. 411; I. P. C., was framed against only one of them, held that sec. 239 did not exclude the procedure adopted by the Magistrate and that there was no illegality in the trial—Nirajan, 35 Cr.L.J. 1224, 150 IC 1140, 1934 A.L.J. 658, AIR. 1934 All. 811, 1934 Cr.C. 996.

Same transaction—See Note 756 under sec. 235. The word “transaction” must not be interpreted in any special or artificial or conventional or technical way, but as it is ordinarily used by men of education and common sense. If you cannot speak of a series of events as a transaction in the ordinary sense in which that word is used, you cannot try a number of persons together in respect of those events by attributing a special and unusual meaning to the word—Gan Mallu, 49 Mad 74, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513 (1521). The usual tests applied to decide whether different acts are parts of the same transaction are proximity of time, unity of place, unity of purpose or design and continuity of action. It is not necessary that all of them should be present to make the several incidents parts of the same transaction. Unity of place and proximity of time are not important tests at all; but the main test is unity of purpose. If the various acts are done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as accessory thereto, they may be treated as parts of the same transaction—Gan Mallu, supra; C. Venkataradi, 33 Mad 502, 11 Cr.L.J. 258. The expression “same transaction” must be understood as including both the immediate cause and effects of an act or event, and also its collocation, or relevant circumstances, the other necessary antecedents of its occurrence, connected with it, at a reasonable distance of time, space, cause and effect—Ring, 53 Bom. 479, 1929 Cr.C. 114 (121). For a joint trial under sec. 239, identity of purpose is sufficient. Community of purpose in the sense of conspiracy is not in any way necessary, though if it is present, its presence will be a further element supporting a finding that the offences are committed in the same transaction—Rafuzzaman v. Chhotey Lal, supra. Where the prosecution case alleges association and community of purpose among the accused, their joint trial is permissible. For sec. 239, Cr. P. C., it is enough if the different offences are committed in the course of the same transaction. The criterion in the two cross-cases ought to be separate. But a simultaneous trial is not altogether invalid but somewhat irregular—Sahadeb, 8 C.W.N. 344; Chokowri v. Mati, 13 C.L.R. 275. See Note 749.

If persons can properly be charged and tried together under sec. 239, Cr. P. C., there is nothing to prevent other charges being added against one or more of such persons if the addition of such charges is permissible by the Code—Manuthi, 37 Cr.L.J. 794 (800), 163 I.C. 253, A.I.R. 1936 All 337, 1936 A.L.J. 518, 1936 Cr.C. 401, following Niranjan, 1934 A.L.J. 658, 150 I.C. 1140, A.I.R. 1934 All 811, 1934 Cr.C. 996, 35 Cr.L.J. 1224, Tota Meah, 56 Cal. 1106, 119 I.C. 139, A.I.R. 1929 Cal 298, 30 Cr.L.J. 1015, Ind. Unless the receiving of stolen property is joint, persons cannot be tried jointly under this section for receiving stolen property, merely because the goods were stolen in one theft, inasmuch as the acts of receiving in such a case by different persons on different occasions at different places are not only different offences but different transactions in themselves—Balgovind, 17 Cr.L.J. 477 (All.); Abdul Majid, 33 Cal. 1256 (1257), 10 C.W.N. 912; Juwan, 19 A.L.J. 815, A.I.R. 1921 All. 206, 23 Cr.L.J. 409. But see 6 Pat. 583, cited in Note 781 under clause (f) below.

Where two persons were charged with criminal misappropriation with respect to a certain sum of money, held that there was a misjoinder of charges because it is impossible to hold that two persons can be guilty of misappropriation of the same parcel of money. The charges against them must be of misappropriation by one accused and abetment by the other. It is also open to the Court to frame the charges against each of them in the alternative, i.e., of misappropriation or of abetment—Girwar, 16 C.W.N. 600 (602), 13 Cr.L.J. 506 (507), 15 I.C. 650, Meersah, 8 Rang 632, 32 Cr.L.J. 930 (932), 1931 Cr.C. 378, A.I.R. 1931 Rang 90, 132 I.C. 548, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang. 180.

There is nothing in the section specifically stating that as regards one or more of the persons accused, there should be no application to that person or persons of the previous section such as sec. 234. Therefore, where a charge under sec. 411, I P. C., was framed against several accused and two other distinct charges under sec. 411, I P. C., was framed against only one of them, held that sec. 239 did not exclude the procedure adopted by the Magistrate and that there was no illegality in the trial—Niranjani, 35 Cr.L.J. 1224, 150 I.C. 1140, 1934 A.L.J. 658, A.I.R. 1934 All. 811, 1934 Cr.C. 996.

Same transaction—See Note 756 under sec. 235. The word “transaction” must not be interpreted in any special or artificial or conventional or technical way, but as it is ordinarily used by men of education and common sense. If you cannot speak of a series of events as a transaction in the ordinary sense in which that word is used, you cannot try a number of persons together in respect of those events by attributing a special and unusual meaning to the word—Gan Mallu, 49 Mad 74, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513 (1521). The usual tests applied to decide whether different acts are parts of the same transaction are proximity of time, unity of place, unity of purpose or design and continuity of action. It is not necessary that all of them should be present to make the several incidents parts of the same transaction. Unity of place and proximity of time are not important tests at all; but the main test is unity of purpose. If the various acts are done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as accessory thereto, they may be treated as parts of the same transaction—Gan Mallu, supra; C. Venkatadri, 33 Mad 502, 11 Cr.L.J. 258. The expression “same transaction” must be understood as including both the immediate cause and effects of an act or event, and also its collocation, or relevant circumstances, the other necessary antecedents of its occurrence, connected with it, at a reasonable distance of time, space, cause and effect—Ring, 53 Bom. 479, 1929 Cr.C. 114 (121). For a joint trial under sec. 239, identity of purpose is sufficient. Community of purpose in the sense of conspiracy is not in any way necessary, though if it is present, its presence will be a further element supporting a finding that the offences are committed in the same transaction—Rafuzzaman v. Chhotey Lal, supra. Where the prosecution case alleges association and community of purpose among the accused, their joint trial is permissible. For sec. 239, Cr. P. C., it is enough if the different offences are committed in the course of the same transaction. The criterion which makes a joint trial allowable is what the prosecution case is, not what the result may be—Bhagoletal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag 249 (250), 41 Cr.L.J. 734, 189 I.C. 382, 1940 N.L.J. 309. Six persons were accused of waging war against the King under sec. 121, I. P. Code. The sixth accused joined the party after the 1st and 2nd accused had been arrested. But the party to which the accused belonged continued under the leadership of the same man and actuated by the same purpose. Held that the joint trial of the 6th accused with the 1st and 2nd accused was legal—Gan Mallu, 49 Mad. 74, 48 M.L.J. 308, 26 Cr.L.J. 1513 (1516, 1522).

Where three acts of misappropriation were committed by three persons, each of which acts was complete in itself and was not dependent on the other, and one person was engaged upon the frauds for a small part of the periods during which the other two persons committed the acts, so that there was no sufficient continuity of action, they could not be tried together—Meecriah, 8 Rang 632, 32 Cr.L.J. 930 (934). The joint trial of four prostitutes for breach of the notice issued under sec. 153 of the Punjab Municipal Act is illegal; the four prostitutes lived in four different houses, although the houses were adjoining, and their failure to obey the notice could not be regarded as offences committed in one transaction—Aisha, 7 Lah 168, 27 P.L.R. 188, 27 Cr.L.J. 465.

Persons guilty of the offence of giving false evidence in a case can be tried jointly, if there is an identity of purpose between them, or one sustained and continuous plot. Thus, where certain persons were witnesses on the same side in a criminal case and all gave evidence on the same point and to the same effect, to prove the same fact, held that the depositions of all the witnesses were given in the same transaction, so as to make a joint trial of such persons for perjury legal. There was the most obvious identity of purpose, and that is sufficient to constitute the same transaction—Rafuzzaman v. Chhotey Lal, 48 All. 325, 24 A.L.J. 472, 27 Cr.L.J. 445 (447), 93 I.C. 237, A.I.R. 1926 All. 324; Ganesh, 14 Bom.L.R. 972, 13 Cr.L.J. 833; Sejmal, 51 Bom 310, 29 Bom.L.R. 170, 28 Cr.L.J. 373 (377), 100 I.C. 981, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 177. Where the offence of verifying a false statement was one done jointly by the brothers in pursuance of a common object, it is impossible to hold that these offences were not committed in the course of the same transaction—Nathusingh, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 263, 1936 Cr.C. 1025. But in the absence of any identity of purpose or pre-arrangement, several persons charged with having given false evidence in the same proceeding, should be separately tried—Anant Ram, 4 All. 293; Nathu, 10 Cal 405; Kotha Subba Chetti, 6 Mad. 252; Krishnarao, 4 Bom.L.R. 53 (54); the false evidence given by one witness is a transaction complete in itself and not connected with false evidence given by another witness, even though in the same case and on the same point—Alu, 5 S.L.R. 129, 13 Cr.L.J. 23; Gunwant, 13 N.L.R. 35, 18 Cr.L.J. 339 (342), 38 I.C. 723, A.I.R. 1916 Nag 73. See Notes 723 and 745.

The printer and the publisher of a pamphlet alleged to be seditious can be tried jointly for an offence under sec. 124A, I. P. Code, because the printer and the publisher are concerned in the same transaction in regard to the publication of the pamphlet. Even the author, the printer and the publisher may all be tried together, or at any rate the author and the publisher—Shantaram, 30 Bom.L.R. 320, 29 Cr.L.J. 683 (684).

776. Clause (b)—Abetment:—Where some of the accused are principal offenders, and the others accomplices, clause (b) of this section permits these all to be tried together in one trial—Sugaimuthu, 50 Mad. 274, 27 Cr.L.J. 394. Thus, where a person who had a license for the sale of opium allowed another, who had no such license, to sell it, they could be jointly tried, the offence of the former being an abetment of the offence of the latter—Chhail Behari, 1906 P.L.R. 113, 4 Cr.L.J. 178. A licensed vendor is punishable under sec. 50 of the Bengal Excise Act for the acts of the servant; in such a case, the matter is said to be an abettor of the servant by implication, and both may be tried together—Priya Nath, 15 C.L.J. 692, 13 Cr.L.J. 255.

If A induces B to cheat, and B attempts to cheat in consequence, A and B may clearly be tried together for abetment and attempt at cheating—Kali Das, 38 Cal. 453, 15 C.W.N. 463, 12 Cr.L.J. 106 (107).

Jurisdiction, being the foundation of the charge, is to be imported or understood as present in all the subsequent procedure set out in the Code; and if that is so, it clearly must govern sec. 239. Therefore, in an offence of criminal breach of trust a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try the abetment and receiving which clearly took place outside his territorial jurisdiction—Sachidanandam v. Sowmya, AIR 1929 Mad 839, 52 Mad 991, 57 M.L.J. 518, 30 M.L.W. 501, 1929 M.W.N. 578, 120 I.C. 75, 30 Cr.L.J. 1161, 1929 Cr.C. 487.

777. Clause (c)—Offences of the same kind:—Section 234 applies only to the case of one accused committing several offences of the same kind within a year. But where several persons committed several offences of the same kind, there was no provision under the old law for the joint trial of those persons, and consequently separate trial was necessary—Budhai v. Tarap, 10 C.W.N. 32, 33 Cal 292, 3 Cr.L.J. 126. Thus, it was held that where three dacoities were committed by several dacoits on three different dates and at separate places, the dacoits must be separately charged and tried for each dacoity as the offences were not committed in the same transaction—Ram Prosad, 19 A.L.J. 796, 22 Cr.L.J. 657. Where several persons looted the linseed crop of the complainant on one day and his tobacco crop on another day, the offences had to be tried separately as they were not parts of the same transaction—Budhai, 33 Cal 292, 10 C.W.N. 32, 3 Cr.L.J. 126. These cases are now overruled by this clause. Under the present law, the offences can be tried together, provided that each offence is committed by the accused persons jointly; and it is not necessary that all the sets of offences must be committed in the same transaction.

Section 239 (c), Cr. P. C., relates back to sec. 234, Cr. P. C., but there is no reason also to suppose that the term "offence" under sec. 239 does not include minor or alternative offences within the meaning of sec. 235 (2) or sec. 236, Cr. P. C., as "offence" under sec. 234 was held to include a minor or alternative offence within the meaning of sec. 235 (2) or 236 by the Bombay High Court in In re Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 33 Bom 221, 2 I.C. 277, 10 Bom L.R. 973, 9 Cr.L.J. 226. But whether sec. 234 or sec. 239, Cr. P. C., is to be applied the distinction to be borne in mind to prevent errors is the distinction between offences and transactions, subject to the overriding principle that an accused must not be prejudiced in his trial by a multiplicity of charges. Under cl. (c) of sec. 239, Cr. P. C., three offences of the same kind may be tried at once, but not three transactions of the same kind—Chuharmal Nirmaldas v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 881 (882), 177 I.C. 280, 11 R.S. 53, AIR 1938 Sind 164, following Gerimal Hemamal v. Emp., 10 S.L.R. 192, 40 I.C. 312, AIR. 1917 Sind 40, 18 Cr.L.J. 664.

Where a woman was abducted by K and B, and then rape was committed on the woman at a place D by the two accused persons, and subsequently the woman was taken either by force or by fraud by one of the accused alone to different places, and where he alone committed rape on her, held that a joint charge of abduction against both the accused K and B under sec. 366, I. P. C., was justified, that a joint charge under sec. 376, I. P. C., against both of them in respect of the rape which took place at D was also justified, but a joint charge against both the accused of having committed rape at different places was improper and embarrassing—Keramat, 42 C.L.J. 524, 27 Cr.L.J. 263, AIR 1926 Cal. 320, 92 I.C. 439. Where four persons broke into the house of the complainant, carried her off and raped her and she was subsequently taken to the house of K and raped there by him and was finally taken to a hut in a field where she was raped by K and others and eventually she was made over to A who took her to his house and there raped her, held that the joint trial of all these six persons was illegal as the subsequent acts committed by K and A were not committed in the course of the same transaction and that, even supposing the joint trial was legal, it was in no sense compulsory and the Judge would have been well advised to accept their objection inasmuch as K and A were liable to be prejudiced by the admission of evidence which was quite irrelevant so far as the charges against them were concerned—Bhola Sardar, AIR. 1937 Cal 22, 169 I.C. 256, 38 Cr.L.J. 750, 9 R.C. 913.

The prosecution case was that some time in September the complainant travelled by train from S to B to stay with her sister. In the compartment she met four accused who proposed to take her to her destination. She left the train with them at T and was taken to a house where she met another accused. There all the accused ravished her. Later on they took her to H, where they kept her confined for six weeks while two of them ravished her at intervals. From H she was taken back to T and finally handed over to an accused who kept her confined for about two months. Some accused also habitually had intercourse with her against the order of nature. One day she escaped and met a woman who took her to the Aryya Samaj. She was treated there until she appeared in Court. The time covered is from September 1936 and June 1937. The accused were jointly tried on a series of charges under secs. 342, 376 and 377, I. P. C. Held that neither of these offences was a continuing offence, that it was doubtful if an offence under sec. 376, I. P. C., committed by five persons before the end of September 1936 could rightly be held to be part of the same transaction as an offence under sec. 377, I. P. C., committed by three of them between the end of December 1936 and the end of June 1937 and that the multiplicity of the charges tried together must have operated to the prejudice of the accused—Ali Hyder v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 769, 68 C.L.J. 238, 179 I.C. 960, 40 Cr.L.J. 280, 11 R.C. 637.

A married girl whom the jury found to be under 16 years of age, was due to return to her husband's house after a visit to her father. On the way she passed the house of the first accused. He asked her to come inside on the pretext that his wife wanted her. When she went in, he bolted the door and demanded that she should remain with her. In the night he revashed her. Later on, he took her out and was joined by the other three accused. They took her away, and according to her story, her ornaments were taken off. She was finally brought back and returned by the first accused. All the accused were tried jointly under sec. 366, I. P. C., and some of them were also tried under sec. 346 and sec. 346 read with sec. 109, I. P. C. Held that the whole incident could not be regarded as constituting a single offence and that though it might be said that the whole occurrence was one single transaction, even in that case, separate charges should have been framed for the separate offences which went to make up that transaction—Nanda Ghosh v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 649 (650), 182 I.C. 322, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 321. See Note 778 (20) and also Note 779, (9) and (18).

Where several persons were accused of the same offence, namely, theft under sec. 380, committed in the course of the same transaction, namely, the first theft and were also accused of more than one offence of the same kind committed by them jointly within the period of 12 months, that is to say, two thefts, each of them being committed by them jointly, they can be tried together under clauses (a) and (b) of this section. If charges were framed against some of them under sec. 380 and against others under sec. 411, I. P. C., these persons could have been tried together upon those charges in respect of these two thefts under the provisions of sec. 239 (c)—Supdt. & Rem. of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Raghubal, 39 C.W.N. 741, 62 Cal. 916, 37 Cr.L.J. 728, 162 I.C. 943.

Offences under secs. 41 (h) and 41 (j) of the Factories Act are offences of the same kind under this clause—Agarwala, 13 P.L.T. 252, 33 Cr.L.J. 274 (275), A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 188, 1932 Cr.C. 414, 136 I.C. 289, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 65. The joint trial of two persons for passing counterfeit coins on three different occasions to three persons on the same date is valid under this sub-section—Kovaganti, 44 M.L.J. 130, 23 Cr.L.J. 719, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 181.

778. Clause (d)—Distinct offences committed in the same transaction:—For the meaning of the words 'same transaction' see Note 756 under sec. 235. If more persons other than one are accused of different offences committed in a series of acts so connected as to form one transaction, they may be tried together. Whether or not the series of acts be so clearly connected as to form the same transaction necessarily rests with the Court to decide. The limits are wide, but no joinder of charges or trials should be permitted which will result in bewildering any of the accused in his defence or in causing undue prejudice against him—Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191 (195).

The phrase "same transaction" used in sec 239 (d), Cr. P. C., suggests in particular continuity of action and purpose. Before a joint trial can be held to be permissible or justifiable it must be established that each one of the accused was so connected with the other accused that the act done by one of them may be said to have been done conjointly with the others. The fact that the accused are all servants of the same master and so connected with the same person, does not necessarily involve connection with each other for the purposes of the offences charged. No doubt it may be possible to infer a common purpose in the various acts alleged; but common purpose would not be enough to make offences part of the same transaction, if the offenders act independently.—Nathu Chaudhury v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 452 (453), A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 499, 6 B.R. 461, 187 I.C. 361, 1940 P.W.N. 454.

It is sufficient that the offences were committed in the course of the same transaction. Whether the charge is an alternative one as provided by sec. 236 or is a distinct charge is obviously immaterial.—Kali Kumar v. Nawab Ali, 30 Cr.L.J. 619, 116 I.C. 369, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 160, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal 465. Therefore, two persons can be jointly tried on three substantive charges and one of them abetting these three offences—Ibid.

Section 239, cl (d), Cr. P. C., is expressly an exception from sec 233, Cr. P. C., and enables a plurality of offences to be dealt with in the same trial. But it does not import either expressly or by implication the limitation set out in sec. 234, Cr. P. C., according to which not more than three offences of the same kind committed within the space of 12 months can be tried together or the limitation contained in sec. 235 (1), Cr. P. C., under which more offences than one committed by the same person can only be tried together if they are one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, in which case there is no specific limit of number. Nor is there any limit of number of offences specified in sec. 239 (d). The one and only limitation there is that the accusation should be of offences "committed in the course of the same transaction"—Babulal Choukhani v. King-Emp., A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 130 (133), 65 I.A. 158, 32 S.L.R. 476, 1938 O.L.R. 189, 1938 O.A. 398, 1938 M.W.N. 505, 19 P.L.T. 343, 1938 A.L.R. 309, 10 P.P.C. 250, 4 B.R. 490, 39 Cr.L.J. 452, 67 C.L.J. 161, 40 Bom.L.R. 787, 42 C.W.N. 621, 1938 A.Cr.C. 27, 1938 O.W.N. 416, 1938 A.L.J. 382, 174 I.C. 1, 1938 A.W.R. (P.C.) 116, 1938 P.W.N. 320, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 647 (P.C.). See also Note 783.

The expression 'same transaction' would imply oneness of purpose. If, in the course of some quarrel, arising accidentally among persons who have collected to witness a festival, there happens to be a fight and if some persons inflict injury on others, without any common object, they would be committing different offences of hurt. And if they do not act with any common intention, it cannot be said that they have caused hurt in the course of the 'same transaction' although all the persons committing the offences are there at one and the same place and at the same time. In such a case the joint trial of these persons would be improper.—Tufail Ahmed, 23 A.L.J. 5, 26 Cr.L.J. 734. Where the accused were charged with the offences of murder, hurt and grievous hurt, under secs 302, 323 and 325, I. P. C., and all the criminal acts were found to be the outcome of a conspiracy to kill on one day as many members of the deceased's family as could be found, held that the acts were so closely connected by continuity of purpose and progressive action towards a common object that they formed one transaction, and the joint trial of the accused in respect of all the charges was legal.—Bahadur, 7 Lah. 254, 27 P.L.R. 379, 27 Cr.L.J. 803 (804).

Where the accused formed themselves into a body with the intention of looting and shooting the deceased and frightening any one who tried to prevent them, and the accused were jointly tried for the offences of murder, attempt to murder, and hurt, held that there was no misjoinder, as the offences were committed in one transaction.—Ramaraju, 53 Mad 937, 59 M.L.J. 945, 32 Cr.L.J. 30 (31).

It is also necessary that the accused must be associated together in the perpetration of the acts forming the same transaction from start to finish.—Jethalal, 29 Bom. 449, 2 Cr.L.J. 480, 7 Bom L.R. 527; Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49 (55); Kushai, 50 Cal 1004

(1009), 25 Cr.L.J. 1082; Tulsi, 1917 P.R. 17, 18 Cr.L.J. 282. But it is not necessary that all the persons must be charged with all the offences. See Illustrations (b) and (c). In such cases, it is immaterial whether all the members of the party took an active part in each offence—Ram Prasad, 20 A.L.J. 926. If the accused started together for the same goal, this suffices to justify the joint trial, even if incidentally some of them have done an act for which the others may not be responsible—Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom 49; Gopal Raghunath, 53 Bom. 344, 30 Cr.L.J. 588 (589); Kushai, 50 Cal. 1004 (1010); Kalidas, 38 Cal. 453; Tepanidhi, 1 P.L.T. 180, 21 Cr.L.J. 161, 5 L.L.J. 11; Loganathiyar, 6 M.L.T. 17, 11 Cr.L.J. 30; Pragg, 11 O.L.J. 693, 25 Cr.L.J. 1169. If the accused started together for the same goal, and in the process committed a series of acts, they could be jointly tried for those offences, although the acts were separated by intervals of time—Ashutosh v. Purna Chandra, 50 Cal 159 (164). The foundation for the procedure laid down in this section is the association of two persons concurring from start to finish to attain the same end. Community of purpose or design and continuity of action are the essential elements of the connection necessary to link together different acts into one and the same transaction. In such cases the acts alleged to be connected with each other must have been done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as necessary thereto—Tepanidhi, 5 P.L.T. 11, 1 P.L.T. 180, 21 Cr.L.J. 161; Jitan, 1 P.L.T. 564. Where the accusation against all the accused persons is that they carried out a single scheme by successive acts done at intervals, and there was a complete unity of project, and the whole series of acts were so linked together by one motive and design as to constitute one transaction, a joint trial is not only valid but is demanded in the interests of public time and convenience—Kushai Malik, 50 Cal. 1004; Ganesh, 14 Bom L.R. 972, 13 Cr.L.J. 833. Thus, where a girl was abducted on a certain night, and thereafter various people concealed her, the offence being a continuing offence, all the persons can be tried together—Kushai Malik, 50 Cal. 1004, 25 Cr.L.J. 1082, 81 I.C. 906, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 389; Dosa, 109 I.C. 224, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 751, 29 Cr.L.J. 496. For contra see Wawab Khan, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 496. In a trial for a charge under sec. 147, I. P. Code, it is not illegal to frame charges under secs. 324 and 325, I. P. C., against particular accused persons, although these offences were committed by them outside the scope of the common object mentioned in the charge under sec. 147, if all the acts with which the accused were charged form one transaction—Rasul, 3 Luck. 664, 5 O.W.N. 612, 29 Cr.L.J. 801 (802).

Offences committed by the accused in different transactions cannot be tried together. Thus, where D committed the offences of counterfeiting seals, and D, H, K and T subsequently committed the offences of cheating and forgery in pursuance of a conspiracy entered into subsequent to the commission of the offence of counterfeiting seals, the offence of counterfeiting seals committed by D could not be tried jointly with the offences of cheating and forgery committed by D, H, K and T—Tulsi, 17 P.R. 1917, 18 Cr.L.J. 282 (283).

Charges need not specify same transaction :—It suffices for the purpose of a joint trial that the accusation alleges the offences committed by each accused to have been committed in the same transaction within the meaning of this section. It is not necessary that the charge should contain a statement as to the transaction being one and the same. It is the tenor of the accusation and not the wording of the charge that must be considered as the test—Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom 49, 7 Bom L.R. 633.

Examples of offences committed in the same transaction :—

(1) Criminal breach of trust by one person, and receipt by another of the stolen property (the proceeds of the breach of trust) knowing it to be so—Balabhai, 6 Bom L.R. 517. In such a case it is not necessary that the offence of receiving should take place simultaneously with the offence of criminal breach of trust—Ibid.

(2) The offence of keeping a gaming house and the offence of playing therein arise out of facts so inseparably connected together as to form one transaction, and therefore the keeper and the players are clearly within the purview of this section as persons accused of different offences committed in the same transaction, and can be tried jointly

—Khilnda Ram, 3 Lah. 359, 23 Cr.L.J. 621; Sheikh Mati, 9 N.L.R. 68, 14 Cr.L.J. 293; Darab, 50 All. 412, 28 Cr.L.J. 1001 (1002), 105 I.C. 825, A.I.R. 1928 All. 20; Bhana, 1919 P.R. 6, 20 Cr.L.J. 219; Nathu Thakur, 20 Cr.L.J. 768 (Pat.); Ganeshi Lal, 20 A.L.J. 967, A.I.R. 1923 All. 88, 24 Cr.L.J. 155. Contra—Fazal Din, 1914 P.R. 35, 225 P.L.R. 1915, 16 Cr.L.J. 220, and Makhan, 1910 P.W.R. 5, 11 Cr.L.J. 211, where it has been held that the two offences cannot be said to be parts of the same transaction.

(3) If several accused carry out a systematic scheme of criminal breach of trust, by successive acts done at intervals, each accused alternately taking the benefits, the unity of the project constitutes the acts as parts of one transaction, and all the accused can, therefore, be jointly tried—Datto Hanmant, 30 Bom. 49, 7 Bom.L.R. 633, 2 Cr.L.J. 578.

(4) Charges of murder against three accused, and an alternative charge against one of them for murder or causing disappearance of evidence of murder can be jointly tried—Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191; Hannappa, 25 Bom.L.R. 231, A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 262. See Note 779, (6).

(5) Where several persons were members of a secret society and conspired to wage war to deprive the King of the sovereignty of British India and collected arms and ammunition for that purpose and actually waged war, it was held that the joint trial of all the accused for offences under secs 121, 121A, 122, 123, I. P. C., was legal—Barindra, 37 Cal. 467. Charges of conspiracy and offences committed in carrying out the objects of the conspiracy can be tried together. The transaction is not complete as soon as the offence is committed. So long as conspiracy continued, the transaction which began with the forming of the common intention continued and the offences were committed in the course of the same transaction—Khagendra, 19 C.W.N. 706, 16 Cr.L.J. 9; Mohammad, 33 Cr.L.J. 373 (375), 137 I.C. 73, A.I.R. 1932 All. 73, 1932 Cr.C. 93, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 270. See Notes 723 and 757.

(6) Where illegal gratification is paid to a person through another, the joint trial of both persons for offences under secs 161 and 162, I. P. C., is valid—Shrinwas, 7 Bom.L.R. 637, 2 Cr.L.J. 582.

(7) Cheating by A in respect of a certain sum collected from several persons on a certain date, and cheating by B in respect of another sum collected from some other persons at the same time, at the same place and in pursuance of the same conspiracy, are parts of the same transaction, and A and B may be tried together—Kailash, 46 Cal. 712, 29 Cr.L.J. 31. See Note 779 (13). So also, conspiracy and acts of cheating in pursuance of that conspiracy can be tried together—Abdul Salim, 49 Cal. 573, 26 C.W.N. 680, 35 C.L.J. 279, 69 I.C. 145, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 107, 23 Cr.L.J. 657. See Notes 723 and 757, (5) and (10).

(8) Where a gang of dacoits assembled on a highway for robbing passers-by, and in the course of the dacoity several offences were committed by them, held that all these offences were committed in the course of the same transaction. It is immaterial whether all the members of the gang took an active part in each offence—Ram Prosad, 20 A.L.J. 926, 24 Cr.L.J. 153, A.I.R. 1923 All. 137. Where the allegation against two sets of persons is that they committed dacoity with murder, they may be tried together—U Po Yone, 34 Cr.L.J. 1185, 146 I.C. 196, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 271, 1933 Cr.C. 1015.

(9) The offence of dacoity, the offence of dishonest possession of stolen property knowing it to have been stolen in the commission of the dacoity, and dishonest reception of such property knowing it to be stolen, from a known dacoit, can be tried together, as all the offences can be said to have been committed in the same transaction—Durga Prosad, 45 All. 223, 20 A.L.J. 981, 24 Cr.L.J. 149, 71 I.C. 501, A.I.R. 1923 All. 126. It will now fall under clause (e).

(10) The offence of fabricating false evidence in order to procure the conviction of an innocent person, the offence of instituting a false prosecution against that person, and the offence of giving false evidence in that prosecution in order to secure his conviction,—all these offences can be tried together, as there was one sustained and continuous plot for procuring conviction of an innocent person—Ganesh, 14 Bom.L.R. 972, 13 Cr.L.J. 833,

(11) Criminal conspiracy to commit the offences of importing arms and ammunition, murder, attempt to commit murder, grievous hurt, robbery, dacoity, and the commission of those offences in pursuance of the conspiracy (secs 19 and 20, Arms Act, secs. 302, 307, 326, 392, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, I. P. C., and secs. 120B, and 109, I. P. C.)—Mukand Singh, 8 Lah. 230 (P.C.), A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 215, 29 Cr.L.J. 673. Offences under sec. 121A, I. P. Code (conspiring to deprive His Majesty of the sovereignty of British India, conspiring to wage war against the Government, and conspiring to overawe the Government by means of criminal force) and offences under sec. 120B, I. P. Code (conspiring to commit dacoities either accompanied by murder or not accompanied by murder)—Ram Prasad, 2 Luck. 631, 29 Cr.L.J. 129 (136). See Notes 723 and 757, (5) and (10).

(12) Where two persons were charged under two separate Acts (sec. 72, Provincial Insolvency Act and sec. 102, Presidency Town Insolvency Act), but the facts alleged against them were the same, viz., that the two accused carried on a joint business and each obtained credit concealing the fact that he was an undischarged insolvent, held that the two accused could be tried jointly—Ganguly v. Watson, 53 Cal. 929, 27 Cr.L.J. 1269 (1272).

(13) A charge under sec. 45 of the Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878) can be joined with a charge under sec. 43 (1) (i), read with sec. 47 of the same Act—Jethanand, 35 Cr.L.J. 256, 147 I.C. 55, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 255, 1933 Cr.C. 811.

(14) A charge under sec. 395, I. P. C., and a charge under the Arms Act for being in possession of arms at the time the dacoity was committed form parts of the same transaction and can be tried together. But if the possession of arms relates to a different time, the joint trial of these two offences is illegal—Jai Singh, 19 Cr.L.J. 100, 43 I.C. 324, A.I.R. 1918 Lah. 148, 44 P.R. 1917 (Cr.).

(15) Two drivers in a motor collision in which several persons were killed, can properly be tried together—Baliah, 1931 M.W.N. 556.

(16) Two persons who, finding themselves alone, went in succession and raped a girl, can be tried together as the transaction was essentially single and the separate acts of rape alleged could not have been severally committed unless they had been either tacitly agreed to or reciprocally connived at by each of the accused in his turn—Mazarali, 31 Cr.L.J. 870 (872), 144 I.C. 985, 35 Bom L.R. 474, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 266, 1933 Cr.C. 678, 57 Bom 400.

(17) Where one person is arrested with revolutionary leaflets in one place and another person for distribution of leaflets of the same kind in a different place, there is no objection to introduce a charge under sec. 120B, I. P. C., to justify a joint trial. There is no objection to charge under both secs 117 and 120B, I. P. Code—Tarapada, 31 Cr.L.J. 1073, 145 I.C. 814, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 603, 37 C.W.N. 426, 1933 Cr.C. 967.

(18) Where offences of murder and grievous hurt were committed in the course of the same transaction in furtherance of the common intention, all the persons responsible for causing those injuries could be tried together in one trial under the provisions of sec 239, Cr. P. C.—Nga Tha Aye, 36 Cr.L.J. 1380, 158 I.C. 441, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 299, 1935 Cr.C. 995. Where the accused were jointly tried at one trial for no less than four offences, namely, the offence of riot under sec. 147, I. P. C., the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt to a public servant in the discharge of his duty under sec. 333, I. P. C., the offence of murder committed in the course of the riot punishable under sec. 302, I. P. C., read with sec. 149, I. P. C., and the offence of committing dacoity with murder punishable under secs. 395 and 149, I. P. C., held that the framing of charges in respect of the four offences committed by the accused in the course of one and the same transaction was justified—Bishunath, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 190 (194), 1935 O.L.R. 78, 1935 O.W.N. 145, 153 I.C. 978, 1935 Cr.C. 279.

(19) Where the accused were charged under sec. 420, I. P. C., firstly, in respect of Rs. 15-3-3 collected from 11 persons, and, secondly, in respect of Rs. 14-12-0 collected from 11 others on the same day by the same misrepresentation, held that under the provisions of secs. 235 and 239 the accused were triable together in respect of all the raid offences as the misrepresentation was in each case the same and the offences were all committed at one and the same time and place in pursuance of the same conspiracy and in the course of the same transaction—Kailash, 29 C.L.J. 31, 20 Cr.L.J. 122, 46 Cal. 712

(20) The joint trial of three persons, two being charged under sec. 366, I. P. C., and one being charged under sec. 368, I. P. C., is not illegal—Dasa, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 751, 109 I.C. 224, 29 Cr.L.J. 496. The same High Court took a contrary view in Nawab Khan, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 496, 1929 Cr.C. 57. Persons who abducted a girl and persons who detained her with the knowledge that she had been abducted, can legally be tried together—Kushai Malik, 50 Cal. 1004, 81 I.C. 906, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 389, 25 Cr.L.J. 1082. In Mozam Dastadar, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 563, 144 I.C. 93, 1933 Cr.C. 940, 34 Cr.L.J. 682, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 499, it was, however, held that the joint trial of an accused charged with an offence under sec. 366, I. P. C., and accused charged under sec. 368, I. P. C., was irregular and prejudicial to the accused and must be set aside. A joint trial for offences under sections 366 and 368, Indian Penal Code, is not illegal where the whole chain of events, beginning with the girl's kidnapping or abduction and ending with her discovery can fairly be regarded as forming one and the same transaction—Zamin, 33 Cr.L.J. 275 (276), 136 I.C. 243, 8 O.W.N. 1325, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 28, 1932 Cr.C. 60, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 99. Where there was obviously a community of interest or purpose between the accused persons and the acts were so closely connected as to form one and the same transaction, such trial is not illegal—Bhawani Pathak, 37 Cr.L.J. 496, 161 I.C. 869, A.I.R. 1936 All. 253, 1936 Cr.C. 237. Two persons, charged under sec. 368, I. P. C., for separate acts of concealment in respect of the same girl, cannot be tried together—Durgamoni Dass v. Emp., 43 C.W.N. 196. For a valuable discussion on this point see 44 C.W.N. xi. See also Note 777 and Note 779 (9) and (18).

(21) The offence of illegal possession of a revolver is a continuing one and, therefore, having possession of such a weapon at the time of preparation for dacoity or at the time of taking part in the dacoity would form part of the same transaction, and the facts would certainly bring the two charges under sec. 399, I. P. C., and sec. 19 (f), Arms Act, within the ambit of sec. 239 (d), Cr. P. Code—Khazan v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 793, 39 P.L.R. 1013, 172 I.C. 405, 39 Cr.L.J. 141, 10 R.L. 314.

(22) The legality of a joint trial depends upon whether the whole affair constituted one transaction, and with reference to that, unity of time, place and purpose ought to be looked to. Where the whole affair took place in one village, one incident succeeding another rapidly, and the rioters went from one house to another and finally surrounded the Excise Sub-Inspector and his companions who had gone there to make a raid on certain houses and had to retreat owing to the attack, the joint trial of the accused persons under secs. 148 and 333, I. P. C., or secs. 148 and 149 read with sec. 333, I. P. C., was legal—Nana Sadoba v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 283, 1938 N.L.J. 90, 179 I.C. 317, 40 Cr.L.J. 197.

(23) Where there was unity of criminal behaviour actuated by a common intention on the part of all the accused to extort confession, they would be jointly triable under this section. The unity of criminal behaviour and the common intention prompting it would render all that was done in furtherance of an object as a part of one transaction. The necessity of a joint trial is strengthened if there is the additional element of proximity in time as well—Provincial Govt. v. C. P. & Bazar v. Dinanath, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 263, 1939 N.L.J. 373, 11 L.R. 1939 Nag. 644, 41 Cr.L.J. 27, 184 I.C. 412.

779. Offences not in the same transaction:—(1) In case of rioting, the two opposite factions cannot be said to commit the offence of rioting in the same transaction; the action of each side forming a separate transaction, the two parties must be tried separately—Hussain Baksh, 6 C.L.R. 521, 6 Cal. 96; Chandra Bhuiya, 20 Cal. 537; Ala Dya, 1906 P.R. 5, 4 Cr.L.J. 75 (76); Bandha Singh, 1881 A.W.N. 28. But see Contra—Mangat, 18 A.L.J. 744, 57 I.C. 82 (83), 21 Cr.L.J. 562. In this case it has been held that in a case of rioting committed in respect of a piece of land, the common object of both parties is the same, viz, taking possession of the land, though it is true that party A wants to take possession for party A, and party B wants to take possession for party B. The common object of both sides being the same, they can be tried together.

(2) Murder and robbery on one occasion and another act of robbery committed a few hours after in another place though close to the scene of the former offences, do not form parts of the same transaction—Mulua, 14 All. 502. So also, murder by four men, and grievous hurt by three of them caused upon a person who tried to prevent them from carrying off the dead body some time after the murder, are not offences committed in the same transaction—Nawab Singh, 1906 P.R. 10, 4 Cr.L.J. 285.

(3) Dacoities committed on different dates do not form parts of the same transaction—Datta, 1882 A.W.N. 180; Shanmuga, 8 M.L.T. 286, 11 Cr.L.J. 477. So also, six dacoities committed by a gang of dacoits at various places in the course of one night cannot form parts of one and the same transaction and cannot be tried together in one trial—Ganna, 35 Cr.L.J. 1048, 149 I.C. 959, 11 O.W.N. 731, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 325, 1934 Cr.C. 878. So also, offences under secs. 147 and 325, I. P. C., committed on one date, and offences under secs. 147, 323 and 342, I. P. C., committed on another date, cannot be tried together, as they were committed in different transactions—Puttoo Lal, 21 A.L.J. 820, 25 Cr.L.J. 446, A.I.R. 1924 All. 316.

(4) Where a person obtained a promissory note by cheating and on a subsequent date he went with another person and both cashed the note, the two persons could not be charged and tried together for both the offences, since the occurrence of each date formed a distinct transaction by itself—Hira Lal, 31 Cal. 1053.

(5) A charge of theft against one person and a charge against another person for rescuing the former from lawful custody cannot be tried together—Lilukdhari, 13 C.W.N. 804, 9 Cr.L.J. 147; Kutti, 11 Mad. 441. Similarly, one person committing an offence punishable under the Railway Act, and other persons rescuing the former from the custody of the Police while he was arrested, cannot be tried jointly—Govind Koeri, 29 Cal. 385, 6 C.W.N. 468. See also (17) below.

(6) The offences of rioting and murder committed by five persons, and the offence of concealing the dead body (of a person killed in the riot) committed by the 5th accused, cannot be tried jointly. The offence of the 5th accused (concealing the dead body) should be tried separately—Surendra, 40 C.L.J. 559, 26 Cr.L.J. 467, 85 I.C. 147, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 413. It is conceivable in some circumstances that the primary offence and the offence of destroying evidence of the primary offence are two unconnected matters, but it cannot possibly be said that they can in no circumstances be parts of the same transaction. Where the incidents are so closely connected in point of time that the acts which resulted in murder and those which resulted in the disposal of the dead body form parts of the same transaction, the two offences can be tried together and there would be no misjoinder of charges—Mirza Zahid Beg v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 All. 91, 1937 A.W.R. 1099, 1937 A.L.J. 1253, 1938 A.L.R. 180, 173 I.C. 838, 39 Cr.L.J. 364.

(7) A charge against five men of having committed a riot, and a charge against four of them of having committed criminal trespass on a different occasion cannot be tried together in the same trial—Chandi Singh, 14 Cal. 395.

(8) Two persons fabricating a kabuliyat, and two other persons fabricating another kabuliyat, the two sets of persons not having any community of interest, cannot be tried together—Kazi Safuddin v. Fazl Sheikh, 21 C.W.N. 756, 18 Cr.L.J. 833, 41 I.C. 657.

(9) Two acts of abduction separate and distinct, though of the same girl, committed by two sets of persons at different dates cannot be tried together—Esua, 1 C.L.J. 475, 2 Cr.L.J. 393. Two persons who have abducted a girl cannot be jointly tried with a third person who has taken no part in the abduction but proceeds to cheat, by false representation as to the caste of the girl, another person who buys the girl, there being no community of purpose nor continuity of time—Mangha Ram, 31 P.L.R. 811, 32

Cr.L.J. 139, 128 I.C. 313, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 896, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 41, 1930 Cr.C. 525 and 992. See Note 778 (20). See also Mozam Dajadar, in (18) below and Notes 777 and 778 (20).

(10) Where five dacoities were committed at five different places in the same district in the course of a week, but in these dacoities some persons were common and others were not, held that the dacoities were not committed in the same transaction merely because they were committed in the same district or because some of the offenders were common, and could not be tried jointly—Ram Sahas, 19 A.L.J. 610, 22 Cr.L.J. 397, A.I.R. 1921 All. 408 (409), 61 I.C. 525. See also (3) above.

(11) The author of a defamatory article, who is charged under sec. 500, I. P. C., and the printer of the article, who is charged under sec. 501, I. P. C., cannot be tried together when there is no evidence of conspiracy between them—Asutosh v. Purna Chandra, 50 Cal 159, 36 C.L.J. 287, 24 Cr.L.J. 206, 71 I.C. 670. A joint trial is not, however, illegal where the complaint was that the accused had all been acting together with the object of publishing and distributing the notice which was printed by some of them and the trial Court definitely found that the accused were acting together for this purpose—Parsotam, 36 Cr.L.J. 1296, 158 I.C. 39, A.I.R. 1935 All. 769, 1934 Cr.C. 822. See Diwan Singh in Note 745 and Note 723 under the heading "Defamation".

(12) Murder by one person, and intentional omission by another person (murderer's father) who discovered the murder to give information in respect of the murder, cannot be said to be offences committed in the same transaction. The latter offence cannot even be said to be an abetment of or attempt to commit the former offence under clause (b)—Ratan Singh, 19 A.L.J. 915, 23 Cr.L.J. 8, A.I.R. 1921 All. 151.

(13) Misappropriation by one accused of a sum of money collected from one person and misappropriation by another person of another sum of money collected from another person on another occasion, even though committed on the same date—Tilakdhari, 6 C.L.J. 757, 6 Cr.L.J. 442 (444). See also Ganesh Prasad, 34 Cr.L.J. 215, 141 I.C. 338, 11 Pat. 779, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 91, 1933 Cr.C. 212. But see Note 778 (7).

(14) The offence of receiving stolen property (sec. 413, I. P. C.), and the offence of belonging to a gang of thieves (sec. 401, I. P. C.)—Chhajju, 26 Cr.L.J. 1097, 88 I.C. 185, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 537. The offence of being a member of a gang of the kind described in sec. 401, I. P. C., and the offence of receiving stolen property from members of the gang on different occasions cannot be said to be committed in the same transaction—Arjan Das, 33 Cr.L.J. 584, 138 I.C. 424, 33 P.L.R. 736, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 486, 1932 Cr.C. 624, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 488.

(15) Harboursing different offenders by different persons not in the course of the same transaction and without any conspiracy between them—Sewak, 30 Cr.L.J. 214, 113 I.C. 721, 26 A.L.J. 623, A.I.R. 1928 All. 417.

(16) Offences under secs. 342, 452 and 323, I. P. C., committed by four persons on a particular day and offence committed by another under sec. 323, I. P. C., on the next day, upon the same complaint—Pattu, 34 Cr.L.J. 863, 144 I.C. 974, A.I.R. 1933 All. 354, 1933 Cr.C. 627, 1933 A.L.J. 1595.

(17) A thief and his rescuers, who are charged with robbing and hurt, cannot be tried together unless there is evidence to show that the rescuers were in collusion with the thief and stood by with the object of effecting a rescue—Raghu, 32 Cr.L.J. 9, 127 I.C. 571, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 159, 1930 Cr.C. 202, Ind. But where the man charged under sec. 224, I. P. C., escaped from lawful custody and the rescuers helped him to escape, the intention of all was to secure the release of the man in lawful custody. So the various acts which brought about the escape from lawful custody formed parts of the same transaction as contemplated by sec. 239 (d), Cr. P. C., and their joint trial was legal—Ajablal, 37 Cr.L.J. 240, 160 I.C. 177, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 20, 16 P.L.T. 748, 1936 Cr.C. 46, 15 Pat. 138, 2 B.R. 177, 8 R.P. 318.

considered to form part of the same transaction—Tamezkhan v Rajjaba'i, 31 C.W.N. 337, 45 C.L.J. 591, 28 Cr L.J. 347, 100 IC 827, AIR. 1927 Cal. 330

(25) The offence of the sale of opium without a license is quite dissociable from the offence of importing foreign opium into British India. Opium sold without a license need not necessarily be imported opium, and opium need not necessarily be imported for sale. The offence of the abetment of the importation of opium into British India by one accused can form no part of the transaction in respect of which a charge under sec. 9 (d), of the Opium Act is framed against others for selling half a tola of opium to a bogus purchaser. Consequently these offences are different offences not committed in the course of the same transaction and do not fall within the exception to sec. 233, Cr. P. C., laid down in sec. 239 (d) of the same Code. Hence their joint trial is illegal—Ghasiram v. Emp., 38 Cr L.J. 542, 168 IC 450, 9 RN 255, AIR 1937 Nag 188

(26) If both the owner and the driver of a motor vehicle had committed offences under the Motor Vehicles Act in respect of a single journey, there is no objection to the joint trial of those two, but it is very objectionable that several owners and several drivers should be tried in one trial for several offences committed on different dates—Kuzikkal Krishnan, 39 Cr L.J. 861 (862), 177 IC. 314, 1938 M.W.N. 822, 11 RM. 303, 47 MLW. 774, AIR. 1938 Mad. 743, (1938) 1 MLJ. 800.

(27) Where the charge which the accused were called upon to meet in the trial Court was that they were members of an unlawful assembly which had a common unlawful object and that as in the prosecution of that common object, various acts were committed by different individuals among the members of that assembly, all of them were liable by virtue of sec. 149, I P. C., in respect of all the acts committed by the various individuals and they were also charged in respect of individual acts said to have been committed by them which constituted offences under various sections of the Penal Code, such as secs 352, 323, 324 and 325, held that once it was found that the common unlawful object had not been established, it must be held that acts which were alleged to constitute offences under secs 352, 323, 324 and 325, I P C., had nothing in common between them and there would be no justification for a joint trial being held in respect of such acts which were committed not only by different accused but against different persons in different places—Aranashi Goundan v Palani Madari, AIR. 1939 Mad 406, 49 MLW 163, 1939 MWN 117, (1939) 1 MLJ 259, 1939 M.CrC 70, 40 Cr L.J. 855, 184 IC 134, 12 RM 413

780. Clause (e)—An offence which includes theft:—An offence which includes theft must mean an offence of which theft is a necessary and essential ingredient. An offence which may be the forerunner of a theft or which may form part of a larger transaction which might involve or include theft, cannot be said to be an offence which includes theft. That being so, persons charged under secs 457 and 460, I P C., are not persons charged with offences which include theft, and consequently, they cannot properly be tried with persons charged with receiving stolen property which was stolen in a theft which was committed as part of the transaction involving the other offences—Matturi, 37 Cr L.J. 794 (799), 163 IC 253, AIR 1936 All 337, 1936 ALJ. 518, 1936 Cr C. 401, 58 All 695, 1936 ALR 539, 8 RA 928. But the Lahore High Court has held that sec. 457, I P C., includes theft and a person accused of an offence under sec. 457, I P C., can, by virtue of sec. 239 (e), Cr P C., be legally charged and tried with persons accused of receiving or retaining stolen property—Nawab, 38 Cr L.J. 1061, 170 IC 303, AIR. 1937 Lah 463, 1 LR 1937 Lah 62, 39 PLR 278, 10 RL 100, distinguishing Sultan Ahmad v. Emp., 112 IC 584, AIR 1929 Lah 142, 29 Cr L.J. 1080 and holding Jagga v Emp., 51 PR 1905 (Cr), 3 Cr L.J. 76, 165 P.L.R. 1905 as out of date

Under the old law it was held that where A and B were charged with house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft, and C with having received some of the stolen articles on a certain day, and D with having received some other stolen articles on

(18) The joint trial of four accused, who were charged with offences of kidnapping and abduction, with the fifth accused who was charged for abduction only and with the sixth accused who was charged under sec. 368, I. P. C., is illegal—Mozam Dafadar, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 563, 144 I.C. 93, 34 Cr.L.J. 682, 1933 Cr.C. 940. See Note 777 and Note 778 (20) and Note 779 (9).

(19) The joint trial of 19 accused persons, who were merely poachers gathered in the same place at the same time for fishing in prohibited waters and were charged under secs 379 and 447, I. P. C., was illegal as the act of each accused might have been independent of the act of the other and there was nothing to show identity of purpose or common object—Salimullah, 50 Mad. 735, 27 Cr.L.J. 1381, 98 I.C. 597, 51 M.L.J. 692, 24 M.L.W. 948, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 177, 38 M.L.T. 37. Where 13 persons were jointly tried for an offence under sec. 26 (d) of the Indian Forest Act for having illicitly grazed their cattle in the reserved forest, held that there being no evidence on the side of the prosecution to prove that there was any prior consultation or community of purpose amongst the accused, their joint trial was illegal—Amolak, 34 Cr.L.J. 1175, 146 I.C. 116, 16 N.L.J. 196, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 368, 1933 Cr.C. 1552.

(20) Offences of forging a document by one person and its use by another in giving false evidence as to attestation in support of that document, cannot be tried together—Gunwant, A.I.R. 1916 Nag. 73, 38 I.C. 723, 18 Cr.L.J. 339, 13 N.L.R. 35. The argument used in this case would certainly be equally applicable if the scribe and the person for whose benefit it was forged and who gave evidence in support of it had been the same person as the forger of the document and its production in Court might be separated by years of time such as would militate against the continuity of purpose—Raika, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 149, (154), 1935 Cr.C. 834, 157 I.C. 618, 31 N.L.R. 38, 36 Cr.L.J. 1153.

(21) Three cases were instituted against the accused at the instance of three different complainants though the cases arose at or about the same time at the same place in a hat. The allegations against the accused were that they with others formed members of an unlawful assembly, committed rioting, individually caused hurt to the complainants and scattered and spoiled or took away foreign salt and other articles which the complainant exposed for sale. They were tried together in one trial. Held that such a joint trial was not allowable under the Cr. P. C., as the facts alleged did not form the same transaction and offences of hurt were distinct from each other, though the origin and preparations for the commission of the offences might be the same—Nanda Kumar, 11 C.W.N. 1128.

(22) After the Civil Court peons had been obstructed in executing the decree the accused, after consultation, proceeded to the kutchery of the decree-holder in order to beat his son and the tahsildar and beat the to the house of the judgment-debtor where together on various charges regarding both illegal as the second attack was clearly no further intention to obstruct the incidents of the first occurrence took there was then se of which the

(23) Three persons were jointly tried for cheating. The charges against them were that each of them had cheated a different person on a different date. Held that the joint trial was illegal as the three acts of cheating were wholly distinct and not committed in the course of the same transaction—Karn Singh, 12 Cr.L.J. 208, 10 I.C. 63, 122 P.L.R. 1911, 28 P.W.R. 1911 (Cr.).

(24) The accused were said to have attacked the complainant and his party on a certain date to deprive them of a large number of logs which they were removing from the forest. It was also alleged that on the next date they took away certain other logs from another part of the forest which also belonged to the complainant. They were charged with being members of an unlawful assembly and of committing theft on both these occasions. Held that the joint trial was illegal as these acts could not be considered to form part of the same transaction—Tamezkhan v. Rajjabali, 31 C.W.N. 237, 45 C.L.J. 591, 28 Cr.L.J. 347, 100 I.C. 827, A.I.R. 1927 Cal 330

(25) The offence of the sale of opium without a license is quite dissociable from the offence of importing foreign opium into British India. Opium sold without a license need not necessarily be imported opium, and opium need not necessarily be imported for sale. The offence of the abetment of the importation of opium into British India by one accused can form no part of the transaction in respect of which a charge under sec. 9 (d), of the Opium Act is framed against others for selling half a tola of opium to a bogus purchaser. Consequently these offences are different offences not committed in the course of the same transaction and do not fall within the exception to sec. 233, Cr. P. C., laid down in sec. 239 (d) of the same Code. Hence their joint trial is illegal—Ghasiram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 542, 168 I.C. 450, 9 R.N. 255, A.I.R. 1937 Nag 188

(26) If both the owner and the driver of a motor vehicle had committed offences under the Motor Vehicles Act in respect of a single journey, there is no objection to the joint trial of those two, but it is very objectionable that several owners and several drivers should be tried in one trial for several offences committed on different dates—Kuzikkal Krishnan, 39 Cr.L.J. 861 (862), 177 I.C. 314, 1938 M.W.N. 822, 11 R.M. 303, 47 M.L.W. 774, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 743, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 800.

(27) Where the charge which the accused were called upon to meet in the trial Court was that they were members of an unlawful assembly which had a common unlawful object and that as in the prosecution of that common object, various acts were committed by different individuals among the members of that assembly, all of them were liable by virtue of sec. 149, I. P. C., in respect of all the acts committed by the various individuals and they were also charged in respect of individual acts said to have been committed by them which constituted offences under various sections of the Penal Code, such as secs 352, 323, 324 and 325, held that once it was found that the common unlawful object had not been established, it must be held that acts which were alleged to constitute offences under secs 352, 323, 324 and 325, I. P. C., had nothing in common between them and there would be no justification for a joint trial being held in respect of such acts which were committed not only by different accused but against different persons in different places—Avanashi Goundan v. Palani Madari, A.I.R. 1939 Mad 406, 49 M.L.W. 163, 1939 M.W.N. 117, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 259, 1939 M.Cr.C. 70, 40 Cr.L.J. 855, 184 I.C. 134, 12 R.M. 413

780. Clause (e)—An offence which includes theft:—An offence which includes theft must mean an offence of which theft is a necessary and essential ingredient. An offence which may be the forerunner of a theft or which may form part of a larger transaction which might involve or include theft, cannot be said to be an offence which includes theft. That being so, persons charged under secs. 457 and 460, I. P. C., are not persons charged with offences which include theft, and consequently, they cannot properly be tried with persons charged with receiving stolen property which was stolen in a theft which was committed as part of the transaction involving the other offences—Maitkuri, 37 Cr.L.J. 794 (799), 163 I.C. 253, A.I.R. 1936 All 337, 1936 A.L.J. 518, 1936 Cr.C. 401, 58 All 695, 1936 A.L.R. 539, 8 R.A. 928. But the Lahore High Court has held that sec. 457, I. P. C., includes theft and a person accused of an offence under sec. 457, I. P. C., can, by virtue of sec. 239 (e), Cr. P. C., be legally charged and tried with persons accused of receiving or retaining stolen property—Nazab, 38 Cr.L.J. 1061, 170 I.C. 303, A.I.R. 1937 Lah 463, I.L.R. 1937 Lah 62, 39 P.L.R. 278, 10 R.L. 100, distinguishing Sultan Ahmad v. Emp., 112 I.C. 584, A.I.R. 1929 Lah 142, 29 Cr.L.J. 1080 and holding Jagga v. Emp., 51 P.R. 1905 (Cr.), 3 Cr.L.J. 76, 165 P.L.R. 1905 as out of date.

Under the old law it was held that where A and B were charged with house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft, and C with having received some of the stolen articles on a certain day, and D with having received some other stolen articles on another day, the joint trial of these persons would be illegal—Girdhari, 1882 A.W.N. 215. This ruling is now superseded by the new clause (e).

If one person has committed theft and another person has received the stolen property knowing it to be stolen, they can be tried jointly—Bhima, 38 All. 311, 14 A.L.J. 344; Anwar, 44 All. 276, 20 A.L.J. 96; Karu v. Ram Charan, 28 Cal. 10; Nga Po, 4 Bur.L.T. 263, 13 Cr.L.J. 59 (60); and it is not necessary that the receiving should take place simultaneously with the theft—Anwar, supra. Even an appreciable interval of time between the two acts which are otherwise connected does not always prevent them from being parts of the same series of connected events and from being tried together—Nga Nya, 14 Bur.L.R. 38, 6 Cr.L.J. 28; Nga Ton Pu, 2 L.B.R. 19. In Jethalal, 29 Bom. 449 and Ramrattan, 21 C.W.N. 1111, 19 Cr.L.J. 17, however, it was held that theft and receipt of stolen goods could not be said to be acts committed in the same transaction, because the thief and the receiver of goods were not associated in the series of acts which formed the same transaction from the very start; the one offence took place after the other was completed. In another Calcutta case also it was held that unless the theft and subsequent receipt were committed in pursuance of the same conspiracy, the two offences could not be said to be parts of the same transaction and the offenders could not be tried together—Ohl Bhusan, 46 Cal. 741, 23 C.W.N. 463, 29 C.L.J. 212. Under the present clause, however, it is not necessary that the two offences must be committed in the same transaction or in pursuance of the same conspiracy; all that is now required is that one offender should commit theft and the other offender should receive the stolen property.

Two persons accused of an offence ought not to be tried together if the prosecution cases against them are mutually exclusive—Azimuddin, 21 I.C. 163, 7 L.B.R. 68, 14 Cr.L.J. 563, 6 Bur.L.T. 191; Kyaw Dwe, 74 I.C. 78, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 67, 24 Cr.L.J. 750. The addition in 1923, subsequent to those decisions, in sub-sec. (e), sec. 239, Cr. P. C., does not appear to make any difference in this respect. Where there was no allegation that one accused was the thief and the other his assistant or receiver but the prosecution case was that either one was the thief or the other was the receiver of stolen property, they should not be jointly tried—Intaz Khan, 35 Cr.L.J. 1312, 151 I.C. 406, 1934 Cr.C. 887, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 193.

Where the accused was charged under secs. 215 and 411, I. P. C., in respect of a mare and was jointly tried with another person who was also charged under sec. 411, I. P. C., in respect of the same mare but there was no evidence whatsoever to show any connection between them, held that the joint trial was illegal and as it was not unlikely that it caused prejudice to the former, a retrial was ordered—Pirano Lakho, 35 Cr.L.J. 153, 146 I.C. 649, A.I.R. 1933 Sind. 352, 1933 Cr.C. 1180.

Dacoity, and receiving the property stolen in the dacoity may be tried together under this clause—Durga Prosad, 45 All. 223, 20 A.L.J. 981, 24 Cr.L.J. 149, 71 I.C. 501, A.I.R. 1923 All. 126; Tekri, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh. 108, 1935 O.L.R. 684, 36 Cr.L.J. 1467, 158 I.C. 913, 1935 O.W.N. 1153.

The offence of belonging to a gang of thieves (sec. 401, I. P. C.), is not an 'offence which includes theft' within the meaning of this clause, because the former offence is committed as soon as a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft is formed, and before any theft is actually committed by them. Therefore, an offence of belonging to a gang of thieves and an offence of receiving stolen property cannot be tried together, under this clause—Chhajju, 26 Cr.L.J. 1097, 88 I.C. 185, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 537. Offences described in secs. 457 and 436, I. P. C., with which a person is jointly charged cannot be tried along with offences under secs. 411 and 414, I. P. C., with which other persons are charged, because sec. 436 does not include theft or extortion, though sec. 457 does—Sultan Ahmed, 29 Cr.L.J. 1080, 112 I.C. 584, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 142.

Where the receiver from the receiver of stolen property was tried with the immediate receiver and the thieves and his defence was conflicting to that of the receiver of the stolen property, held that there was some possibility of prejudice to the receiver from the receiver of the stolen property in his joint trial with the other accused and that he should be tried in a separate trial from the beginning—Keshowdas, 35 Cr.L.J. 205, 146 I.C. 936, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 390, 1933 Cr.C. 1430. In this case the questions as to whether the provisions of sec. 239, cls. (e) and (f) refer to persons who are receivers from receivers and whether they may be jointly tried with the thieves, were left undecided. See also Dalsuk, 25 Cr.L.J. 807, 81 I.C. 343, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 248.

Two accused were charged with three offences of theft committed on three different dates. The third accused was charged under sec. 411, I. P. C., for having received property alleged to have been stolen on one of those dates and the fourth accused was charged under sec. 414, I. P. C., for having voluntarily assisted in disposing of the property alleged to have been stolen on another of those three dates. They were all tried jointly. Held that the trial was clearly illegal and the whole proceedings must be set aside—Fasih-ud-Din, 28 Cr.L.J. 459, 101 I.C. 491, 9 L.L.J. 100, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 737.

There is nothing to prevent charges being added against the thief or receiver in cases where the thief and the receiver are being jointly tried under the provisions of this sub-clause, provided that the addition of such charges against one or other of them is permitted by other sections of the Cr. P. Code—Mathuri, 37 Cr.L.J. 794 (801), 163 I.C. 253, A.I.R. 1936 All 337, 1936 A.L.J. 518, 1936 Cr.C. 401.

781. Clause (f):—The object of this clause and the meaning of the words "possession of which has been transferred by one offence" have been thus explained by Mr. Tonkinson during the debate in the Legislative Assembly "Take a concrete example A is a cattle-thief; two cattle are stolen; B is the dishonest receiver to whom A has passed on one of the cattle; C is the dishonest butcher who knows the cattle to have been stolen and assists in their concealment by slaughtering the other. Well, if A is present, A, B and C can all be tried together under clause (e). If A has disappeared, then this is not possible and the provisions of clause (f) are required. The possession of these cattle has been transferred by one offence, the original offence is theft. One person has later committed an offence under sec. 411, I. P. C., and another person has committed an offence under sec. 414, I. P. C. The two cattle were stolen at the same time, that is one offence"—Legislative Assembly Debates, 6th February 1923, page 1922. By this clause, the ruling in Kumudini Kanta, 28 Cal 104 is rendered obsolete.

If more than one offence of theft has been committed in respect of certain property which could be designated as stolen property within the meaning of sec. 410, I. P. C., then the persons in possession of such stolen property which has been secured by means of the commission of several offences of theft or robbery, etc., cannot be tried jointly under this clause—Bhaggan, 36 Cr.L.J. 602, 154 I.C. 901, 1935 O.W.N. 408, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 327, 1935 O.L.R. 210. But see Supdt. & Rem. of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Raghulal, cited in Note 777.

The only offences mentioned in this clause are offences under secs. 411 and 414, I. P. C.; and the provisions of this clause cannot be extended by analogy to a trial of persons accused of offences other than those specifically mentioned herein. Therefore, the joint trial of two accused both charged under sec. 412, I. P. C., is illegal—Behari, 12 O.L.J. 339, 26 Cr.L.J. 1291, 89 I.C. 155.

Receivers of property stolen at one theft can be tried jointly, even though the stolen articles were received by them at different times—Guljama, 6 Pat 583, 28 Cr.L.J. 962, 105 I.C. 674, A.I.R. 1928 Pat 38; Shakur, 36 Cr.L.J. 1206, 157 I.C. 562, 1935 O.W.N. 911; Lakha Amra, 34 Bom.L.R. 301, Ind. Rul. 1932 Bom. 231, 137 I.C. 146, 33 Cr.L.J. 294, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 201, 1932 Bom. 305 (306). There is an express direction in the Code as to which persons may be tried jointly if this can be done without prejudice and in the absence of any evidence bringing the case under the provisions of sec. 239 (f), Cr. P. C., the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try those persons jointly. The disregard of an express provision of law as to the mode of trial is not a mere irregularity such as can be remedied by sec. 537, Cr. P. Code. Where, therefore, there is no proof that the stolen articles were the proceeds of the same theft, persons charged with dishonestly receiving and retaining them cannot be jointly tried—Ram Khelwan Kahar v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 739, 176 I.C. 525, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 525, 42 C.W.N. 729, 11 R.C. 113. But see Jethalal, 29 Bom. 449, 2 Cr.L.J. 480, 7 Bom.L.R. 527, 1932 Cr.C. 305 (306). The following cases may arise when stolen property is found in the possession of different receivers; (a) there may be one theft and the several receivers may have received the property jointly, i.e., at one and the same time; (b) there may be one theft and the several receivers may have received the property at different times; (c) there may be two or more thefts and the several receivers may have received the property jointly; (d) there may be two or more thefts and the several receivers may have received the property at different times. Now, in cases (a) and (c) a joint trial is clearly permissible, because the property was received jointly, whether there was one or more than one theft. In case (d), a joint trial is illegal, because there is no community of purpose between the receivers. In case (b) a joint trial is permitted by clause (f) of sec. 239. This clause practically declares that the different acts of receipts are one and the same transaction, if the transfer of possession from the owner to the thief was made by one and the same act (i.e., if the articles were stolen at one theft). The fact that the articles were received by the receivers at different times is immaterial; the words "possession of which has been transferred by one offence" refer to the transfer of possession from the true owner to the thief and not to the transfer of possession from the thief to the receivers"—per Mullick, J., in Guljanja, supra. See Note 746.

Where six cattle were stolen from a grazing ground of which two were found in the accused's possession, he should not be charged, tried and convicted in two separate trials, merely because the two bullocks found in his possession belong to two separate owners—Nga Po E, A.I.R. 1936 Rang 94, 37 Cr.L.J. 530, 162 I.C. 137, 1936 Cr.C. 118.

782. Clause (g):—A person who passes counterfeit coins and another who is in possession of them can be tried jointly—Prasanna, 31 Cal 1007. A was charged under sec. 240, I. P. C., for uttering a counterfeit coin at Jullundur, B under sec. 243, I. P. C., for being in possession of counterfeit coins at Jullundur knowing them to be counterfeits of King's coin, and C, who was in Delhi, under secs. 240, 243 and 109, I. P. Code. There was no evidence of conspiracy or as to the passing of coins by C. Held that under these circumstances the offences for which these three persons were tried together did not form the same transaction and their joint trial was illegal—Abdul Hamid, 34 Cr.L.J. 1253, 146 I.C. 261, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 228, 1933 Cr.C. 348.

783. Separate trial:—A joint trial is not compulsory under this section; the Magistrate has a discretion to proceed jointly or separately against the accused persons—Govinda, 16 N.L.R. 9, 21 Cr.L.J. 769. Though the offences are committed in the same transaction, still it is a question for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to say whether the accused should be tried together or separately—Charu Chandra, 38 C.L.J. 309, 25 Cr.L.J. 294, 76 I.C. 966. This section gives a judicial discretion to the Court to try the accused persons jointly or separately, and the manner in which the discretion should be exercised must depend upon the facts of each case—Dwarka, 19 C.W.N. 121, 16 Cr.L.J. 348. Although a joint trial is allowed under the circumstances specified in this section, still it is the duty of the Magistrate to see that the accused are not prejudiced thereby. No joinder of charges should be allowed if it bewilders any of the accused in his defence or unduly prejudices him—Ghulam, 1 S.L.R. 73, 8 Cr.L.J. 191; Pul'sanki, 5 Mad. 20; Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 253, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 341, 85 I.C. 231, 26 Cr.L.J. 487, 29 C.W.N. 173; Rash Behari Shaw, A.I.R. 1936 Cal 753 (759), 41 C.W.N. 225, 1936 Cr.C. 1043. Thus, a number of murders and an offence of arson were committed. Though all the accused were present, there was evidence against some of them only as regards those offences. There was evidence against all the accused together only of conspiracy to commit murder. All the accused were charged with conspiracy, murder and arson, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty against all the accused on all the charges. Held that the jury were embarrassed and the accused were prejudiced in their defence—Alimuddi, supra. If the accused persons have acted independently and have made separate defences, the joint trial is illegal—Porasu Nayako, 2 Weir 303 (304).

Whenever the applicability of sec. 239 is doubtful, it is better that the accused should be tried separately.—Samiullah, 51 M.L.J. 692, 27 Cr.L.J. 1381

A separate trial is the rule, and joint trial is the exception, and it is for the prosecution to justify a joint trial.—Durga Prasad, 45 All 223 (224), 20 A.L.J. 981.

See also Note 774 under the heading "Case."

783A. Last Para—Applicability of section 234 to section 239:—

In several cases it has been held that the words "the former part of this chapter" occurring at the end of this section mean the part prior to the part headed "Joinder of charges," i.e., the part under the heading "Form of charges" (secs 221–232); therefore sec. 234 will not control the provisions of sec. 239.—Bishambhar, 2 O.W.N. 760, 90 I.C. 706, 26 Cr.L.J. 1602; Po Mya, 7 L.B.R. 272, 16 Cr.L.J. 44. Sections 234 and 239 are mutually exclusive. Section 239 as amended in 1923 contains a special provision in clause (c) that a joint trial is permitted to persons accused of more than one offence of the same kind (within the meaning of sec. 234) committed by them jointly within the period of 12 months. Obviously therefore when more persons than one are tried jointly, reference cannot be made to the provisions of the Code previous to sec. 239 (i.e., secs. 234 to 238). If that had been the intention, it would not have been necessary to state definitely that persons accused of more than one offence of the same kind within the meaning of sec. 234 committed by them jointly within 12 months may be tried together. Section 239 is self-contained and independent; the provisions of this section are to be considered exclusively without the help of secs 234 to 238.—Janeshwar Das, 51 All 544, 30 Cr.L.J. 687 (688, 689), 1929 A.L.J. 329, A.I.R. 1929 All. 202, 116 I.C. 789, following Ram Prasad, 19 A.L.J. 195, 22 Cr.L.J. 657, and Sheo Saran, 32 All 219. See also Babulal Choukhani v. King-Emp., in Note 778. But in Shanker, 11 A.L.J. 188, 14 Cr.L.J. 116 (117), it has been held that sec. 239 is governed by secs. 234 and 235. Such a view has also been taken in Nirajan, 35 Cr.L.J. 1224, 150 I.C. 1140, 1934 A.L.J. 658, A.I.R. 1934 All. 811. See also Note 751.

240. When a charge containing more heads than one is framed against the same person, and when a conviction has been had on one or more of them, the complainant, or the officer conducting the prosecution, may, with the consent of the Court, withdraw the remaining charge or charges, or the Court of its own accord may stay the inquiry into, or trial of, such charge or charges. Such withdrawal shall have the effect of an acquittal on such charge or charges, unless the conviction be set aside, in which case the said Court (subject to the order of the Court setting aside the conviction) may proceed with the inquiry into or trial of the charge or charges so withdrawn.

785. Scope of section:—This section applies where the accused is charged under several distinct heads for several distinct offences and not where several formal charges are drawn up against him.—Amir Chand, 1889 P.R. 21. Where the offence is one, but several charges are formally drawn up because the offence falls under several definitions (sec. 235 sub-sec. 2) or because there is doubt as to which offence was committed (sec. 236), this section does not apply, and the conviction of the accused on one of the charges necessarily makes the other charges nugatory.

Again, this section applies only to charges framed in the same case, and not to separate charges of distinct offences tried separately; and therefore the prosecution cannot, on conviction of the accused in one case, withdraw a charge against the accused in another case.—Sadia, Ratanlal 362; Gorinda, Ratanlal 977 (978).

This section applies when a conviction has been on one or more of the charges; but if the jury has found the accused guilty of all the charges, the Judge cannot convict the accused on one charge and drop the others; but he should convict on all the charges and pass concurrent sentences—Nadharya, Ratanlal 288. This case shows that a charge cannot be withdrawn after the accused has been tried on it and found guilty.

It is better to have too many charges than too few and once a charge has been framed, it should not be dropped until the conclusion of the trial unless on the face of it, it is wholly inappropriate or the trial is open to attack on the ground of misjoinder or multifariousness of charges. Where several accused persons were committed to the Court of Session, the first five under secs. 449, 396 and 302, I. P. C., the sixth and seventh under sec. 414, I. P. C., and the fourth also under sec. 75, I. P. C., and, when the case came before the Sessions Judge for hearing, he framed a new charge under secs. 302 and 34, I. P. C., against the first five accused, excluded from the trial the charge against the sixth and seventh accused reserving their case for a separate trial and did neither cancel nor take up for trial the charges under secs. 449 and 396, I. P. C., against the first five accused, held that the Sessions Judge ought to have recorded some order in respect of these charges and should not have left them in the air. He ought to have given reasons for not trying them; and he was not competent (under sec. 215) to quash the commitment, though he could (under sec. 240) stay the trial of some charges or allow them to be withdrawn on conviction being had on the murder charge: in that case the consequences set forth in sec. 240 would follow in the event of the conviction being set aside—Sadasibo, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 35 (36), 18 Pat. 82, 1938 P.W.N. 754, 19 P.L.T. 801, 178 I.C. 130, 39 Cr.L.J. 997, 11 R.P. 215, 5 B.R. 53.

High Court's power to direct withdrawal :—Where the accused was charged with 10 offences of criminal breach of trust, in respect of 10 small sums, and the Sessions Judge convicted the accused on three only of the charges, the High Court on appeal approved of the Sessions Judge's action, and directed that no further proceedings should be taken against the accused in respect of the other offences—Basiruddin, 9 C.L.J. 257, 4 I.C. 48, 10 Cr.L.J. 482. The word 'Court' in this section does not mean only the trial Court, but includes every grade of Court including the Court of Revision. If the complainant withdraws the application for revision, the withdrawal amounts to a withdrawal of the charge, and the accused shall be acquitted—Ghamandi v. Babu Lal, 27 A.L.J. 1056, 1929 Cr.C. 491, A.I.R. 1929 All. 899, 119 I.C. 575, 30 Cr.L.J. 1089, 51 All. 977.

CHAPTER XX.

OF THE TRIAL OF SUMMONS-CASES BY MAGISTRATES.

786. This chapter deals only with the trial of summons cases; a warrant case cannot be tried under this chapter. If, however, a warrant case is joined with a summons-case, e.g., where two charges arising out of the same transaction are made against an accused person, one of which is a summons-case and the other a warrant case, the procedure should be as in a warrant case—Raj Narain v. Lala Zamoli, 11 Cal. 91; Sobhanaran, 39 Mad. 503; Raghavalu v. Singaram, 41 Mad. 727. But in such a case if the warrant case is not proved, the Magistrate may proceed with the summons-case according to the procedure laid down in this chapter and not under Chapter XXI—Papadu, 7 Mad. 454. See Notes 795 and 820.

Procedure in summons-cases.

241. The following procedure shall be observed by Magistrates in the trial of summons-cases,

242. When the accused appears or is brought before the Magistrate, the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked if he has any cause to show why he should not be convicted; but it shall not be necessary to frame a formal charge.

787. Particulars shall be stated to accused:—Omission to state to the accused the particulars of the offence with which he is charged amounts to an illegality vitiating the trial, and not a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537—Gopal Krishna v. Mati Lal, 54 Cal. 359, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 196, 44 C.L.J. 575, 99 I.C. 411, 31 C.W.N. 167, 28 Cr.L.J. 155; Ashita Ranjan, 48 C.L.J. 92; Bhubneshwar Prasad, infra. But see Lahani v. Ghosal, 33 Cr.L.J. 938, 140 I.C. 113, 28 N.L.R. 163, Ind. Rul. 1932 Nag. 134, 1932 Cr.C. 678, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 127 where it has held that the omission was a mere irregularity cured by secs. 535 and 537, Cr. P. C., when there is no suggestion of any failure of justice having been thereby occasioned. See also Damdoo v. Harba, 28 Cr.L.J. 511, 101 I.C. 895, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 210. Sec. 242 does not say that the Magistrate shall make a record of what he stated to the accused in explaining the offence. It is sufficient if the proceedings show that he had orally explained to the accused what the offence was and asked him to show cause. Section 242 does not expressly state that a note should be made. Where no note was made, it is a mere irregularity, cured by secs. 535 and 537, Cr. P. C.—Jagannath, 36 Cr.L.J. 361, 153 I.C. 427, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 258, 1934 Cr.C. 1297. It is not necessary to record the whole of the conversation that passed between the Magistrate and the accused but there must be some indication in the record as to what has been done. Where from the order sheet it appears that only the second part of this section has been complied with, if at all, that is, the accused was asked if he pleaded guilty to the charge or not and the accused pleaded not guilty and there is nothing in the record to indicate that the substance of the charge was explained to the accused which is required by the first part of this section, there has been no compliance with the provisions of this section although the Magistrate in his explanation says that the particulars of the offence were stated to the accused—Bhubneshwar Prasad, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 501, 38 Cr.L.J. 22, 165 I.C. 844, 17 P.L.T. 609, 1936 Cr.C. 823, 3 B.R. 88, 9 R.P. 223. Where the Magistrate did not explain to the accused the particulars of the offence of which he was accused, but merely told him that he was accused of an offence under sec. 19 of the Burma Village Act, the trial was illegal—Nga Sein, (1922) 4 U.B.R. 127, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 132.

In a summons-case omission to explain the particulars of an offence to the accused under sec. 242, Cr. P. C., and to ask him to show cause at that stage is not (in cases in which the accused is defended and pleads not guilty) an illegality vitiating the trial provided of course that no prejudice can be shown to have been caused to the accused and that the accused has in due course been examined under sec. 342, Cr. P. C. This does not mean that it does not matter whether the provisions of sec. 242 are complied with or not; they ought to be complied with and Magistrates should take care that the record on its face establishes that there has been a full compliance with the law only because no Magistrate can tell what will be the opinion of a superior Court as to whether the accused has been prejudiced by the omission in the particular case—Sukhdeo Prasad v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 55 (57), 16 Pat. 97, 18 P.L.T. 370, 1937 P.W.N. 353, 173 I.C. 189, 39 Cr.L.J. 321, 4 B.R. 240.

Where under sec. 242, Cr. P. C., the particulars of the offence of which the petitioner was accused were thus stated "Cruelty to a milch buffalo by performing phooka upon it (by thrusting hand in the private part of the animal) at the time of milking. . . . Ill-treating a she-buffalo by cruelty and mercilessly beating and otherwise ill-treating . . ." and the Magistrate came to the conclusion that it was not proved that the petitioner actually performed phooka or otherwise ill-treated the animal but found that the petitioner was the owner of the animal and that while it was in his possession and under his control phooka was performed upon it and convicted him under sec. 6 of the Bengal Cruelty to Animals Act (I of 1920), held that in the interest of justice it is necessary that the accused should be retried for the offence of which he has been convicted and that in that trial the accusation under sec. 242, Cr. P. C., should make it clear that he is called upon to show cause why he should not be convicted by reason of the fact that he is the owner of the animal upon which the phooka was performed—Dargahi Mah v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 398.

788. Charge:—Although it is not necessary to frame a formal charge in a summons-case, still the provisions of sec. 233 as to joinder of charges apply to summons-cases as well; therefore, a joint trial and conviction of several accused for several distinct offences in a summons-case is illegal under sec. 233—San Dun, 3 L.B.R. 52, 2 Cr.L.J. 739 (744) (F.B.). See also Upendra Nath, 41 Cal. 694 cited in Note 744 under sec. 233. In fact, the concluding words of this section ("it shall not be necessary to frame a formal charge") appear to contemplate that in a summons trial there is a charge of an offence, although it is not necessary to embody it in writing in accordance with the provisions of secs 221, 222 and 223—San Dun, supra. The intimation to the accused of the particulars of the offence takes the place of a formal charge—Manna, 9 N.L.R. 42, 14 Cr.L.J. 230 (231).

Although it is not incumbent upon a Magistrate to frame a charge against an accused in a case which is being tried as a summons-case, it would be proper if the Magistrate actually frames a charge or summarises the ingredients of the offence (and reads them over to the accused before the trial begins) which the accused are required to meet in the case, especially in a prosecution under the Sugar Excise Duty Act (XIV of 1934) which is of a very recent date—Behari Ram v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 610 (612), 19 P.L.T. 415, 1938 P.W.N. 426, 175 I.C. 531, 4 B.R. 602, 10 R.P. 634, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 440.

When a summons-case is tried jointly with a warrant case, the procedure of a warrant case has to be followed, and a charge has to be drawn up not only for the warrant case but the summons case also. Where, therefore, the accused was summoned for offences under secs 143 and 379, I. P. C., but only a charge for an offence under sec. 379, I. P. C., was drawn up, a conviction under sec. 143 was set aside for the absence of a charge under that section—Hossein v. Kalu, 29 Cal. 481 (482).

243. If the accused admits that he has committed the offence of which he is accused, his admission shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by him; and, if he shows no sufficient cause why he should not be convicted, the Magistrate may convict him accordingly.

789. Change—Conviction on plea:—The word 'may' has been substituted for the word 'shall,' by sec. 66 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Under the old law the Magistrate was bound to convict the accused if the latter pleaded guilty and if there was nothing to show that the plea was not unreserved or voluntary—Aslam, 8 S.L.R. 213, 16 Cr.L.J. 283. If the accused pleaded guilty, the Magistrate was bound to convict him; he had no power to discharge the accused on the ground that his criminal intention was wanting—Nataraja, 2 Cr. L.J. 468 (469), U.B.R. 1905 Cr.P.C. 37.

Under the present amendment, the Magistrate is no longer bound to convict the accused on his own plea. "This amendment gives the Magistrate a discretion, as to convicting an accused who pleads guilty in a summons case, and the Court is thus able to refuse to accept a plea of guilty which it believes to be untrue."—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

The Magistrate should not record one admission for a number of accused persons whereas the section requires the words of each as nearly as possible to be recorded—Tejmal, 34 Cr.L.J. 67 (68), 140 I.C. 697, 26 S.L.R. 345, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 211, 1932 Cr.C. 902, Ind Rul. 1933 Sind 16

In an ordinary criminal case, especially in a summons case, it is open to a Court to accept and act upon a plea of guilty. It would be contrary to commonsense and to the universal practice if a Court were not to act upon that plea, and a Court cannot be compelled, after a plea of guilty which it is willing to accept, to waste public time over an elaborate inquiry—Kishan Narain, 50 All. 599, 30 Cr.L.J. 6 (7).

Sections 243 and 244:—The Court has got discretion to accept the plea of guilty and convict the accused, or not to accept it. If he does not accept the plea, he must satisfy himself that the evidence which he hears (under sec. 244) justifies conviction, or else he should record an order of acquittal. If he hears evidence, and it does not prove the facts of the charge, it is not open to him to go back and accept the plea of guilty and convict the accused. On the other hand, if the Court decides to accept the plea of guilty under sec. 243 and convict, he may call evidence to acquaint himself with the facts to enable him to arrive at a proper conclusion as to the sentence to be passed. But this is a different thing from hearing evidence to see whether the accused was guilty or not—Janardan Kashnath, 33 Bom.L.R. 340, 32 Cr.L.J. 719 (720), 131 I.C. 473, 1931 Cr.C. 339, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 195 (F.B.) And so, where it is not clear from the record whether the plea of guilty was accepted by the Court or not, and the Magistrate recorded some evidence, and in the result found the accused guilty and convicted him, there is no doubt that the Magistrate did not accept the plea of guilty, and proceeded under secs 244 and 245—Ibid (at p 721)

790. Admission of accused:—Where the accused said that he committed the act on account of ignorance and begged to be excused, held that this did not amount to an admission that he had committed an offence, and a conviction based thereon was wrong—Gulam Raza, 25 Cr.L.J. 707, A.I.R. 1925 Lah 153, 81 I.C. 195. Admissions of truth of the allegations on which a charge is based cannot legally amount to an admission on the part of accused that he has committed the offence of which he is accused—Kanhayalal, 32 Cr.L.J. 1132, 134 I.C. 261, 14 N.L.J. 39, 1931 Cr.C. 452, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 100

Courts should not be astute to construe technical words inadvertently used by accused persons not trained to the law against them, but should look to the statement as a whole and place a fair and liberal construction on it after giving the benefit of every reasonable doubt to the accused—Homnaram, 35 Cr.L.J. 696, 148 I.C. 541, 1934 Cr.C. 272, A.I.R. 1934 Nag 65. See also Gulabsha, 17 N.L.J. 250

Where the personal attendance of the accused has been dispensed with and permission has been given to him under sec 205 to appear by pleader, the latter can, under secs 242 and 243, make the necessary answers and plead guilty or not guilty on behalf of the accused—Dorabshah, 50 Bom 250, 27 Cr.L.J. 440 (see this case cited in Note 691 under sec. 205). But where the personal attendance of the accused has not been dispensed with and he is present in Court, the Magistrate must call upon the accused to say with his own lips whether he admits or denies the truth of the complaint; a plea of guilty made by the pleader on behalf of the accused cannot be acted upon—Sursing, 6 Bom.L.R. 861, 1 Cr.L.J. 939, Municipal Board v Tulshi Ram, 1 O.W.N. 495, 26 Cr.L.J. 179.

The Legislature requires that the admission shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by the accused, because the right of appeal depends upon whether he really pleaded guilty or not—Md Hanif, 1889 A.W.N. 81. See also Ganes v. Cor. of Calcutta, 34 Cr.L.J. 250, 141 I.C. 834, 36 C.W.N. 182, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 117, 1933 Cr.C. 144, Ind Rul 1933 Cal 207. Where an accused person makes an exculpatory statement before the framing of a charge, the Magistrate should take down the plea in the form of question and answer, and in the exact words used by the accused in answer to the charge—Abdul Hosein, 5 Bom.L.R. 999. Recording one admission for a number of accused persons is bad. The admission of each person should be separately recorded, and in his own words—Tejmal, 26 S.L.R. 345, 1932 Cr.C. 902 (903), 140 I.C. 697, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 211.

The admission of the accused should be recorded at once, at the time of the trial, and not afterwards from the rough notes nor from the Magistrate's memory—Eragadu, 15 Mad 83.

244. (1) If the Magistrate does not convict the accused

Procedure when no under the preceding section, or if the such admission is made. accused does not make such admission, the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any), and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution, and also to hear the accused and take all such evidence as he produces in his defence:

Provided that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court.

(2) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, on the application of the complainant or accused, issue process to compel the attendance of any witness or the production of any document or other thing.

(2) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, on the application of the complainant or accused, issue a summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce any document or other thing.

(3) The Magistrate may, before summoning any witness on such application, require that his reasonable expenses, incurred in attending for the purposes of the trial, be deposited in Court.

Change:—This section has been amended by section 67 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1932. The italicised words at the beginning of the section have been added as consequential to the amendment made in sec. 243. The proviso has been introduced "to provide for the case where a complaint has been made by a Court, and we have made a similar amendment in section 252"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922). In sub-sec. (2) the word 'summons' has been substituted for 'process'; for reasons see Note 792 below.

791. Magistrate's duty to hear complainant, witnesses, etc.:—

If a Magistrate adopts the procedure prescribed by this section on the footing that there was no admission of guilty on the part of the accused person, the Magistrate is not competent to take a further plea of guilty from the accused person, and relieve himself of the duty of examining the prosecution witnesses—Lalji Ram, A.I.R. 1928 Cal 243 (244). If the accused does not admit the offence, the Magistrate is bound to hear the complainant and his witnesses; and he is not competent to acquit the accused without taking the evidence in support of the prosecution—Kesri v. Muhammad Bakhsh, 18 All. 221 (223); Varadarajulu, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 25, 1931 Cr.C. 5, 1931 M.W.N. 1050, 35 M.L.W. 140, 33 Cr.L.J. 274, 136 I.C. 314. If the complainant's witnesses have been summoned, the Magistrate is not at liberty to stop the case whenever he likes, but is bound to examine those witnesses: he is not entitled to acquit the accused on a consideration of the complainant's statement alone—Sinnai Goundan, 20 Mad 383. If the complainant declines to be examined, it is the duty of the Magistrate to proceed to take the evidence of his other witnesses before dismissing the complaint, although, in any event, a strong preliminary presumption against the truth of the complainant's case would arise from his continuous refusal to allow himself to be examined. An order of acquittal passed under sec. 245 (1) without so examining the other witnesses is a wrong order—Damdoo v. Harba, 28 Cr.L.J. 511 (Nag), 101 I.C. 895.

This section merely says that the Magistrate shall hear the complainant; it does say that the complainant is to be examined. Non-examination of the complainant does not vitiate the proceedings—Sarafdi, 24 C.W.N. 199 (200). But see Rex v. Krishnan in Note 822.

Moreover, the Magistrate is bound to hear the accused and his witnesses, i.e., all the witnesses that are produced by the accused. The Magistrate has no discretion in this matter—Ameer Chand, 13 W.R. 63. The parties have an undoubted right to examine their witnesses and the Magistrate can curtail the number of witnesses only on the ground that they are unnecessary and that their examination will delay and probably defeat the ends of justice—Biswanath v. Shivanand, 2 P.L.T. 330, 61 I.C. 718, 22 Cr.L.J. 430.

There has been no compliance with the provision of sec. 244, Cr. P. C., where the Magistrate has in effect found the accused guilty upon the report of an Honorary Magistrate as to what the accused had told him—Munshi Mian, 30 Cr.L.J. 517, 115 I.C. 690, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat 242, 10 P.L.T. 523, AIR 1929 Pat. 406.

The Magistrate must base his decision on the evidence produced on either side in Court; he cannot rely on statements made to him out of Court—Sahadeb, 14 Bom. 572. The Magistrate should not decide a case on the special oath of the complainant at the suggestion of the accused's father—Tirloki, 28 Cr.L.J. 301, 100 I.C. 381, AIR 1927 All 742.

Cross-examination—Sec 244 does not contain any express provision for cross-examination. Cross-examination must certainly be allowed at some stage, and as no express provision is made for exercising this right in the trial of summons case, the right is exercisable under sec 244, Cr. P. C.—Lachmi Narain, AIR 1931 All. 621 (623), 1931 Cr.C 973, 1932 A.L.J. 5. In summons cases the accused has no right to postpone the cross-examination of any prosecution witness, as in the case of trial of a warrant case. But if the cross-examination was postponed in accordance with the direction of the Magistrate, he is bound to give further opportunity to the accused to cross-examine the witness. Otherwise the evidence of such witness will not be legally admissible—Parmeshwar, 3 P.L.T. 347, 23 Cr.L.J. 440, AIR 1922 Pat. 296.

792. Issue of summons:—If the complainant or the accused thinks that any witness is not likely to appear without summons, he should apply beforehand to the Magistrate for summons to enforce his attendance—Chedee Koongra, 14 W.R. 76. When such application is made, the Magistrate must either grant or refuse the application; he cannot simply 'file' it—Bhomar v. Digambar, 6 C.W.N. 548 (549). No doubt, under this section, the Magistrate has the discretion to refuse to summon defence witnesses but it cannot be held that such an application can be completely ignored—Vidya Parkash v. Emp., AIR 1910 Lah 58, 41 P.L.R. 804, 41 Cr.L.J. 340, 186 I.C. 575.

The Magistrate has a discretion to refuse to summon any of the witnesses named by the accused—Mangal, 36 All. 13 (15). Where a complainant mentioned the name of several witnesses but could only produce two of them, the Magistrate could decide the case on the evidence of the two witnesses alone—Notobar, 15 W.R. 87; and was not bound to issue summons to the other witnesses—Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App 29.

The old sub-section (2) contained the words "process to compel the attendance of any witness". And so, where a summons was already issued to a witness but he did not appear in obedience to the summons, it was held under the old law that the Magistrate was bound to issue further process (warrant or fresh summons) against that witness to compel his attendance, and had no discretion to refuse to issue further process—Daulat v. Brinda, 30 Cal. 121 (122); Bhomar v. Digambar, 6 C.W.N. 548.

(550). Those words have now been substituted by the words 'a summons to any witness directing him to attend, etc.' "This, we think, will make section 90 clearly applicable, which is, in our opinion, all that is required"—Report of the Select Committee (1916).

Under the present section, evidently the Magistrate cannot compel a witness to appear before him, if the witness refuses to appear in obedience to the summons. The Magistrate is not bound to issue fresh summons; it is in his discretion to issue fresh summons if he likes, but this section does not make it obligatory on him to do so. If the witness does not appear, he may be liable for disobedience of the summons, but the complainant or accused is not entitled to ask the Court as a matter of right to compel the attendance of any witness who does not care to attend in obedience to the summons—Selvamuthu v. Chinnappan, 27 Cr.L.J. 76, 91 I.C. 252, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 361, distinguishing Daulat v. Brinda, 30 Cal 121 on the basis of the changes introduced in sub-clause (2) of this section. But the principles laid down in Daulat v. Brinda were quoted with approval and were followed in Ayab Lal Rai v. Bhagawan Sahu, 34 Cr.L.J. 1203, 146 I.C. 54, 14 P.L.T. 453, 1933 Cr.C. 1038, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 494 without any discussion of the effect of the changes in sub-sec. (2) and without considering the decision arrived at in Selvamuthu v. Chinnappan, supra.

The principle of sec. 257, Cr. P. C., applies to a summons case. When the Magistrate summoned prosecution witnesses as defence witnesses, he should allow the defence to cross-examine them who were in Court without dictating the terms upon which the examination of those witnesses should be conducted—Rameshwar, 29 Cr.L.J. 308, 107 I.C. 846, A.I.R. 1928 Pat 253.

793. Sub-section (3)—Payment of process fee:—If the complainant fails to deposit fees for summoning witnesses, the Magistrate must deal with the case on such evidence as he may have before him, but should not dismiss the complaint—Korapulu v. Monappa, 5 Mad. 160.

If the accused fails to deposit process fees, the Magistrate may refuse to issue summons, but this order of refusal must be sparingly passed; and such order would be improper in a case where the accused is unable or unwilling to deposit the money, and the result is that he is convicted without his witnesses being heard, especially if the case is one in which a severe sentence is passed—Qadu, 7 P.R. 1898.

245. (1) If the Magistrate upon taking the evidence referred to in section 244 and such further evidence (if any) as he may, of his own motion, cause to be produced, and (if he thinks fit) examining the accused, finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal.

(2) Where the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 349 or section 562, he shall, if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence upon him according to law.

Change:—The italicised words in sub-section (2) have been added by sec. 68 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. This amendment is merely one of drafting. A similar amendment has been made in sec. 258 (2) and sec. 306 (2).

794. Acquittal—Discharge:—A Magistrate who does not find the accused guilty, must record an order of acquittal. No order of discharge can be passed under this section—Amir Khan, 1900 P.R. 19; Nataraja, 2 Cr.L.J. 468 (469). Even if he styles his order as an order of discharge, the discharge will amount to an acquittal, for no other order is contemplated in summons cases. That being so, the Sessions Judge has no power to take action under sec 437 (now sec 436) against a person alleged to be discharged—Venkataramayyer, 8 M.L.T. 78, 11 Cr.L.J. 360, 6 I.C. 385

If, on the contrary, the Magistrate tried a warrant case as a summons case without framing a charge, dismissed the case and passed an order of acquittal, the so-called acquittal would operate as a discharge under sec. 253, so that the District Magistrate could make an order for further inquiry under sec. 437 (now sec 436)—Jadu, 1886 A.W.N. 260

Compensation to accused :—When the Magistrate acquits an accused under this section on the ground that the complaint was vexatious, he can under sec 250 direct the complainant to pay compensation to the accused—Pandu, 10 Bom 199; Number v. Ambu, 5 Mad. 381. Even, if the Magistrate tries a warrant case as a summons case and acquits the accused, he can award compensation.

"Shall pass sentence" —If the Magistrate convicts the accused, he is bound to pass some sentence (at least a nominal one)—Anonymous, 2 Weir 305 (306), 4 M.H.C.R. App. 66; Hanmant, 2 Bom L.R. 611; but not if the Magistrate proceeds under sec. 349 or 562.

246. A Magistrate may, under section 243 or section 245,

Finding not limited by complaint or summons. convict the accused of any offence triable under this Chapter which from the facts admitted or proved he appears to have committed, whatever may be the nature of the complaint or summons.

795. Scope of section:—This section enables the Magistrate to proceed in regard to any other offence prima facie established by the evidence for the prosecution. It is not necessary that the case started by the complainant must be the one which the Court should find proved, before it arrives at a conclusion of the guilt of the accused. The Court is not bound by all the statements of the complainant. Its duty is to find out the truth in the midst of the conflicting evidence—Somnath, 14 Bom L.R. 135, 13 Cr.L.J. 300. The rule is, that a Magistrate is not bound to adhere to any particular section which may happen to be mentioned by the complainant in his complaint, but may apply any section of the law which he thinks applicable to the case, so long as the parties are not misled and the proper procedure is observed—Kalidass v. Mohendra, 12 W.R. 40 (41). But this section does not mean that the accused in a summons case can be convicted of an offence alleged to have been committed on a date to which no reference has been made in the complaint or summons—N. K. Sarkar v. Howrah Municipality, 22 Cr.L.J. 559 (Cal.). When the Magistrate thinks that other offences have been committed, it is not necessary to reopen the trial or to follow the procedure of secs. 243 and 244. Such a procedure would necessitate the rehearing of all the evidence in the same trial and is clearly opposed to the intention of the Legislature—Dasarath, 36 Cal 859, 4 I.C. 352; Mt Nge Soe, 41 Cr.L.J. 541, 188 I.C. 72, A.I.R. 1940 Rang 109, 1940 Rang 219. See also Mudoosoodun Sha v. Hari Dass Dass, 2 W.R. 40 (Cr.), and Kalidass v. Mohendra, 12 W.R. 40 (Cr.), 5 Beng L.R. App 82n

This section applies even in the absence of a formal complaint in the first evidence. The evidence of the complainant which evinces a desire on his part that the accused should be proceeded against may be treated as a complaint—Framji, 28 Bom L.R. 291, 27 Cr.L.J. 496, 93 I.C. 896.

'Triable under this chapter' means any offence triable under the procedure laid down for the trial of summons cases and although this section does not contain any explicit prohibition of converting the proceedings before a Magistrate for a summons case into a warrant case and of framing a charge against the accused for both an offence triable as a warrant and an offence triable as summons case, it is quite obvious that such prohibition is implied in it and that once a Magistrate has taken cognizance of a summons case, he cannot frame a charge and convict an accused person for anything but an offence triable as a summons case—Rajaratnam Pillai, 37 Cr.L.J. 501, 161 I.C.

846, 1936 M.W.N. 181, 70 M.L.J. 340, 43 M.L.W. 367, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 341, 59 Mad. 442, 1936 Cr.C. 384, 8 R.M. 880. This case has been dissented from in K. V. Venkata Ramanier, 39 Cr.L.J. 958, 177 I.C. 814, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 815, 47 M.L.W. 739, 1938 M.W.N. 589, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 360, I.L.R. 1938 Mad. 814, 11 R.M. 385 where it has been laid down that if a Magistrate begins a trial as a summons case and then finds that an offence triable only under warrant case procedure has been committed, he is bound to apply warrant case procedure thenceforward and he is not in any way disqualified from proceeding with the trial.

247. If the summons has been issued on complaint, and upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused, or any day subsequent thereto to which the hearing may be adjourned, the complainant does not appear, the Magistrate shall, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, acquit the accused, unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day:

Provided that, where the complainant is a public servant and his personal attendance is not required, the Magistrate may dispense with his attendance, and proceed with the case.

795A. Scope:—The principle underlying this section appears to be that from the first day on which the case is fixed for appearance of the accused and at all subsequent adjourned hearings of the case during which the Court has to take some step or other in the progress of the trial, the presence of the complainant before the Court is insisted on and if he absents himself on any such hearing, his complaint is liable to be dismissed and the accused acquitted unless the Court in its discretion for certain reasons excuses the absence and adjourns the hearing of the case—Laxmi Prasad, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 357 (359), 1940 N.L.J. 399, 190 I.C. 467.

This section does not apply to a case instituted upon a complaint made by a public servant under sec. 195; in such a case the Magistrate cannot dismiss the complaint for default of the complainant to appear—Ramchandra, Ratanlal 137 (138). See proviso.

This section applies even when the Magistrate wrongly adopts the warrant case procedure—Chidambaram v. Ramaswamy, 1933 M.W.N. 1278.

This section does not apply unless the case is instituted upon a complaint. Under sec. 47 of the U. P. Act II of 1916, it is the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the offence upon information received. So the case is not one instituted on a complaint, and sec. 247 of this Code has no application. Inspite of non-appearance of the complainant, the proceedings must continue—Basanti v. Maqsood, 26 Cr.L.J. 170, 83 I.C. 730, A.I.R. 1924 All. 528.

This section does not apply to proceedings under sec. 107, because those proceedings do not amount to a trial of an accused for any offence. Consequently, the non-appearance of the complainant does not enable the Magistrate to acquit the person proceeded against. The proper order to be passed is an order of discharge under sec. 119 on the ground that in the absence of an evidence on behalf of the complainant, it is not proved that the person proceeded against should execute a bond—Asrafali v. Nasu Sarkar, 31 C.W.N. 388, 28 Cr.L.J. 479 (480).

This section does not refer to the day upon which the accused appears, but to the day appointed for the appearance of the accused, showing that it is not necessary even that the accused should appear in order to attract the provisions of this section—Shankar v. Dattatraya, 53 Bom. 693; Bhupati v. Amio, 62 C.L.J. 240 (243), A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 491, 39 C.W.N. 919, 62 Cal. 1119, 36 Cr.L.J. 1238, 157 I.C. 670, 1935 Cr.C. 883.

Where the Magistrate framed a charge against the accused under sec. 427, I. P. C.,

held a local enquiry without any notice to the parties, came to the conclusion that the offence was under sec. 426, I. P. C., evidently upon the basis of the local enquiry, and acquitted the accused under sec. 247, Cr. P. C., because the complainant did not happen to be present on the date on which the Magistrate was to pronounce judgment, the cumulative effect of all these was that the last order, which was an order of acquittal under sec. 247, Cr. P. C., was vitiated and therefore it must be set aside—Bankim Behari Sen v. Yusuf Mian, 40 Cr.L.J. 514, 180 I.C. 858, AIR 1939 Pat. 186, 19 P.L.T. 918.

796. 'Does not appear':—The appearance of the complainant's Vakil is not appearance of the complainant within the meaning of this section, unless the Court has dispensed with his personal attendance and has specially allowed him to appear by a pleader—Ponnaganti v. Kotayyan, 2 Weir 309; Nagarambili v. Jagannatha, 49 Mad 883, 27 Cr.L.J. 988 (1989). See also Pirag Lal v. Rustam Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 1028, 164 I.C. 784, A.I.R. 1936 All. 658, 1936 A.L.J. 954.

Where the complainant went to England it would be unfair to keep the case pending till his return, especially when the case was one under sec. 504, I. P. C.—Maula Bakhsh v. Marshall, 27 Cr.L.J. 1022, 96 I.C. 878, AIR 1926 Lah. 628

If the complainant does not appear at the time of hearing, the Court is not bound to wait for the complainant till the Court closes for the day—Kuttiyali v. Pari Mahai, 7 Mad. 356. It is not sufficient if the complainant appears at any time during the day; he should be present at the time when the case is called on for hearing—Nagarambili v. Jagannatha, supra. The Magistrate is empowered to dismiss the complaint if the complainant does not appear at the time when the case is called on for hearing, even though he appears very shortly after the order of dismissal is passed—Rangasami v. Narasimhulu, 7 Mad 213, Nagarambili v. Jagannatha, supra. A Court has no right to take up any case after the prescribed Court hours without the consent of the parties—Gulai, 29 Cr.L.J. 299, 107 I.C. 827, 9 P.L.T. 344, AIR 1928 Pat. 277

Section 247 allows a discretion and sec 259 requires that a discretion should be exercised. It is not contemplated that the order of acquittal or discharge should be a mere matter of routine and follow automatically upon the absence of the complainant—Jamnabai, 35 Cr.L.J. 1139 (1141), 150 I.C. 858, 36 Bom.L.R. 105, AIR 1934 Bom. 130, 1934 Cr.C. 475. There are only two courses open to the Magistrate when the complainant does not attend in person. The more ordinary course is to acquit the accused. The exceptional course is, if he has any particular reason for doing so, to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day—Pirag Lal v. Rustam Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 1028, 164 I.C. 784, A.I.R. 1936 All. 658, 1936 A.L.J. 954. Although a Magistrate has power to dismiss the complaint for default of the complainant's appearance, he should exercise his power with a reasonable discretion. He should not dismiss the complaint where the non-appearance of the complainant was due to circumstances beyond his control, e.g., a heavy flood which cut off all communications—Tazoonissa v. Wassil, 24 W.R. 64; Madhoo, 5 W.R. 51; or when the case was transferred from the Magistrate to another, and the complainant was present in the Court premises, but not having had notice of the transfer did not appear before the particular Magistrate who had charge of the case; but appeared in the previous Court—Ramanath, 13 C.L.R. 303; Good v. Gunpat, 47 Cal 147 (152); Etim Haji v. Hamid, 24 C.L.J. 444, 18 Cr.L.J. 104 (105); or where the complainant had been kept out of the way by the action of the accused in getting a constable to arrest him on a false charge—Sinna Goundan, 38 Mad 1028; or where the case was called on for hearing on a date not fixed for hearing and the complainant was necessarily absent—Achambil v. Mahatap, 42 Cal 365, 18 C.W.N. 1180, 16 Cr.L.J. 148 (149), A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 119, 27 I.C. 212, Mahadeo, AIR. 1934 All. 1025, 4 A.W.R. 794, 1934 A.L.J. 1061; or where the complainant was in jail and could not, therefore appear—Virbhadra, Ratanlal 59; or where the complainant was exempted from appearance and her counsel missed the motor connection—Fatima v. Abdul Hamid, 35 Cr.L.J. 1504, 151 I.C. 1096, AIR. 1934 Lah. 195, 1934 Cr.C. 436; or where the case was taken up not for hearing but for fixing a new date and the complainant was absent—Jamnabai, 35 Cr.L.J. 1139, 150 I.C. 858, 36 Bom L.R. 105, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 130, 1934 Cr.C. 475; Laxmi Prasad, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 357 (359), 1940 N.L.J. 399, 190 I.C. 467; or where the complainant failed to appear at 7 A.M., but his pleader was present and the complainant turned up shortly after 8 A.M., when the case was taken up and dismissed in absence of the complainant—Ottaru v. Inukotiobiah, 27 Cr.L.J. 1391, 98 I.C. 607, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 139. Where the complainant was ordered to appear at 11 A.M., and he appeared, but the Court sat on that day at 2 P.M., and he did not wait, it could not be said that the complainant had failed to appear—Ahmed v. Meeran, 25 L.W. 358, 28 Cr.L.J. 208; or where the Magistrate was on circuit, and no intimation was given to the parties of the place where the Magistrate's Court would be held, and consequently the complainant could not appear—Anonymous, 2 Weir 307 (308).

Non-appearance on adjourned hearing :—A Magistrate can dismiss a complaint and acquit the accused, not only where the complainant does not appear on the first day of hearing but also where he fails to appear on the date of adjourned hearing—Latchamana, 2 Weir 308; or on the date fixed for argument; Ramjiwan v. Abilakh, 18 C.W.N. 584, 15 Cr.L.J. 163. But this power of dismissal must be exercised with discretion. Where the complainant has done all that is necessary for him to do to establish his case, a complaint ought not to be dismissed for his non-appearance on an adjourned date, unless his attendance is in the opinion of the Magistrate specially required on that day—Anonymous, 2 Weir 306; Nagayya, 2 Weir 306.

Again, a Magistrate cannot dismiss a complaint for non-appearance of the complainant on the adjourned date, if the complainant had no knowledge or notice of the date to which the case had stood adjourned—Nune Panakalu v. Ravulu, 52 Mad 695, 30 Cr.L.J. 191 (195); or where the Magistrate did not specify the place where the case was to be taken up, but ordered the parties to appear 'either at Aligarh or at Talibnagar'—Bansidhar, 1882 A.W.N. 229.

The word "hearing" which is not defined in the Criminal Procedure Code has not been used in the limited technical sense. It does not mean merely an investigation of a controversy. Where, therefore, the complainant did not appear on a date on which two of the accused were bound to appear and the summons of the third accused was awaited, the order of acquittal passed by the Magistrate under this section was not illegal—Laxmi Prasad, supra.

Where an Additional District Magistrate, on an application made before him under sec. 528, Cr. P. C., called for the records of the case to his file and stayed further proceedings pending in the lower Court but the order was not communicated to the lower Court which ordered acquittal of the accused under this section after the order of stay of further proceedings, the High Court set aside the order and directed a retrial—Musa Singh v. Gostha Behary, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 657, 1929 Cr.C. 327.

Non-appearance on date of argument :—In Purag Lal v. Rustam Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 1028, 164 I.C. 784, A.I.R. 1936 All. 658, 1936 A.L.J. 954, the evidence for the prosecution and the evidence for the defence were taken by the Magistrate and he then fixed a date for the hearing of arguments. On that date the complainant did not appear but he was represented by Counsel. The Magistrate acquitted the accused under this section and the High Court refused to interfere in revision, holding that the Magistrate was perfectly entitled to exercise his discretion in that way. A similar view was also taken in Ramjiwan v. Abilakh, 18 C.W.N. 584, 15 Cr.L.J. 163.

Non-appearance on date of judgment :—This section applies to a case of absence of the complainant on the date fixed for his appearance or on the date of adjourned hearing, and does not apply to a case where the complainant is absent on the date fixed for delivery of the judgement. If on such a date the complainant is absent (and the attendance of the complainant on that date was not specially directed by the Magistrate) an order of acquittal of the accused on the ground of absence of the complainant is erroneous—Girish Chandra v. Bhushan, 46 Cal. 867, A.I.R. 1919 Cal. 201, 51 I.C. 476, 20 Cr.L.J. 492, 29 C.L.J. 387, 23 C.W.N. 959; Jangusingh, 19 N.L.R. 48, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 158, 71 I.C. 669, 24 Cr.L.J. 205; Mohiddin v. Mahomia, 1933 M.W.N. 1271;

797. Order of acquittal:—If the complainant is absent on the day of hearing, the proper order to be passed by the Magistrate under sec. 247 is one of acquittal and not one 'striking off' the complaint—Dubash, 10 Bom.L.R. 628, 8 Cr.L.J. 139

Dismissal of the complaint if the complainant is absent and acquittal of the accused is the rule but the Court is given a discretion to adjourn the case for some reason if it thinks fit—Laxmi Prasad, supra

The accused is entitled to acquittal if the complainant is absent, and unless the Court thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day. In other words, the right to an order of acquittal accrues to the accused upon two conditions, firstly, on the absence of the complainant, and secondly, on the Court not adjourning the case. But if on the date of hearing the case is not taken up at all, it cannot be said that the second condition is fulfilled, and the accused is not entitled to acquittal owing to the absence of the complainant on that date—Rash Behary v Corporation of Calcutta, 26 Cr.L.J. 1050, 87 I.C. 970, A.I.R. 1926 Cal 102. The absence of the complainant in a summons case cannot result in the acquittal of the accused without the Magistrate passing any order in exercise of that discretion—Shermull v. Corporation of Calcutta, 25 Cr.L.J. 492, 77 I.C. 892, A.I.R. 1923 Cal 725

Warrant case:—If in a warrant case the complainant is absent, the Magistrate cannot pass an order of dismissing the complaint for default, because it would amount to an application to a warrant case of the procedure of a summons case—Ram Coomar v. Ramjee, 4 C.W.N. 26 (27). See also Saraj Bati, A.I.R. 1934 All. 340, 152 I.C. 249, 1934 Cr.C. 418

Where two charges, one on a summons case and another on a warrant case, are jointly tried in one trial and the complainant is absent on the adjourned hearing, the Magistrate ought to make an order of discharge under sec. 259 and not one of acquittal under this section—Raghavulu v Sngaram, 41 Mad 727 (729); Rajnarain v Lala Zamoli, 11 Cal. 91

But if a summons case is tried under the warrant case procedure, and eventually the Magistrate acquits the accused under sec. 247 on account of the absence of the complainant on an adjourned date of hearing, held that the acquittal is legal and proper. Section 247 lays down a general principle that a person charged with a summons-case offence is entitled to an acquittal if the complainant is absent, and there is no reason why this right should be denied to him simply because the Magistrate has adopted a different procedure for the trial of the case—Venkatarama v. Sundaram, 44 M.L.J. 119, 24 Cr.L.J. 469, A.I.R. 1923 Mad 439

Further inquiry:—Since an order under this section is one of acquittal and not one of discharge, no further inquiry can be directed under sec. 436—Bindra v. Bhagwanta, 25 Cr.L.J. 359, 77 I.C. 295, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 44

Absence of accused:—This section has nothing to do with the presence or absence of the accused. If the complainant is absent, the case must be dismissed and the accused acquitted, even though the latter has disobeyed the summons and is absent—Purna v. D'ngur, 17 C.W.N. cliv. If the complainant is absent, the accused must be acquitted and it is immaterial that the summons to the accused had not been served and that the accused was not present when he was acquitted—Kiran Sarkar, 5 P.L.T. 15, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 140, 24 Cr.L.J. 815; Shankar v. Dattatraya, 53 Bom. 693, 1929 Cr.C. 436 (437); Sura'n v. Thutaballi, 33 Cr.L.J. 579, 138 I.C. 288, 1932 M.W.N. 647, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 546, A.I.R. 1932 Mad 563, 36 M.L.W. 379, 1932 Cr.C. 662, where Kandappa, 2 Weir 307, laying down a contrary proposition, was distinguished. If there are two accused, and one is present when the case is dismissed for complainant's default, the order acquitting him terminates the case also against the other accused whose attendance could not be obtained and against whom the trial did not proceed—Panchu v. Umar, 4 C.W.N. 346.

Appeal to District Magistrate :—If an order of dismissal is passed under this section, the District Magistrate has no power to set aside the order of acquittal on appeal, because under sec. 417 an appeal against an order of acquittal must be directed by the Government and presented only to the High Court—Rangasami v. Narasimhulu, 7 Mad. 213; Nityananda v. Rakhahari, 38 C.L.J. 196, 24 Cr.L.J. 716, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 96.

798. Revival of complaint—Retrial:—The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to restore a case after it has been dismissed for default of appearance of the complainant and the accused has been acquitted, even though good cause is shown for the complainant's non-appearance. An acquittal under this section does not stand on any different footing from an acquittal passed under any other circumstances, and the Magistrate cannot set aside his own order of acquittal—Lakshminarasimham v. Nailuri Bapanna, 52 M.L.J. 173, 28 Cr.L.J. 270. The dismissal of a complaint under this section amounts to an acquittal and bars a subsequent trial on a fresh complaint on the same facts (sec. 403), even if good cause is shown for non-appearance of the complainant. The word "tried" in sec. 403 does not necessarily mean tried on the merits; an acquittal under sec. 247 at the initial stage of the case for non-appearance of complainant acts as a bar to further proceedings in the same way as an acquittal after trial on the merits—Dulla, 45 All 58 (59); Shankar v. Dattatraya, 53 Bom. 693, 1929 Cr.C. 436 (437); Sinnu Goundan, 38 Mad 1028, 26 M.L.J. 160; Gaggilapu, 34 Mad. 253, 9 I.C. 253, 12 Cr.L.J. 41; Suraiya Sastri v. Venkata Rao, 2 Weir 457; Kedar Nath v. Adhin, 7 C.W.N. 711; Panchu v. Umar, 4 C.W.N. 346; Ram Mahata, 2 P.L.T. 170, 61 I.C. 59; Kiran Sarkar, 5 P.L.T. 15, 24 Cr.L.J. 815; Nityananda v. Rakhahari, 38 C.L.J. 196, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 96, 24 Cr.L.J. 716; Abdul Aziz v. Noor Eelahi, 152 I.C. 156, 1934 Cr.C. 446, 36 Cr.L.J. 29, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 211; Bhupati v. Amio, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 491, 39 C.W.N. 919, 36 Cr.L.J. 1238, 157 I.C. 670, 1935 Cr.C. 883, 62 Cal. 1119, 62 C.L.J. 240; Sukum v. Krishna, 33 C.W.N. 260. Acquittal under this section though not an acquittal on the merits has the force of a complete acquittal for all purposes. A fresh and a separate trial on the same facts would be barred under sec. 403, Cr. P. C. The word "acquittal" under sec. 403 does not necessarily mean an acquittal because of the bar of further proceedings in the same way as an acquittal after trial on the merits—Laxmi Prasad, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 357 (359), 1940 N.L.J. 399, 190 I.C. 467. See also Notes 1088 and 1089. Section 403, Cr. P. C., operates as a bar to the second trial even when in a summons case the procedure of a warrant case is followed and an order of discharge, instead of an order of acquittal, is passed—Chidambaram v. Ramaswamy, 1933 M.W.N. 1278. Conversely, when a warrant case is dismissed for default wrongly under sec. 247, instead of under sec. 259, sec. 403 does not bar a second complaint—Suraj Bali, A.I.R. 1934 All. 340, 152 I.C. 249, 1934 Cr.C. 418. Even the District Magistrate has no power to order the entertainment of a complaint which was dismissed for default of appearance—Narayanasami v. Janaki, 2 Weir 308. He cannot order the entertainment of a fresh complaint for a different offence on the same facts—Fazar, 37 C.L.J. 253, 76 I.C. 293, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 407, 25 Cr.L.J. 149. But see Saroda v. Satyeswar, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 571, 36 Cr.L.J. 1364, 158 I.C. 384, 1935 Cr.C. 979, where a contrary view seems to have been taken. There the facts disclosed several distinct offences but the accused was summoned under sec. 352, I. P. C., and was acquitted under sec. 247, Cr. P. Code. It was held that a fresh complaint lay on the same facts in respect of offences other than an offence under sec. 352, I. P. Code. Even, if the order of acquittal is passed under a misapprehension, still the Magistrate cannot take cognizance of a fresh complaint; if the order is wrong, the complainant can take proper steps by way of revision, but he cannot file a fresh complaint—Ram Mahata, supra.

In a Madras case it has been pointed out that the accused who is acquitted under this section owing to the absence of the complainant on the date fixed for hearing is acquitted without trial on the merits; he cannot be said to have been 'tried' within the meaning of sec. 403, and, therefore, an acquittal under this section is not a bar to a second complaint of the offence on the same facts—Kotayya v. Venkayya, 40 Mad. 977 (Note), 19 Cr.L.J. 497, dissenting from Guggilapu, 34 Mad. 253, 9 I.C. 253, 12 Cr.L.J. 41.

If the Magistrate, through mistake of the Peshkar, takes up a case on a day which is not fixed for its hearing, and the complainant is necessarily absent, an order of acquittal passed on account of the absence of the complainant is a nullity, and is no order at all. The Magistrate can ignore that order and take up the case again on the actual date of hearing—Achambit v. Mahatap, 42 Cal 365, 16 Cr.L.J. 148 (149), 18 C.W.N. 1180; Mahadeo, 36 Cr.L.J. 328, 153 I.C. 407, A.I.R. 1934 All 1025, 1934 A.L.J. 1041, 1934 Cr.C. 1335. The Madras High Court has taken a different view and has held that it must be taken as the procedural law in the province of Madras that no Subordinate Court can sit in revision upon its own record and decide whether, upon a certain view of the facts, its proceedings should be treated as null. If it is thought that a mistake has been committed the matter must be referred to the High Court—Ekambara Mudali v. Alamelammal, A.I.R. 1930 Mad 1001, 1930 M.W.N. 409, 32 M.L.W. 152, 1930 Cr.C. 1055, 53 Mad. 870, 3 M Cr.C. 313, 59 M.L.J. 708, 129 I.C. 628

Fresh process for other offences including the previous one—Where a Magistrate issued process against and summoned the accused persons for one of several offences alleged against them, and acquitted them under this section for default of complainant's appearance, no fresh process should in view of sec 403 (1) be issued against them in respect of all the offences alleged against them on the previous occasion, including the one in respect of which they were summoned and acquitted—Suresh v. Banku, 2 C.L.J. 622, 3 Cr.L.J. 115.

799. Order of adjournment:—On default of the complainant's appearance the Magistrate has a discretion either to acquit the accused, or to adjourn the hearing; if he adjourns the case, especially after he has already granted several adjournments, he can proceed to examine witnesses (for the prosecution and the defence) in the absence of the complainant. Such a procedure is not illegal if the accused is allowed to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and is not prejudiced and the complainant afterwards examines and cross-examines witnesses—Sarafji, 24 C.W.N. 199 (201). But the Lahore High Court observes that this section merely authorises the Magistrate to adjourn the case to enable the complainant to appear, but it does not authorise him to dispense with the presence of the complainant and to proceed to hear the case in the absence of the complainant—Maula Bakhsh v. Marshall, 27 Cr.L.J. 1022 (1023), 96 I.C. 878, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 628.

The Magistrate can adjourn the hearing only when there are sufficient and proper grounds for doing so. The fact that the accused has disobeyed the processes of the Court is no good reason for proceeding with the case—Purna v. Dingur, 17 C.W.N. clix, 19 C.W.N. 334, 16 Cr.L.J. 322. But a Magistrate can adjourn the hearing for the purpose of allowing the accused time to secure the attendance of his witnesses—In re Dinno Roy, 16 W.R. 21. If the complainant is likely to be absent for a long time, e.g., if he goes to England, the proper order to pass is to acquit the accused, instead of granting an indefinite adjournment—Maula Bakhsh v. Marshall, supra.

800. Death of complainant:—It is open to doubt whether this section applies where the non-appearance of the complainant is due to his death. But, if on the day fixed for hearing the son of deceased complainant appears and asks the Magistrate to proceed with the case, the Magistrate ought to proceed and should not acquit the accused under this section—Jitan v. Domoo, 1 P.L.J. 264, 18 Cr.L.J. 151; Madhu Chowdhury v. Torab, 18 C.W.N. 1211; Mahomed Azam, 28 Bom.L.R. 288, 27 Cr.L.J. 491; Anand Rao v. Gadi, 28 N.L.R. 49, 1932 Cr.C. 372, 33 Cr.L.J. 407, 137 I.C. 91, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 72, Ind. Ref. 1932 Nag. 50. But see Purna v. Dingur, 17 C.W.N. clix, 19 C.W.N. 334 (335), 16 Cr.L.J. 322 and Appala Naidu, 51 Mad. 339, 29 Cr.L.J. 257 (258), where it has been held that if the complainant dies pending the trial, the Magistrate should acquit the accused and should not proceed further with the trial; he should not adjourn the case in order to enable the complainant's son to come on the record.

801. Revision:—An acquittal under this section does not stand on any different footing from an acquittal ordered in any other circumstances, and the High Court will not set aside an acquittal in revision except under very rare circumstances—Lakshmi-narasinh v. Nalluri, 52 M.L.J. 173, 28 Cr.L.J. 270. The mere fact that it is an acquittal not on the merits of the case but on the initial stage of the case in the absence of the complainant does not make any difference whatsoever for deciding whether there should be an interference in revision against the order of acquittal. When an accused is acquitted a very valuable and substantial privilege accrues in his favour and it is not proper for a Court to interfere with an acquittal simply because the complainant thinks that the accused has committed the offence and the offence will remain unpunished—Laxmi Prasad, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 357 (360), 1940 N.L.J. 399, 190 I.C. 467. A somewhat contrary view has been taken by the Oudh Court, under certain special circumstances, in the case of Ram Nidh v. Ram Saran, 26 O.C. 282, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 64, 25 Cr.L.J. 794.

The High Court has, in exercise of its powers under sec. 439, Cr. P. C., power to set aside an order of acquittal under this section and to order the case to proceed from the stage which it had reached when the improper order of acquittal was passed—Soni v. Kishnomal Manghandas, 40 Cr.L.J. 524, 180 I.C. 989, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 385, 11 R.S. 198, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 75. But where it cannot be said on the facts of the case that the Magistrate exercised the discretion arbitrarily and not judicially, the High Court should not interfere—Laxmi Prasad, supra.

Where an order is passed by the Magistrate acquitting an accused under sec. 247, the order can only be set aside by the High Court. The Magistrate or his successor has no power to revive the proceeding by setting aside the order—Nityananda v. Rakhahari, 38 C.L.J. 196, 24 Cr.L.J. 716, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 96. But if the order of acquittal is a nullity, it need not be set aside by a superior authority. The Magistrate can himself ignore the order and take up the case again—Achambit v. Mahatap, 42 Cal. 365 (see this case cited under Note 798).

248. If a complainant, at any time before a final order is passed in any case under this Chapter, satisfies the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw his complaint, the Magistrate may permit him to withdraw the same, and shall thereupon acquit the accused.

802. Scope of section:—This section applies only to summons cases, i.e., a withdrawal of complaint is permissible only in summons cases, and not in warrant cases—Ranchhod, 37 Bom. 369, 14 Cr.L.J. 77. If the offence charged is a warrant case (and is non-compoundable), the Magistrate must proceed with the inquiry or trial in spite of the application for withdrawal of the complaint, if he finds the elements of an offence in the facts set forth in the complaint—Ganesh Narayan, 13 Bom. 600 (603). The Magistrate's order permitting the complainant to withdraw in a non-compoundable warrant case and acquitting the accused is unwarranted by this Code—Ranchhod, 37 Bom. 369, 14 Cr.L.J. 77 (78).

It is always open to the prosecution to withdraw a case with the permission of the Court (secs. 248 and 494, Cr. P. Code)—Mehr Singh, 35 Cr.L.J. 85, 146 I.C. 387, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 884, 1933 Cr.C. 1178.

This section is limited in its operation to cases instituted upon complaints in the strict sense. If A gave information to the Police, and the Magistrate took cognizance of the case upon the Police report, there was no complaint within the meaning of sec. 4 (h), and A could not be permitted to withdraw—Chenchayya, 23 Mad. 626, 2 Weir 310; Elias Arz Muhammad, 41 Cr.L.J. 694, 188 I.C. 870, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 112. This section can have application only when the Magistrate has taken cognizance of a case upon a complaint preferred to him by the person who seeks to withdraw the complaint—Elias Arz Muhammad, supra.

Section 537 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (Act III of 1923 B. C.), which authorises the Corporation to withdraw from legal proceedings, must be read subject to sec. 248, Cr. P. Code, which permits the complainant to withdraw his complaint "if there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw his complaint." It follows, therefore, that before a withdrawal can be permitted under sec. 537 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, there must be sufficient grounds for withdrawal to the satisfaction of the Magistrate—Sishir Kumar v. Corporation of Calcutta, 53 Cal 631, 30 C.W.N. 598, 27 Cr.L.J. 984. The failure on the part of the Magistrate to place such grounds on record is not by itself sufficient to justify the High Court's interference with the order—Abdul Majid v. Arbabshah, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 357, 35 Cr.L.J. 142, 146 I.C. 542, 1933 Cr.C. 1340.

This section contemplates a withdrawal of the complaint as a whole. Where a complaint against several accused persons is withdrawn as against one of them, this amounts to a withdrawal of the whole complaint in respect of all the accused—Shyam Bhattari v. Sagar Singh, 1 P.L.T. 32, 53 I.C. 824 (825), 20 Cr.L.J. 824. The withdrawal of the case absolves not only the accused present but also all the accused—Amar Ali, 2 P.L.T. 584, 22 Cr.L.J. 675, 63 I.C. 611. See also Motilal, 34 Cr.L.J. 21, 140 I.C. 257, A.I.R. 1932 Cal 122, 36 C.W.N. 163, 1932 Cr.C. 107, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal 706. Contra—Rohti Singh v. Makdum, 9 O.L.J. 54, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 145, 23 Cr.L.J. 271 and Anantia, 5 Lah 239, 81 I.C. 117, 25 Cr.L.J. 629, A.I.R. 1924 Lah 595 (per Le Rossignol, J.), where it was held that the withdrawal against some does not amount to a withdrawal against all. It should be noted that this latter view is in consonance with the provisions of sec. 345 (6) (as now amended) under which the composition of an offence with one of the accused does not amount to a composition with all the accused. The Madras High Court has followed the Lahore High Court in S. I. General Assurance Co. v. Registrar of Life Insurance Co., 41 Cr.L.J. 454, 187 I.C. 220, 1940 M.W.N. 104, A.I.R. 1940 Mad 623, 1940 M.Cr.C. 32, 51 M.L.W. 515, where it has been held that there is nothing in sec. 248, Cr. P. C., which involves a withdrawal of the whole complaint merely because the complaint is withdrawn as against some of the accused.

"May permit" —It is discretionary with the Magistrate to permit the complainant to withdraw. The Magistrate can, inspite of the application for withdrawal, proceed with the trial and convict the accused—Bayan Ali, 20 C.W.N. 1209, 18 Cr.L.J. 107 (Pat.).

893. Withdrawal of complaint:—Withdrawal and Compromise:—There is a well-marked distinction between a withdrawal of a case under this section and a compromise under sec. 345. Compromise contemplates an arrangement between two parties; withdrawal has no such meaning. A case is said to be compromised if it is withdrawn with the consent of the accused, whereas a case is withdrawn under this section without the consent of the accused. Therefore, when a petition is filed by the complainant praying for striking off the case, the Magistrate should satisfy himself under what section the petition is made. If the case is not being compromised but is being withdrawn without the consent of the accused, the petition is not one under sec. 345 but under this section, and the Magistrate may, inspite of the petition, proceed with the trial and convict the accused. But if a petition is filed for composition (of an offence which is compoundable without leave of Court), the Magistrate is bound to give effect to the compromise and acquit the accused—Bayan Ali, 20 C.W.N. 1209, 18 Cr.L.J. 107. See also Note 992 under sec. 345.

Who can withdraw —Only the complainant can withdraw the case. In cases of contempt of the lawful authority of a public servant, the complainant is the public servant whose authority has been resisted, and not the person injured by such resistance; and the former alone can withdraw—Muse Ali, 2 Bom 653. Where a Municipal Secretary instituted a complaint, the Municipal Council was not competent to withdraw—Paramananda v. Karunakara, 27 M.L.J. 617, 15 Cr.L.J. 299.

When to withdraw:—The complainant can withdraw at any time 'before a final order is passed'. But these words do not refer to a time so early as when no process has been issued to the accused. An order of acquittal passed on an application for withdrawal preferred before issue of process is unmeaning and of no avail—Muthia Moopan, 36 Mad. 315, 14 Cr.L.J. 559.

Magistrate alone can permit withdrawal :—This section does not empower a Police-officer to entertain an application for withdrawal of a complaint. The permission for withdrawal is a judicial act, and the Magistrate alone can do it—Anonymous, Ratanlal 91. A petition for withdrawal of a case should be judicially determined by the Magistrate himself, and it is wholly improper for him to refer the matter to the Police for report, and then to act on the report in refusing or allowing withdrawal. The Magistrate should not allow himself to be guided by what the Police thought about the matter—Azizur Rahman, 43 C.L.J. 214, 27 Cr.L.J. 394.

Revival of withdrawn complaint .—Where a Deputy Magistrate allowed a complaint to be withdrawn and discharged the accused, the District Magistrate could not revive the case against the accused—Zuhoorul, 25 W.R. 64.

But where the complaint was withdrawn, because there was no sanction (the case being one in which a sanction was necessary), and the accused was discharged, the complainant was competent to lodge a fresh complaint after obtaining the necessary sanction, the previous order of discharge not being tantamount to an acquittal—Samsuddin, 22 Bom. 711.

249. In any case instituted otherwise than upon complaint, a Presidency Magistrate, a Magistrate of the first class, or with the previous sanction of the District Magistrate, any other Magistrate, may, for reasons to be recorded by him, stop the proceedings at any stage without pronouncing any judgment either of acquittal or conviction, and may thereupon release the accused.

804. Scope :—This section applies where the case is instituted otherwise than upon complaint. If a case is chalaned by the Forest Department, it is not instituted upon complaint, and this section applies—Achhru, 9 P.R. 1913, 13 Cr.L.J. 860 (861). This section deals only with summons cases instituted otherwise than upon complaints, and is inapplicable to warrant cases. Therefore, an order by a Magistrate stopping a warrant case and releasing the accused under this section is illegal; the case will be treated as still pending on the file of the Magistrate and can be reopened either by an application by the Crown or suo motu by the Magistrate; but it cannot be reopened upon a fresh complaint preferred by a private person, the original case being already on the pending file of the Magistrate—Firangi v. Durga, 5 Pat. 243, 7 P.L.T. 449, 27 Cr.L.J. 698 (699, 700). In Achhru, 9 P.R. 1913, 13 Cr.L.J. 860 (861), the Magistrate stopped proceedings in a warrant case, but the Chief Court took no objection on that ground.

Where upon a report of the Police that one J. has given false information to the Police against certain persons, a Magistrate ordered the prosecution of J. under sec. 182, I P. C., but subsequently upon receipt of another report in another case that the information given by J. was true, he ordered the summons issued for the attendance of J. to be cancelled, it was held that the Magistrate had full power to cancel the summons and stop the proceedings, under this section—Nathu, 1 P.L.T. 28, 54 I.C. 888, 21 Cr.L.J. 184.

An order under this section neither amounts to an acquittal nor to a discharge. Since it does not amount to an acquittal (see Explanation to sec. 403) it does not bar further proceedings (retrial) in accordance with law—Achhru, 1913 P.R. 9. But since it does not amount to an order of dismissal of complaint or discharge, no order can be passed under sec. 437 (now sec. 436) directing further inquiry—Ibid. See also Sripal, 33 Cr.L.J. 564, 147 I.C. 1028, A.I.R. 1934 All. 17, 1934 Cr.C. 45.

Frivolous Accusations in Summons and Warrant Cases.

250. (1) If, in any case instituted upon complaint * * *

False, frivolous or vexatious accusations. or upon information given to a police officer or to a Magistrate, one or more persons is or are accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate, and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits all or any of the accused, and is of opinion that the accusation against them or any of them was false and either frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may, by his order of discharge or acquittal, if the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made is present, call upon him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation to such accused or to each or any of such accused when there are more than one, or, if such person is not present, direct the issue of a summons to him to appear and show cause as aforesaid.

(2) The Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which such complainant or informant may show, and if he is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious, may, for reasons to be recorded, direct that compensation to such amount and not exceeding one hundred rupees or, if the Magistrate is a Magistrate of the third class, not exceeding fifty rupees, as he may determine, be paid by such complainant or informant to the accused or to each or any of them.

(2A) The Magistrate may by the order directing payment of the compensation under sub-section (2) further order that, in default of payment, the person ordered to pay such compensation shall suffer simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days.

(2B) When any person is imprisoned under sub-section (2A), the provisions of sections 68 and 69 of the Indian Penal Code shall, so far as may be, apply.

(2C) No person who has been directed to pay compensation under this section shall, by reason of such order, be exempted from any civil or criminal liability in respect of the complaint made or information given by him:

Provided that any amount paid to an accused person under this section shall be taken into account in awarding compensation to such person in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter.

(3) A complainant or informant who has been ordered under sub-section (2) by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation, or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding fifty rupees, may appeal from the order in so far as the order relates to the payment of the compensation, as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial held by such Magistrate.

(4) Where an order for payment of compensation to an accused person is made in a case which is subject to appeal under sub-section (3), the compensation shall not be paid to him before the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal has elapsed, or, if an appeal is presented, before the appeal has been decided, and where such order is made in a case which is not so subject to appeal, the compensation shall not be paid before the expiration of one month from the date of the order.

Change:—The whole section has been redrafted by sec. 69 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The principal changes introduced are the following:—

(1) The word "frivolous or vexatious" have been substituted by the words "false and either frivolous or vexatious."

(2) Under the old law the complainant was forthwith ordered to pay the compensation; under the present law the Magistrate will forthwith call upon him to show cause, and he shall then consider and record any cause shown and pass such orders as he sees fit. * * * "As the section is worded under the old law, the order to pay compensation is part of the order of discharge or acquittal, and the record and consideration of objections is to precede such order. The procedure now proposed is more logical"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). Moreover, the old law did not provide for the case where the complainant was absent at the time the judgment was delivered; now, power has been given in such a case to summon him to appear and show cause—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

(3) The limit of compensation has been increased from Rs. 50 to Rs. 100, unless the Magistrate is a Magistrate of the third class. But this increase will not, having regard to the provisions of sec. 404, make orders under sec. 250 appealable where they are not so at present—Report of the Select Committee (1916).

(4) Under the old law, the Magistrate could order imprisonment only after failure to recover compensation, but he could not award imprisonment in default in the very order directing compensation; under the new sub-sec. (2A), the Magistrate has now been empowered to award such imprisonment in the order itself.

(5) Sub-section (2) of the old section, which provided that compensation should be recoverable as if it were a fine, has been omitted, as it is provided for in sec. 547. The proviso to sub-sec. (2) of the old section has now been re-enacted as sub-sec. (2A) with some alterations. Sub-section (2B) is new.

(6) Sub-section (2C) is new, and the proviso to this sub-section is the same as the old sub-sec. (5).

(7) An appeal will now lie from the order of a first class Magistrate if he awards compensation exceeding fifty rupees. See sub-sec. (3). Under the old law, no appeal lay from the order of a 1st class Magistrate.

(8) Sub-section (4) has been amended to specify the time for payment of compensation where the original case is non-appealable. "The amendment which we propose at the end of sub-sec. (4) is to provide for cases in which, though there cannot be an appeal, the acquittal or discharge of the person to whom compensation has been awarded may be set aside in revision. The period of one month which we have allowed should be ample to admit of an application being made to the superior Court."—Report of the Select Committee (1916).

805. Instituted upon complaint, etc.:—For the definition of "complaint" see sec. 4 (h), Cr. P. C., and the Notes under it. The operation of this section is restricted to cases instituted upon complaint or upon information given to a Police Officer or to a Magistrate. It is clear that it will not apply to a case instituted on a police report or an information given by a Police-officer—Rajewan v. Durga, 21 Cal. 979; Saleh, 33 Cr.L.J. 644, 138 I.C. 635, 26 S.L.R. 299, 1932 Cr.C. 692, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 156, Ind. Rul. 1932 Sind 85. It is inapplicable to the case of a complaint lodged by a Police-officer as such—Sheobaran v. Nunmonia, 5 C.W.N. 370; Ramjewan v. Durga, 21 Cal. 979; Syed Bahadur v. Nur Mahomed, 7 C.W.N. 206; Sakar Jan, 22 Bom. 934.

The words in this section cannot be read at large and divorced from the words of sec. 190, Cr. P. C., with which they are closely associated. This section will apply to information given by a police officer if that information can come as a complaint under cl. (a) of sec. 190 (1), Cr. P. C., but this section will not apply to a police report falling under cl. (b)—Muhammad Hashein v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Sind 134 (135), 41 Cr.L.J. 788, 189 I.C. 703 (F.B.).

Where a person makes a report at the police-station, and the police thereupon makes an inquiry and sends the case to a Magistrate, the case is said to be instituted upon "information given by that person to a police-officer"—Jairaj v. Banai, 23 A.L.J. 1054, 27 Cr.L.J. 35 (36). The ruling in Ishni v. Bakshi, 6 All. 96 and Polo Varapa, 7 Mad. 563 is no longer correct, because when the cases were decided the words "information given to a police-officer" did not exist in this section. Where a case was instituted by the police upon evidence obtained by them in an inquiry conducted by them; and in that inquiry the statement of the petitioner had been taken along with others, held that the case was not instituted upon information given by the petitioner to a police-officer—Sarijug, 1 P.L.J. 106 (108), 17 Cr.L.J. 336. But if the case was originally based on information given to a Police-officer under sec. 154, this section applies although the case was ultimately instituted upon a Police report, submitted under sec. 173; and the information may be dealt with under this section—Jagdani v. Mahadeo, 14 C.W.N. 326, 11 Cr.L.J. 201.

An Excise officer (e.g., a Sub-Inspector of Excise and Salt) is a Police-officer only for the purpose of sec. 190, and not for the purpose of sec. 250; and, therefore, an information given to an Excise officer is not an "information given to a Police-officer" within the meaning of sec. 250. If an informer gave an information to an Excise officer, and upon that information, the officer made a report to the Magistrate and prosecuted a person for selling liquor without a license, and the prosecution turned out to be false and frivolous, held that the case was not instituted upon 'information to a Police officer' (so as to make the informer liable to pay compensation) but was instituted upon 'complaint', the report of the Excise officer to the Magistrate being treated as a complaint; and that officer, being deemed to be the complainant, was liable to pay compensation. Even, if the report be not treated as a complaint, it was information given to a Magistrate by the Excise officer, and in that view also he was liable to pay compensation—Radhika v. Hamid, 54 Cal. 371, 28 Cr.L.J. 316.

When a Police-officer makes a report in a non-cognizable case, the report amounts to a complaint (because a Police-officer has no power to make a report in a non-cognizable case) and the Magistrate can order him to pay compensation to the accused, if the complaint is false—Sada, 26 Bom. 150 (157) (F.B.).

Complaint under Cattle Trespass Act.—This section applies to a case in which a false and frivolous complaint has been made under the Cattle Trespass Act. Under sec. 4 (a) of the Cr. P. Code, 1898, the word "offence" includes an act in respect of which a complaint may be made under sec. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act. If such complaint is false and frivolous or vexatious, compensation can certainly be awarded. The ruling in 18 All. 353, 13 Cal. 304, 9 Mad. 102 and 9 Mad. 374, is no longer good law, as these cases were decided under the Code of 1882, in which the definition of offence in sec. 4, (a) did not include an act in respect of which a complaint could be made under sec. 20, Cattle Trespass Act.

Complaint to a Village Magistrate.—A complaint of a non-bailable offence to a village Magistrate who is bound by law to report the substance of the information to the Police under sec. 45, (c) is an "information to a Police-officer" within the meaning of this section; the person who has made the complaint must be deemed to have given information to the police just as effectively as if he went in person to the police-station; and if on such information the Police charges the accused, and the Magistrate finds the charge to be false and vexatious he can order the complainant to pay compensation under this section—Nachimuthu v. Muthusami, 39 Mad. 1006 (1008), 27 M.L.J. 37, 15 Cr.L.J. 431 [following Sessions Judge v. Sivan Chetty, 32 Mad. 258 (262 (F.B.))]; Kalipaperumal v. Bavaji, 45 M.L.J. 255; 24 Cr.L.J. 717, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 91; Thanikadavath v. Amman, 4 L.W. 73, 17 Cr.L.J. 503; Nadiabba v. Rayachetty, 32 M.L.J. 78, 18 Cr.L.J. 11 (12). (Contra—Arulanandham, 22 Mad. 138, 13 Cr.L.J. 29 and Thammana, 25 Mad. 667). If, however, the information preferred to the village Magistrate is one which he is not bound by law to report to the Police, the preferring of such information does not amount to information to the Police—Sessions Judge v. Sivan Chetty, 32 Mad. 258 (263) (F.B.). It should be noted that the decision in 25 Mad. 667 proceeded not on the question as to whether the village Magistrate was or was not bound to report the information to the Police, but on the ground that the information given to a village Magistrate (i.e., village Headman) is not information given to a "Magistrate."

Case instituted under section 476 :—Where a case is instituted under sec. 476, at the instance of a person, it cannot be said to have been instituted either upon complaint of that person, or upon information given to Police-officer or to a Magistrate—Kisandas, 14 Bom.L.R. 1166, 14 Cr.L.J. 1.

806. 'Accused of an offence' :—An institution of proceedings under Chapter VIII is not an accusation of an offence, and this section does not apply if the accusation proves to be false—Govind, 25 Bom. 48; Lakshpat, 15 All. 365; Bindhachal v. Lal Behari, 36 All. 382; Ram Sukh v. Mahadeo, 7 A.L.J. 743, 11 Cr.L.J. 446; Kaura, 1902 P.R. 33; Mannu Khan v. Chandi, 20 A.L.J. 624, A.I.R. 1922 All. 321, 23 Cr.L.J. 474; Ram Badan v. Janki, 45 All. 363, 21 A.L.J. 207, 24 Cr.L.J. 228, 71 I.C. 692, A.I.R. 1923 All. 332; Asa v. Gopal Das, 33 P.R. 1902, 24 P.L.R. 1902; Rohel v. Kamra, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 29; Baij Nath v. Kali Charan, 49 All. 750, 25 A.L.J. 493, 28 Cr.L.J. 604.

Similarly, an application for maintenance under sec. 488 is not a complaint of an offence (the refusal to maintain wife not being an 'offence') and no compensation can be awarded if the application proves to be false—Ambao v. Baboo, 6 M.L.T. 261, 11 Cr.L.J. 156.

The use of a house as a brothel is not an offence under sec. 41, Bombay District Police Act, and a complaint as to such use of a house is not a complaint of an offence. No compensation can, therefore, be awarded if the complaint is frivolous or vexatious—Khairi, 6 S.L.R. 254, 14 Cr.L.J. 320.

Section 28 of the Bombay Public Conveyance Act provides a summary remedy for the recovery of the legal fare of a public conveyance, and a complaint under that section is not a complaint in respect of an offence within the meaning of this section—Valli Mitha, 44 Bom 463 (465).

807. "Triable by a Magistrate" :—This section applies only where the offence is triable by a Magistrate; it does not apply where the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session but is inquired into (under Ch. XVIII) by a Magistrate, ending in an order of discharge under section 209—Poligadu, 2 Weir 315 (316); Bavabhai, Ratanlal 961; Chhaba, 19 Bom.L.R. 60, 18 Cr.L.J. 463; Sarupsonar v. Ram Sundar, 20 A.L.J. 433, A.I.R. 1922 All. 188, 23 Cr.L.J. 319; Het Ram v. Ganga, 40 All. 615 (616), 16 A.L.J. 486, 19 Cr.L.J. 706; Bansidhar v. Chunnit, 25 A.L.J. 818, 28 Cr.L.J. 983; Shama Rao v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 96. Even, if the Magistrate tries an offence triable by the Court of Session, by virtue of his powers specially conferred upon him under sec. 30 and discharges the accused on account of the charge being vexatious, he cannot award compensation to the accused—Kadu, 26 P.R. 1902, 139 P.L.R. 1902; Shankar, 1919 P.R. 15, 20 Cr.L.J. 495; Md. Hayat v. Bhola, 1919 P.R. 1, 20 Cr.L.J. 141, A.I.R. 1919 Lah. 192, 49 I.C. 173; Ma E Dak v. Maung Po, 1 Bur.L.J. 38, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 15, 23 Cr.L.J. 319, 11 L.B.R. 151, 66 I.C. 513; Amin Lal, 11 Lah. 558, 31 Cr.L.J. 1133 (1134). A contrary view has, however, been taken in Ma Sin v. Maung Maung Lay, 37 Cr L J. 773, 163 I.C. 163, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 230, 1936 Cr C. 514. But where the facts in a case showed that the offence was triable by a Court of Session only, but the Magistrate regarding it as a lesser offence triable by him, tried the case and in dismissing the same awarded compensation to the accused, held that the procedure was not illegal—Venkatrayar v. Venkatrayar, 45 Mad 29 (30), 66 I.C. 72, 23 Cr L J 232, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 223, 30 M.L.T. 75, 41 M.L.J. 398, 14 M.L.W. 247, 1921 M.W.N. 613; Hemandas v. Ahmad, 16 S.L.R. 205, 26 Cr L.J. 265. The question whether the offence is triable by a Magistrate is not to be decided solely by the complaint; the mere fact that the complainant mentions an offence which is triable exclusively by a Court of Session does not take the case out of this section. The proper criterion is the form of proceedings, i.e., whether they are conducted under Ch XVIII or Ch XXI. Where a Magistrate issued summons for offences under secs 307, 147 and 323, I. P. C., but he took no particular notice of the offence under sec. 307 (Sessions offence) and believed himself to be conducting a trial and not an inquiry, an order under sec 250, Cr. P. C., was not illegal—Shiam Lal v Nand Ram, 53 All. 461, 32 Cr L J. 670 (672), 131 I.C. 36, 4931 A.L.J. 89, 1931 Cr.C 611, A.I.R. 1931 All 355. Within the meaning of sec. 250, Cr. P. C., "the Magistrate by whom the case is heard" need not be the same Magistrate before whom the case is instituted. It is obvious that the word 'heard' has been deliberately used as it can cover both the inquiry (secs. 252 and 253, Cr. P. C.) and the trial (the rest of Chap XXI) in a warrant case. Therefore, even though the offence alleged in complaint is one triable only by a First or Second Class Magistrate as soon as it is sent to a Third Class Magistrate by the Sub-divisional Magistrate under sec. 192 or sec. 528, Cr. P. C., the inference must be that the latter Court does not consider that a case triable exclusively by the First or Second Class Magistrate has necessarily been made out. The Third Class Magistrate is perfectly competent to deal with an offence which he is competent to try or to take action under sec 346, Cr. P. C. If at that stage he considers that the case is frivolous and vexatious, there is nothing in the language of sec 250, Cr P C., to prevent him from passing an order under that section—Paanda v Gulab Khatun, 40 Cr L J 515, 181 I C 49, A I R 1939 Lah 122, I L R. 1938 Lah. 619, 41 P L R. 221. When a complaint has been filed against an accused person for three offences one of which is triable exclusively by the Magistrate and the other two by the Court of Session, and the Magistrate inquires into the case under Chap. XVIII in respect of all the offences and discharges the accused under sec 209, an order for compensation against the complainant cannot be passed merely because one of the offences is triable by a Magistrate—Hanjhar v Maksur Ali, 48 All 166, 23 A.L.J. 1056, 37 Cr L J. 6 (7), 91 I C 38, A I R 1926 All 159. See also Het Ram v. Ganga, supra, where one offence was triable exclusively by the Sessions Court and two other offences by the Magistrate. Where the complainant brings two accusations, one of an offence triable by a Magistrate and the other triable exclusively by the Court of Session, and a Magistrate with powers under sec 30 tries the case and finds both the accusations to be false, he is competent to award compensation only in respect of the offence triable by a Magistrate. But if compensation is awarded for both the offences jointly and it is not possible to split up the amount and assign a portion of it to one accusation and the balance to the other, the order is unenforceable in respect of either accusation on account of uncertainty and must be set aside—Amin Lal, 11 Lah 558, 31 Cr L J 1133.

It is immaterial whether the case is triable as a summons case or as a warrant case. This section makes no distinction between either—Paighambar, 4 O W N 392, 28 Cr L J 450 (451), 101 I.C. 482.

Summary cases—Compensation may be awarded even if the case is triable summarily—Basava, 11 Mad. 142; Palani v. Krishnappa, 59 M.L.J. 319, 32 Cr L J 207, 129 I.C. 37.

808. Who can award compensation:—In sub-sec. (1) of sec 250, Cr P C., at least, the only Magistrate who may call upon the complainant to show cause is the Magistrate who heard the case and who discharges or acquits all or any of the accused. The Magistrate in sub-sec. (2) to sec. 250, Cr. P. C., refers to the Magistrate in sub-sec. (1) and the definite article "the" does not mean the Magistrate who succeeds the Magistrate who heard the case or any other Magistrate—Muhammad Alan, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 321, 41 Cr.L.J. 53, 184 I.C. 595 Compensation is to be awarded by the Magistrate who has heard the substantive case and passed the order of acquittal or discharge. The Legislature never intended that one Magistrate should deal with the substantive case and make the order calling upon the complainant to shew cause, and that another Magistrate may pass the order for compensation—Rajaram v. Panchanan, 33 C.W.N. 861 (855), 1929 Cr.C. 474. Where part of the evidence was heard by one Magistrate and then the case was made over to another Magistrate under sec. 346, and the latter Magistrate heard the rest of the evidence and decided the case, held that the latter Magistrate was competent to order compensation—Ram Devi v. Govind, 19 A.L.J. 651, 22 Cr.L.J. 406, 61 I.C. 646 An order under this section can be made by the Magistrate who heard the case de novo and discharged the accused, although another Magistrate, who first dealt with the case, had framed a charge—Dagdu Govindset v. Punja Vedu, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 55, 38 Bom.L.R. 1189, 166 I.C. 598, 38 Cr.L.J. 250, 11 R. 1937 Bom. 211, 1937 A.I.Cr.R. 70, 9 R.B. 247. But where a Magistrate who had tried the case and had directed the complainant to show cause why an order for compensation should not be made, was transferred, his successor cannot make an order under this section, because he had heard nothing of the case except the complainant's plea showing cause against the order—Mahadeo, 1892 A.W.N. 58 In a case where a Magistrate has called upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation for having made a false and frivolous or vexatious complaint and has retired in the course of proceedings before a final order was passed, the notice upon the complainant should be discharged because it is only the Magistrate who has heard the case that can pass final order under this section—Muhammad Alan, supra.

The words "Magistrate by whom the case is heard" show that this section is confined to Courts of Magistrates trying cases in the first instance, and does not include an Appellate Court. Such a Court in setting aside a conviction cannot order the complainant to pay compensation—Mehi Singh v. Mongal, 39 Cal. 157, 16 C.W.N. 10, 12 I.C. 297, 12 Cr.L.J. 529, 14 C.L.J. 437 (F.B.) (overruling Kari Singh v. Tufani, 14 C.W.N. 212); Harichand v. Fakir, 3 Bom.L.R. 841; Pitambar, 7 Bom.L.R. 998, 3 Cr.L.J. 88; Chedi v. Ram Lal, 46 All. 80, 25 Cr.L.J. 967, A.I.R. 1924 All. 224, 21 A.L.J. 834; Balli v. Chittan, 28 All. 625, 3 Cr.L.J. 441, 1906 A.W.N. 145, 3 A.L.J. 382; Notified Area v. Kerta Ram, 7 Lah. 152, 27 Cr.L.J. 570. The Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court, however, doubted the decision in Mehi Singh v. Mangal, supra; Ma Mya Khin v. Maung Po Htwa, 35 Cr.L.J. 1, 145 I.C. 837, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 288, 11 Rang. 361, 1933 Cr.C. 1084 (F.B.) See Note 1150.

It is doubtful whether the High Court has jurisdiction to pass an order for compensation when the matter comes up in revision—Aminullah, 26 A.L.J. 328, A.I.R. 1928 All. 95, 29 Cr.L.J. 274 (275). Under sec. 439 read with sec. 423 (1)(d), Cr. P. C. the High Court cannot make an order for compensation even if upon the judgment and even if cause had been shown the High Court were of opinion that an order for compensation should be made—Muhammad Alan, supra

Section 250, Cr. P. C., provides for the award of compensation by "the Magistrate by whom the case is heard" and to that Magistrate is expressly reserved the power to award compensation under sec. 250 Sec. 423 (1)(d), Cr. P. C. does amplify the powers of appellate Courts but it does not invest an Appellate Court with authority to make any order which might have been made by the Court below. An incidental order under sec. 423 (1)(d) is an order which is liable or likely to follow as a result of the main order. An order awarding compensation to the accused is not liable to follow (and it cannot be likely to follow unless it is liable to do so) an order made by the High Court in the exercise of its appellate or revisional powers, setting aside a conviction and sentence. The High Court has, therefore, no power to award compensation to the accused when setting aside a conviction and sentence in its appellate or revisional jurisdiction—Maung Khin Maung, A.I.R. 1910 Rang. 278, 1910 Rang.L.R. 502, 809. "Discharges or acquits the accused":—The word 'heard' shows that the case must proceed as far as hearing. If a complaint is summarily dismissed under sec. 203, without issue of process to the accused, such a dismissal is not an order of discharge or acquittal within the meaning of this section—Bhagwan v. Harmukh, 29 All 137, 1905 A.W.N. 306, 4 Cr.L.J. 452; Azam v. Mir Abdulla, 1897 P.R. 14; even though the accused was present with a pleader at the inquiry held under sec. 202, compensation cannot be awarded where the case is dismissed under sec. 203—Harphul v. Manku, 84 P.L.R. 1906, 3 P.R. 1906, 4 Cr.L.J. 36. Where after the filing of a complaint, the statement of one of the prosecution witnesses was taken and it disclosed that the complaint was false, and thereupon the Magistrate passed an order of compensation under this section, held that the order could not be passed without discharging or acquitting the accused—Ram Labhaya v. Jagannath, 30 P.L.R. 361, 30 Cr.L.J. 854 (855).

An order for compensation may be passed where the accused is acquitted under sec. 245—Salik Ray, 6 Cal 581; Number v. Ambu, 5 Mad 381; Panddu, 10 Bom. 199; or under sec. 247 owing to absence of the complainant—Lal, 1888 P.R. 14; Munshi, 1884 A.W.N. 115; Hardeo, 1891 A.W.N. 120; or under sec. 248 upon withdrawal of complaint—Himmat v. Bakhtawar, 1883 P.R. 24. But compensation cannot be awarded when the case is compounded under sec. 345. Though the accused is acquitted after compensation, yet it is not such an acquittal as to bring the case within the provisions of this section—Sangappa, Ratanlal 957; Harikisandas, 10 Bom.L.R. 1056; Khushali, 1888 P.R. 19; Sundar Singh, 30 P.R. 1910, 11 Cr.L.J. 638.

In order that compensation may be granted, it is necessary that there must be a complete discharge or acquittal. If the accused is charged with more offences than one, he must be discharged or acquitted of all the offences; a discharge or acquittal in respect of one of the offences is a partial discharge (showing that the complaint was at any rate partly true) and cannot entitle the accused to compensation—Mukti v. Jhotu, 24 Cal. 53; Muhammad Ali Khan v. Raja Ram, 40 All 610 (611), 19 Cr.L.J. 670; Nadar, 12 S.L.R. 87, 20 Cr.L.J. 106. If there are several accused, and some only of them are acquitted or discharged, the complainant may be ordered to pay compensation only to those who have been discharged or acquitted, but not to the others—Number v. Ambu, 5 Mad. 381; Gohru v. Amira, 1877 P.R. 15.

810. False and frivolous or vexatious:—Under the old law, if the charge was frivolous or vexatious, this was sufficient to entitle the accused to compensation; and it was not necessary that the charge must be false as well. If the charge was false, it was held in some cases that the accused was entitled to compensation, because a false charge was necessarily a vexatious charge though it was not frivolous—Benimadhab v. Kumud, 30 Cal 123 (F.B.); Ponnammal, 2 Weir 313 (314); Bindeshri, 26 All 512; Bai Asha, 5 Bom.L.R. 128; Gopal, 37 Bom 376, 14 Cr.L.J. 75; Ismail, 156 P.L.R. 1903; Shah Dawood v. Md Ibrahim, 11 Bur.L.T. 201, 19 Cr.L.J. 172, 43 I.C. 588 (589); Nga Mya v. Nga Kyan, 1914 U.B.R. 3 Qr. 31, 16 Cr.L.J. 92 (93); whereas in some other cases it was held that compensation could not be awarded if the case was false, because that would amount to summarily trying a person for an offence under sec. 211, I.P.C.—Paras v. Bendhi, 28 Cal 251; Ram Singh v. Mathura, 34 All 354 (355); Asha, 4 Bom.L.R. 645. Under the present law, the charge must be false as well as frivolous or vexatious. It is not sufficient if the charge is false only.

"We do not think that the procedure of sec. 250 should be used in every false case unless the case is also frivolous or vexatious. In more serious cases it is desirable that the Magistrate should act under section 476 with a view to the institution of a prosecution"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

The mere fact that a complaint is frivolous or vexatious does not necessarily mean that it must be false. Compensation can be awarded only if the complaint is false and also frivolous or vexatious—Assanmal v. Dilbar, 19 S.L.R. 66, 26 Cr.L.J. 1295. It is clear from the language of this section that compensation can be awarded thereunder only if "the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious." If the accusation is proved to be false but cannot be regarded to be frivolous or vexatious, the section does not justify the award of compensation. If the accusation is not proved to be false, no compensation can be awarded, however, frivolous or vexatious the conduct of the complainant might have been. A distinction clearly exists between a fact not being proved and being disproved. Where all that can be said is that the complainant failed to prove his allegation, it does not necessarily follow that his allegation was false and that this section applied—Bechan Prasad v. Jhari, 37 Cr.L.J. 424, 161 I.C. 49, 1936 A.L.J. 189, A.I.R. 1936 All. 363. It is only when the Magistrate is of opinion that the accusation against the accused was not only false but also either frivolous or vexatious that he can act under this section. The reason is that this section is not to be applied except in cases which are frivolous or vexatious. It is not intended to be applied in serious cases which are to be dealt with under the provisions of sec. 211, I. P. C. It is for this reason that a Magistrate must find that the case is frivolous or vexatious before he has jurisdiction to deal with the matter under this section—Ma Pu v. Maung Tun Pe, 41 Cr.L.J. 506, 187 I.C. 744, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 110.

The word 'vexatious' indicates an accusation merely for the purpose of annoyance—Benimadhub v. Kumud, 30 Cal. 123 (F.B.), 6 C.W.N. 799; Parsi v. Bendhi, 28 Cal. 251. An accusation cannot be said to be vexatious unless the main intention of the complainant was to cause annoyance to the person accused—Kouroud, 11 S.L.R. 55, 18 Cr.L.J. 1005; Bakaji v. Munkund Singh, 21 Cr.L.J. 226 (Nag.); Bhan v. Syed Chand, 26 Cr.L.J. 1033, 87 I.C. 921, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 31. If a prosecution is found to be malicious, i.e., brought on account of enmity it is necessarily a vexatious one—Kashi Prasad, 24 A.L.J. 161, 27 Cr.L.J. 300; Sheikh Faiz, 14 S.L.R. 168, 22 Cr.L.J. 120. A prosecution launched against a person on mere suspicion, when there is no evidence to connect that person with the offence, is false and vexatious—Dinshahji, 34 Bom.L.R. 289, 1932 Cr.C. 236 (237), 137 I.C. 129, 33 Cr.L.J. 392, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 177.

The word 'frivolous' means 'trifling,' 'silly,' or 'without due foundation'—Jaina v. Santuk, 21 Cr.L.J. 41 (Nag.). Whether the charge is frivolous or vexatious is a question of fact to be decided by the Magistrate investigating the complaint—Munisami Mudali, 2 Weir 319 (320). But the knowledge and intention of the complainant must be looked into. Compensation should not be granted to the accused where the complainant did not know that the complaint was false and it is clear that the intention of the complainant was not to vex or harass the accused—Kouroud, 11 S.L.R. 55, 18 Cr.L.J. 1005.

Where the complainant believed his case to be true at first but subsequently after enquires found that his belief had been proved to be untrue, it would be his duty frankly to tell the Court that he had made a mistake, and if he omits to do so it would show unwarrantable malice on his part and he would be liable to pay compensation—Shaik Dawood v. Md. Ibrahim, 11 Bur.L.T. 201, 19 Cr.L.J. 172, 43 I.C. 588 (589).

Where a person was charged with theft, but he was proved to have committed the act in the assertion of a bona fide claim of right, the accusation of theft is false, within the scope of sec. 250. In law, no distinction can be properly made between a false accusation as to the motive or intention which prompts a man in doing a certain act, and a false accusation as to his act—Ravishankar v. Savailal, 28 Bom.L.R. 89, 27 Cr.L.J. 448.

Where a criminal case was started, not really bona fide, but with a view to bringing pressure to bear against an opponent in a civil dispute, the Magistrate is abundantly justified in proceeding against the complainant under this section—Dahyabhai v. Tangania, 34 Cr.L.J. 878, 144 I.C. 922, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 233, 35 Bom.L.R. 484, 1933 Cr.C. 656.

811. 'By his order':—Under the old section, the order awarding compensation had to be passed in the order of discharge or acquittal of the accused, and was a part of the order of discharge or acquittal; so that the proceeding calling upon the complainant to show cause why an order of compensation should not be made, had to be taken and the complainant had to be heard on that aspect of the case, before the Magistrate passed an order of discharge or acquittal. See Haru Tanti v. Satish, 38 Cal 302 (303); Ram Singh v. Mathura, 34 All. 354 (355). This procedure has been considered by the Legislature as illogical, and consequently the section had been amended. Under the present section, the Magistrate is not bound to award compensation at the time of passing the order of discharge or acquittal; the latter order should only contain an order calling on the complainant to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay compensation.

Under the old law the order of discharge (or acquittal) and the order directing compensation had to be made simultaneously; i.e., the latter order had to be included in the former order; therefore, where the Magistrate at the time of discharging the accused made no order as to compensation, but on a subsequent day ordered that the complainant should pay compensation, the order was held to be illegal, because it was not passed simultaneously with the order of discharge—Safdar Husam, 25 All. 315 (316); Ram Singh v. Mathura, 34 All. 354 (355); Narpat Rai, 57 P.R. 1905, 3 Cr.L.J. 123; Haru Tanti v. Satish, 38 Cal 302 (303), 12 Cr.L.J. 6; Nanheylal v. Ranibahu, 10 N.L.R. 8, 15 Cr.L.J. 290 (291); Imamdin, 1913 P.L.R. 99, 14 Cr.L.J. 48. These cases are no longer correct. Under the present Code, it is not necessary that the order for compensation should be embodied in the order of discharge. The two orders may be passed in separate proceedings. It is only the order calling upon the complainant to show cause which is to be contained in the order of discharge or acquittal. The actual order for compensation is necessarily a subsequent order—Achru Mal, 7 Lah. 121, 27 Cr.L.J. 752, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 298, 95 I.C. 80; Rangnath, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 296, 1933 Cr.C. 1247, 146 I.C. 14, 34 Cr.L.J. 1163, 30 N.L.R. 15; Saudagar v. Aroor, 29 Cr.L.J. 680, 110 I.C. 232, 10 A.I.C.R. 430 (Lah.), 10 I.C. 232. This view was also taken in Lalit v. Kunja, 18 C.W.N. 702, 15 Cr.L.J. 150 (152); Ghanumal, 7 S.L.R. 123, 15 Cr.L.J. 504 (505); Jugal Kishore v. Abdul, 1905 A.W.N. 214, 2 Cr.L.J. 523 (524); Ghurbin v. Khalil, 36 All. 132 (136); Dhanu Kodi v. Muthusami, (1916) 2 M.W.N. 159, 17 Cr.L.J. 314 (315). Although the order calling upon the complainant to show cause must be included in the judgment of acquittal or discharge, still there is no illegality if the order to show cause, though not made a part of the judgment, is passed and signed immediately after the judgment, so that the order can be said to be a part of the same proceeding and a continuation of it (even though the order of acquittal and the order to show cause have two separate numbers)—Mangal Chand v. Makhan, 9 Pat. 100, 11 P.L.T. 691, 31 Cr.L.J. 875 (876); Ghulam v. Vir Bhan, 28 Cr.L.J. 592, 102 I.C. 560, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 515; Jairaj v. Bansi, 23 A.L.J. 1054, 27 Cr.L.J. 35 (36). This view was also taken in the old case of Punamchand, 8 Bom.L.R. 847, 4 Cr.L.J. 423. The case would be otherwise if the proceeding calling upon the complainant to show cause and ordering compensation is started as an independent proceeding separate from the order of discharge. Such a procedure is illegal—Safdar Husam, 25 All. 315 (316); Imam Din, 99 P.L.R. 1913, 14 Cr.L.J. 48.

A perusal of sec. 250, Cr. P. C., shows that it contemplates two stages—one when the complaint is dismissed and the accused is discharged or acquitted. At this stage if the Magistrate is of opinion that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious he should call upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation to the accused. The second stage comes when the complainant shows cause against the making of such order. Sub-sec. (2) of sec. 250, Cr. P. C., clearly provides that at this stage if the Magistrate is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious, he may "for reasons to be recorded" direct compensation within the limit prescribed under the section to be paid by him to the accused—Krishna Datt v. Brahma Datt, 38 Cr.L.J. 191, 166 I.C. 341, 1937 O.L.R. 15, 9 R.O. 306, 1937 O.W.N. 98, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh. 269. Sub-section (1) of sec. 250, Cr. P. C., contemplates that in the order in which the Magistrate discharges or acquits the accused, he may in that very order, call upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation and, although, strictly speaking, it is correct to say that the Magistrate calls upon the complainant to show cause only after he has discharged or acquitted the accused, it is not correct to say that the sub-section contemplates or requires two orders; one the order in which he acquits or discharges the accused; the other, the order in which he calls upon the complainant—if he thinks proper—to show cause why he should not pay compensation. It is true that in that sub-section it is not written "if the Magistrate finds" but it is written "if the Magistrate is of the opinion". But this is a mere verbal difference and should the Magistrate in his order under sub-sec. (1), sec 250, Cr. P. C., say "I find" instead of "I am of the opinion" it cannot be concluded therefrom that he has made up his mind that the complainant should pay the compensation or that he has come to an unalterable decision that the complaint was false and either frivolous or vexatious. It is necessary to emphasise only that before an order is passed under sub-sec. (2) the complainant shall be given an opportunity to show cause and that when an order under sub-sec. (2) is passed, all the conditions laid down in the sub-section are complied with—Talib Dalwar v. Sujan Saleh, 38 Cr.L.J. 121 (123), 166 I.C. 33, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 240, 9 R.S. 116, 1936 Cr.C. 1096, 30 S.L.R. 359.

Under sub-sec. (1) and sub-sec. (2) of sec. 250, Cr. P. C., therefore, the law contemplates two different orders, but in practice what often happens is that the order of discharge is not written out until after the Magistrate has given the complainant an opportunity to show cause. Then the Magistrate combines in one order the order of discharge and the order to pay compensation. Strictly speaking, two orders ought to be recorded but, if that is not done, he does not contravene substantially the provisions of the law—Wahad Ali Akon v. Sarajuddin Ukit, A.I.R. 1929 Cal 332, 122 I.C. 298, 31 Cr.L.J. 411.

Where there was no opinion expressed by the order of discharge or acquittal that the case was false and either frivolous or vexatious and there was no record of reasons such as is required by sub-sec. (2), sec. 250, Cr. P. C., before the order directing that compensation be paid by the complainant to the accused, the order that compensation be paid is bad and liable to be set aside—Chidambaram v. Chand Ali, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 301, 171 I.C. 71, 38 Cr.L.J. 1013, 10 R.R. 126.

There is no provision in the Code for an application by any accused person, after the order of discharge or acquittal has been passed, for the initiation of compensatory proceedings—Rangnath, A.I.R. 1933 Nag 296, 1933 Cr.C. 1247, 146 I.C. 14, 34 Cr.L.J. 1163, 30 N.L.R. 15.

Where there were two accused, and one of them was discharged, and the case against the other was adjourned to a subsequent date when he was acquitted and on the latter date the Magistrate required the complainant to show cause and then ordered him to pay compensation to each of the accused, held that the procedure followed was illegal. When the order of discharge was made against the first accused, the case against him was at an end, and in so far as payment of compensation to him was concerned, the order to show cause should have been made along with the order of discharge. The defect was not curable under sec. 537—Suresh v. Abdul Jabbar, 29 C.W.N. 127, 26 Cr.L.J. 449. But where several charges are brought against the same accused, and he is at first discharged on one charge and is subsequently acquitted in respect of the other charges, it is not illegal to pass an order of compensation at the time of the acquittal in respect of the latter charges. In fact, in such a case it is better for the Magistrate to take action under sec. 250 not at an intermediate stage of the trial but at the end—Ravishankar v. Savaial, 28 Bom.L.R. 89, 27 Cr.L.J. 448.

Notice to show cause :—The Magistrate should give the complainant an opportunity to show cause and raise any objection which he might urge—Mahadev, 24 Bom.L.R. 805, 23 Cr.L.J. 574, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 409; Pandurang v. Longman, 3 Bom.L.R. 777; Akloo v. Nowbat, 21 Cr.L.J. 751, 1 P.L.T. 558; In re Appalarasayya, 44 Mad. 51; Lalit v. Kunja, 18 C.W.N. 702, 15 Cr.L.J. 150; Gulzari Lal v. Ganga Ram, 9 A.L.J. 170, 13 Cr.L.J. 268; Sarupsing, 31 Cr.L.J. 767 (768), 144 I.C. 412, 27 S.L.R. 78. A.I.R. 1933 Sind 226, 1933 Cr.C. 795, Ind Rul 1933 Sind 186; Ma E Msaing v. The King, 39 Cr.L.J. 743, 176 I.C. 508, A.I.R. 1938 Rang 217, 11 R.R. 52, 1938 Rang L.R.

163. The contrary view taken in Panchan, 45 All 474, is rendered obsolete by the present amendment. Compensation cannot be awarded when the Magistrate disregarded the mandatory provision of this section and did not call on the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation—New Delhi Mun. Com v. Ram Bai, 37 Cr.L.J. 935, 164 I.C. 368, A.I.R. 1936 Lah 702, 1936 Cr.C. 719. It is imperative on the Magistrate to give the complainant an opportunity to show cause, and he cannot make the order absolute owing to the absence of the complainant—Mahadev, supra; Ghafur v. Laltu, 1891 A.W.N. 63; Subans v. Mahabir, 18 C.W.N. 1277, 15 Cr.L.J. 707; Gulzar Lal v. Ganga Ram, 9 A.L.J. 170, 13 Cr.L.J. 258; Municipal Board, Lucknow v. Abdul Aziz, 31 Cr.L.J. 44, 140 I.C. 652, 9 O.W.N. 913, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 8, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 37, 1933 Cr.C. 70. Under the present law, if the complainant is absent, summons to show cause must be issued to him. If this is not done, the order of compensation must be set aside, and the Magistrate should be directed to summon the complainant and give him an opportunity of showing cause before passing an order—Kalka v. Ranjit, 24 A.L.J. 170, 27 Cr.L.J. 128. If the complainant is present, he may be directed forthwith to show cause, and in the absence of any special reason, he is not entitled as a matter of right to an adjournment to enable him to consult a pleader and to give a written reply—Ishwarlal, 28 Bom.L.R. 98, 27 Cr.L.J. 430.

812. Who can be ordered to pay compensation:—The Magistrate can pass an order under this section against the person upon whose complaint or information an accusation was made. Where a person F made a complaint to a Magistrate, who sent the complaint to the police for inquiry and report, and the police after inquiry submitted a charge-sheet, and the case was found to be false, held that if the case be treated as instituted on complaint, then F could be directed to pay compensation; if this case be taken as instituted on the police charge-sheet, then also F would be treated as a person upon whose information given to the Magistrate (the complaint being treated as an information) the case was instituted, and in that view also it was open to the Magistrate to direct F to pay compensation to the accused—Farduddin, 24 A.L.J. 221, 27 Cr.L.J. 702 (703). Where a certain person J gave information to S to the effect that a certain constable had committed extortion, intending that a complaint should be made on his behalf to a Magistrate, and the complaint was subsequently dismissed as frivolous and the accused was acquitted, held that J was liable to give compensation to the accused. Although the information was conveyed to the Magistrate through S, still as J gave the information with the intention that it should be conveyed to a Magistrate, then clearly J was the 'person upon whose information the accusation was made' within the meaning of sec 250. The mere fact that he utilised S for conveying the information was immaterial—Bahawal Singh, 40 All 79 (81), A.I.R. 1918 All 111, 43 I.C. 108, 19 Cr.L.J. 76. If, on the other hand, he had merely in conversation told S about the case without any desire for or view to a prosecution or to the conveyance of the information to the Magistrate, then he would have been hardly liable for the intervention of S who took it upon himself to make a complaint to the Magistrate. In this latter circumstance, it would be S who would be liable to pay compensation—Ibid. In a Sind case, where D gave information of an offence to the Police at the instigation of H, and the accusation was found to be false, it was held that H was not liable to pay compensation, because he did not himself give the information to the Police, although he was the instigator. Sec 250 can be applied only against the person who gives the false information, not against the person who merely instigates the giving of false information. Nor can D be ordered to pay compensation unless he knew that the information which he gave was false—Sumar, 12 S.L.R. 76, 20 Cr.L.J. 100, A.I.R. 1918 Sind 25, 48 I.C. 990 (981). Where certain persons gave information as witnesses of an offence to a constable, and upon the constable's information to the Sub-Inspector a case was instituted which was afterwards found to be false, held that those persons could not be ordered to pay compensation, because they were not the "persons upon whose information the accusation was made" within the meaning of this section. It was the police constable upon whose information to the Sub-Inspector the case was instituted. This section is a penal one and should be construed strictly. There is no authority for introducing into it words which would extend the liability to pay compensation to individuals other than the actual complainant or other than the person who gives the information on which the case is instituted—Wali Mahomed, 13 S.L.R. 166, 21 Cr.L.J. 49, 54 I.C. 401, A.I.R. 1920 Sind 73. These two Sind cases appear to be in conflict with 40 All. 79 cited above.

An order under sec. 250 cannot be passed against the complainant, unless the complainant knew that his information was false. Where a false charge was lodged by the complainant on information supplied to him by another person, but there was no suggestion of any collusion between the complainant and that person, and there was no finding that the complainant knew that the information was false, held that the complainant could not be ordered to pay compensation under this section. The object of this section is that compensation should be recoverable from the person responsible for the false accusation—Kouroud, 11 S.L.R. 55, 18 Cr.L.J. 1005, A.I.R. 1917 Sind 73, 42 I.C. 733. See also Faizmahomed v. Emp., A.I.R. 1920 Sind 41, 59 I.C. 552, 22 Cr.L.J. 120, 14 S.L.R. 168.

Discussing the rulings quoted above it has been laid down that this section does not appear susceptible of a complete and logical application to all false and frivolous or vexatious cases. It will not apply, for instance, to punish the real complainant as against the formal complainant, but this remedy provided is a summary remedy and does not contemplate an inquiry which might be a long inquiry into a chain of informants to ascertain who is the real as against the formal complainant. Other remedies must be used in such cases—Muhammad Hashim v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Sind 134 (136), 41 Cr.L.J. 788, 189 I.C. 703 (F.B.).

Public officers are not exempted from the liability to pay compensation for frivolous and vexatious complaints—Narasayya v. Ramdas, 2 Weir 317 (318). Where a Municipal peon, under sanction of the Municipality, charged a certain person for an offence which was found to be false, the order of the Magistrate directing the peon to pay compensation to the accused was held to be legal—Bhima, Ratanlal 309.

Where a process-server of a Civil Court merely reported to the Court that he was obstructed by the accused in executing a writ of attachment, and a report was thereupon made by the Court to a Magistrate, who found the case to be false and directed the process-server to pay compensation to the accused, it was held that the order of the Magistrate was wrong, because the process-peon was not a complainant within the meaning of this section. It was the Civil Court (Sub-Judge) which actually made the complaint (but the Sub-Judge having acted judicially was not liable to the penalty provided in this section)—Keshab Lakshman, 1 Bom. 175; Ram Padairath, 26 All. 183 (184); Bharut v. Javed Ali, 20 Cal. 481 (482); Kishandas, 14 Bom L.R. 1166, 14 Cr.L.J. 1 (2). Where under an order of the Assistant Superintendent of Police, the Station House officer prepared a charge-sheet against the accused, and it was presented to the Magistrate by a constable, and the Magistrate discharged the accused and ordered the constable to pay compensation for making a vexatious complaint, held that the order was illegal, as the constable was not the person upon whose complaint or information the case was instituted—Subramanya v. Pakia, 21 M.L.J. 844, 12 Cr.L.J. 482 (following 1 Bom. 175).

A guardian or next-friend preferring a complaint on behalf of the minor is not liable to pay compensation—Isa v. Ranon, 83 P.L.R. 1912, 13 Cr.L.J. 136 (137).

Where a person A gave a false evidence, under the order of his superior officer B, that certain persons had committed an offence, but A had no personal knowledge of the offence, and proceedings against the accused were instituted on the basis of that deposition (which was treated as a complaint), held that A was liable to pay compensation, even though he had no personal knowledge of the offence and acted under the order of his superior officer. "If he chose to depose to a matter of which he had no personal knowledge, he must take the consequences, and look to his superiors to indemnify him—Narasayya v. Ramdas, (1899) 2 Weir 317 (318). But where proceedings were instituted against the accused upon information given by B, and A who was B's subordinate gave evidence as a witness in the inquiry held in the case by the Magistrate, held that A was not liable to pay compensation—Khasim v. Ramudu, 2 Weir 318.

A person preferring a complaint on behalf of another, e.g., a master preferring a complaint on behalf of his servant, cannot be ordered to pay compensation—Chorbyn v. Ameer Khan, 24 P.R., 1869. The question whether a servant can be held responsible for an information lodged on behalf of his master is a question of fact and depends on the further question whether the servant is merely the mouthpiece of his master and is merely giving expression to his master's accusation, or whether he joins personally in the accusation himself. In the former case, the servant cannot be held responsible under this section—Jagdambi v. Mahadeo, 14 C.W.N. 326 (328), 11 Cr.L.J. 201.

If a complaint is made against one person, and other persons are arrested in the course of the police investigation on clues furnished by the complainant and other persons interested in the case, the complainant is not liable for the accusation made by the "other persons interested in the case," but he is certainly liable for the accusation made by himself in the course of the police investigation and for the arrest of the persons consequent to such accusation—Jagdambi v. Mahadeo, 14 C.W.N. 326 (329), 11 Cr.L.J. 201 (202).

The word 'person' includes also a juristic person; according to sec. 3 (59) of the General Clauses Act it includes any company or association, or body of individuals whether incorporated or not. Therefore, a Municipal Committee can be ordered to pay compensation—Municipal Committee v. Rattan Chand, 24 Cr.L.J. 463 (Lah.).

813. To whom compensation can be awarded:—Compensation is awardable only to the person who has suffered from the accusation and not to his relatives—Abdool Rahim v. Mehrab, 89 P.R. 1856; Sadoola, 97 P.R. 1866; Debi Buksh, 25 P.R. 1868. Where there are several accused and one of them is discharged on the ground that the complaint against him is vexatious, only he can be awarded compensation but not the others—Gohra v. Amira, 1877 P.R. 15; Number v. Ambu, 5 Mad. 361. There is no provision in the Cr. P. C., that Government is to be compensated in any way under this section—Rangnath, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 296, 1933 Cr.C. 1247, 146 I.C. 14, 34 Cr.L.J. 1163, 30 N.L.R. 15.

814. Sub-section (2)—Record of objections, reasons, etc.:—The Magistrate before passing an order for compensation must comply with the provisions of sub-sec. (2) of this section; he cannot pass the order, without recording and considering any objection which the complainant may urge—Mahadev Ram Krishna, 23 Cr.L.J. 574, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 409, 24 Bom.L.R. 805; Pandurang v. Laxman, 3 Bom.L.R. 777; Nga Pwe, 1906 UBR (Cr. P. C.) 51, 5 Cr.L.J. 298; Akloo v. Nawbat, 1 P.L.T. 558, 21 Cr.L.J. 751; Chunni, 24 O.C. 261, A.I.R. 1921 Oudh. 247; Deonaram v. Chhatoo, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 157, 3 P.L.T. 203, 23 Cr.L.J. 261, Minhomal, 8 S.L.R. 25, 25 I.C. 994, 15 Cr.L.J. 666; Sekh Jonab Ali v. Hira Lal Pasban, 11 C.W.N. 62 (S.N.); Ma E Myaing v. The King, infra; if he omits to record the objections, it is more than an irregularity and cannot be cured by sec. 537—Nga Pwe, supra, Pir Mahomed v. Yacob, 30 Cr.L.J. 458, 115 I.C. 334, A.I.R. 1929 Sind. 113, 1929 Cr.C. 107.

Sub-section (2) of sec. 250, Cr. P. C., provides that the Magistrate must not only consider any cause which the complainant may show but must also record such cause. Where the Magistrate does not record any statement made by the complainant as showing cause against his being ordered to pay compensation but the points raised by him are stated in the order, it is not a sufficient compliance. The Magistrate must record the words used by the complainant when showing cause unless of course the complainant chooses to put his reasons in writing. If this was done, and the writing was filed, it would obviously be unnecessary for the Magistrate to record it again, and filing the written submission would in effect be recording the cause shown. Unless this is done, it is such an irregularity that it is not possible for the order for the payment of compensation to stand—Maung Theung Shwe, 39 Cr.L.J. 642, 175 I.C.

639, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 161, 11 R.R. 9. This section does not provide that the complainant's examination shall be recorded like that of an accused person, but if he shows cause verbally, what he says should be written down in the words used by him, in order that a Court of Appeal or revision may know exactly what he really meant or, if he prefers to show cause by filing a written statement, that written statement must be placed on the record and it is only after considering the cause so shown that an order can be passed directing him to pay compensation. Unless and until the directory provisions of this section are complied with, a Magistrate has no power to order payment of compensation and, therefore, the High Court has power to deal with the matter in revision—Ma E Myaing v. The King, 39 Cr.L.J. 743, 176 I.C. 508, 11 R.R. 52, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 247, 1938 Rang.L.R. 163.

The Magistrate is bound to consider the objections raised by the complainant and to record a judgment with reasons. A mere statement that the cause shown is not reasonable is insufficient—Deonarain v. Chhatoo, supra.

Moreover, a Magistrate should, in his order awarding compensation, state his reasons why he deems the complaint to be vexatious, and should also state in his judgment the facts of the case with a criticism of the incidents involved in it. Merely saying that the prosecution evidence is unsatisfactory, and that upon the evidence and written statement he considers the case as vexatious, is not sufficient—Amjad Ali v. Ashruf Ali, 10 C.W.N. 544, 3 Cr.L.J. 390. Before passing the order it is incumbent on the Magistrate to record a definite finding that the accusation against the accused was false and either frivolous or vexatious—Ibrahim v. Anant Ram, 34 Cr.L.J. 80, 140 I.C. 680, 33 P.L.R. 670, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 554, 1932 Cr.C. 718, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 26. When the accused are discharged, the recording of the reasons for ordering compensation to be paid is almost a condition precedent to the proper exercise of that power; the recording of reasons is in addition to the finding by the Magistrate that the accusation was either frivolous or vexatious. In the absence of record of reasons, the order of compensation is wrong—Thadiappan v. Veeraperumal, 21 L.W. 646, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1139, 90 I.C. 157, 26 Cr.L.J. 1501; Saleh, 33 Cr.L.J. 644, 138 I.C. 635, 26 S.L.R. 299, 1932 Cr.C. 692, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 156, Ind. Rul. 1932 Sind 85; Baloch, 25 Cr.L.J. 1038, 6 R.S. 250, 149 I.C. 946, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 18, 1934 Cr.C. 227; Krishna Datta v. Brahma Datta, 38 Cr.L.J. 191, 166 I.C. 341, 1937 O.L.R. 15, 9 R.O. 306, 1937 O.W.N. 98, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 269, 1937 A.Cr.C. 27; Chidambaram v. Chand Ali, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 301, 171 I.C. 71, 38 Cr.L.J. 1013, 10 R.R. 126. The recording of reasons is essential and an omission to do so vitiates the whole proceeding—Bhagwandin v. Jagdat, 39 Cr.L.J. 378, 173 I.C. 643, 1938 O.L.R. 132, 1938 O.A. 224, 1938 O.W.N. 288, 1938 A.Cr.C. 26, 10 R.O. 229, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 99. The object of the legislature in requiring Magistrates to record their reasons in such a case is that the power given under the section should not be used indiscriminately and in order to enable a Court of Appeal or revision to judge the sufficiency of the grounds on which the order is based—Krishna Datta v. Brahma Datta, supra; Thadiappan v. Veeraperumal, supra; Bhagwandin v. Jagdat, supra. But the reasons why the complaint is false and frivolous or vexatious have not got to be recorded under this section and it is beyond the power of the Magistrate to discover why the complainant made a false case. The reasons which have to be recorded are why he directs compensation to be paid—Ma Siri v. Maung Maung Lay, 37 Cr.L.J. 773 (775), 163 I.C. 163, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 230, 1936 Cr.C. 514. The words "for reasons to be recorded" referred to the payment of compensation and not to the finding of the accusation as false and vexatious. The Magistrate cannot be expected, when passing the order under sub-sec. (2), sec. 250, Cr. P. C., to set out at length the evidence in the case, nor can he be expected to exclude from his mind the evidence on record which he should have in mind. He will, of course, ordinarily find it necessary to refer to the evidence; he will record and consider carefully any cause the complainant shows in his defence. Above all, however, he must follow the words of the section—Talib Daluar v. Sajan Saleh, 33 Cr.L.J. 121 (123), 166 I.C. 33, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 240, 9 R.S. 116, 1936 Cr.C. 1096, 30 S.L.R. 359.

The Magistrate in directing that compensation should be paid must record his reasons. Where, therefore, the Magistrate has merely said that the written explanation of the complainant was unsatisfactory and has not explained in what way it was unsatisfactory or why he thought that that was a case in which compensation ought to be awarded to the accused, the order of the Magistrate must be held to be invalid—Ma Pu v. Maung Tun Pe, 41 Cr.L.J. 506, 187 IC 744, A.I.R. 1940 Rang 110.

When a notice is issued, then the complainant is entitled to show that the complaint was not false and either vexatious or frivolous—Faruqi v. Municipal Board, A.I.R. 1933 All. 814, 1933 A.L.J. 1367, 146 IC. 691, 35 Cr.L.J. 175. The complainant may show cause with reference to the evidence already recorded, but he cannot adduce further evidence to prove that the charge was a true one. This section does not require that separate proceedings should be held and fresh evidence taken—Chiraj Ali, 1898 A.W.N. 198. But where the Magistrate had discharged the accused in the main case after hearing only some of the witnesses produced by the complainant, the Magistrate, before awarding compensation, ought to hear the remaining witnesses of the complainant—Appalanarasayya, 44 Mad 51 (52); Sya Kjaw, 3 Bur.L.J. 26, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 293, 25 Cr.L.J. 1280; Maruthathal v. Ramaswami, 1933 M.W.N. 900. It is only after examination of all the evidence the complainant wants to adduce that a Magistrate can come to the conclusion that the case is false and vexatious. Though the Magistrate can discharge the accused at any stage, he is not entitled to order compensation without examining all the complainant's witnesses—Parthasarathi v. Krishnaswami, 51 Mad 337, 29 Cr.L.J. 114, 54 M.L.J. 641, A.I.R. 1928 Mad 169, 106 IC 706. The order passed without doing so may not be illegal but is one which is highly undesirable in the interests of justice—Gul Din v. Abdul Khalik, A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 178, 37 Cr.L.J. 298, 160 IC. 364, 1935 Cr.C. 1310. But where the Magistrate took all the evidence that was produced by or on behalf of the complainant and, for sufficient reasons, refused to issue a commission, or to move the District Magistrate for issue of a commission for the examination of a witness in a criminal trial, he has not refused, or omitted, to take the evidence produced in support of the prosecution. In such a case the order of discharge of the accused passed by him is perfectly legal and accordingly there is no legitimate ground of invalidity of the order under sec. 250, Cr. P. Code—D. K. Nath v. P. K. Nath, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 398, 1937 Rang.L.R. 159, 171 IC 921, 10 RR 202, 39 Cr.L.J. 29. The mere fact that a discrepancy occurred between the first two witnesses does not justify the conclusion that the complainant had falsely charged the accused—Gul Din v. Abdul Khalik, supra.

815. Amount and nature of compensation:—The loss sustained or the inconvenience undergone by the accused ought to serve as a guide to the Magistrate in awarding compensation—Sarnam, 1881 A.W.N. 167. But he cannot impose more than Rs. 50 (now Rs. 100)—Shankar, 1919 PR 15, 20 Cr.L.J. 495. If there are more than one accused, the Magistrate can pass an order directing Rs. 100 to be paid to each accused. Under this section, all that is prohibited is that compensation to the accused or to each or any other should not exceed Rs. 100 in amount. The section does not mean that if there are a number of accused persons, the total amount awarded to all of them must not exceed the maximum specified in the section—Fariduddin, 24 A.L.J. 221, 27 Cr.L.J. 702 (704).

The compensation is only by way of amends to the accused, and is not a fine; consequently, the amount can not be credited to Government—Jumna Das v. Ramia, 1866 PR 102; Ghoola v. Ameer, 1869 PR. 1. It is not a fine, but it is in the nature of damages for malicious prosecution though it is made recoverable in a summary way as if it were a fine—Byravalu, 26 Mad. 127 (129).

815A. Realisation:—By reason of the provisions of sec. 547, Cr. P. C., money ordered to be paid as compensation under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., is recoverable as if it were a fine; and the methods of recovering a fine are provided for by sec. 385, Cr. P. Code—Ram Chandra, 33 Cr.L.J. 958, 140 IC 72, 13 P.L.T. 536, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 301, 1932 Cr.C. 773, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 290 (F.B.), 639, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 161, 11 R.R. 9. This section does not provide that the complainant's examination shall be recorded like that of an accused person, but if he shows cause verbally, what he says should be written down in the words used by him, in order that a Court of Appeal or revision may know exactly what he really meant or, if he prefers to show cause by filing a written statement, that written statement must be placed on the record and it is only after considering the cause so shown that an order can be passed directing him to pay compensation. Unless and until the directory provisions of this section are complied with, a Magistrate has no power to order payment of compensation and, therefore, the High Court has power to deal with the matter in revision—*Ma E Myaing v. The Magistrate is bound to consider the objections raised by the complainant and to record a judgment with reasons. A mere statement that the cause shown is not reasonable is insufficient—Deonarain v. Chhatoo, supra.

Moreover, a Magistrate should, in his order awarding compensation, state his reasons why he deems the complaint to be vexatious, and should also state in his judgment the facts of the case with a criticism of the incidents involved in it. The section does not mean that if there are a number of accused persons, the total amount awarded to all of them must not exceed the maximum specified in the section—Fariduddin, 24 A.L.J. 221, 27 Cr.L.J. 702 (704).

The compensation is only by way of amends to the accused, and is not a fine; consequently, the amount can not be credited to Government—Jumna Das v. Ramia, 1866 P.R. 102; Ghoola v. Amecr, 1869 P.R. 1. It is not a fine, but it is in the nature of damages for malicious prosecution though it is made recoverable in a summary way as if it were a fine—Byravali, 26 Mad. 127 (129).

815A. Realisation:—By reason of the provisions of sec. 547, Cr. P. C., money ordered to be paid as compensation under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., is recoverable as if it were a fine; and the methods of recovering a fine are provided for by sec. 385, Cr. P. Code—Ram Chandra, 33 Cr.L.J. 958, 140 I.C. 72, 13 P.L.T. 536, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 301, 1932 Cr.C. 773, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 290 (F.B.).

816. Sub-section (2A)—Imprisonment in default of compensation:—If the compensation be not paid, the Magistrate may send the complainant to jail; but before doing so he may act according to the provisions of sec. 388, in order to realise the amount of compensation. The ruling in Byravalu, 26 Mad. 127 (129) that before sending the complainant to prison the Magistrate was bound to issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by distress, under sec. 388, is no longer good law, in view of the amendment made in sec. 388, which has now superseded the issue of warrant.

Since clause (1) specifically provides for the payment of compensation separately to each accused, the term of thirty days' simple imprisonment may be awarded in default of each such separate payment ordered—Ma Kha, 3 Rang. 93, 26 Cr.L.J. 821.

Where a complainant has to pay compensation to each of several accused the imprisonment which the Magistrate orders in default of payment should be ordered in respect of default of payment to each of the accused—Ma Pu v. Maung Tun Pe, 41 Cr.L.J. 506, 187 I.C. 744, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 110.

The Magistrate has no power to order that the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of compensation shall take effect after a term of detention in the Civil jail which had been ordered by a Civil Court under the C. P. Code in another case—Ma Kha, supra.

Under the old law, an order for imprisonment could be made only on failure to recover the compensation, i.e., it could be made only after there was some attempt to recover the money in the manner provided for recovery of fine, and the attempt failed. Such an order could not be made alternatively in the order for payment of compensation—Ramjeetan v. Durga, 21 Cal. 979; Venkathappa, 2 Weir 320; Hari, Ratanlal 611; Ismail, 156 P.L.R. 1903, 18 P.R. 1903; Pinnu, 18 All. 96; Manjhli v. Manik Chand, 19 All. 73; Dhanukodi v. Muthusami, (1916) 2 M.W.N. 159, 17 Cr.L.J. 314 (315); Hamir Chand, 1902 P.R. 14; Nga Myo v. Nga Kyan, 16 Cr.L.J. 92, 1914 U.B.R. 3rd. Qr. 31; Shib Nath v. Sarat, 22 Cal. 586; Parsi v. Bendhi, 28 Cal. 251; Priya Nath v. Basanti, 5 C.W.N. 213; Lalit Mohan v. Kunja, 18 C.W.N. 702, 15 Cr.L.J. 150; Akloo v. Nawbat, 1 P.L.T. 558, 21 Cr.L.J. 751. Under the new sub-section (2A) the order for imprisonment in the alternative can now be made in the order awarding compensation.

817. Sub-section (2C):—This section does not bar civil or criminal proceedings. The object of this section is not to punish the complainant but to award by a summary order some compensation to the person against whom a frivolous or vexatious complaint is brought, leaving it to him to obtain further redress against the complainant by a regular civil suit or criminal prosecution—Beni Madhab v. Kumud, 30 Cal 123 (129) (F.B.).

Proceeding under section 476:—The Joint Committee (1922) observe: "In more serious cases it is desirable that the Magistrate should proceed under sec. 476 with a view to the institution of a prosecution."

A Magistrate who passes an order of compensation under this section can subsequently make a complaint (under sec. 476) to prosecute the complainant for preferring a false charge under section 211, I. P. Code—Adikkhan v. Alagan, 21 Mad. 237; Gopala, 37 Bom. 376, 14 Cr.L.J. 75, 15 Bom.L.R. 49; Allabux, 10 S.L.R. 162, 18 Cr.L.J. 414; Hafiz Khan, 26 Cr.L.J. 527, 85 I.C. 367, 1 O.W.N. 878, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 558. Similarly, where the Magistrate makes a complaint for the prosecution of a complainant under section 211, I. P. Code, for bringing a false charge, he is not precluded from passing an order under this section directing the complainant to pay compensation to the accused—Nanke v. Ghan Saya, 1907 P.W.R. 30, 7 Cr.L.J. 231; Mathra Das v. Raja, 1901 P.R. 18; Achar v. Pirushah, 7 S.L.R. 10, 14 Cr.L.J. 437; Contra—Bachu v. Jagdan, 26 Cal. 181; Shib Nath v. Sarat, 22 Cal 586. But, of course, it is discretionary with the Magistrate to make a complaint under sec. 476 for the prosecution of the complainant or to proceed under this section, and the question whether the discretion has been rightly exercised by the Magistrate depends upon the facts of the particular case. If the false charge is of such a nature that a prosecution is necessary on grounds of public policy, the Magistrate would exercise his discretion wrongly in awarding compensation instead of making a complaint under sec 476. But if the charge is such that no prosecution is necessary, on grounds of public policy, then the exercise of his discretion in awarding compensation is proper—Tanni Reddi, 27 Mad. 59. See also Laji Hari, 20 Cr.L.J. 226 (Pat.).

818. Sub-section (3)—Appeal:—Under the old law, no appeal could lie against an order of compensation passed by a 1st class Magistrate—Buru, 1 Bom L.R. 350; under the present law, an appeal is allowed from an order of such Magistrate if the compensation awarded exceeds rupees fifty.

Whenever a complainant has been ordered to pay compensation exceeding rupees fifty, he has a right of appeal, whether the amount is awarded to one accused, or is ordered to be distributed among a number of accused persons in sums not exceeding fifty rupees—Augustine Pereira v. Duming Demello, 49 Bom 440, 26 Cr.L.J. 480, 26 Bom L.R. 1243. This clause does not limit the right of appeal to cases where the compensation awarded to each individual accused exceeds rupees fifty. Where the total amount directed to be paid to several accused persons exceeds Rs. 50, a right of appeal exists—Assanmal v. Dilbar, 19 S.L.R. 66, 26 Cr.L.J. 1295; Sarab Dial v. Bir Singh, 9 Lah. 462, 29 Cr.L.J. 430, A.I.R. 1928 Lah 638; Sumaria, 24 A.L.J. 167, 27 Cr.L.J. 146, 91 I.C. 882; Sobhit, 7 P.L.T. 552, 26 Cr.L.J. 1504, 90 I.C. 160.

In an appeal under this sub-section it is open to the Appellate Court to go into all the facts of the case and after going into those facts to determine whether the case was false and vexatious and whether the order for compensation was right and whether the amount of compensation was suitable—Surendra v. Basanta, 35 C.W.N. 1151. But once it has been decided that a case is false and frivolous or vexatious, then it is a matter within the Magistrate's discretion as to whether it is one in which compensation should be given or not and the Appellate Court is not entitled to set aside an order for payment of compensation in such a case save for very cogent reasons. The Appellate Court is not entitled to alter the Magistrate's order because, in its opinion, the accused's defence might not be a true one—L. R. Abrol v. S. L. Surpaul, 39 Cr.L.J. 587, 175 I.C. 357, 10 R.R. 488, A.I.R. 1938 Rang 200.

In an appeal from an order under this section the Appellate Court has ample power to take additional evidence—Seeniah v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1930 Mad 483, 53 Mad. 688, 1930 Cr.C. 507, 58 M.L.J. 414, 31 M.L.W. 524, 123 I.C. 809, 31 Cr.L.J. 602, 1930 M.W.N. 534.

Notice to accused—Though there is no express provision that notice should go to the accused, still it is desirable that the accused should have notice of the appeal in order that he may have an opportunity of supporting the order passed in his favour—Palaniappa, 29 Mad 187; Venkatarama v. Krishna, 38 Mad 1091; Dinshakji, 34 Bom L.R. 289, 33 Cr.L.J. 392, 137 I.C. 129, A.I.R. 1932 Bom 177, 1932 Cr.C. 236 (237); Ram Chand v. Jesa Ram, 25 Cr.L.J. 209, A.I.R. 1924 Lah 675 (676); Bharasa v. Sukhdeo, 27 Cr.L.J. 1086, 97 I.C. 62, 53 Cal 989, 43 C.L.J. 583, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1054; Momoon v. Ibrahim, 20 S.L.R. 41, 27 Cr.L.J. 248. Contra—Lachman v. Babu, 34 Cr.L.J. 533, 143 I.C. 86, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah 310, 34 P.L.R. 442, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 515, 1933 Cr.C. 816. But absence of notice to the accused will not vitiate the appellate proceedings nor make the appellate order liable to be set aside—Nagi Reddi v. Basappa, 33 Mad. 89; Krishna v. Narayana, 41 M.L.J. 172, 62 I.C. 823, 22 Cr.L.J. 583; Rashid Muhammad, 8 Lah 568, 28 Cr.L.J. 416; Pena v. Venkatesa, 33 Cr.L.J. 595, 138 I.C. 385, 1932 M.W.N. 722.

Notice to Crown—It is doubtful whether notice of the appeal should be given to the officer appointed by the Local Government under sec 422, because it is a matter in which the accused is really interested and the Crown is very little interested. But the safer course in such cases is to give notice to that officer under sec. 422—Palaniappa, 29 Mad. 187; Krishna v. Narayana, supra. Notice to the Crown is a mere formality in an appeal of this description, for there can be very few cases in which the Crown would deem it necessary to oppose the appeal. Omission to send notice to the Crown is not a ground of interference with the Appellate Court's order—Guruswami v. Tirumurthi, 27 M.L.J. 629, 15 Cr.L.J. 648; Peria v. Venkatesa, 33 Cr.L.J. 596, 138 I.C. 385, 1932 M.W.N. 722.

819. Revision:—A superior Criminal Court has power under sec. 435 to examine an order under sec. 250 in the exercise of its ordinary revisional jurisdiction—Harris v. Peal, 17 A.L.J. 896, 58 I.C. 351, 21 Cr.L.J. 767. The High Court in revision can set aside an order of compensation passed by a Magistrate, and can, under sec. 423 (d) read with sec. 439, direct the money to be refunded to the complainant—Safdar Husain, 25 All. 315 (316); Howanna v. Jasu, 1885 P.R. 12.

Death of party:—If, pending the revision, the complainant (i.e., the party who has been ordered to pay compensation) dies, the revision petition does not abate but may be continued by his legal representatives—Prem Singh v. Bhola, 24 P.R. 1908, 9 Cr.L.J. 103.

Where after the passing of the Magistrate's order the accused died, and the complainant applied to the High Court for revision, the High Court refused to pass any order, because no order could be passed to the prejudice of an accused person who being dead could not be served with notice—Govinda v. Keshavrao, Ratanlal 634.

CHAPTER XXI.

OF THE TRIAL OF WARRANT-CASES BY MAGISTRATES.

820. Change of procedure:—If a warrant case is tried as a summons case, the procedure is illegal and the conviction is liable to be set aside—Chinnappayan, 29 Mad. 372; Gaya Prasad, 28 N.L.R. 18, 33 Cr.L.J. 573 (574), 138 I.C. 175. But in Maluk, 31 Cr.L.J. 123, 120 I.C. 526, A.I.R. 1930 Sind 53, 1930 Cr.C. 69, it was held to be a mere irregularity, curable by sec. 537, Cr. P. C., unless it actually caused a failure of justice. If in such trial the accused is acquitted under sec. 245, the order of acquittal will at best operate as an order of discharge under sec. 253—Jadu, 1886 A.W.N. 260; Lajja Ram, 1888 A.W.N. 96.

The fact that a summons instead of a warrant has been issued in a warrant case does not justify the procedure to be as in a summons case—Nand Lal v. Bhagiratty, 10 W.R. 31. That a Magistrate has power to change his mind in regard to the exact offences which a complaint discloses before he begins to enquire into the case cannot be denied on general principles. Where, therefore, though the Magistrate had issued summons to the accused for an offence under sec. 426, I. P. C., an offence triable as a summons case, he did not apply sec. 242, Cr. P. C., when the accused was brought before him, but informed him then and there that on reconsideration he held that other offences also were disclosed by the complaint, and proceeded from that moment to apply sec. 252, Cr. P. C., the procedure was not illegal—Maloi, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 944, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 725, 1937 M.W.N. 981, 46 M.L.W. 811, 1937 M.Cr.C. 374, 172 I.C. 496, 39 Cr.L.J. 153.

If a Magistrate begins a trial as a summons case and then finds that an offence triable only under warrant case procedure has been committed, he is bound to apply warrant case procedure thenceforward and he is not in any way disqualified from proceeding with the trial—K. V. Venkata Ramanier, 39 Cr.L.J. 958, 177 I.C. 814, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 815, 47 M.L.W. 739, 1938 M.W.N. 589, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 360, I.L.R. 1938 Mad. 814, 11 R.M. 385, dissenting from Rajaratanam Pillai, 59 Mad. 442, 161 I.C. 116, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 341, 1936 Cr.C. 384, 37 Cr.L.J. 501, 70 M.L.J. 340, 1936 M.W.N. 187, 43 M.L.W. 367, 8 R.M. 820, where a contrary view has been taken and it has also been held that once a Magistrate has taken cognizance of a summons case, he cannot convict an accused person for anything but an offence triable as a summons case.

If a trial is commenced as a warrant case, it must be concluded as a warrant case and not as a summons case; a sudden change of procedure from Ch. XXI to Ch. XX in the midst of trial is illegal—Munshi Tehi, 2 P.L.T. 482, 22 Cr.L.J. 683, 63 I.C. 619 (620); Ganga Saran, 19 A.L.J. 6, A.I.R. 1921 All 282 (284), 22 Cr.L.J. 146, 59 I.C. 850; Govind, 28 Cr.L.J. 227, 99 I.C. 1027, A.I.R. 1927 All 270; Amirbi, 34 Cr.L.J. 340, 142 I.C. 393, 1933 Cr.C. 786, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 192, Ind. Rul 1933 Nag. 114. When the cross-examination of prosecution witnesses was reserved, the defence should be given an opportunity to cross-examine them, even if the charge is reduced to an offence triable as a summons case in the midst of the trial which was commenced as a warrant case—Devi Dial v. Rattan, 29 Cr.L.J. 235, 107 I.C. 285, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 660.

If an offence is triable exclusively as a warrant case, the Magistrate commits an illegality (not merely an irregularity) in splitting up the offence into its component parts in order to enable him to try it as a summons case—Ganga Saran, supra.

The question whether a case is triable as a summons case or as a warrant case is to be decided by reference to the complaint and the notices issued to the accused and also to the commencement of the case under certain sections of the Penal Code, and not by reference to the particular sections under which the conviction takes place—Ganga Saran, supra.

If two charges arising out of the same facts under the same circumstances are framed, one of a summons case and another of a warrant case, the procedure should be as laid down for a warrant case—Raj Narain v. Tamoli, 11 Cal. 91; Sobhanadri, 39 Mad. 503, 29 I.C. 668, 16 Cr.L.J. 540, 2 M.L.W. 574, 18 M.L.T. 92, 1915 M.W.N. 546; Maung Gale, 3 Cr.L.J. 350; Raghavulu v. Singaram, 41 Mad. 727 (728), 45 I.C. 517, A.I.R. 1918 Mad. 371, 19 Cr.L.J. 613, 7 M.L.W. 520; Nga Lun Mg., 34 Cr.L.J. 1180, 146 I.C. 173, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 343, 1933 Cr.C. 1153.

See Notes 786 and 795.

251. The following procedure shall be observed by Magistrates in the trial of warrant cases.

Procedure in warrant-cases.

821. Procedure must be strictly followed:—In trying warrant cases, the procedure of this chapter must be strictly followed. The Magistrate cannot follow a materially different procedure which had grown up by usage in the course of years, however convenient it may be. A trial conducted in such a procedure is more than an irregularity, not curable by sec. 537—Dosabhai, 17 Bom.L.R. 490, 16 Cr.L.J. 538. A Presidency Magistrate must follow the procedure laid down in this chapter, subject to the special provisions of sec. 362 as to the mode of taking down the evidence—Abdul Ratanlal 539.

During the trial of an author of a book under sec. 153A, I. P. Code, after the evidence of the prosecution witnesses was recorded, the Government proscribed the book under sec. 99A, Cr. P. Code and the accused then applied under sec. 99B to the High Court, but the application was dismissed on the ground that the book contained the matter falling under sec. 153A, I. P. Code. Thereupon, the Magistrate, without following the procedure of warrant cases any further, shut out all cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and the production of defence witnesses, and convicted the accused under sec. 153A. Held that in view of the order of the High Court the Magistrate was not bound to allow or record any further evidence in the case, and was justified in shutting out all evidence and convicting the accused—Kalicharan, 25 A.L.J. 846, 28 Cr.L.J. 785 (786).

252. (1) When the accused appears or is brought before a Magistrate, such Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complaint and take all such evidence as may be produced in connection with the prosecution.

Provided that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court.

(2) The Magistrate shall ascertain, from the complainant or otherwise, the names of any persons likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and to be able to give evidence for the prosecution, and shall summon to give evidence before himself such of them as he thinks necessary.

Change:—The proviso has been added by sec. 70 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. A similar change has been made in sec. 244, q. v. This amendment follows clause (aa) of sec. 200.

821A. Scope:—The first part of sec. 252, Cr. P. C., refers only to such evidence as is offered on the day when the accused appears or is brought before the Court; it refers only to the initial production of the accused, and it does not refer to every appearance of the accused. That would be opposed to the plain sense of the section, the object of which is that such evidence as is ready and appears against the accused shall be taken directly he appears in Court. If the case is initiated on a challan, the accused is produced, and the prosecution witnesses on the day fixed. The prosecution witnesses who have been bound over to appear by the Police are then examined. Undoubtedly, if it is necessary to adjourn the case, such witnesses still come under the category of "such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution" as they are produced on the date of hearing; but, where the case is initiated on a complaint, the phrase "such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution" refers only to such witnesses as the complainant may bring with him and who have not been summoned by the Court. Where on the day when the accused appears in answer to the summons which has been issued, the complainant appears and he has no witnesses present with him, and the Court neglects to examine the complainant on that day, he fails to comply with the provisions of the first part of sec. 252, Cr. P. C., but that would not vitiate the trial. There is, then, no evidence produced in support of the prosecution, and the next part of sec. 252, Cr. P. C., then comes into play. What the second part of sec. 252, Cr. P. C., authorizes is what is done in every complaint case under another name: the filing of a list of witnesses whom the complainant desires shall be summoned. It follows, then, that the first stage contemplated in the first part of sec. 252, Cr. P. C., has passed and the hearing of any unsummoned witnesses after that date is a matter within the Court's discretion. The fact that the Magistrate summons all the witnesses without making a selection or enquiring from the complainant broadly on the points in respect to which they are to depose does not alter the fact that the acceptance of the list filed by the complainant in its entirety is a compliance with the second part of the section. It is only where a list is unduly long and appears to have been filed vexatiously that the magistracy avail themselves of the power, which the law provides, to scrutinize the list to prevent undue harassment of the accused and an unwarranted prolongation of the trial—Rahat Ali v. Muhammad Murad, 39 Cr.L.J. 62 (64), 10 R.N. 161, 172 I.C. 113, A.I.R. 1938 Nag 103.

822. "Is brought before a Magistrate":—It is immaterial if the accused is brought before the Court by illegal arrest. Where a subject of a Native State committing an offence in British territory was arrested in that State by the British Police, without the intervention of the State authorities, held that this illegal arrest would not vitiate his trial in British India—Sobha, 1889 P.R. 6; Nga Po, 7 Bur.L.R. 66.

'Hear the complainant':—'Hearing a complainant' does not involve his examination on oath, and the trial of a warrant case is not vitiated merely because it did not begin with an examination of the complainant—Puthen Vettil Kunhi, 42 M.L.J. 108, 23 Cr.L.J.

203, A.I.R. 1922 Mad 126 (128). Although the section makes it incumbent upon a Magistrate to hear the complainant (if the latter appears in support of the complaint) it does not vitiate a conviction in which the complainant has not been examined—Khudal Ram, 35 Cr L J. 1354 (1359), 158 I.C. 324, 16 P.L.T. 693, A.I.R. 1935 Pat 515; Rahat Ali v. Muhammad Murad, supra.

823. Taking evidence for the prosecution:—As soon as the accused is brought before the Magistrate he has a right to have the evidence against him recorded at as early a period as possible; and the fact that there is or may be a great body of evidence forthcoming against him is not a good ground for his detention for an inordinate period—Manikam; 6 Mad 63.

It is not fair for the prosecution to press a case against a man when the complainant is not a witness—Rex v. Krishnan, A.I.R. 1940 Mad 329 (333), 1939 M.W.N. 1213, 1939 M.Cr.C. 289.

The prosecution ought to call only those witnesses who will support the prosecution case and no others. It is a mistake to suppose that the prosecution is bound to call all relevant evidence, and that if any witnesses are not produced the Court should draw the presumption under sec. 114, Illus. (g), Evidence Act. The prosecution is not bound to call any witnesses who are not truthful witnesses. On the other hand, if there are witnesses who are truthful and respectable, and they speak against the prosecution, it is the duty of the prosecution to withdraw the case—Bhuban Bejoy, 37 C.W.N. 1098 (1101). See Note 893.

The witnesses must be examined orally. Where the witnesses common to three cases were first examined-in-chief in only one case, and their deposition was recorded by a typewriter in triplicate, one copy being made part of the record in each case, held that the procedure in the other two cases was illegal—Mazhar Ali, 50 Cal 223 (226).

If a prosecution witness is examined after the whole of the defence evidence has been taken, the procedure is illegal and vitiates the trial, so that the trial should commence anew from the stage where the prosecution witness should have been examined—Karam Chand, 29 P.L.R. 613, 29 Cr L.J. 844.

In a warrant case sufficient evidence to support the charge must be recorded before a charge can be framed and the accused called on to plead. Where this is not done and the accused is convicted merely on his pleading guilty, the conviction is illegal—Natabar, 27 C.W.N. 923.

823A. Right of Cross-examination:—The Magistrate should at once give the accused an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, if they should so desire, even though the charge may not be framed—Ashirbad v. Maju, 8 C.W.N. 838. But this is not the same thing as saying that the Court must give him an opportunity. No doubt, sec. 256 does not prohibit cross-examination at a previous stage but that is not the same as saying that the accused has any right to cross-examine. Until the stage of the case provided for in sec. 256 is reached the accused has no right to cross-examine. The Magistrate may in his discretion allow him to do so, and probably if the accused request, would allow him to do so but the accused cannot claim as of right to cross-examine until the charge has been framed—C. A. Mathew, A.I.R. 1929 Cal 822, 1929 Cr.C. 669, 125 I.C. 281, 31 Cr L.J. 809. See also Q-E v. Sagal Samba, 20 Cal. 642 (663).

The Allahabad High Court has taken the same view and has held that although the accused has no absolute right of cross-examination before the framing of the charge, Magistrates would generally be expressing a proper discretion if they did permit some cross-examination at least at that stage—Lashmi Narain, A.I.R. 1931 All 621, 1931 Cr.C. 973, 1932 A.L.J. 5, 54 All 121.

In Lockley, 43 Mad 411 (415), 55 I.C. 345, A.I.R. 1920 Mad 201, Seshagiri Ayyar, J., in connection with a different matter, remarked: "An accused has the right to cross-examine the witnesses before the charge is framed, he has a right of re-cross-examining the witnesses present in Court after the charge is framed; he has a further right subject to certain conditions of resummoning the prosecution witnesses after entering upon his defence." In Varisi Rowther, 46 Mad. 449 (463), 73 I.C. 163, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 609, 24 Cr.L.J. 547, Devadoss, J., without discussing this point, observed: "The accused in a warrant case has three opportunities of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses, once before the charge is framed, secondly, under sec. 256, and thirdly, after he has entered on his defence" This point was, however, considered directly by the Madras High Court in Muthiah Chetty, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 735, 19 M.L.W. 391, 81 I.C. 44, 25 Cr.L.J. 556, where Wallace, J., observed: "No Magistrate or Court can refuse to allow an accused person to cross-examine prosecution witnesses, before charge is framed, and the Magistrate's procedure in refusing to allow such cross-examination was most irregular and in contravention of the law. Without going into the large question whether that procedure has rendered illegal the charge framed, on evidence so irregularly taken, I consider that the fairest course to the accused is to cancel the charge and direct that the cross-examination of the witnesses be now permitted"

In the trial of a warrant case the Magistrate is required under the provisions of sec. 252, Cr. P. C., to take all the evidence produced in support of the prosecution. "Evidence," there can be no doubt, includes the examination, cross-examination and re-examination of a witness—Muhammad Rahim, 36 Cr.L.J. 581 (587), 154 I.C. 762, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 13, 1935 Cr.C. 124 (F.B.).

The right of immediate cross-examination is inherent and this is a matter so clear that its existence has always been assumed—Gurudin, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 8, 36 Cr.L.J. 578, 154 I.C. 369, 1935 Cr.C. 77.

In Md. Hussain v. Mirza Fakhruallah, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 298, 9 O.W.N. 782, 34 Cr.L.J. 58, 140 I.C. 689, 1932 Cr.C. 838, 8 Luck 138, there has been a difference of opinion on this point. Kisch, J., has held that although a Magistrate would be well advised to allow cross-examination before the charge is framed, until the charge is framed the accused has no absolute right in law to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. Srivastava, J., has, on other hand, held that there can be no doubt that the evidence recorded under sec. 252 is made use of against the accused when the charge is framed against him and that this cannot be justified unless the accused is allowed the right and opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed.

In a warrant case until the stage of the case provided for in sec. 256 is reached the accused has no right to cross-examine. That being so the evidence of a prosecution witness, who gave evidence before the framing of the charge and cannot be produced for cross-examination in certain circumstances mentioned in sec. 33 of the Indian Evidence Act, is not admissible in evidence under the said section—C. A. Mathews, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 822, 1929 Cr.C. 669, 125 I.C. 281. A contrary view has, however been taken in Gurudin, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 8 (11) and Nga Ba On, 28 Cr.L.J. 861, 104 I.C. 637, 6 Bur.L.J. 144, A.I.R. 1927 Rang 248.

824. Summoning witnesses:—Sub-section (1) lays down that the Magistrate shall take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution. This means that the complainant should first of all himself produce what evidence he can, and the Magistrate shall proceed to hear it. The Court is apparently not bound to issue process for such witnesses or to grant time for their production, but if they are produced, he must record their evidence. Next, when the complainant has done all he can without the assistance of the process of the Court, it is then for the Magistrate to ascertain under sub-sec (2), from the complainant or otherwise, the names of other persons likely to be able to give evidence, and he must summon such of those as he thinks necessary, i.e., such of those as he thinks will be of value in assisting the prosecution case—Menon v. Krishna Nayar, 49 Mad 978, 51 M.L.J. 328, 27 Cr.L.J. 1123 (1124), 97 I.C. 643, 24 M.L.W. 304, 1926 M.W.N. 730, A.I.R. 1926 Mad 989. See also Rahat Ali v. Muhammad Murad in Note 821A. The Magistrate must use his discretion in selecting, out of the list of witnesses, those not to be subjected to inconvenience by unnecessarily summoning them. A Magistrate ought not to send for any person whom the complainant has named in a supplementary list, without considering whether he is a necessary witness. "A witness is not an inanimate being and is not to be moved about as if he were a stick or stone. He is a living person who has his work to do and whose convenience has to be considered"—Sitab Singh v. Dalganjan, 12 A.L.J. 15, 14 Cr.L.J. 682 (683), 21 I.C. 1002, A.I.R. 1914 All. 526. At the same time, the duty of seeing that all evidence essential to the prosecution case is before the Court is thrown upon the Magistrate himself. So, it is not open to a Magistrate to acquit on the ground that the prosecution has failed to produce a necessary witness—Maiku Lal, 12 O.L.J. 632, 2 O.W.N. 584, 26 Cr.L.J. 1266, 88 I.C. 1042.

The section does not make it obligatory on the Magistrate to summon all the witnesses whose names are given him by the complainant—Musahru v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 355 (358), 21 P.L.T. 13, 1940 P.W.N. 83, 19 Pat. 413. But the Magistrate cannot arbitrarily refuse to summon the witnesses named by the complainant; it is his duty to issue summons to those persons named by the complainant who are likely to give useful evidence. In order to ascertain the names of necessary witnesses, the Magistrate should put questions to the complainant in proper form. The question to be asked is not whether the complainant has any more witnesses whom he can produce without summons, but whether he can inform the Court of any witnesses who will have to be brought by process. This question is to be asked when the evidence produced in support of the prosecution has been taken, i.e., after the witnesses have been examined, cross-examined and re-examined before the frame of charge—Menon v. Krishna Nayar, 4th Mad. 978, 51 M.L.J. 328, 27 Cr.L.J. 1123 (1124), 97 I.C. 643, 24 M.L.W. 304, 1926 M.W.N. 730, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 989.

It is clearly a grave error on the part of the Magistrate to refuse to summon any witnesses whom the complainant cited even before the stage indicated in sec. 252 (2), Cr. P. C.—Seth Thakurdas v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 192 (197), 9 R.N. 144, 1936 Cr.C. 805, 1 I.R. 1936 Nag. 205, 166 I.C. 709, 38 Cr.L.J. 307.

After the witnesses in support of the prosecution are heard, it is the duty of the Magistrate to see that the prosecutor is not allowed to set the Court on to a roaming inquiry, summoning persons in the hope that something might be elicited which may help his case. The prosecutor must come with his case fully prepared and there is no section in the Code which authorises him to file a fresh list of prosecution witnesses—Sitab Singh v. Dalganjan, 12 A.L.J. 15, 14 Cr.L.J. 682 (683), 21 I.C. 1002, A.I.R. 1914 All. 526; Hajari Tika Lodhi v. Emp., A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 156, 150 I.C. 916, 1934 Cr.C. 660, 7 R.N. 30, 35 Cr.L.J. 1163. See also Gobind Sahai, 15 Cr.L.J. 363, 12 A.L.J. 15.

Under sec. 252 (2), Cr. P. C., a Magistrate can summon witnesses and take their evidence in order to find out whether an offence has really been committed or not, even when the complainant does not like to proceed with the case—Nagaswami Naidu v. Ramaswami Naicken, 1937 M.W.N. 727.

It is not proper for the Magistrate to issue a warrant in the first instance; it is only when the summons is disobeyed that serious measures may be taken—Kala Singh, 1907 P.W.R. 22, 6 Cr.L.J. 275.

Process fee and expenses :—There is nothing in this Code which enables a Magistrate to demand from even the complainant the expenses to be incurred by his witnesses, though such a power is conferred by sec. 244 (3) in a summons case—Bridhichand v. Lakhmichand, 8 N.L.R. 65, 13 Cr.L.J. 554; Ghulam Mohiyyud-Din v. Sardara, 39 Cr.L.J. 624, 175 I.C. 555, 40 P.L.R. 650, 10 R.L. 746, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 444; Patni Yogambamma, 40 Cr.L.J. 566, 181 I.C. 569, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 265, 1939 M.W.N. 118, 48 M.L.W. 969, 1939 M.Cr.C. 10. The Magistrate is to summon under sec. 252 (2), Cr. P. C., at the expense of Government, such of the complainant's witnesses as he considers to be necessary, even though no challan was sent up in the case against the accused by the Police—Ghulam Mohiyyud-Din v. Sardara, supra. The dismissal of a complaint in a warrant case for non-payment of process fee is illegal—Palannagan Pitchiradu, 2 Weir 323. The wording of this section clearly indicates that the issue of summons in such cases is on the initiative of the Magistrate himself, and, consequently, if fees are to be levied, the expenses must fall on the Magistrate's budget and not on the complainant—Mfg. San Nyein, 27 Cr.L.J. 415, 93 I.C. 79, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 13,

In Varisi Rowther, 46 Mad. 449 (463), 73 I.C. 163, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 609, 24 Cr.L.J. 547, Devadoss, J., without discussing this point, observed: "The accused in a warrant case has three opportunities of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses, once before the charge is framed, secondly, under sec 256, and thirdly, after he has entered on his defence." This point was, however, considered directly by the Madras High Court in Muthiah Chetty, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 735, 19 M.L.W. 391, 81 I.C. 44, 25 Cr.L.J. 556, where Wallace, J., observed: "No Magistrate or Court can refuse to allow an accused person to cross-examine prosecution witnesses, before charge is framed, and the Magistrate's procedure in refusing to allow such cross-examination was most irregular and in contravention of the law. The right of immediate cross-examination is inherent and this is a matter so clear that its existence has always been assumed—Gurudin, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 8, 36 Cr.L.J. 578, 154 I.C. 369, 1935 Cr.C. 77.

In Id. Hussain v. Mirza Fakhruallah, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 298, 9 O.W.N. 782, 34 Cr.L.J. 58, 140 I.C. 689, 1932 Cr.C. 838, 8 Luck. 138, there has been a difference of opinion on this point. Dalganjan*, 12 A.L.J. 15, 14 Cr.L.J. 682 (683), 21 I.C. 1002, A.I.R. 1914 All. 526. At the same time, the duty of seeing that all evidence essential to the prosecution case is before the Court is thrown upon the Magistrate himself. So, it is not open to a Magistrate to acquit on the ground that the prosecution has failed to produce a necessary witness—Maiku Lal, 12 O.L.J. 632, 2 O.W.N. 584, 26 Cr.L.J. 1266, 88 I.C. 1012.

The section does not make it obligatory on the Magistrate to summon all the witnesses whose names are given him by the complainant—Musahru v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Pat 355 (358), 21 P.L.T. 13, 1940 P.W.N. 83, 19 Pat. 413. But the Magistrate cannot arbitrarily refuse to summon the witnesses named by the complainant; it is his duty to issue summons to those persons named by the complainant who are likely to give useful evidence. In order to ascertain the names of necessary witnesses, the Magistrate should put questions to the complainant in proper form. The question to be asked is not whether the complainant has any more witnesses whom he can produce without summons, but whether he can inform the Court of any witnesses who will have to be brought by process. This question is to be asked when the evidence produced in support of the prosecution has been taken, i.e., after the witnesses have been examined, cross-examined and re-examined before the frame of charge—Menon v. Krishna Nayar, 4^o Mad. 978, 51 M.L.J. 328, 27 Cr.L.J. 1123 (1124), 97 I.C. 643, 24 M.L.W. 304, 1926 M.W.N. 730, A.I.R. 1926 Mad 989.

It is clearly a grave error on the part of the Magistrate to refuse to summon any witnesses whom the complainant cited even before the stage indicated in sec. 252 (2), Cr. P. C.—Seth Thakurdas v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 192 (197), 9 R.N. 144, 1936 Cr.C. 805, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 205, 166 I.C. 709, 38 Cr.L.J. 307.

After the witnesses in support of the prosecution are heard, it is the duty of the Magistrate to see that the prosecutor is not allowed to set the Court on to a roaming inquiry, summoning persons in the hope that something might be elicited which may help his case. The prosecutor must come with his case fully prepared and there is no section in the Code which authorises him to file a fresh list of prosecution witnesses—Sitab Singh v. Dalganjan, 12 A.L.J. 15, 14 Cr.L.J. 682 (683), 21 I.C. 1002, A.I.R. 1914 All. 526; Hajari Tika Lodhi v. Emp., A.I.R. 1934 Nag 156, 150 I.C. 916, 1934 Cr.C. 660, 7 R.N. 30, 35 Cr.L.J. 1163. See also Gobind Sahai, 15 Cr.L.J. 363, 12 A.L.J. 15.

Under sec. 252 (2), Cr. P. C., a Magistrate can summon witnesses and take their evidence in order to find out whether an offence has really been committed or not, even when the complainant does not like to proceed with the case—Nagaswami Naidu v. Ramaswami Naicken, 1937 M.W.N. 727.

It is not proper for the Magistrate to issue a warrant in the first instance; it is only when the summons is disobeyed that serious measures may be taken—Kala Singh, 1907 P.W.R. 22, 6 Cr.L.J. 275.

Process fee and expenses.—There is nothing in this Code which enables a Magistrate to demand from even the complainant the expenses to be incurred by his witnesses, though such a power is conferred by sec. 244 (3) in a summons case—Bridhichand v. Lakhmichand, 8 N.L.R. 65, 13 Cr.L.J. 554; Ghulam Mohiyud-Din v. Sardara, 39 Cr.L.J. 624, 175 I.C. 555, 40 P.L.R. 650, 10 R.L. 746, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 444; Patni Yogambamma, 40 Cr.L.J. 566, 181 I.C. 569, A.I.R. 1939 Mad 265, 1939 M.W.N. 118, 48 M.L.W. 969, 1939 M.Cr.C. 10. The Magistrate is to summon under sec. 252 (2), Cr. P. C., at the expense of Government, such of the complainant's witnesses as he considers to be necessary, even though no challan was sent up in the case against the accused by the Police—Ghulam Mohiyud-Din v. Sardara, supra. The dismissal of a complaint in a warrant case for non-payment of process fee is illegal—Palannagari Pitchwadu, 2 Weir 323. The wording of this section clearly indicates that the issue of summons in such cases is on the initiative of the Magistrate himself, and, consequently, if fees are to be levied, the expenses must fall on the Magistrate's budget and not on the complainant—Mg San Nyein, 27 Cr.L.J. 415, 93 I.C. 79, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 13,

4 Bur.L.J. 187. This case was overruled by the Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court, holding that in a non-cognizable warrant case the Court is not bound to summon witnesses for the prosecution or the defence under the provisions of secs. 252 and 257, Cr. P. C., if the party at whose instance or in whose interest the process is issued does not pay process fees as required by Rules 17 and 18 of the Process Fees Rules under the Burma Process Fees Act, 1910—Tha Shwe, 4 Rang. 146.

Production and inspection of documents :—The accused is entitled to inspect all the documents produced by the complainant as evidence against the accused and filed as exhibits, and not merely to get certified copies thereof—Francis, 1 Bom.L.R. 433. But so long as no charge has been framed, the accused has no right to ask the Magistrate to pass an order requiring the complainant to produce any documents. The accused's right to call evidence, either witnesses or documents, does not arise until after the charge has been framed under sec. 254. This right is given by sec. 257, and is subject to the limitations enjoined by that section—Tahilram v. Pitamberdas, 8 S.L.R. 267, 16 Cr.L.J. 245. In Muhammad Rahim, 36 Cr.L.J. 581 (586), 154 I.C. 762, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 13, 1935 Cr.C. 124 (F.B.), Tahilram's case was not followed as it appeared that the question at issue in it was decided solely upon the provisions of sec. 257, Cr. P. C., without reference to the provisions of sec. 94. It was held that the Court acting under sec. 94, Cr. P. C., would be justified in calling for the production of documents at the request of the accused at any stage of the trial. See also Notes under sec. 94.

A complainant applied to the Magistrate to summon certain order passed by the Assistant Commissioner of Salt Revenue which was necessary to show that some of the witnesses coming on the side of the accused were interested in the accused as they owned jointly with the accused a match factory. The Magistrate rejected the application for the issue of summons on the ground that the endorsement of the Assistant Commissioner refusing the grant of the certified copy was not filed. Held that the summons was to issue at the cost of the complainant and the refusal of the Magistrate to send for the document was unsupportable—Balakrishna Nadar, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 746, 1940 M.W.N. 387, 1940 M.Cr.C. 97.

253. (1) If, upon taking all the evidence referred to in section 252, and making such examination (if any) of the accused as the Magistrate thinks necessary, he finds that no case against the accused has been made out which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction, the Magistrate shall discharge him.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent a Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case if, for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate, he considers the charge to be groundless.

825. Procedure :—The procedure prescribed by these sections should be strictly followed. The Magistrate should first take the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses (sec. 252) and if necessary examine the accused (sec. 253) and then apply the law to the criminal acts to find whether there is prima facie evidence, then frame charges (sec. 254) and call upon the accused to plead thereto (sec. 255) and enter upon his defence (sec. 256). If the Magistrate after examining the prosecution witnesses (sec. 252), examined the accused and the witnesses for the defence (sec. 256), without having drawn up a charge, and then discharged the accused under sec. 253, the procedure was contrary to law and the accused should be treated as acquitted under sec. 258—Taba v. Hirba, 29 P.R. 1883. In Orilal v. Kalu, 18 Cr.L.J. 1006 (1007) (Bur.), however, where the Magistrate followed the same procedure as in the Punjab case, it was held that although the procedure adopted was highly irregular and unwarranted, still as the procedure was in substance that laid down in this chapter, the omission to frame a charge and record a plea would not invalidate the order of discharge, and that sec. 535 (1) would cure the irregularity.

826. Discharge:—Orders which amount to discharge :—Where a warrant case which cannot be compounded, is compounded and the case dismissed, such dismissal amounts only to a discharge—Devama, 1 Bom. 64. When, after the issue of process, the Magistrate does not think it proper to proceed any further, the termination of the proceeding amounts to an order of discharge—Moul Singh v Mahabir, 4 CWN 242. Where the accused was summoned and appeared when the Magistrate dismissed the complaint, the dismissal was under sec 253 (2) and not under sec 203, Cr. P. C.—Bhagawan v Chander, 35 Cr.L.J. 418, 147 I.C. 335, A.I.R. 1934 All 51. When process has once been issued the accused person can only be discharged under sec 253 or sec. 259, Cr. P. C.—Jotindra v. Radha, A.I.R. 1934 Pat 548, 15 P.L.T. 507. If a warrant case is tried as a summons case, without framing a charge, and the Magistrate dismisses the case and acquits the accused, the acquittal operates as a discharge—Jadu, 1886 A.W.N. 260; Lajja Ram, 1888 A.W.N. 96. See also Muhammad, given in Note 711.

Order of discharge when improper :—A Magistrate ought not to discharge the accused merely because he was illegally arrested, e.g., where the Police arrested him without warrant in a non-cognizable case—Sangapa, Ratanlal 73. So also, a Magistrate should not discharge a person merely because he has no jurisdiction to try the case; in such a case he ought to proceed under sec 346—Munisami, 2 Weir 323.

A Magistrate cannot discharge or acquit the accused upon withdrawal of complaint in a warrant case. Such a procedure is allowed in summons cases (sec 248) and not in warrant cases. The Magistrate has to proceed with the trial in spite of the withdrawal of complaint, if he finds the elements of an offence in the facts set forth in the complaint—Ganesh, 13 Bom 600 (603); Ranchhod, 37 Bom 369, 14 Cr L.J. 77; Maung Thu v U Po, 5 Rang 136, 28 Cr L.J. 649 (650). A Magistrate cannot dismiss the complaint and discharge the accused if the complainant is absent, and the case is a warrant case relating to a non-compoundable offence. Such a dismissal amounts to an application to a warrant case of the procedure prescribed by sec 247 in respect of a summons case—Ram Coomar v Ramjee, 4 CWN 26; Alexander v Conners, 20 CWN 698, 34 I.C. 305, 17 Cr.L.J. 193; Govinda v Dulali, 10 Cal 67 (68). But under sec 259, as now amended, the Magistrate can discharge the accused owing to the absence of the complainant, if the offence is non-cognizable, even though it is non-compoundable.

An order of discharge can be made when, according to the words of this section, no case has been made out which if unrebutted would warrant the conviction of the accused; but when there is a body of evidence which if believed would justify a conviction, it is better to draw up a charge and dispose of the case finally, than to discharge the accused—Radhi v Phulchand, 1909 P.W.R. 18, 11 Cr L.J. 100. An order of discharge passed without considering the evidence on record is illegal. Where a case is transferred from a Bench of Magistrates, who had already recorded some evidence, to a Deputy Magistrate, the latter is bound to examine the evidence already recorded, and cannot discharge the accused, without considering that evidence, merely because no evidence is produced before him on the day of hearing—Amodin v Darsan, 38 Cal 828.

Under sec. 253, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate does not exercise his discretion properly if he discharges the accused clearly on a statement by a prosecution witness of a prior admission of the complainant that the case was a false one. It is better in such cases to hear the whole evidence and to come to whatever conclusion he considers proper and then to take action under sec 250, Cr. P. C., if he thinks it a proper case under that section—Ram Lubhaya v. Jagan Nath, 30 Cr L.J. 854, 117 I.C. 883, 30 P.L.R. 361, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 623, Ind Rul 1929 Lah. 707.

An order of discharge cannot be made after a charge has been framed; such an order is erroneous and would amount to an acquittal under sec. 258—Nathu, 14 P.R. 1903. See Raza Husain, 36 Cr.L.J. 912 (913), 156 I.C. 186, A.I.R. 1935 All 834, 1935 Cr.C. 980, 1935 A.L.J. 1022, 1935 A.L.R. 548, 7 R.A. 1057.

4 Bur.L.J. 187. This case was overruled by the Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court, holding that in a non-cognizable warrant case the Court is not bound to summon witnesses for the prosecution or the defence under the provisions of secs. 252 and 257, Cr. But so long as no charge has been framed, the accused has no right to ask the Magistrate to pass an order requiring the complainant to produce any documents. The accused's right to call evidence, either witnesses or documents, does not arise until after the charge has been framed under sec. 254. This right is given by sec. 257, and is subject to the limitations enjoined by that section—Tahilram v. Pitamberdas, 8 S.L.R. 267, 16 Cr.L.J. 245. In Muhammad Rahim, 36 Cr.L.J. 581 (586), 154 I.C. 762, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 13, 1935 Cr.C. 124 (F.B.), Tahilram's case was not followed as it appeared that the question at issue in it was decided solely upon the provisions of sec. 257, Cr. 253. (1) If, upon taking all the evidence referred to in section 252, and making such examination (if any) of the accused as the Magistrate thinks necessary, he finds that no case against the accused has been made out which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction, the Magistrate shall discharge him.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent a Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case if, for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate, he considers the charge to be groundless.

Where the accused was summoned and appeared when the Magistrate dismissed the complaint, the dismissal was under sec 253 (2) and not under sec 203, Cr. P. C.—Bhagwan v Chander, 35 Cr L.J 418, 147 I.C. 335, AIR 1934 All 51. When process has once been issued the accused person can only be discharged under sec. 253 or sec 259, Cr. P. C.—Jolindra v. Radha, AIR 1934 Pat. 548, 15 P.L.T. 507. If a warrant case is tried as a summons case, without framing a charge, and the Magistrate dismisses the case and acquits the accused, the acquittal operates as a discharge—Jadu, 1886 A.W.N. 260; Lajja Ram, 1888 A.W.N. 96. See also Muhammad, given in Note 711.

Order of discharge when improper—A Magistrate ought not to discharge the accused merely because he was illegally arrested, e.g., where the Police arrested him without warrant in a non-cognizable case—Sangapa, Ratanlal 73. So also, a Magistrate should not discharge a person merely because he has no jurisdiction to try the case; in such a case he ought to proceed under sec. 346—Munisami, 2 Weir 323.

A Magistrate cannot discharge or acquit the accused upon withdrawal of complaint in a warrant case. Such a procedure is allowed in summons cases (sec. 248) and not in warrant cases. The Magistrate has to proceed with the trial inspite of the withdrawal of complaint, if he finds the elements of an offence in the facts set forth in the complaint—Ganesh, 13 Bom 600 (603); Ranchhod, 37 Bom 369, 14 Cr L.J 77; Maung Thu v. U Po, 5 Rang 136, 28 Cr L.J 649 (650). A Magistrate cannot dismiss the complaint and discharge the accused if the complainant is absent, and the case is a warrant case relating to a non-compoundable offence. Such a dismissal amounts to an application to a warrant case of the procedure prescribed by sec 247 in respect of a summons case—Ram Coomar v. Ramjee, 4 C.W.N 26; Alexander v Connors, 20 C.W.N 698, 34 I.C. 305, 17 Cr L.J. 193; Govinda v Dulall, 10 Cal 67 (68). But under sec 259, as now amended, the Magistrate can discharge the accused owing to the absence of the complainant, if the offence is non-cognizable, even though it is non-compoundable.

An order of discharge can be made when, according to the words of this section, no case has been made out which if unrebutted would warrant the conviction of the accused; but when there is a body of evidence which if believed would justify a conviction, it is better to draw up a charge and dispose of the case finally, than to discharge the accused—Radhi v Phulchand, 1909 P.W.R 18, 11 Cr L.J 100. An order of discharge passed without considering the evidence on record is illegal. Where a case is transferred from a Bench of Magistrates, who had already recorded some evidence, to a Deputy Magistrate, the latter is bound to examine the evidence already recorded, and cannot discharge the accused, without considering that evidence, merely because no evidence is produced before him on the day of hearing—Amodin v Darsan, 38 Cal. 828.

Under sec 253, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate does not exercise his discretion properly if he discharges the accused clearly on a statement by a prosecution witness of a prior admission of the complainant that the case was a false one. It is better in such cases to hear the whole evidence and to come to whatever conclusion he considers proper and then to take action under sec 250, Cr. P. C., if he thinks it a proper case under that section—Ram Lubhaya v Jagan Nath, 30 Cr L.J 854, 117 I.C. 883, 30 P.L.R. 361, AIR 1929 Lah 623, Ind Rul 1929 Lah. 707.

An order of discharge cannot be made after a charge has been framed; such an order is erroneous and would amount to an acquittal under sec. 258—Nathu, 14 P.R. 1903. See Raza Husain, 36 Cr L.J. 912 (913), 156 I.C. 186, AIR. 1935 All 834, 1935 A.L.J. 1022, 1935 A.L.R. 548, 7 R.A. 1057.

827. Fresh complaint:—The discharge of an accused person does not amount to an acquittal; therefore a fresh complaint can be entertained either by the same Magistrate who passed the order of discharge or by another Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction, and it is not necessary that the previous order of discharge must be set aside before fresh proceedings can be taken—Dolegobind, 28 Cal. 211 (215); Maheshwara, 31 Mad. 543; Keymer, 36 All. 53 (55); Mir Ahwad v. Md. Askari, 29 Cal. 726 (732) (F.B.); Hari Dass v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608 (F.B.); Dhana Reddy, 8 Rang. 1, 31 Cr.L.J. 824 (825); Kiru, 10 P.R. 1911 (F.B.), 11 I.C. 132 (137), 12 Cr.L.J. 364 (overruling Jawahir, 33 P.R. 1894). In this respect there is no distinction between proceedings before Presidency Magistrates and proceedings before moffussil Magistrates—Mir Ahwad v. Md. Askari, supra. Thus, where a Bench of Presidency Magistrates discharges an accused, the Chief Presidency Magistrate can entertain fresh proceedings on the same charge upon fresh evidence and commit the accused for trial—Dolegobind, supra. Cf. Note 681 under sec. 203.

The power of revival of proceedings is vested in all Magistrates including the Magistrate who discharged the accused. But Magistrates are bound to exercise due discretion, take that discharge into account, and to avoid any such oppressive proceedings as may either expose them to punishment under sec. 219 or 220, I P. C., or to a civil action on the part of the accused—Bapuda, Ratanlal 350. No Presidency Magistrate should rehear a case which has been previously disposed of by an order of discharge by another Presidency Magistrate (of co-ordinate jurisdiction), except where there has been a manifest error or miscarriage of justice—Dolegobind, 28 Cal. 211 (217). Though there is no absolute bar to an accused person being again put in peril of a fresh trial in respect of the same offence in a case where the first trial has ended in an order of discharge, it is a well-recognized and salutary rule of law that a Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction should not entertain a fresh complaint in respect of the same offence when it is based on facts which are known to the complainant and on evidence which was available when the first trial was held. A departure from this rule is in effect an assumption by the Magistrate of the powers of the Appellate Court, and it is utterly contrary to sound principle—Alias, 31 Cr.L.J. 687, 124 I.C. 384, A.I.R. 1929 Sind 242. See also Rama Nand v. Sheri, 35 Cr.L.J. 1062, 150 I.C. 373, 1934 Cr.C. 150, A.I.R. 1934 All. 87, 56 All. 425, 3 A.W.R. 569, A.I.R. 1934 All. 546. An order of discharge passed under this section cannot be set aside and prosecution started afresh, unless there are new materials before the Magistrate which were not before him formerly, and unless upon those materials there is a probability of the conviction of the accused persons—Biso Ram, 23 Cr.L.J. 236, 66 I.C. 76, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 372. In instituting a fresh complaint, the Magistrate is bound to proceed in the manner laid down in secs. 200-202, i.e., after examining the complainant, and, if necessary, after a preliminary inquiry or local investigation, to decide whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding. In coming to this decision, he is bound to exercise a proper discretion, and a discretion improperly exercised would be a ground for interference in revision—Dhana Reddy, 8 Rang. 1, 31 Cr.L.J. 824 (826).

Where in the first complaint the order of discharge was passed merely because the complainant and his pleader were absent at the appointed hour and the second complaint was filed on the following day, held that the Magistrate exercised due discretion in proceeding to inquire into the merits after presentation of the second complaint—Amanat Kader, 30 Cr.L.J. 594, 116 I.C. 251, 31 Bom.L.R. 146, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 134, Ind. Rul. 1929 Bom. 347.

Further Inquiry:—Under sec. 436, the High Court can direct further inquiry into a case of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused; but that section makes no mention of Presidency Magistrates; it applies only when such order has been made by a moffussil Magistrate. But on the question whether the High Court can direct further inquiry when an order of discharge has been made by a Presidency Magistrate, there is a divergence of opinion. In some cases it has been stated that the High Court can interfere and set aside the order under secs. 439 and 436 of the Code and direct further inquiry—Malik Protap v. Khan Mahomed, 36 Cal. 994 (1000); Dwarka Nath v. Beni Madhab, 28 Cal. 652 (667) (per Ghose, J.). But in some other cases it has been held that the High Court can under secs. 435 and 439, read with sec. 423, no doubt revise and set aside an erroneous order of discharge passed by a Presidency Magistrate, but it cannot direct further inquiry, because sec. 423 confers the power to make an order for further inquiry only in case of acquittal, but not in case of discharge of accused. The power of directing further inquiry in case of an order of discharge passed by a Presidency Magistrate can be exercised by the High Court only under sec. 15 of the Charter Act—Charoobala v. Barendra, 27 Cal. 126 (129); Debi Bux v. Jutmal, 33 Cal. 1282 (1284); Colville v. Kristo Kishore, 26 Cal. 746 (748).

Power of District Magistrate :—Where an accused person has been discharged under this section, the District Magistrate can himself hold a further inquiry or can direct such inquiry to be held by a Subordinate Magistrate (sec. 436)—Parbhu Lal v. Janki, 18 Cr.L.J. 706 (All); Chotu, 9 All 52; Balasinnathambi, 14 Mad. 334; Narayanaswami, 32 Mad. 220. See Notes under sec. 436.

828. Sub-section (2)—At any previous stage of the case:—When a Magistrate is reasonably convinced, on what has been already deposed that a criminal charge cannot be sustained, sub-sec. (2) of this section relieves him from the necessity of going on with the trial—Dhanjibhai v. Pyari, Ratanlal 201. The Magistrate can discharge the accused even before the date fixed for hearing, if upon the materials then before him he is satisfied that the accused cannot possibly be convicted of this offence—Waason v. Metcalfe, 25 Cr.L.J. 696, 81 I.C. 184, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 154. He has power to discharge the accused under this clause, even if no witnesses are examined under sec. 252—Kunj Behari, 24 A.L.J. 512, 27 Cr.L.J. 541 (542), 93 I.C. 1037, A.I.R. 1926 All. 461. He can discharge the accused before all the complainant's witnesses have been examined—Kasinatha v. Shanmugam, 52 Mad. 987, 31 Cr.L.J. 275 (277), A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 754, 121 I.C. 619, 57 M.L.J. 490, 30 M.L.W. 273, 1929 M.W.N. 575, 1929 Cr.C. 333, 2 M.Cr.C. 215; Fazlar Rahman, 31 Cr.L.J. 1055, 58 Cal. 346, 1930 Cr.C. 859, Ind. Rul. 1930 Cal. 745, 126 I.C. 553, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 515; Navanna v. Sursetti, 12 Cr.L.J. 105, 9 I.C. 606, 2 M.W.N. 149, 9 M.L.T. 302. But see Rakhal v. Monmatha, 11 C.W.N. 1000. It is illegal to discharge the accused before the examination of the complainant—Mukunda v. Purusattam, 31 Cr.L.J. 128, 1929 Cr.C. 95, Ind. Rul. 1930 Cal. 42, 120 I.C. 458, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 479, 51 C.L.J. 44. But in a suitable case the Magistrate may come to the conclusion that the charge is groundless even before he has heard the complainant under this section. Such a case might well be one in which the Magistrate in issuing process under sec. 204, Cr. P. C., has mistakenly believed that an offence has been disclosed by the complaint and on the matter being brought to his attention when the case comes before him has seen his error and decided that in fact, even if the allegations in the complaint are true, no criminal offence has been disclosed. It cannot, therefore, be held that in no case can the accused be discharged under sec. 253 (2), Cr. P. C., without complainant being heard at all—Shiv Datta v. B. K. Sood, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 40, 41 P.L.R. 702, 41 Cr.L.J. 354, 186 I.C. 635. The words "at any previous stage of the case" are perfectly clear. It is only reasonable that an accused person should be allowed to show at any stage of the proceedings that there is no case against him; for example, he might show that there was something in the nature of a want of sanction which would render the proceedings invalid; in such a case it would be clearly waste of time to examine the complainant's witnesses. Where, therefore, on the date fixed for hearing of the case the Magistrate heard both sides and examined some documents but did not take the evidence of the complainant or any of his witnesses and he discharged the accused, holding that the complainant had deliberately suppressed several facts in his petition of complaint and that the complaint was a thoroughly dishonest one, the order of discharge was legal and within the Magistrate's jurisdiction—Sundar Das Loghani v. Fardun Rustom Irani, 40 Cr.L.J. 658, 182 I.C. 411, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 329, 69 C.L.J. 186, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 474, following Fazlar Rahaman, supra, and distinguishing Mukunda v. Purusattam, supra. See also Jnanendra Nath v. Nilmoney, 43 C.W.N. 582, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 587, 41 Cr.L.J. 52, 184 I.C. 603, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 701. The word 'groundless' in this sub-section is not capable of any precise definition. The amount of evidence which would enable a Magistrate to say that a particular charge is groundless is so entirely dependent on circumstances that no general rule or direction is likely to be of any use, except that the Magistrate is required to arrive at his conclusion judiciously and not capriciously. If acting judiciously a Magistrate has come to the conclusion that the charge must fail either because the allegations are false or because they disclose a dispute of a civil nature distorted into a criminal case, or for any other reason, then there is nothing to prevent the Magistrate from discharging the accused before all the prosecution witnesses have been examined—Kasinatha v. Shanmugam, supra. But where a complaint prima facie discloses an offence, a Magistrate can hold the charge to be groundless and discharge the accused under sub-sec. (2), only when he has at least ascertained from the complainant the nature of the evidence his witnesses are going to give; and he cannot refuse to examine the witnesses cited by the complainant and discharge the accused, without ascertaining from the complainant the nature of the evidence the remaining witnesses are expected to give. If he so ascertains, and then finds that even if that evidence was given the charge would be groundless, it is open to him to discharge the accused on that ground—Muhammad Sheriff v. Abdul Karim, 51 Mad 185, 53 M.L.J. 757, 28 Cr.L.J. 995. The Magistrate has no doubt a discretion under this clause to discharge the accused without taking all the evidence that the complainant wishes to produce, if he thinks that the charge is groundless. But this does not mean that he can cut short the proceedings by refusing to summon any of the witnesses which the complainant wants to examine. Moreover, there must be a clear finding that the charge is groundless, before the Magistrate can discharge the accused—Mektab v. Nathu, 31 P.L.R. 204, 31 Cr.L.J. 481, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 461, 1930 Cr.C. 530, 123 I.C. 275. The Magistrate cannot refuse to examine all witnesses summoned on behalf of the prosecution unless he is in a position to discharge the accused without examining others upon the evidence already recorded—Sivakatacham Pillai v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 991. The Magistrate is, however, not justified in making up his mind without hearing the evidence of all the witnesses that the complainant desires to place before him. If he discharges the accused after hearing the evidence of only some of the witnesses produced by the complainant, the order of discharge is liable to be set aside—Louis Ammal Fernando v. Susai Fernando, 1937 M.W.N. 836.

Recording reasons:—The Legislature does not render the writing of reasons necessary when the Magistrate discharges the accused person under sub-sec. (1) after he has heard all the evidence for the prosecution. It is only when he discharges under sub-sec. (2) without hearing all the evidence that he is bound to record reasons. But even in the former case the Magistrate should record his reasons, having regard to the fact that the order is not final—Nabi Fakira, 9 Bom.L.R. 250, 5 Cr.L.J. 255. When a Magistrate discharges the accused under sub-sec. (2), he should explicitly set forth the reasons for considering the charge to be groundless—Dhanyabhai v. Pyarji, Ratanlal 201.

The language of the section plainly indicates that a Magistrate should give his reasons at the time he pronounces the order of discharge and if it is the final order in the case, he is bound to give his reasons. The moment he pronounces the final order, he becomes functus officio and he is no longer in charge of the case. But where a number of accused is being tried before him and he discharges some of them only without giving reasons therefor in his order of discharge, he has not become functus officio and it would be open to him to defer his reasons. Till the charge against the remaining accused is disposed of by a final order, he must be deemed to be in seisin of the whole case and so long as he is in charge thereof, he can always give his reasons in regard to the order of discharge. Even assuming that it is obligatory on him to give his reasons before he pronounces the order of discharge, his omission to do so is only an irregularity which can be cured by sec. 537, Cr. P. C.—Govindaraj, 39 Cr.L.J.

335, 173 I.C. 417, 1938 M.W.N. 38, 47 M.L.W. 128, 10 R.M. 583, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 110, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 396.

254. If, when such evidence and examination have been taken and made, or at any previous stage of the case, the Magistrate is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable under this Chapter, which such Magistrate is competent to try, and which, in his opinion, could be adequately punished by him, he shall frame in writing a charge against the accused.

829. Charge when to be framed:—One of the distinguishing points between a summons case and a warrant case is that in a summons case the accused is called on to plead as soon as he appears, before any evidence is taken, but in a warrant case sufficient evidence to support the charge must be recorded before a charge can be framed and the accused called on to plead. And this must be done even if the warrant case is tried summarily—Natabar, 27 C.W.N. 923 (924), 25 Cr.L.J. 1270. It is not necessary that the Magistrate should wait till the whole of the evidence for the prosecution has been taken, before any charge can be framed. Cf. the words "or at any previous stage"; the moment the stage is reached when there is ground for presuming that the accused person has committed an offence, the charge-sheet can be drawn up, before all the prosecution witnesses have been examined—Mulua v Sheoraj, 8 A.L.J. 707, 12 Cr.L.J. 471; Karuthaswami, 53 Mad. 173, 31 Cr.L.J. 618 (621) (F.B.); Lachmi Narain, A.I.R. 1931 All. 621 (623), 1931 Cr.C. 973, 1932 A.L.J. 5, 54 All. 121. The words "at any previous stage" are important. They authorise the Magistrate to frame a charge even after hearing the first witness—Hassan, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 211, 38 Cr.L.J. 399, 167 I.C. 318, 1936 Cr.C. 1077, 9 R.Pesh. 85.

The section does not require or invite a Magistrate to give his reasons—Bagomal, 37 Cr.L.J. 152, 159 I.C. 687, A.I.R. 1935 Sind. 223, 1935 Cr.C. 1312.

It is only when the prosecution has proved all the facts necessary to constitute the offence charged against the accused that a charge should be framed. If the evidence recorded does not lead to any presumption that the accused has committed any offence, but merely raises a doubt, the Magistrate should give the accused the benefit of the doubt by discharging him under sec. 253, and should not proceed to frame a charge—Mulchand, 2 P.R. 1906, 3 Cr.L.J. 354.

Where after a charge of an offence had been framed against the accused, the complainant in her deposition further charged him with another offence, and thereupon the Magistrate tried him for both the offences, acquitted him of the former offence and convicted him of the latter one, it was held that the procedure was legal—Louis, 3 Bom.L.R. 675. If, when a case is being tried as a warrant case and a charge is drawn up thereof, it is intended to proceed against the accused for an offence triable only as a summons case, that offence should form part of the charge—Hossein v. Kalu, 29 Cal. 481.

Examination.—It is not absolutely compulsory for the Magistrate in a warrant case to examine the accused before he framed a charge, provided he does so before the prosecution case has been closed. The non-compliance therewith, where the accused were duly examined at the close of the prosecution case, would clearly amount to a mere irregularity, not vitiating the trial—Deoji, 27 Cr.L.J. 850, 95 I.C. 606, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 459. This section deals with the framing of a charge and says that it may be framed when such evidence (i.e., evidence for the prosecution) and examination (i.e., examination of the accused) have been taken and made, or at any previous stage of the case. One previous stage of the case is when the evidence has been completed and the examination has not been made. The section, therefore, itself makes it allowable to frame the charge before examining the accused as well as before recording all the evidence—Bhanwarsingh v. Sukhramsingh, 41 Cr.L.J. 585 (586).

'Which such Magistrate is competent to try and adequately punish' :—Section 254 is very restrictive, for it provides that the Magistrate shall try an accused person only for an offence which in his opinion can be adequately punished by him. A Magistrate has to exercise his discretion in the matter of every complaint that is brought before him—Abdul Rahiman, 16 Bom. 580. Where it was within the competence of the Magistrate to pass an adequate sentence in that case, but the Magistrate committed the case to the Sessions on the ground that as he was a witness in the identification proceedings in the case, he was disqualified from trying it (sec. 556), held that the course adopted by the Magistrate was improper; he should have moved the District Magistrate to transfer the case to some other Magistrate—Ram Jatan, 21 A.L.J. 420, 25 Cr.L.J. 665, A.I.R. 1924 All. 185.

830. Charge:—A charge under this section should allege all that is necessary to constitute the offence charged, and all that is requisite in order that the accused may have notice of the matter with which he is to be charged. It should not allege positively anything of which the allegation in a positive form is not justified by the materials before the Court—Sant Singh, 1889 P.R. 26.

After a charge has been framed and the accused has been called upon to plead thereto, the Magistrate cannot change his mind and commit the accused to the Sessions, because up to the stage of sec. 254 the accused has not had an opportunity of adducing defence evidence, which is essential before commitment—Lakshminarayana v. Suryanarayana, 63 M.L.J. 101, 1932 Cr.C. 506. See also sec. 347.

Omission to frame charge.—An omission to frame a charge according to this section would not invalidate an order of acquittal nor would render the acquittal equivalent to a discharge—Gurdu, 3 All. 129. See sec. 535. But the Calcutta High Court lays down that it is imperative on the Magistrate to frame a charge; and an omission to do so vitiates the trial—Mahomed Rafique, 43 C.L.J. 100, 27 Cr.L.J. 406 (407), 93 I.C. 70. (In the Calcutta case, there was not only an omission to frame the charge, but there was no examination of the accused under sec. 342, although the order-sheet stated that both these were done. The High Court consequently set aside the proceedings).

When a case is being tried as a warrant-case and a charge is drawn up of an offence which is triable as a warrant case, if it is intended to proceed against the accused also for an offence which is triable only as a summons-case, that offence should form a portion of the charge—Hossain v. Kalu, 6 C.W.N. 599, 29 Cal. 481; Mallu Gobe, 30 Cr.L.J. 891, 118, I.C. 323, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 515, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 712, 10 P.L.T. 875.

Where the accused was charged for offences under secs. 353, I. P. C. (warrant case) and 186, I. P. C. (summons case), but the Magistrate found during the course of the trial that a conviction under sec. 353 could not be sustained, and thereafter proceeded with the summons case (which did not require a charge) without framing a charge, held that the omission to frame a charge did not vitiate the trial. The Magistrate has to frame a charge when there is ground for presuming that an offence "triable under this chapter" has been committed. But as in this case no such offence had been established, it was not necessary to frame a charge—Ambika Prasad, 53 All. 206, 32 Cr.L.J. 313 (314), dissenting from Ganga Saran, 19 A.L.J. 6, 22 Cr.L.J. 146, 59 I.C. 850. See also Palani, 1931 M.W.N. 1319; Sajan, 34 Cr.L.J. 1044, 145 I.C. 624, A.I.R. 1933 Sind. 173, 1933 Cr.C. 537.

If the trial is held by a Presidency Magistrate, and the case is non-appealable, it is not necessary to frame a charge; see sec. 362 (4). But in an appealable warrant case, the Presidency Magistrate is bound to frame a charge in accordance with this section—Raghubir, 36 C.W.N. 791 (792), 33 Cr.L.J. 823, 55 C.L.J. 448, 139 I.C. 755; Mahomed Rafique, supra. But if there had been no failure of justice the omission would not be fatal—Raghubir, supra.

If the case is tried summarily and is non-appealable no charge is required to be framed. See sec. 263 Even in a summary trial of an appealable case, it is doubtful whether a charge is necessary. See Note 870 under sec. 264

Effect of framing a charge :—When a Magistrate has framed a charge against an accused he cannot acquit him without hearing any further evidence for or against either party—F. D. Bellow v. Mts Parker, 7 C.W.N. 521.

830A. Cross-cases :—The trial of two cross-cases of rioting and grievous hurt almost simultaneously but separately does not vitiate the trial unless the accused can show some prejudice—Sahadev Ahir, 8 C.W.N. 344, 1 Cr.L.J. 199; Shafayet, 25 Cr.L.J. 1018, 81 I.C. 794, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 152; Dhako, 58 I.C. 243, 1 P.L.T. 493, 21 Cr.L.J. 973. But in Garibulla v. Sadar, 25 Cr.L.J. 941, 81 I.C. 557, 39 C.L.J. 331, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 813, it was held that the cross-cases arising out of the same incident should not have been heard at one and the same time.

There is no foundation for the view that a Police case is to have precedence over a complaint case arising out of the same incident because it is a Police case. The two cases should be tried simultaneously and contemporaneously, but should be dealt with wholly separately from each other, each on its own merits and upon the facts and circumstances appearing therein; judgments in the two cases shall be pronounced, if possible, after both the trials are over—Sheikh Bahatar v. Nobadali, 26 Cr.L.J. 65, 83 I.C. 625, 28 C.W.N. 487, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 634; Krishan, 29 Cr.L.J. 1059, 112 I.C. 563; Krishan Pannadi, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 190, 1930 Cr.C. 190, 31 Cr.L.J. 461, 123 I.C. 10; Balu, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 458, 35 P.L.R. 427; Ujagar Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 356, 37 P.L.R. 80, 1936 Cr.C. 297, 161 I.C. 921, 37 Cr.L.J. 510

The Code is silent with regard to the procedure to be adopted in cross-cases. It should not, therefore, be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a particular course must be adopted. Each case has to be decided according to its requirements. Where the accused wants that his case should be taken up after the case against him has been decided, it is unfair to force a person in the position of an accused to throw himself open to cross-examination by the other side. In such circumstances the case against the accused should be disposed of first and then the case in which the accused is the complainant, should be taken up—Makhan v. Monindra, 26 Cr.L.J. 1615, 90 I.C. 719, 42 C.L.J. 83, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1260; Ram Golam v. Sarat, 31 Cr.L.J. 262, 121 I.C. 414, 49 C.L.J. 388, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 281. But see Ram Singh, 36 Cr.L.J. 714, 155 I.C. 421, 16 P.L.T. 295 and Rajendra v. Amrita, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 529, 24 Cr.L.J. 233, 71 I.C. 697.

There is no provision in the Code for trying two cases at the same time before the same jurors. But sec. 272, Cr.P.C., makes it clear that the same jury may try any number of accused one after the other, subject to the right of the accused to object to the jury or anyone or more of the members of the jury. When there is no objection to the jury by either of the parties, cross-cases may be tried by the same jurors—Rajatullya v. Khudia, 32 Cr.L.J. 1233, 134 I.C. 896, 54 C.L.J. 146, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 709, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 896, 1931 Cr.C. 989. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as regards the procedure in counter-cases. It is sufficient to say that there can be nothing irregular in a Judge trying each case to a conclusion before different assessors and afterwards pronouncing judgment in both so long as he tries the one quite independently of the facts in the other. Should the Judge, however, feel that he is likely to be embarrassed by the adoption of this procedure, he will no doubt get a transfer of the case to the file of another Sessions Judge. What must be made clear is (1) that the trial must be separate, i.e., before different assessors and separate judgments delivered, (2) that the conclusion in each case must be founded on, and only on, the evidence in each case and (3) that if the Judge considers himself unable to detach himself from extraneous consideration a transfer may be necessary to deliver the Judge from embarrassment—Mounagurusami Naicker, 34 Cr.L.J. 175, 141 I.C. 539, 37 M.L.W. 101, 64 M.L.J. 150, 1933 M.W.N. 98, Ind. Rul. 1933 Mad. 143, 56 Mad. 159, 1933 Cr.C. 550, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 367 (F.B.). See also Maula Khan, 34 Cr.L.J. 46, 140 I.C. 685, 9 O.W.N. 963, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh. 8, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh. 21, where a case was transferred from the file of the Judge who tried and delivered judgment in the counter-case on the ground that to frame the charge before examining the accused as well as before recording all the evidence—Bhanwarsingh v. Sukhramsingh, 41 Cr.L.J. 585 (586).

'Which such Magistrate is competent to try and adequately punish':—Section 254 is very restrictive, for it provides that the Magistrate shall try an accused person only for an offence which in his opinion can be adequately punished by him. A Magistrate has to exercise his discretion in the matter of every complaint that is brought before him—Abdul Rahiman, 16 Bom. 580 Where it was within the competence of the Magistrate to pass an adequate sentence in that case, but the Magistrate committed the case to the Sessions on the ground that as he was a witness in the identification proceedings in the case, he was disqualified from trying it (sec. 556), held that the course adopted by the Magistrate was improper; he should have moved the District Magistrate to transfer the case to some other Magistrate—Ram Jatan, 21 A.L.J. 420, 25 Cr.L.J. 665, A.I.R. 1924 All. 185.

830. Charge:—A charge under this section should allege all that is necessary to constitute the offence charged, and all that is requisite in order that the accused may have notice of the matter with which he is to be charged. It should not allege positively anything of which the allegation in a positive form is not justified by the materials before the Court—Sant Singh, 1889 P.R. 26.

After a charge has been framed and the accused has been called upon to plead thereto, the Magistrate cannot change his mind and commit the accused to the Sessions, because up to the stage of sec. 254 the accused has not had an opportunity of adducing defence evidence, which is essential before commitment—Lakshminarayana v. Suryanarayana, 63 M.L.J. 101, 1932 Cr.C. 506. See also sec. 347.

Omission to frame charge:—An omission to frame a charge according to this section would not invalidate an order of acquittal nor would render the acquittal equivalent to a discharge—Gurdu, 3 All. 129 See sec. 535. But the Calcutta High Court lays down that it is imperative on the Magistrate to frame a charge; and an omission to do so vitiates the trial—Mahomed Rafique, 43 C.L.J. 100, 27 Cr.L.J. 406 (407), 93 I.C. 70. (In the Calcutta case, there was not only an omission to frame the charge, but there was no examination of the accused under sec. 342, although the order-sheet stated that both these were done. The High Court consequently set aside the proceedings).

When a case is being tried as a warrant-case and a charge is drawn up of an offence which is triable as a warrant case, if it is intended to proceed against the accused also for an offence which is triable only as a summons-case, that offence should form a portion of the charge—Hossain v. Kalu, 6 C.W.N. 599, 29 Cal. 481; Mallu Gope, 30 Cr.L.J. 891, 118, I.C. 323, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 515, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 712, 10 P.L.T. 875.

Where the accused was charged for offences under secs. 353, I. P. C. (warrant case) and 186, I. P. C. (summons case), but the Magistrate found during the course of the trial that a conviction under sec. 353 could not be sustained, and thereafter proceeded with the summons case (which did not require a charge) without framing a charge, held that the omission to frame a charge did not vitiate the trial. The Magistrate has to frame a charge when there is ground for presuming that an offence "triable under this chapter" has been committed. But as in this case no such offence had been established, it was not necessary to frame a charge—Ambika Prasad, 53 All. 206, 32 Cr.L.J. 313 (314), dissenting from Ganga Saran, 19 A.L.J. 6, 22 Cr.L.J. 146, 59 I.C. 850. See also Palani, 1931 M.W.N. 1319; Sajan, 34 Cr.L.J. 1044, 145 I.C. 624, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 173, 1933 Cr.C. 537.

If the trial is held by a Presidency Magistrate, and the case is non-appealable, it is not necessary to frame a charge; see sec. 362 (4). But in an appealable warrant case, the Presidency Magistrate is bound to frame a charge in accordance with this section—Raghubir, 36 C.W.N. 791 (792), 33 Cr.L.J. 823, 55 C.L.J. 448, 139 I.C. 755; Mahomed Rafique, supra But if there had been no failure of justice the omission would not be fatal—Raghubir, supra

if it was evidence on one record and so mixed up the depositions of the witnesses that it was impossible to say how far the conviction of the accused in each case was based upon what was legal evidence against them, held, setting aside the conviction, that the procedure adopted was contrary to the provisions of the Code and was calculated to defeat the very object which the Legislature had in view in directing that the accused in cross-cases should be tried separately—Sheo Karan, 29 Cr.L.J. 734, 110 I.C. 590, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 923. The procedure of treating the prosecution evidence in one case as defence evidence in the other and vice versa, even with the consent of the accused and the Government Pleader, is entirely illegal and the convictions and sentences in such cases cannot stand—Sarju v. K-E, 1938 O.W.N. 958, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 219, 39 Cr.L.J. 929, 177 I.C. 559, 1938 O.L.R. 429, 11 R.O. 58; Maung Pa v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 641, 168 I.C. 713, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 100, 9 R.R. 364, following H. M. Eusoo v. Emp., 11 L.B.R. 73, 64 I.C. 833, A.I.R. 1921 L.B. 51, 23 Cr.L.J. 49 and M. A. Mamsa v. Emp., 13 Bur.L.T. 245, 63 I.C. 867, A.I.R. 1920 L.B. 90, 22 Cr.L.J. 707. Where the Sessions Judge heard two appeals arising out of two cross-cases, acquitted the appellants in one appeal and disposed of the other appeal with reference to his findings in the former appeal, without discussing the evidence in the case, held that the procedure was not proper and that the appeal should be remanded to him to be disposed of in accordance with law—Heta Singh, 36 Cr.L.J. 1349, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 494, 158 I.C. 281. But where, although the judgment of the Appellate Court is one continuous document, the decisions in the two cases are quite separate and distinct from each other, none of the findings in one case is based upon the evidence recorded in the other case and the judgment in one case is a self-contained document and is based upon its own oral and documentary evidence, the procedure is not illegal and the accused is not prejudiced thereby—Lala Panna Lal, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 294, 1936 Cr.C. 244, 164 I.C. 809, 37 Cr.L.J. 1033. Ostensibly two separate trials were held in respect of the accused of each party. After the entire evidence against the accused in one case had been recorded by the Sessions Judge, the assessors apparently desired that they would like to hear the evidence in the cross-case before giving their opinion in the case in which the evidence had been recorded. The Sessions Judge thereupon proceeded to record the evidence in the cross-case and then heard the arguments in both the cases, and thereafter recorded the opinion of the assessors. He then wrote one judgment in both the cases, without keeping the evidence recorded in each case separate but making use of the evidence recorded in the cross-cases in arriving at his conclusions about the matter in controversy between the parties in the first case. Held, setting aside the conviction, that the manner in which the Sessions Judge dealt with two cases was not warranted by any sanction of law and the trials in those cases were illegal—Hayat, 29 Cr.L.J. 232, 107 I.C. 766, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 380, 10 Lah.L.J. 389, following Allu, 75 I.C. 980, 4 Lah. 376, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 101, 6 Lah.L.J. 103, 25 Cr.L.J. 68. The procedure by which two cross cases, tried separately, are heard by the same set of assessors and decided by the same judgment is not illegal, but the danger is that by adopting this method the Courts are liable to mix up the evidence in the two records. If they do so, the procedure is irregular and it is difficult to hold that the irregularity is one that can be condoned by reason of absence of prejudice to the accused. It is almost inevitable that in such cases there must be prejudice to the accused—Khair Mohamad v. Emp., A.I.R. 1910 Lah. 466 (467). See also Muthuswami v. Ranganatha, 1933 M.W.N. 1274 and Muhammad, 25 Cr.L.J. 551, 81 I.C. 89, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 149. Where two cases are tried side by side and the Magistrate disposes of them together, it is generally not possible for him while disposing of one case to refrain from taking impressions from the evidence in the other case. Where the irregularity has not occasioned any failure of justice, nor has it any way prejudiced the accused, the trial is not illegal—Kanchan, 35 Cr.L.J. 1415, 151 I.C. 812, A.I.R. 1934 All. 651, 1934 Cr.C. 863. In the trial of cross-cases the Magistrate examined the prosecution witnesses in one case in which no defence witness was examined. He then examined the prosecution witnesses in the cross-case but none of the defence. At the end of that evidence, the pleaders on both sides addressed the Court with he expressed his view that it would not be possible for him to give a different finding. See also Jaggan, 1932 M.W.N. 692, where disadvantages of trial at one and the same time have been pointed out. Where one of the cross-cases was triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions and the other by the Magistrate himself, the Magistrate should try the case himself without committing it to the Court of Session—Paladugu Lakshminarayan v. Tadiboyina Suryanarayana, 33 Cr.L.J. 765, 139 I.C. 343, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 502, 1932 M.W.N. 634, 63 M.L.J. 101, 1932 Cr.C. 506, 36 M.L.W. 390, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 667; Chinnaswamy, 1933 M.W.N. 550; Gorrepaty Ramasubbayya, 39 Cr.L.J. 715, 176 I.C. 182, 47 M.L.W. 486, 1938 M.W.N. 417, 11 R.M. 45, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 529, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 403. See Notes 695 and 718 in this connection.

It is desirable that the cross-cases should be tried by one Magistrate—Judisthir v. Sheikh Samir, 27 C.W.N. 700. There is no clear law as regards the procedure in counter-cases, a defect which the Legislature ought to remedy. It is a generally recognised rule that such cases should be tried in quick succession by the same Judge, who should not pronounce judgment till the hearing of both cases is finished—Krishna, 31 Cr.L.J. 461, 123 I.C. 10, 1929 M.W.N. 883, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 190, 31 M.L.W. 233, 58 M.L.J. 352, 1930 Cr.C. 190. See also Periaswami v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 998. There is nothing contrary to law in a trial being conducted in one Court and an enquiry into an accusation arising out of the same facts in another Court, an accusation which the lower Court has no jurisdiction to consider. It must be manifest, however, that such a procedure is highly inconvenient and where the evidence is bound to be the same, there is a possibility of the two Courts independently arriving at a different estimate of the evidence—Kanhaiya Lal v. Baijnath, 34 Cr.L.J. 519, 143 I.C. 77, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 78, 1933 Cr.C. 315, Ind Rul 1933 Nag 149, 29 N.L.R. 201. See also Paladugu Lakshminarayan v. Tadiboyina, supra.

The dictum that the statements of witnesses are not evidence merely because they happen to be the statements of persons who are accused in a counter-case is clearly wrong—Rahuman Khan Sahib, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 403, 1938 M.Cr.C. 70, 47 M.L.W. 149, 1938 M.W.N. 31, dissenting from Sanna Basya v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 1196, 1937 M.W.N.Cr. 244. It is intended by Circular No. 52 of the Peshwar Judicial Commissioner's Court that in cross-cases the trial Judge should bring on each record separately the whole story complete by itself and should give findings on the issues involved in that case independently from those which arise in the other. But it is never intended that a part of the story should be admitted in each case and the other part shut out—Ibrahim v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 401, 174 I.C. 137, A.I.R. 1938 Pesh. 10. The Magistrate should not consider the evidence in one case for the purpose of coming to a conclusion in the other—Garibulla v. Sadar, 25 Cr.L.J. 941, 81 I.C. 557, 39 C.L.J. 331, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 813. Where this was done and the accused was prejudiced thereby, the Madras High Court set aside the conviction—Krishna v. Suryanarayana, 1933 M.W.N. 243. Where in deciding a case the Magistrate uses evidence given in the counter-case, that alone is sufficient to make it impossible to uphold the conviction—Mrs. W. Wagh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 59, 41 Cr.L.J. 247, 186 I.C. 67, 12 R.C. 466; Beni Madho v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 816 (817). Technically it is better to keep the evidence in cross-cases entirely distinct, and to deliver two separate judgments. Where no injustice followed from non-compliance with this procedure, the conviction should not be set aside—Madat Khan, 100 I.C. 126, 8 Lah. 93, 1927 M.W.N. 68, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 26, 31 C.W.N. 393, 28 P.L.R. 167, 52 M.L.J. 441, 28 Cr.L.J. 251, 25 M.L.W. 724, 29 Bom.L.R. 781, 45 C.L.J. 408. (In this case although the cross-cases were tried separately the High Court gave one judgment). But the very use of evidence which is not part of the record is by itself proof of prejudice to the accused. The use in a case of evidence produced in another case is not a mere irregularity but an illegality—Beni Madho v. Emp., supra. Where the evidence in the two cases was recorded separately, but the Magistrate with a view to avoid unnecessary repetition, thought it convenient to dispose of them in one judgment in which he treated the evidence in the two cases as an admission of guilt under that section. An accused person does not plead to a section of a criminal statute. He pleads guilty or not guilty to the facts alleged in the charge, and a plea of guilty amounts only to an admission that he occupied the position as stated in the charge and committed the acts therein specified; but unless the facts averred in the charge amount in law to an offence under a particular section, a plea of guilty cannot amount to an admission of guilt under that section—Basant, 7 Lah 359, 27 Cr.L.J. 907.

When an accused person does not formally plead guilty, but throws himself at the mercy of the Court and says that he will not cross-examine any prosecution witnesses or examine any defence witnesses, the Magistrate ought to ask him whether he pleads guilty, and if he does not plead guilty, he should be formally asked to enter on his defence. The Magistrate acts wrongly if in such a case he considers the case as closed and convicts the accused—Upendra, 12 C.W.N. 140, 6 Cr.L.J. 434 (436).

Plea of Pleader:—Where the accused is present in Court, his pleader cannot be called upon to plead under this section on behalf of his client, and it is improper for a Magistrate to act upon such plea, though made in the presence and hearing of the accused. It would be more regular in form for the Magistrate to call upon the accused to say with his own lips whether he denies the truth of the complaint—Sursingh, 6 Bom.L.R. 861, 1 Cr.L.J. 939. But when the accused has been permitted under sec. 205 to appear by a pleader, the latter may perform all acts which devolve upon the accused in the course of the trial, and he can plead guilty or not guilty under this section—Jamal, 6 S.L.R. 206, 14 Cr.L.J. 272; Dorabshah, 50 Bom. 250, 27 Cr.L.J. 440.

Record of plea—If the plea is not recorded, the conviction is liable to be set aside—Gopal Dhanuk, 7 Cal 96. The Court must record the actual words used; a narrative of what occurred and of the statements made by the prisoners is not a proper record of the plea—Gopal Dhanuk, 7 Cal 96. If the statement of the accused is in a foreign language, the Magistrate need not record it in the language in which it is made, but the record must be in the language in which it is interpreted—Vambile, 5 Cal 826.

833. Conviction on plea:—If after the charge is framed the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate can refuse to convict on the plea, and can proceed to take further evidence—Satya Kinkar, 25 C.W.N. 212 (213); Kunwar Sen v. Emp., A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 86 (89), 8 Luck 286, 34 Cr.L.J. 124, 1933 Cr.C. 128, 141 I.C. 192, 91 O.W.N. 1135. In a warrant case, although an accused can be convicted on his own plea of guilty, still a conviction should not be made unless there is evidence on the record in support of the prosecution. It is highly improper in a warrant case to convict an accused on his own admission alone without recording any evidence for the prosecution and without framing a formal charge—Chinnappayar, 29 Mad 372; Natabar, 27 C.W.N. 923 (924), 25 Cr.L.J. 1270.

If the accused pleads "not guilty," but admits some (or even all) of the facts alleged by the prosecution, the proper procedure for the Magistrate is not to convict him on the admission without taking evidence, but to proceed to trial by examining the witnesses and giving an opportunity to the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and produce his own evidence—Sonabhai, 9 Bom.L.R. 1346, 6 Cr.L.J. 434 (425).

In warrant cases it is discretionary with the Magistrate to defer conviction of the accused who pleads guilty and use his confession against other co-accused under sec. 30, Evidence Act—Arudumyan Guljar Patel v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 17 (23), 1 L.R. 1937 Nag. 315, 38 Cr.L.J. 237, 168 I.C. 582 (F.B.)

255A. In a case where a previous conviction is charged under the provisions of section 221,

Procedure in case of previous convictions section (7), and the accused does not admit that he has been previously convicted, if the facts alleged in the charge, the Magistrate may, after he has c

by the Select Committee of 1916:—"It may happen that up to the time of a charge being framed the accused is not professionally represented, and it seems reasonable in such a case that he should be given time until the next hearing to engage a pleader and decide what witnesses he will cross-examine."

835. Scope of section:—"This is a section which is frequently ignored by subordinate Courts, though their attention has been drawn to it by many rulings and though the section is in itself quite clear"—Moola, 11 P.R. 1914, 16 Cr.L.J. 146.

This section does not apply to security cases. Section 117 lays down that the procedure prescribed for warrant cases is as nearly as possible to be followed in cases of security for good behaviour, but it does not follow that that gives a right to the person proceeded against under sec. 110 to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses under sec. 256 on entering on his defence, when he has once cross-examined them before or had the opportunity of cross-examining them before—Chitamon, 35 Cal 243 (258), 12 C.W.N. 299, 7 C.L.J. 177; Karuthasami, 53 Mad 173, 58 M.L.J. 229, 124 I.C. 1, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 331, 31 M.L.W. 243, 1930 Cr.C. 323, 1930 M.W.N. 178, 31 Cr.L.J. 618 (622) (F.B.); Ahmad Baksh, 1916 P.R. 1, 17 Cr.L.J. 81, 32 I.C. 676, 58 P.W.R. 1915 (Cr.); Bija, 8 Lah. 265, 28 Cr.L.J. 239, 99 I.C. 1039, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 470, 28 P.L.R. 43 (dissenting from Lanska, 4 Bur.L.T. 24, 12 Cr.L.J. 89, 9 I.C. 468); Ajib Singh, 35 Cr.L.J. 633, 148 I.C. 325, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 62, 1934 Cr.C. 139; Nim, 34 Cr.L.J. 9, 140 I.C. 170, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 8, 1933 Cr.C. 32, 27 S.L.R. 19. In security cases, the order of the Magistrate under sec. 112 is equivalent to a charge. Therefore, the person against whom the order is made is fully aware of what is alleged against him, and as the evidence of the prosecution witnesses is recorded in his presence he has every opportunity of cross-examining them; and this is tantamount to cross-examination after charge. Consequently, there is no reason why he should be allowed the right of a second cross-examination and protract the proceedings unnecessarily—Zamin, 142 I.C. 752, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 29, Ind Rul 1933 Rang. 52, 34 Cr.L.J. 468, 1933 Cr.C. 277 following Chintaman, supra. The observations of Ayling and Coutts-Trotter, JJ., in Venkatachinnayya, 43 Mad. 511, 38 M.L.J. 370, 11 M.L.W. 435, 56 I.C. 50, 1920 M.W.N. 280 (F.B.), supporting the contrary view, were held to be obiter dicta in 53 Mad. 173 (F.B.) quoted above.

But though the person proceeded against under sec. 110 is not entitled to a second cross-examination under sec. 256, still he must be given one opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses at some stage of the inquiry. Where no reasonable opportunity was given to such person at any stage of the proceeding to cross-examine the witnesses, he was certainly prejudiced and the order for security must be set aside—Tulok, 50 All. 71, 25 A.L.J. 749, 28 Cr.L.J. 792 (794), 101 I.C. 432, A.I.R. 1927 All. 660, followed in Chandan, 52 All. 448, 1930 A.L.J. 389, 31 Cr.L.J. 627 (628).

This section does not apply to an inquiry into a Sessions case prior to commitment. In such inquiry the accused has no right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed—Baldeo, 19 O.C. 239, 18 Cr.L.J. 105. See Note 698 under sec. 208.

This section gives an accused person the right to have the witnesses for the prosecution cross-examined after charge has been framed, and that right is not in any way affected by the provisions contained in Ch. XL Section 507, which is one of the sections contained in the said chapter, provides for the inspection of depositions taken on commission, and it is open to a person accused in a warrant case, to refrain from putting in any interrogatories when the commission is first issued, and to apply at a later stage (i.e., after he has inspected the deposition on commission and after charge has been framed against him), for re-issue of the commission together with his cross-interrogatories—Dombrian v. Someswar, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 693, 61 Cal. 824, 152 I.C. 1005, 59 C.L.J. 377, 38 C.W.N. 673, 1934 Cr.C. 1044. See also Sukhranddas v. Emp., in Note 1324.

836. Cross-examination:—(1) Before frame of charge (section 252):—Although the proper time to recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution the said accused under section 255, sub-section (2), or section 258, take evidence in respect of the alleged previous conviction and shall record a finding thereon.

834. This new section has been added by sec. 71 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

"We think that this addition is necessary after sec. 255, to provide for a case where previous conviction is also charged. Definite provision is made for this in the case of trials before a Court of Session (see sec. 310), but it does not seem to have been provided for by the Code in the case of a Magistrate's trial"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916. "It was suggested to us that the new sec. 255A is unnecessary on the ground that though a procedure for the proof of previous convictions is necessary in a Sessions Court to prevent the jury or the assessors from being prejudiced by anything they may hear as to the accused's previous record, yet in warrant cases the same considerations do not apply. On the whole, however, we think the new section may serve a useful purpose and we have retained it"—Report of the Joint Committee of 1922.

Prior to the enactment of this section it was held that in a trial before a Magistrate, it was not illegal to adduce evidence of a previous conviction before the accused was called upon for his defence, if such procedure did not prejudice the accused—Delhi Sonar, 50 Cal. 367. In another case, however, the trial was set aside, because the accused was prejudiced by reason of the Magistrate allowing the proof of previous conviction to go in before the evidence for the defence was gone into—Galam Hossein, 10 C.W.N. excv. But these cases are no longer of any authority, because the present section provides that the Magistrate can take evidence of previous conviction only after he has convicted the accused.

This section means that the Magistrate should first write out a judgment of conviction without passing sentence. Then, if the accused had denied previous conviction, he should proceed to take evidence to prove it. Where the Magistrate examined a witness to prove the previous conviction, which was 13 years old, before convicting the accused and the accused applied for transfer of the case on that ground, the High Court cancelled the charge under sec. 75, I. P. C., altogether without granting the transfer—Ishar Singh v. Shama Dusadh, 38 Cr.L.J. 484, 167 I.C. 881, 17 P.L.T. 627, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 131, 3 B.R. 379, 9 R.P. 449.

state, at the commencement of the next hearing of the case or, if the Magistrate for reasons to be recorded in writing so thinks fit, forthwith, whether he wishes to cross-examine any, and, if so, which, of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken. If he says he does so wish, the witnesses named by him shall be re-called and, after cross-examination and re-examination (if any), they shall be discharged. The evidence of any remaining witnesses for the prosecution shall next be taken, and, after cross-examination and re-examination (if any) they also shall be discharged. The accused shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence.

(2) If the accused puts in any written statement, the Magistrate shall file it with the record.

Change:—The italicised words in sub-section (1) have been added by sec. 72 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reasons have been thus stated question—Deep Chand, A.I.R. 1935 All. 627, 1935 A.L.J. 666, 1935 Cr.C. 641, 36 Cr.L.J. 1260, 157 I.C. 915.

The right referred to in this section is absolute and unqualified and is intended to apply only where the witnesses are still before the Court and before they have been discharged from further attendance. Under sec. 257, however, there is a discretion vested in the Court to resubmit the prosecution witnesses already examined; and where a witness has been allowed to depart under sec. 256 on the representation of the accused that he is not required, any further application to re-examine him must be deemed to fall under sec. 257—Lockley, 43 Mad. 411, 38 M.L.J. 209, 21 Cr.L.J. 297.

Without actually deciding the question whether the accused has an absolute right to insist that the prosecution witnesses in a warrant case should be cross-examined in the order which the defence Counsel desires, the Calcutta High Court, in the peculiar circumstances of the case, held that if the Magistrate had a discretion in the matter he should exercise it in favour of the accused—Mfoosa, 34 Cr.L.J. 347, 142 I.C. 479, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 189, 37 C.W.N. 288, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 274, 1933 Cr.C. 235. See also Ibrahim, 36 Cr.L.J. 41 (43), 152 I.C. 236, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 209, 1934 Cr.C. 980.

The ideal procedure regarding the examination of the prosecution witnesses is to examine all of them on one day or on two consecutive days, so that all would be present and ready to be cross-examined if the accused exercised his rights under this section. If the witnesses are allowed to go and are then to be recalled, it throws a heavy burden on the complainant and the witnesses which should be avoided as far as possible—Nirpat Singh, 1939 N.L.J. 201.

Summary trial:—The provisions of sec. 256 which gives an absolute right to the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after they had been examined-in-chief, must apply to a summary trial of warrant cases. The Magistrate should allow the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after all of them had been examined-in-chief—Tittu, 1920 Pat.H.C.C. 283, 57 I.C. 454, 21 Cr.L.J. 630, 1 P.L.T. 652. This view of law was also accepted in Raju Achari, 28 Cr.L.J. 12, 50 Mad. 740, 99 I.C. 44, 50 Mad. 740, 51 M.L.J. 687, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 78. The object of Ch. 22 is to shorten the record and the work of the Magistrate in making the record, it is not intended to deprive the accused person of any of the rights under Ch. 20 or 21. In a summary trial the accused is entitled, both in summons and warrant cases (only in the former if the Court thinks fit), to have processes to summon his witnesses; he is equally entitled to have the prosecution witnesses re-called after the explanation, which takes the place of a formal charge, is made and that, in accordance with the procedure prescribed in warrant cases, does not take place until the prosecution has called its witnesses and satisfied the Court that there is sufficient material on which to charge the accused, or, in the case of a summary trial, to ask him to show cause why he should not be convicted on the evidence appearing against him—Munna v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 87, 1939 N.L.J. 7, 1 L.R. 1939 Nag. 457, 40 Cr.L.J. 846, 184 I.C. 44. The Bombay High Court and the Oudh Chief Court have taken a different view and held that in summary trials under sec. 263, when no charge is framed, the accused has no right as such to re-call the witnesses for the prosecution. If the accused even without a charge satisfies the Court that it is necessary or advisable that any particular witness should be re-called, there is no doubt that the Magistrate would consider the application favourably—Umaji Krishnaji, 27 Cr.L.J. 431 (432), 93 I.C. 159, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 226, 28 Bom.L.R. 95; Gokaran, 9 O.W.N. 334, 1932 Cr.C. 405 (407), 137 I.C. 684, 33 Cr.L.J. 506, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 242, 7 Luck. 699.

Section 256, Cr. P. C., applies even in the case of summary trials if the case is a warrant case—Shudu, 31 Cr.L.J. 683, 124 I.C. 370, 24 S.L.R. 336, A.I.R. 1930 Sind. 146.

Magistrate's duty to ask:—The word "hearing" is not defined anywhere in the Criminal Procedure Code. The intention of the law is that the Magistrate should adjourn the case, after framing the charge and recording the plea of the accused, to a later date so that the accused may have time to consider whether he wishes further to examine the witnesses for the prosecution. On the adjourned date the accused should is after the charge is read over to him and before he is called upon to make his defence, still this section does not prohibit such cross-examination (under sec. 252) before the charge is framed—Sagal, 21 Cal. 642. An opportunity should be given to the accused, if he so desires, to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses even before the charge is framed—Ashirbad v. Maju, 8 C.W.N. 838.

(2) After frame of charge (sec. 256) :—The fact that the accused has cross-examined the witnesses for the prosecution before the charge is framed, does not deprive him of the right given him by this section of recalling and cross-examining those witnesses after the charge is framed—Zamuna v. Ram Tahal, 27 Cal. 370 (372); Inder v. Brown, 37 Cal. 236 (238); Nilkanta, 20 Cal. 469; Sagal, 21 Cal. 642; Nga Pya, 14 Cr.L.J. 388, 6 Bur.L.T. 67; Nasarvanji, 2 Bom.L.R. 542. In trials of warrant cases it is when a charge-sheet is drawn up, and not before, that the accused is for the first time informed as to the offences that have appeared from the evidence to have been committed by him and hence it is only right that after a charge is framed the accused should in warrant cases be given an opportunity of a further cross-examination expressly directed to the charge, although the prosecution witnesses were already cross-examined before the frame of charge—Chintaman, 35 Cal. 243 (258); Zamin, 1933 Cr.C. 277, 142 I.C. 752, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 29, Ind. Rul. 1933 Rang. 52, 34 Cr.L.J. 468. Even when the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined by the accused before frame of charge on the understanding that the accused would not require those witnesses to be recalled for further cross-examination after the charge, still the Magistrate cannot refuse the application of the accused to recall and cross-examine those witnesses after the charge is framed—Kokul Ghose v. Kasimuddi, 6 C.W.N. 424. Where the witnesses for the prosecution were cross-examined by the pleader for the accused before the frame of charge, and the pleader then stated that he no longer required their attendance, but after the framing of the charge the pleader for the accused wanted to further cross-examine the witnesses, held that under sec. 256, the accused was entitled to do so—Ramchandra, 5 Pat. 110, 7 P.L.T. 304, 27 Cr.L.J. 499.

(3) The accused has a third chance of cross-examination under sec. 257. See Note 846 under that section.

837. According to the plain language of this section, the accused has a right to have the witnesses for the prosecution recalled and cross-examined after the frame of charge—Gopal Sheikh, 7 C.L.J. 240; Talluri Venkayya, 4 Mad. 130; Titu Sahu, 1 P.L.T. 652, 57 I.C. 454, 21 Cr.L.J. 630; Mohan Singh, 24 Cr.L.J. 371, 1923 P.W.R. 9; and the Magistrate is not justified in refusing to recall the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, specially when the accused had not cross-examined any witnesses before the frame of charge—Ramyad, 5 P.L.J. 94, 21 Cr.L.J. 814. It is the duty of the Magistrate to recall prosecution witnesses for cross-examination if the accused so demands after the charge is framed—Amin Chand v. King-Emp., 12 P.R. 1907 Cr., 32 P.W.R. 1907 Cr., 6 Cr.L.J. 339, 45 P.L.R. 1908. See also Har Kishan Das v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 All 127, 38 Cr.L.J. 361, 1937 A.L.R. 166, 167 I.C. 236, 1936 A.W.R. 1273, for the meaning of the word "recall". The accused has a right to have the prosecution witnesses recalled for cross-examination after the frame of charge, even though before the frame of charge he had professed to take no part in the trial and had refused to cross-examine the witnesses—Chint Ram, 32 P.L.R. 13, 32 Cr.L.J. 1202 (1203), 134 I.C. 580, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 186, 1931 Cr.C. 306, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 961. Where there are several accused, each of the accused should be given an opportunity to cross-examine. A Magistrate cannot refuse to allow the further cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution by one of the accused, on the ground that they had been cross-examined by another—Lala Ram, 11 C.W.N. cxi. But where the accused were represented by several different lawyers and one of these lawyers led the cross-examination and others helped him in suggesting questions to be asked, held that all the accused had the opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and if no questions were asked on behalf of some of the accused the only conclusion that can reasonably be drawn from the circumstances would be that they did not want to ask them any Inder Rai v. Brown, 37 Cal 236 (238). See also Arumugam, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 192, 12 Cr.L.J. 548. Where the charges are complicated and the accused are ignorant persons, they should not be called upon to cross-examine the witnesses immediately after the charge is framed, but a reasonable time should be given to them to get proper legal advice and to engage a pleader before they are called upon to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses—Rangasami Padayachi, 16 Cr.L.J. 786. This is now made clear by the addition of the words "at the commencement of the next hearing of the case." This amendment provides that the accused may be asked whether they wish to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on a date subsequent to that upon which they are called upon to plead to the charge. It is intended to give the accused person an interval of time to think out the lines of their defence before they are called upon to inform the Court how they intend to proceed. Omission of this new procedure is not an irregularity which vitiates the whole trial unless the accused is prejudiced in his evidence. Nevertheless the Legislature has conferred upon an accused person the privilege that ordinarily after being charged with an offence, he shall have a period of not less than twenty-four hours to consider the method in which he will meet the charge, it is difficult to say that he has not been prejudiced if the Magistrate, without assigning any reason for departing from the normal procedure and probably because he overlooked or was unaware of the change in the law has not allowed him that privilege—Phuman, 88 I.C. 518, A.I.R. 1925 Lah 339, 7 Lah L.J. 114, 26 P.L.R. 460, 26 Cr.L.J. 1158. It is the intention of the Legislature that sufficient time should be given to the accused to consider whether he wishes to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses after the framing of the charge, and it is only in special cases that the Magistrate can require him to state forthwith if he so wishes—Ram Chandra, 93 I.C. 963, A.I.R. 1926 Pat 214, 5 Pat 110, 27 Cr.L.J. 499. Where the accused stated that his pleader was absent as he was engaged in another Court, and the accused applied to the Magistrate to adjourn the hearing, but the Magistrate refused the application on the ground that it was his usual practice to proceed forthwith with the cross-examination, held that it was not a cogent or adequate reason for not adjourning the hearing, and the Magistrate committed an illegality which vitiated the trial—Lakshman, 53 Bom 578, 1929 Cr.C. 130 (132), A.I.R. 1929 Bom 309, 31 Bom L.R. 593. But where the Magistrate allowed only one day's adjournment after charge was framed, with the result that the defence Counsel did not appear in the case, held that it was by no means incumbent on the Court to give a longer adjournment in the case which was a petty one—Bhanuarsingh v. Sukhramsingh, 41 Cr.L.J. 585 (586).

If on the adjourned date the accused is unable to cross-examine the witnesses on the ground that he had not been furnished with copies of their statements, he is entitled to have the witnesses recalled again for cross-examination, or to cite them as his defence witnesses—Chint Ram, 32 P.L.R. 13, 32 Cr.L.J. 1202 (1203), 134 I.C. 580, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 186, 1931 Cr.C. 306, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah 964.

"Forthwith"—Recording reasons—Where the accused is represented by a pleader from the outset, he may generally be asked forthwith under this section if he wishes to cross examine, for the simple reason that the accused will not be prejudiced, and it is convenient to arrange a date for the subsequent attendance of the prosecution witnesses before they disperse. If, however, he is asked forthwith, with a view to recalling the witnesses forthwith, fuller reasons will be required, because it is usually convenient for the accused to have an interval in which to study the deposition already on record, and discover materials for the cross-examination of the witnesses. If an accused is not represented by a pleader, reason must be shown for not postponing the question to the next hearing by which time he can have consulted a pleader. Where the accused who was not represented by a pleader was required forthwith to state if he wished to cross-examine, and the Magistrate did not record his reasons, held that this was an illegality vitiating the trial, and not a mere irregularity curable by sec 537—Raju Achari, 50 Mad. 740, 51 M.L.J. 687, 28 Cr.L.J. 12 (13); Ramchandra, 93 I.C. 963, 5 Pat. 110, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 214, 27 Cr.L.J. 499. But see Janardhanam, 32 Cr.L.J. 221, 129 I.C.

be asked whether he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and there is nothing why it should be considered that the proceedings on the adjourned date are not a "hearing" merely because no other action is to be taken on that date—Bhajja v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All. 238, 1939 A.L.J. 81, 181 I.C. 537, 40 Cr.L.J. 549, 1939 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1. Under this section, it is the duty of the Magistrate, after a charge has been framed, to require the accused to state whether he desires to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses already examined—Zamunia v. Ram Tahal, 27 Cal. 370. Omission on the part of the Magistrate to ask the accused whether he wishes to recall any witnesses for cross-examination will invalidate the conviction (even though the accused had to some extent cross-examined them before frame of charge), and the case will be retried from the point of framing the charge—Moola, 1914 P.R. 11, 16 Cr.L.J. 146 (147); Mohan Singh, 24 Cr.L.J. 371, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 215; Phuman, 88 I.C. 518, 7 Lah.L.J. 114, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 339, 26 Cr.L.J. 1158; Girdhari, 31 Cr.L.J. 705, 124 I.C. 619, A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 255; Muthiah, 33 Cr.L.J. 738, 139 I.C. 203, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 559, 1932 Cr.C. 589, 1932 M.W.N. 857, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 641, 37 M.L.W. 134; Raju Achari, 28 Cr.L.J. 12, 99 I.C. 44, 24 M.L.W. 649, 51 M.L.J. 687, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 78, 38 M.L.T. 141, 50 Mad. 740; Nisar Ahmad v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 172, 40 Cr.L.J. 419, 180 I.C. 839, 1939 P.W.N. 832, 19 P.L.T. 845. But it has also been laid down that the provisions of sec. 256 are merely directory, and are not provisions relating to the mode of trial, but only lay down a rule of procedure, and, therefore, a non-compliance of these provisions is no more than an irregularity in procedure which can be cured by sec. 537, Cr. P. C.—Gokaran, 9 O.W.N. 334, 1932 Cr.C. 405, 137 I.C. 684, 33 Cr.L.J. 506, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 242, following Chhajju, A.I.R. 1927 All. 217, 99 I.C. 1029, 28 Cr.L.J. 229, 49 All. 316 and Gasiti, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 155, 93 I.C. 72, 27 Cr.L.J. 408, 6 Lah. 554. See also Ghanshamdas, 35 Cr.L.J. 516, 147 I.C. 802, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 135. The right of cross-examination is a very important right. It will be extremely difficult to say that where the witnesses for the prosecution already examined are not offered for cross-examination after the framing of the charge, the accused has not thereby suffered any substantial injury in the course of the trial. No hard and fast rule can be laid down in this respect because the answer to the question as to whether the accused has been prejudiced will be different according to the varying posture of each case—Ram Sundar, 31 Cr.L.J. 14, 120 I.C. 208, A.I.R. 1929 All. 901. In Munian Chetty, 16 Cr.L.J. 5 (Mad.), however, where the accused had fully cross-examined the prosecution witnesses before the frame of charge, the omission to ask was held to be a mere irregularity which did not prejudice the accused.

It makes no difference to the accused whether the question is put to him on the date the charge is framed or on the next date when the witnesses for the prosecution are present and when in fact they are cross-examined—Hafiz Mohd., A.I.R. 1936 All. 319, 1936 A.L.J. 274, 1936 A.W.R. (H.C.) 375, 1936 Cr.C. 476, 162 I.C. 758, 1936 A.L.R. 470, 37 Cr.L.J. 710.

It is incumbent on a Magistrate to make a record of the question and answer which are prescribed by sec. 256 (1), Cr. P. C. Moreover, when an answer has been received that the accused desires to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken, the section proceeds to say that the witnesses named should be recalled. The use of the word "recall" does not merely mean that the chaprasi should call their names. It means that if the witnesses are not present the Magistrate should issue process to ensure their attendance—Har Kishan Das v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 All. 127, 38 Cr.L.J. 361, 1937 A.L.R. 166, 167 I.C. 236, 1936 A.W.R. 1273.

Cross-examination on a subsequent date :—A Magistrate cannot insist on the prosecution witnesses being cross-examined by the accused immediately, whether they wish it or not—Tulok, 50 All. 71, 25 A.L.J. 749, 28 Cr.L.J. 792. Where the accused were asked at the time of framing the charge whether they would call any of the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, but they could not at that time make any answer, but on a subsequent day they applied for recalling some prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, held that the accused were entitled to have those witnesses summoned—witnesses and then frame a charge-sheet before he has examined all those witnesses. If he adopts the latter course and certain witnesses remain from the list who have not been examined then those witnesses are the remaining witnesses under sec 256 (1), Cr. P. C., and the complainant has a right to produce them after the cross-examination of those witnesses who have been previously examined. But if the Magistrate has examined all the witnesses for the prosecution in the list under sec. 252 (2), Cr. P. C., and has then framed a charge-sheet, there are no witnesses remaining who could come under the description in sec. 256 (1), Cr. P. C. Hence, after this stage, the complainant cannot claim to produce an entirely new witness—Raghubir Sahai v. Wali Husain Khan, AIR. 1937 All. 189, 38 CrLJ. 394, 167 IC. 522, 1937 A.L.R. 205, 1935 A.L.J. 1115, 1935 A.W.R. (H.C.) 886, not following Percy Henry Burn, supra. See also Hajari Tika Lodhi v. Emp. and Sital v. Dalganjan in Note 824.

The same High Court has, however, laid down that there is no prohibition in law against the admission of relevant and admissible evidence for proving an offence after a certain stage in the trial. It is quite clear that every Court has got inherent power to allow relevant evidence to be produced by any party at any stage of the trial. If such evidence is allowed to be produced by the prosecution all that the accused can urge is that he should be given a full opportunity of rebutting it. Therefore, there is nothing illegal or irregular in the fact that the Magistrate allows certain documents to be produced while the prosecution witnesses are being cross-examined by the defence. Even if it is assumed for the purpose of argument that the admission of the documents at that stage is an irregularity, sec 537, Cr. P. C., would cure it as there is obviously ample opportunity for rebutting the evidence by the defence—Lala v. Emp., 40 CrLJ. 145, 178 IC 894, AIR 1938 All 637, 1938 A.L.J. 1010, 1 LR 1938 All 968, 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 638, 1938 A.Cr.C. 103.

840. Expenses:—This section gives the accused an absolute right to recall witnesses for cross-examination at the expenses of the Government, and it is not open to the Magistrate to order the accused to pay costs for recalling those witnesses—Taqi, 22 CrLJ 112 (Lah.); Ram Chandra, 5 Pat 110, 27 CrLJ. 499, Radhakishan v. Ramkrishna, 7 N.L.J. 57, 25 CrLJ. 912; Amin Chand, 1907 P.R. 12, 6 CrLJ. 339; Bridhichand v. Lakhmichand, 8 N.L.R. 65, 13 CrLJ 554. Where a Magistrate refused to summon a witness for the prosecution except on payment of fees for his attendance, on the ground that the accused had declined to cross-examine that witness when he had the opportunity, held that the refusal was illegal—Isvar v. Kali Kumar, 4 C.W.N. 351. Where in order to suit the convenience of the Court or for reasons connected with the discharge of other public business, the witnesses for the prosecution are allowed to leave before the charge has been framed or before the right conferred by sec 256 has been exercised by the accused, they must be required to attend again, and ordinarily any expenses incurred on this score should be paid by the Government. There is nothing in this chapter which enables the Magistrate to demand even from a complainant the expenses to be incurred by his witnesses—Bridhichand v. Lakhmichand, 8 N.L.R. 65, 12 CrLJ. 554; Amrithahammal v. Ratnaswami Padavachi, 1933 M.W.N. 1266. If, however, the complaint is a private one (e.g., for an offence of using false trade mark) and the prosecution is not carried on by or under the orders or with the sanction of the Government and is bailable, and it does not appear that the prosecution is directly in the interests of public justice, then the complainant may be ordered to pay the expenses of the witnesses. The question as to whether the complainant or the Government should pay the expenses is to be decided by the Magistrate. But in no case can the accused be compelled to pay the expenses of the witnesses for the prosecution whom he wishes to cross-examine under sec 256. Under this section, the right of the accused to cross-examine is absolute—Radhakishan v. Ramkishan, 7 N.L.J. 57, 25 CrLJ 912, AIR. 1924 Nag 114; Ramchandra, 27 CrLJ. 499, AIR. 1926 Pat. 214, 5 Pat. 110, 93 IC 963. The Lahore High Court has, however, held that if the accused, after the framing of the charge, applies for recall of the prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination, the Magistrate should call those witnesses either at the expense of 74, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 977, 1930 M.W.N. 985, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 218, 1930 Cr.C. 1193 where Raju Achari's case was distinguished and Nisar Ahmad v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 172, 40 Cr.L.J. 419, 180 I.C. 839, 1938 P.W.N. 832, 19 P.L.T. 845 where it has been laid down that the Magistrate's failure to give his reasons in writing does not amount to anything more than an irregularity which is curable under section 537, Cr. P. C. Where the accused take no part in the proceedings of the Court, it will be presumed that the provisions of sec 256 were complied with by the Magistrate, even if there is nothing on the record to show that the accused were specifically asked whether they wished to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses—Sachchidanand, 32 Cr.L.J. 330, 129 I.C. 166, 7 O.W.N. 1048, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 73, Ind. Rul. 1931 Oudh 86, 1931 Cr.C. 129. The Allahabad High Court, however, holds that the failure of the Magistrate to strictly follow these provisions amounts to no more than an irregularity in procedure. Thus, the witnesses for the prosecution were examined on the 10th May, and cross-examined on the same day, and the accused also made their statements on the same day. On that day the accused were not represented by counsel. The Magistrate did not record any reasons for requiring the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on the same day. There was a subsequent hearing on 19th May, on which the accused were represented by counsel, but no application was made on behalf of the accused to resummon the prosecution witnesses, held that this showed that the accused had not been prejudiced by having been required by the Magistrate to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on the 10th May, and consequently, the trial was not illegal, although the Magistrate did not record reasons—Chhajju, 49 All. 316, 25 A.L.J. 111, 28 Cr.L.J. 229. The Lahore and Bombay High Courts are also of opinion that omission by the Magistrate to record his reasons for requiring the accused to forthwith cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, does not render the trial illegal, if it has not caused any prejudice to the accused—Ghasiti, 6 Lah. 554, 27 Cr.L.J. 408; Vishram, 32 Bom.L.R. 596, 31 Cr.L.J. 743.

If summons-case is tried as a warrant case :—Where an inquiry commenced as a warrant case and the accused curtailed their cross-examination of prosecution witnesses under the impression that they would have a further opportunity of cross-examining them, but no offence triable as a warrant case having been disclosed, the Magistrate closed the case and convicted the accused as in a summons case, it was held that it was the duty of the Magistrate to allow the accused an opportunity of completing the cross-examination before disposing of the case—Appavu, 16 Cr.L.J. 250 (251) (Mad.).

Similarly, where a Magistrate while trying a summons case and a warrant case in one trial under the warrant-case procedure, dismissed the complaint in respect of the warrant case and proceeded with the complaint in respect of the summons case, and, on being requested by the accused to recall the prosecution witnesses for their further cross-examination, refused to do so, it was held that the refusal was illegal and the accused must certainly have been prejudiced by the same. The privilege conferred by this section is a substantial one, and when denied it is for the prosecution to shew that there was no prejudice—Sobhanadri, 39 Mad 503, 16 Cr.L.J. 540.

See Notes 786 and 820.

838. 'Any remaining witnesses':—The words "any remaining witnesses" do not refer only to those witnesses who have been named by the complainant under sec. 252 (2); these words are wide enough to include any witness who according to the prosecution is able to support its case though he has not been summoned, provided he is not sprung upon the defence all on a sudden and sufficient opportunity is given to the accused to prepare for the cross-examination of such witness—Percy Henry Burn, 11 Bom.L.R. 1153, 10 Cr.L.J. 530, 4 I.C. 268. See also Ali Sher v. Mir Mahomed, 26 Cr.L.J. 958, 87 I.C. 110, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 315, where it has been laid down that where the remaining witnesses are not in attendance the complainant has no right to insist on their examination for whose evidence a postponement would be necessary.

Under sec 252 (2), Cr. P. C., the complainant is required to give in a list of prosecution witnesses. Under sec. 254, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate may examine all those removed or suspended from practice under clause 8 of the Letters Patent, whereupon one of them proposed to file a written statement, held that the proceedings under clause 8 of the Letters Patent were not of a criminal nature, that the rules of procedure of a criminal trial such as the filing of a written statement under sec. 256 (2), Cr. P. Code were not applicable to them, and that the respondent's written statement could not, therefore, be received—Abdul Rashid, 4 Lah 271.

A written statement filed by the accused cannot take the place of the examination of the accused which is imperative under sec 342 See Notes 980 under sec. 342.

842A. Argument:—A Court is bound to hear arguments, if offered, in every criminal trial or proceeding—Baij Nath, 25 Cr.L.J. 1380, 83 I.C. 340, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 228, 27 O.C. 323 So long as he is not guilty of unnecessary repetition or of irrelevant arguments a Counsel is entitled to present his client's case as he thinks best and it is no ground for a Judge to decline to hear him or to cut short his argument merely because he is expected by Superior Courts to turn out a certain amount of work within a fixed time—Muhammad Bakish, 29 Cr.L.J. 279, 107 I.C. 763, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 319.

The practice of receiving from the pleaders of the parties notes of argument after a case has been heard is most reprehensible and must be discontinued Where there is no indication that after the additional notes of written argument were put in by the prosecution, the defence had an opportunity of replying to the points raised therein, the trial was invalidated—Jogendra Nath v Rabindra Nath, 40 C.W.N. 863

257. (1) If the accused, after he has entered upon his defence, applies to the Magistrate to issue any process for compelling the attendance of any witness for the purpose of examination or cross-examination, or the production of any document or other thing, the Magistrate shall issue such process unless he considers that such application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Such ground shall be recorded by him in writing:

Process for compelling production of evidence at instance of accused

Provided that, when the accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining any witness after the charge is framed, the attendance of such witness shall not be compelled under this section, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the purposes of justice.

(2) The Magistrate may, before summoning any witness on such application, require that his reasonable expenses incurred in attending for the purposes of the trial be deposited in Court.

843. Issue of process:—The language of this section is imperative A Magistrate has no discretion to refuse to issue process to compel the attendance of any witness unless he considers that the application should be refused on the ground specified in this section, viz. that the name of that witness has been entered for the purpose of vexation, etc.—Purshottam, 26 Bom 418 See also Bhunsuani, 32 Cr.L.J. 1176, 131 I.C. 476, 8 O.W.N. 791, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 386, 1931 Cr.C. 818, Ind. Rul. 1931 Oudh 380 Every witness named in the list must be dealt with individually The Magistrate cannot arbitrarily limit the number of witnesses to be examined—Purshottam, supra Thus, where the accused put in a list of 72 witnesses, and the Magistrate ordered him to cite only 12 of them, it was held that the Magistrate's order was arbitrary and illegal. He should have based his refusal in regard to any particular witness on the ground mentioned in this section—Narajana, 31 Mad 131.

the Government or at the expense of the accused, but he cannot demand the expenses from the complainant—Faiz Muhammad v. Nabu, 29 Cr.L.J. 20 (21), 106 I.C. 436, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 175, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 295; Abdul Majid v. Mehr Chand, infra.

An order directing the complainant to pay costs to the accused for non-production of the prosecution witnesses for their cross-examination under this section is illegal—Abdul Majid v. Mehr Chand, 30 Cr.L.J. 664, 116 I.C. 710, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 756, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 566, following Amin Chand, 12 P.R. 1907 (Cr.), 32 P.W.R. 1907 (Cr.), 6 Cr.L.J. 339, 45 P.L.R. 1908 and Faiz v. Nabu, 29 Cr.L.J. 20, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 175, 106 I.C. 436.

841. Defence:—After the cross-examination is over, the accused should be called upon to enter upon his defence. It is not a proper procedure to call upon the accused to enter upon his defence before he has cross-examined the witnesses for the prosecution—Bridhichand v. Lakhmichand, 8 N.L.R. 65, 13 Cr.L.J. 554. It is improper for a Magistrate to require the person accused to summon his witnesses in defence until it has been ascertained whether further cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution is necessary—Bhajja v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All. 283 (284), 40 Cr.L.J. 549, 1939 A.L.J. 81, 181 I.C. 537. The accused cannot be called upon to produce witnesses until the case for the prosecution has been completed. Sec. 256, Cr. P. C., makes it clear that the accused shall be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence after the case for the prosecution is over. From the very terms of sec. 342, Cr. P. C., it is also clear that the Court must examine the accused at the end of the case for the prosecution and before he is called upon for his defence. The accused is, therefore, not bound to summon his witnesses or to produce them until he himself has been examined—Feroze Kazi v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 267 (269, 270), A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 295, 186 I.C. 227, 1940 P.W.N. 243. Strictly speaking, the accused cannot be called upon to enter into his defence until all the prosecution witnesses have been exhausted, and till then under the law the Magistrate cannot ask the accused to file the list of his defence witnesses—Ishar Singh v. Shama Dusaadh, 38 Cr.L.J. 484 (487), 167 I.C. 881, 17 P.L.T. 627, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 131, 3 B.R. 379, 9 R.P. 449. Therefore, the Magistrate acts illegally in ordering further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and the production of the defence evidence on the same day. He should fix a date for further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and when that is done or waived he should give another date to the accused for production of his defence witnesses. He is consequently bound to send for the defence witnesses of the accused under sec. 257, Cr. P. C., and cannot strike out the defence of the accused merely because the accused has not asked him to summon his witnesses for the day on which the accused has to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses—Abdul Ghafur v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 590, 188 I.C. 419, A.I.R. 1940 Pesh. 9. So also, the practice of examining the witnesses for the prosecution, after the defence is closed, to bolster up the prosecution if it appeared that the evidence was prejudicial, is highly deprecated—Radhamadhab, 15 C.W.N. 414 (416).

If the accused is not called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence, the proceedings are liable to be quashed—Charag Din, 22 S.L.R. 41, 28 Cr.L.J. 425.

Adjournment for defence:—According to the provisions of secs. 256 and 257, the accused is entitled as a matter of right to ask for an adjournment, after a charge has been framed against him, to enable him to adduce evidence in support of his defence—Emtaz Ali v. Jagat, 1 C.W.N. 313 (314). Where a trial is commenced as a warrant case, it should be concluded by the procedure laid down in this chapter for warrant cases; and the Magistrate acts illegally in concluding the trial as a summons case and convicting the accused, without giving him an opportunity to have his witnesses produced by giving him the adjournment asked for—Munshi Teli, 2 P.L.T. 482, 22 Cr.L.J. 683, 63 I.C. 619 (620).

842. Sub-section (2)—Written Statement:—Where certain legal practitioners were convicted under sec. 17 (1) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XIV of 1908, for being members of an Association called the "National Volunteers' Association" (which was declared by the Government to be an unlawful association), and were is made for the purpose of vexation or delay, the accused is entitled to have the prosecution witnesses summoned for cross-examination—Monmohan v. Bankim, 51 Cal. 1044 (1047), 26 Cr.L.J. 384; Zamin, 34 Cr.L.J. 468, 142 I.C. 752, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 29, 1933 Cr.C. 277, Ind. Rul. 1933 Rang. 52, and the Magistrate cannot refuse to summon the witnesses merely on the ground that the accused had fully cross-examined them or had opportunity of cross-examining them before the framing of charge—Sreenath, 4 C.W.N. 241; Istirar v. Kali Kumar, 4 C.W.N. 351.

The proviso to sub-sec. (1) is to the effect that when an accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining any witnesses after the charge has been framed, such witnesses shall not ordinarily be summoned, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the ends of justice. But there is no such restriction on examination of those witnesses, if they are present in Court—Ram Chandra, 28 N.L.R. 254, 1932 Cr.C. 746, 33 Cr.L.J. 940, 140 I.C. 117, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 137, Ind. Rul. 1932 Nag. 133. The witnesses shall not ordinarily be re-summoned. The mere fact that it might have been possible from a cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses to have extracted from them something which might have been of advantage to the accused, is not a sufficient ground to enable the Magistrate to recall those witnesses; it must appear that there was to be obtained from the witnesses sought to be cross-examined, something which would have materially affected the result of the trial. The onus is on the accused to establish that position—Ajo Mian, 6 P.L.T. 626, 27 Cr.L.J. 353 (355, 356). Under the proviso, it is for the applicant to satisfy the Magistrate that it is necessary for the ends of justice that his application for compelling the attendance of a witness should be granted. The mere fact that the counsel was ill on the previous occasion and could not cross-examine the witness is not a sufficient ground. It is necessary to show that there were definite matters of importance on which the witness ought to be cross-examined on behalf of the applicant—Ajo Mian, supra.

"After he has entered upon his defence"—It is only after the accused has entered upon his defence that the Magistrate can in his discretion under sec 257 refuse the application of the accused to resummon prosecution witnesses, on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. The Magistrate cannot refuse the application made by the accused under sec 256 before he enters on his defence—Zamunia v. Ram Tahal, 27 Cal 370 (372).

845. Summoning and examination of defence witnesses:—A Magistrate cannot refuse to examine a defence witness who is present in Court, if he is requested by the accused to do so—Nagar, 4 Bom.L.R. 461. Though it is competent for a Magistrate to decline to summon witnesses for the defence under this section, it is not competent for him to refuse to examine the defence witnesses, on the ground that their evidence is unnecessary—Nanbasappa, 14 Bom.L.R. 360, 13 Cr.L.J. 423. If a witness is unable to attend the Court owing to illness, and he appears to be an important witness, the Magistrate should ascertain whether it will be possible for that witness to attend the Court within a reasonable time; and if not, then his evidence should be taken on commission—Jamuna Singh, 3 Pat 591 (594), 26 Cr.L.J. 1255. Ordinarily it is the duty of the Court to summon defence witnesses unless it finds that the accused is summoning them for the purpose of vexation or delay—Ishar Singh v. Shama Dussadh, 38 Cr.L.J. 484 (486), 167 I.C. 881, 17 P.L.T. 627, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 131, 3 B.R. 379, 9 R.P. 449. Where the Magistrate finds that the accused has given a long list of witnesses to defeat or delay the ends of justice, he may decline to compel their attendance—Sajad Habib, 30 Cr.L.J. 814, 117 I.C. 667, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 23; Sitab v. Dalganjan, 12 L.L.J. 15, 14 Cr.L.J. 682 (683). But the Magistrate can refuse to summon them only on the ground that they have been included in the list for the purpose of vexation, delay, etc. He cannot refuse to summon them merely because their number is very large. Nor can he arbitrarily limit the number of witnesses to be summoned for the defence—Balkrishna, 51 All. 231, 1932 Cr.C. 150 (151), 33 Cr.L.J. 528, 137 I.C. 686, 1932 A.L.J. 39, A.I.R. 1932 All. 125,

Once the Magistrate has issued summons, he is bound to assist the accused in enforcing the attendance of the witnesses. If the witnesses do not obey the summons, the Magistrate cannot refuse to issue a second summons—Dhananjay, 10 Cal. 931; Gohar, 1884 P.R. 28; Sohara, 1922 P.L.R. 5, 62 I.C. 325, 22 Cr.L.J. 501; Id. Din, 1922 P.L.R. 6, 62 I.C. 321, 22 Cr.L.J. 497; Muhammad Din, 9 C.W.N. ccxxix; Amrit Mondal, 1 P.L.T. 490, 55 I.C. 608; Rohimuddi, 35 Cal. 1093; Ramaswamy v. Ramlinga, 1932 M.W.N. 1349. The Magistrate, once he has issued processes on the witness, is bound to follow up that process if the defence so desired, and to take all possible steps to secure the attendance of the witness with a view to his examination as a defence witness. The failure to follow the procedure indicated above vitiates the proceedings—Ramdhan Mondal v. Giridhari Mondal, 42 C.W.N. 843. It is the duty of the Court to see that the summonses or warrants are duly executed. If the witnesses do not attend, the accused can insist upon the Court to issue further process. Where the witnesses cited by the accused failed to attend, and it appeared that the summonses were not duly executed, but the Magistrate proceeded to give judgment remarking that it was the business of the accused to take suitable steps for bringing his witnesses before the Court, held that the conviction of the accused was illegal and must be set aside—Bijoy, 19 A.L.J. 945, A.I.R. 1921 All. 142. When once a Court has issued a summons to a witness under this section and the witness fails to appear, it is not justified in dispensing with the evidence of the witness on the ground that at the most he would merely support the accused in his statement—Sohara, 1922 P.L.R. 5, 22 Cr.L.J. 501, 62 I.C. 325. When the Magistrate had once issued the process, unless on subsequent scrutiny he finds that under sec. 257 he ought to have refused process, he is obliged to take every step in his power to compel the attendance of the witness subject to the provisions of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 257—Dwarka, 32 Cr.L.J. 613, 130 I.C. 799, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 207, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 207, 12 P.L.J. 372, 1931 Cr.C. 528.

The procedure of this section applies to summary trials, and the accused is entitled to have processes issued for compelling the attendance of prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, when he is called upon to enter on his defence, if they have not been cross-examined before—Nepal, 22 Cr.L.J. 271 (Cal.), 60 I.C. 671.

Section 257, Cr. P. C., governs the procedure to be followed in a case under sec. 110, Cr. P. Code—Tek Chand, A.I.R. 1935 All. 638, 1935 Cr.C. 643.

844. Refusal to summon prosecution witnesses:—An absolute right of cross-examination of the prosecution witness is not conferred by this section. The Magistrate can refuse to allow the accused to recall such witnesses for cross-examination, if he considers that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. But it lies upon the party who thinks himself aggrieved to show that the ends of justice have been frustrated in consequence of the refusal to recall the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination—Nilkanta, 20 Cal. 469.

Where the accused was given an opportunity under sec. 256 to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, but he refused to do so, leaving no option for the Magistrate but to close the case, and after the case was closed the accused applied to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, held that the accused's attitude was deliberately designed to harass the Court and that the Magistrate would be justified in refusing the application—Vyasa Rao, 21 M.L.J. 283 (F.B.); Khuda Bakhsh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 914, 17 Lah. 284, 33 Cr.L.J. 24, 165 I.C. 909, 9 R.L. 321, 1936 Cr.C. 1023, 38 P.L.R. 630, distinguishing Chint Ram, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 186, 1931 Cr.C. 306, 134 I.C. 580, 32 Cr.L.J. 1202, 32 P.L.R. 13; Sonu Kurmi v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 950, 177 I.C. 697, 11 R.P. 176, 5 B.R. 12, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 21. Where the witnesses for the prosecution were subjected to a very lengthy and strict cross-examination before the framing of charge, the Magistrate was right in declining to resummon those witnesses, if he was of opinion that the application to resummon the witnesses was made for vexation, etc.—Gorind, Ratanlal 930; Nilkanta, 20 Cal. 469; Ramsakal, 26 Cr.L.J. 1627, 90 I.C. 923, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 139; Mohamad, 35 Cr.L.J. 95, 116 I.C. 560, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 598, 1933 Cr.C. 1360; but unless the Magistrate considers that the application to resummon the witnesses is made for the purpose of vexation or delay, the accused is entitled to have the prosecution witnesses summoned for cross-examination—Monmohan v. Bankim, 51 Cal. 1044 (1047), 26 Cr.L.J. 384; Zamin, 34 Cr.L.J. 468, 142 I.C. 752, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 29, 1933 Cr.C. 277, Ind. Rul. 1933 Rang. 52, and the Magistrate cannot refuse to summon the witnesses merely on the ground that the accused had fully cross-examined them or had opportunity of cross-examining them before the framing of charge—Sreenath, 4 C.W.N. 241; Istwar v. Kali Kumar, 4 C.W.N. 351.

The proviso to sub-sec. (1) is to the effect that when an accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining any witnesses after the charge has been framed, such witnesses shall not ordinarily be summoned, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the ends of justice. But there is no such restriction on examination of those witnesses, if they are present in Court—Ram Chandra, 28 N.L.R. 254, 1932 Cr.C. 746, 33 Cr.L.J. 940, 140 I.C. 117, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 137, Ind. Rul. 1932 Nag. 133. The witnesses shall not ordinarily be re-summoned. The mere fact that it might have been possible from a cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses to have extracted from them something which might have been of advantage to the accused, is not a sufficient ground to enable the Magistrate to recall those witnesses; it must appear that there was to be obtained from the witnesses sought to be cross-examined, something which would have materially affected the result of the trial. The onus is on the accused to establish that position—Ajo Mian, 6 P.L.T. 626, 27 Cr.L.J. 353 (355, 356). Under the proviso, it is for the applicant to satisfy the Magistrate that it is necessary for the ends of justice that his application for compelling the attendance of a witness should be granted. The mere fact that the counsel was ill on the previous occasion and could not cross-examine the witness is not a sufficient ground. It is necessary to show that there were definite matters of importance on which the witness ought to be cross-examined on behalf of the applicant—Ajo Mian, supra.

"After he has entered upon his defence" —It is only after the accused has entered upon his defence that the Magistrate can in his discretion under sec. 257 refuse the application of the accused to resummon prosecution witnesses, on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. The Magistrate cannot refuse the application made by the accused under sec. 256 before he enters on his defence—Zamunia v. Ram Tahal, 27 Cal. 370 (372).

845. Summoning and examination of defence witnesses:—A Magistrate cannot refuse to examine a defence witness who is present in Court, if he is requested by the accused to do so—Nagar, 4 Bom.L.R. 461. Though it is competent for a Magistrate to decline to summon witnesses for the defence under this section, it is not competent for him to refuse to examine the defence witnesses, on the ground that their evidence is unnecessary—Nanbasappa, 14 Bom.L.R. 360, 13 Cr.L.J. 423. If a witness is unable to attend the Court owing to illness, and he appears to be an important witness, the Magistrate should ascertain whether it will be possible for that witness to attend the Court within a reasonable time, and if not, then his evidence should be taken on commission—Jamuna Singh, 3 Pat. 591 (594), 26 Cr.L.J. 1255. Ordinarily it is the duty of the Court to summon defence witnesses unless it finds that the accused is summoning them for the purpose of vexation or delay—Ishar Singh v. Shama Dusadh, 38 Cr.L.J. 484 (486), 167 I.C. 881, 17 P.L.T. 627, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 131, 3 B.R. 379, 9 R.P. 449. Where the Magistrate finds that the accused has given a long list of witnesses to defeat or delay the ends of justice, he may decline to compel their attendance—Sayad Habib, 30 Cr.L.J. 814, 117 I.C. 667, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 23; Sitab v. Dalganyan, 12 L.L.J. 15, 14 Cr.L.J. 682 (683). But the Magistrate can refuse to summon them only on the ground that they have been included in the list for the purpose of vexation, delay, etc. He cannot refuse to summon them merely because their number is very large. Nor can he arbitrarily limit the number of witnesses to be summoned for the defence—Balkrishna, 51 All. 231, 1932 Cr.C. 150 (151), 33 Cr.L.J. 528, 137 I.C. 666, 1932 A.L.J. 39, A.I.R. 1932 All. 125,

Ind Rul. 1932 All. 351; Yusuf, 27 Cr.L.J. 543, 93 I.C. 1039, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 451. See also Joty, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 136. It may be that the accused is not able to satisfy the Magistrate that witnesses named by him are definitely going to give evidence which is material in the case, but that does not necessarily show that the application is made for the purpose of defeating the ends of justice—Suppaya Chettyar v. Karuppaya Pillay, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 528 (530). A Magistrate cannot refuse to summon witnesses cited by the accused on the ground that the accused is unable or refuses to pay the costs of the witnesses—Debi Singh, 24 Cr.L.J. 831, 5 P.L.T. 112, 74 I.C. 863, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 142; or on the ground that the Magistrate is of opinion that they will not be able to give any reliable evidence one way or the other (without giving any reason for holding such opinion)—Arurugam, 12 Cr.L.J. 548, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 192; or on the ground that they are living at a great distance—Ayarvali, 45 M.L.J. 305, 24 Cr.L.J. 840, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 243, 1923 M.W.N. 758, 18 M.L.W. 899; or merely because the Magistrate thinks that no useful purpose will be served by summoning that witness—Ganpat, 24 Cr.L.J. 686 (Lah.). Where, after a case on both sides having been closed, the Magistrate summoned a witness to give evidence, whereupon the accused prayed to have certain witnesses summoned to rebut evidence of the Court witness, held that the Magistrate was bound to summon such witnesses and could not refuse to do so on the ground that the accused has stated at the close of his case that he did not wish to examine any more witnesses—Deela Mahton v. Sheo Dayal, 6 Cal. 714.

When an accused has made an application for summoning witnesses the Magistrate must deal with the application and pass an order either granting the prayer or refusing it—Kundanlal, 36 Cr.L.J. 889 (890), 156 I.C. 258, A.I.R. 1935 Sind. 69, following Bhomas v. Digambar, 6 C.W.N. 548.

If a Magistrate rejects the application for summoning the witnesses, he should specify his reasons for such refusal. If he fails to record the reasons, the conviction and sentence will be set aside—Sreenath, 4 C.W.N. 241; Manmohan v. Bankim, 51 Cal. 1044 (1047); Sat Narain, 3 All. 392; Debi Singh, 24 Cr.L.J. 831, 5 P.L.T. 112, 74 I.C. 863, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 142; Ram Saran, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 660; Purushottam, 26 Bom. 418; Narayana, 31 Mad. 131; Bakhsha, 35 Cr.L.J. 396, 147 I.C. 393, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1020, 1933 Cr.C. 1557. It is a sufficient record of reasons, if the Magistrate states facts which led him irresistibly to the conclusion that the application was for no other purpose than that of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice, although he does not say expressly that the application was made for that purpose—Wahid Ali, 11 C.W.N. 789, 6 Cr.L.J. 1. See also Narayana, 25 Cr.L.J. 401, 77 I.C. 481, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 106. Where a Magistrate rejects an application after recording on it "too late", this is a sufficient compliance with this section, though the reason is irregularly recorded—Kudrutulla, 39 Cal. 781, 13 Cr.L.J. 218.

Where the Magistrate summoned the defence witnesses he must be presumed to have concluded that they are not being produced by the accused for the purpose of vexation or delay, etc., and, therefore, he should hear them and in any case he must record his reasons for not hearing them in writing—Tek Chand, A.I.R. 1935 All. 638, 1933 Cr.C. 643, 36 Cr.L.J. 1142, 157 I.C. 413.

The Magistrate as far as possible should allow the accused to select the order in which the defence witnesses are to appear—Mirza Jaffar Beg v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 351 (356).

A witness cannot refuse to attend the Court when summoned and the rules of the High Court have clearly laid down the fees to which an expert witness is entitled. The Court, therefore, should not hesitate in exercising its powers under the law, however highly placed a witness may be. An accused person should not be burdened with the costs of an expert, if his demand is unreasonable, especially when the Magistrate is empowered to enforce the attendance of the witness and to pay him his reasonable dues—Parshotam Das, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 919, following Sayad Habib, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 23, 117 I.C. 667, 30 Cr.L.J. 811; Habib v. Mehdi Hussain, 29 Cr.L.J. 459, 108 I.C. 907 and Ram Narain, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 481, 1932 Cr.C. 619, 139 I.C. 508, 33 Cr.L.J. 761, 33 P.L.R. 811. See also Chauthi Singh v. Emp., in Note 818.

See Note 841.

846. Cross-examination:—The accused in a warrant case has three opportunities of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses; once, under sec. 252, before the charge is framed; secondly, under sec. 256 after the charge is framed; and under sec. 257, the accused is given the third opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses, unless the Magistrate decides that the application for cross-examination is vexatious—Ramyad, 5 P.L.J. 91, 21 Cr.L.J. 814; Varisai, 46 Mad. 449 (463). Where an application for adjournment to enable the accused to cross-examine the prosecution-witnesses being refused by the Magistrate, the accused cited those witnesses on his own behalf as defence witnesses, and then proceeded to cross-examine them, but was disallowed by the Magistrate, it was held that the mere fact that the accused had been compelled to treat the prosecution witnesses as his own witnesses did not change their character, and that they were really prosecution witnesses and summoned under sec. 257 for the purpose of cross-examination, and the Magistrate was wrong in refusing to allow their cross-examination—Sheo Prakash v. Raulins, 28 Cal. 594, 1 C.W.N. 19; Venku Reddi, 16 L.W. 195, 23 Cr.L.J. 192, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 32. Once a summons has been issued upon the prosecution witnesses and they are before the Court it does not seem that there is any jurisdiction in the Court to dictate to the accused the terms upon which the examination of the witnesses shall be conducted. If the accused wishes to put questions in cross-examination the Magistrate is bound to allow it—Rameshwar, 29 Cr.L.J. 308, 107 I.C. 846, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 253.

Where the prosecution witnesses could not be cross-examined owing to the defence Counsel being engaged in the Court of Sessions and an application for summoning them for cross-examination under this section was made and refused, held that the Magistrate acted hastily and unreasonably in the matter and that the accused should be given an opportunity to cross-examine them—Chamru, 33 Cr.L.J. 731, 138 I.C. 700, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 71, 1932 Cr.C. 345, Ind. Rul. 1932 Nag. 87.

Where an accused first obtained process for the attendance of a witness, but subsequently declined to examine him, whereupon the Court examined him as a Court-witness under sec. 540, it was held that the witness could not be treated as a defence witness, and that the accused had the right to cross-examine him—Mohendra, 29 Cal. 387, 6 C.W.N. 550.

An accused may be allowed to cross-examine the witnesses called by his co-accused, when the case of the co-accused is adverse to his case—Ram Chand v. Hansi, 21 Cal. 401. When two or more persons are tried on the same indictment and are separately defended, any witness called by one of them may be cross-examined on behalf of others, if he gives any testimony tending to criminate them. The counsel, too, for the other prisoners are entitled in such a case to rely upon his evidence. See Taylor on Evidence, para 1430, quoted with approval in Chaman Lal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 210 (215), 41 Cr.L.J. 639, 188 I.C. 440.

The accused summoned the complainant to produce certain account books of the firm. The summons clearly stated that the witness was to file certain account books but advantage was taken of this fact after the whole prosecution had been closed to cross-examine the complainant on behalf of the Crown in respect of everything connected with the case and to fill up the gaps in the prosecution evidence. Such an unheard of procedure cannot be too severely condemned—Kanarya Lal v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 491 (497), 168 I.C. 58, 9 R.O. 432, 1937 A.Cr.C. 80, 1937 O.W.N. 505, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh. 331, 1937 O.L.R. 202.

Curtailement of cross-examination:—While it is the duty of every Court to keep the cross-examination of a witness within legitimate bounds it must be careful, in the discharge of that duty, not to exercise too effective a control so as to unduly curtail legitimate cross-examination. Too much interruption by the presiding Judge in the course of the cross-examination of witnesses by the Counsel for the accused has, more often than not, the result of robbing the cross-examination of its efficacy and, therefore, undue interference in cross-examination must be avoided by the presiding Judge—Salag Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 416 (418), 167 I.C. 515, A.I.R. 1937 All. 171, 1937 A.L.R. 201, 9 R.A. 550. A Judge is and always must be in control of the proceedings in his Court. On the one hand the right of cross-examination must be carefully guarded, and it must be remembered that it may be necessary for an advocate to approach delicately and with caution the point upon which he is seeking to obtain admissions. It may be important that a witness whom he does not consider truthful should not be put on his guard by immediate presentation of the case set up by the opposing side. If questions are couched in too blunt a form he may readily deny them. Hence considerable latitude is desirable since the admissions sought to be elicited may only be forthcoming when the witness, if he is concealing something, is thrown off his guard: and there are cases in which it is necessary to drop a particular issue in the course of cross-examination and to return to it again discreetly at a later stage. On the other hand, the length of cross-examination is by no means the criterion of its excellence, and it is lamentably true that lack of skill in advocacy often leads to a failure to appreciate this fact. When irrelevant topics are pursued at great length, and persistence is shown in going over the same ground again and again in the hope of making the witness appear discrepant, some limit must be placed upon the latitude given. Continued irrelevancies and repetitions are not to be endured indefinitely. If after several warnings an advocate persists in abusing his position in this way, he may be directed to resume his seat, but only when the Judge has enquired what are the material matters on which he still desires to cross-examine and is satisfied that no satisfactory reply has been forthcoming from the advocate and that no legitimate questions by him have been shut out. In any case the Judge should make a note of the submission of any advocate as to further questions which he desires to put or as to any specific question which has been disallowed—Brahmayya v. The King, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 442 (444), 179 I.C. 783, 11 R.R. 347, 40 Cr.L.J. 265.

847. Production of documents:—In a warrant case the accused has no right to call for the production of documents in the possession of the prosecution, until after a charge has been framed and read out to him under secs 254 and 255. This right is given by sec. 257, after a charge has been framed. But the Magistrate should satisfy himself that the documents called for have some bearing on the issues in the case and are relevant, before granting a summons for their production—Tahilram v. Pitambaras, 8 S.L.R. 267, 16 Cr.L.J. 245. This view of law was not accepted in Muhammad Rahim, 36 Cr.L.J. 581 (586), 151 I.C. 762, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 13, 1935 Cr.C. 124 (F.B.), where it has been laid down that under sec. 91, Cr. P. C., any party to an inquiry, trial, or other proceeding under the Code may at any stage apply to the Court to call for the production of a document or other thing and is entitled to its production if he satisfies that such production is necessary or desirable for the purposes of such inquiry, trial or other proceeding. Under sec. 257, Cr. P. C., an accused person is entitled at the particular stage of his trial specified in the section to apply to the Court to call for the production of any document or thing, and the Court shall cause such production unless it considers that the application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Sections 257 and 91, Cr. P. C., are not antagonistic, they are inter-dependent.

See Kanaiya Lal v. Emp., in Note 816.

848. Expenses:—It was held in some cases that the inability or even refusal to pay the expenses would not be an adequate ground for refusing to summon the defence witnesses—Debi Singh, 24 Cr.L.J. 831 (Pat.); Qadu, 7 P.R. 1898. But the Lahore High Court holds that if the rule laid down in 7 P.R. 1898 is to be literally followed, then sub-sec. (2) of this section would become an entirely dead letter; because one can hardly conceive whether an accused person would willingly deposit the expenses of his witnesses if he knew he had only to express the unwillingness to entitle him to ret his witnesses summoned at the expenses of the Government—Ganpat, 24 Cr.L.J. 686 (Lah.). Subsection (2) fully empowers a Magistrate to order that the reasonable expenses of a witness shall be deposited by the accused before the witness is summoned. But the Magistrate should only summon so many witnesses at one hearing as he thinks he will be able to examine on that hearing, to save the expenses of parties—Ganpat, 24 Cr.L.J. 686 (Lah.).

Medical officers, like other persons, are bound to attend Court on receipt of summons and to give evidence if required by the Court. They cannot refuse to give evidence for reasons which they may consider to be sufficient, but they should represent to the Court as regards fees payable to them. Any dictation of terms on which they would give evidence is unnecessary and should be avoided—Chauthi Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 All. 768, 1937 A.L.J. 972, 39 Cr.L.J. 113, 172 I.C. 31. See also Parshotam Das v. Emp., infra.

As regards the expenses of causing the attendance of the accused's witnesses the general rule in warrant cases is that such costs are usually borne by the Crown (and not by the accused). Any departure from the usual rule must be supported by adequate and cogent reasons—Habib v. Mehdi Husain, 29 Cr.L.J. 459 (460), 108 I.C. 907, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 87 (Lah.); Sayad Habib, 30 Cr.L.J. 814, 117 I.C. 667, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 23. Under sub-sec. (1), the Magistrate can refuse to compel the attendance of defence witnesses if he considers that the application to summon them was made for the purpose of vexation, delay, etc. If the Magistrate does not refuse directly he cannot seek to achieve the same result indirectly by saying that he will summon the witnesses if their costs are deposited beforehand by the accused. What the Magistrate should do is to summon those witnesses for the defence whom he considers necessary witnesses, and the expenses are to be borne by the Government—Sayad Habib, 30 Cr.L.J. 814 (815), 117 I.C. 667, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 23; Ram Naram, 33 Cr.L.J. 761, 139 I.C. 508, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 481, 1932 Cr.C. 619, 33 P.L.R. 811, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 581; Brahma Datt, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 663; Parshotam Das v. Emp., infra, even though the offence is non-cognizable—Khushi Muhammad v. Abdulla Khan, 38 Cr.L.J. 941, 170 I.C. 539, 39 P.L.R. 137, 10 R.L. 132, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 458. A witness cannot refuse to attend the Court when summoned and the rules of the High Court have clearly laid down the fees to which an expert witness is entitled. The High Court, therefore, should not hesitate in exercising its powers under the law, however highly placed a witness may be. An accused person should not be burdened with the costs of an expert, if his demand is reasonable, especially when the Magistrate is empowered to enforce the attendance of the witness and to pay him his reasonable dues—Parshotam Das v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 133, 166 I.C. 128, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 919, 1936 Cr.C. 1007, 38 P.L.R. 1165, 9 R.L. 340. These rulings have not, however, been followed in Nanak Chand v. Suraj Parkash, 40 Cr.L.J. 68, 178 I.C. 468, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 693, 40 P.L.R. 944, 11 R.L. 460. See Notes under sec. 544 where it has been quoted. Where the defence filed a list of witnesses, and the Magistrate, being of opinion that they were not bona fide witnesses, required the accused to deposit the expenses of some of those witnesses, but the accused did not deposit the money, nor took steps for summoning the witnesses, held that the accused could not complain that the Magistrate did not give him an opportunity of having his witnesses examined—Uma Singh, 12 Pat. 234, 34 Cr.L.J. 1198, 146 I.C. 70, 14 P.L.T. 162, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 242, 1933 Cr.C. 714.

The Criminal Procedure Code gives a Magistrate a discretion to pass an order under sec. 257 (2), Cr. P. C., and his discretion is subject to sec. 544, Cr. P. C., and the rules passed by the Local Government under that section, that is a Magistrate cannot pay from Government the expenses of witnesses attending if he is not authorized to do so by the rules of the Local Government. The provision applies not only in summons cases but also in warrant cases. There has been no provision in the Province of Agra that the ordinary procedure in a warrant case is for the Government to bear the costs of the accused's necessary witnesses. The matter is left entirely to the discretion of the Magistrate. In view of the large number of the defence witnesses and of the fact that they come from many parts of the country the Magistrate is perfectly entitled to hold that their expenses cannot reasonably be incurred by Government under sec. 544, Cr. P. C., and he is therefore correct in requiring that the expenses should be deposited by the accused prior to the issue of summons in accordance with sec. 257 (2), Cr. P. Code—Mahtab Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All. 101, 1938 A.L.J. 1082, 179 I.C. 773, I.L.R. 1939 All. 57, 40 Cr.L.J. 257, 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 780.

Although the Magistrate can require the accused to pay the expenses for the attendance of his witnesses, still if he has once allowed the witnesses to be summoned without demanding expenses from the accused, and if by any chance the witnesses summoned for a particular date have not been examined on that date, the Magistrate has no power afterwards to say that on the next date of hearing the witnesses shall not be summoned except on payment of their expenses by the accused—Kishan Lal, 22 Cr.L.J. 711 (Lah.), 63 I.C. 871 (872) (Lah.).

A Court ordering a party to deposit the travelling allowance of a witness should state the amount of the travelling allowance to be deposited—Gourishankar, 6 P.L.R. 215, 26 Cr.L.J. 965.

Section 257 (2), Cr. P. C., does not provide that the expenses of issuing process shall be deposited in Court—Mg. San Nyein, 27 Cr.L.J. 415, 93 I.C. 79, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 13, 4 Bur.L.J. 187. This case has been overruled by K-E. v. Tha Shwe, 4 Rang. 146. See Note 824.

258. (1) If in any case under this Chapter in which a charge has been framed the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal.

Acquittal

(2) Where in any case under this Chapter the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 349 or section 562, he shall, if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence upon him according to law.

Conviction.

Change:—Sub-section (2) has been amended by sec. 73 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. A similar amendment has been made in sec. 245 (2) and sec. 306 (2).

849. Acquittal:—An order of acquittal can be pronounced only where after a charge has been drawn up the Magistrate is of opinion that the evidence is insufficient to justify a conviction. An order of acquittal cannot be passed in a case where no charge has been framed or before any charge is framed—Ranchhod, 37 Bom. 369, 14 Cr.L.J. 77. Section 258 (1), Cr. P. C., must be read in the light of sec. 350, Cr. P. Code. Where a Magistrate ignores all previous proceedings including the charge and orders a de novo trial under sec. 350 (1), Cr. P. C., the previous charge does no longer remain in force and any order passed before framing a fresh charge is one of discharge and not of acquittal under this section—Tukaram, 37 Cr.L.J. 983, 161 I.C. 744, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 153, 1936 Cr.C. 708, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 92, 19 N.L.J. 115. But a contrary view has been taken in Raza Husain, 36 Cr.L.J. 912, 156 I.C. 186, 1935 A.L.R. 518, 7 R.A. 1057, A.I.R. 1935 All. 834, 1935 Cr.C. 980, 1935 A.L.J. 1022, following Chotu, 9 All. 52 (56) and Sri Ramulu v. Nalam Krishna Rao, 25 I.C. 1001, 38 Mad. 585, 1914 M.W.N. 646, 16 M.L.T. 303, 27 M.L.J. 589, 15 Cr.L.J. 673. If a warrant case is tried as a summons case, and no charge is framed, the acquittal amounts to a discharge under sec. 253—Jadu, 1886 A.W.N. 260.

After a charge is framed, the Magistrate can pass no other order except that of acquittal or conviction. He cannot pass an order of discharge. Even, if he discharges the accused, the discharge would amount to an acquittal—Taba v. Hirba, 1883 P.R. 29; Sreeramah v. Veerasalingam, 38 Mad. 585; Bishambar, 1 O.W.N. 705. So also, an order of dismissal of complaint would amount to an acquittal—Jadubar, 5 C.L.R. 359. If the Magistrate by inadvertence refers to sec. 253 instead of sec. 258, Cr. P. C., the order does not become any the less an order of acquittal because of that inadvertence, if the whole of the procedure shows that the order must be regarded as one of acquittal and not of discharge—Raza Husain, 36 Cr.L.J. 912 (913), AIR. 1935 All. 834, 156 I.C. 186

Where a Magistrate passes an order of acquittal under this section, the Sessions Judge cannot treat it as an order of discharge and direct a commitment of the accused under sec. 436 (now sec. 437)—Apparaju, 43 Mad 330, 21 Cr.L.J. 91.

An order of acquittal can be passed in a warrant case only where after the frame of a charge the Magistrate is of opinion that the evidence is insufficient to justify a conviction. It is not competent to a Magistrate to enter an order of acquittal in a warrant case on a private complainant's offering to withdraw from the prosecution in a non-compoundable case—Ranchhod, 37 Bom 369, 14 Cr.L.J. 77 (78), 15 Bom.L.R. 61, 18 I.C. 413. The acquittal must be based on the finding that the accused is not guilty; the Magistrate cannot acquit the accused merely because the complainant is absent. Where a charge has been framed against the accused and the latter has entered upon his defence and produced some defence witnesses, he cannot be acquitted on account of the absence of the complainant—Ram Batsh v Jairam, 27 O.C. 316, 26 Cr.L.J. 264, 1 O.W.N. 613. But where after a charge is framed, the complainant is absent, and it is obvious that the complainant has no desire to proceed with his complaint, the Magistrate should acquit the accused, and not merely discharge him—Godhan, 1 O.W.N. 585, 26 Cr.L.J. 400. But see Nutbehari v. Saroda, 37 C.W.N. 712 (713), 1933 Cr.C. 494, 34 Cr.L.J. 493, 143 I.C. 83, where an order of acquittal under such circumstances was set aside. See also Note 852 under sec. 259.

The procedure of the Magistrate in directing the accused to be acquitted without writing a judgment is irregular. Whether the irregularity would vitiate the conviction would depend on whether the Court can hold that there had or had not been a failure of justice owing to the irregularity—Dhondha v Sitaram, 34 Cr.L.J. 1036, 145 I.C. 664, AIR 1933 All. 660, 1933 A.L.J. 1244, 1933 Cr.C. 1143. See Note 1015.

259. When the proceedings have been instituted upon complaint, and upon any day fixed for the hearing of the case the complainant is absent, and the offence may be lawfully compounded, or is not a cognisable offence, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, at any time before the charge has been framed, discharge the accused.

Change:—The italicised words have been added by sec. 74 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

851. Scope of section:—The primary reason of passing the order of discharge is, that the absence of the complainant raises a presumption that the complainant does not wish to proceed with the prosecution—Harun v Abdul, 12 Cr.L.J. 184 (Sund). It is not in every warrant case that a Magistrate will be competent to pass an order of discharge on account of the absence of the complainant. The warrant case must fall under this section, i.e., must be compoundable—Gorinda v Dulali, 10 Cal. 67 (68). But the Magistrate can discharge the accused in any warrant case, (whether compoundable or not), if in consequence of the absence of the complainant, the Magistrate considers the charge to be groundless, under sec. 253 (2)—Ibid.

This section does not make it compulsory upon the Magistrate to dismiss a complaint or application. He may in his discretion do so, but if he does not choose to exercise his discretion in that matter there can be no ground for interference in revision—Banke Lal v. Maiku, AIR. 1933 Oudh 430, 10 O.W.N. 1037, 1933 Cr.C. 1315, 146 I.C. 638, 35 Cr.L.J. 121. See also Jamnabai, 35 Cr.L.J. 1139, 150 I.C. 858, 35 Bom.L.R. 105, AIR 1934 Bom 130.

ment under sec. 544, Cr. P. C., and he is therefore correct in requiring that the expenses should be deposited by the accused prior to the issue of summons in accordance with sec. 257 (2), Cr. P. Code—Mahtab Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All. 101, 1938 A.L.J. 1082, 179 I.C. 773, I.L.R. 1939 All. 57, 40 Cr.L.J. 257, 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 780.

Although the Magistrate can require the accused to pay the expenses for the attendance of his witnesses, still if he has once allowed the witnesses to be summoned without demanding expenses from the accused, and if by any chance the witnesses summoned for a particular date have not been examined on that date, the Magistrate has no power afterwards to say that on the next date of hearing the witnesses shall not be summoned except on payment of their expenses by the accused—Kishan Lal, 22 Cr.L.J. 711 (Lah.), 63 I.C. 871 (872) (Lah.).

A Court ordering a party to deposit the travelling allowance of a witness should state the amount of the travelling allowance to be deposited—Gourishankar, 6 P.L.R. 215, 26 Cr.L.J. 965

Section 257 (2), Cr. P. C., does not provide that the expenses of issuing process shall be deposited in Court—Mg San Nyein, 27 Cr.L.J. 415, 93 I.C. 79, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 13, 4 Bur.L.J. 187. This case has been overruled by K.-E. v. Tha Shwe, 4 Rang. 146 See Note 824.

258. (1) If in any case under this Chapter in which a charge has been framed the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal.

Acquittal.

(2) Where in any case under this Chapter the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 349 or section 562, he shall, if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence upon him according to law.

Conviction.

Change:—Sub-section (2) has been amended by sec. 73 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. A similar amendment has been made in sec. 245 (2) and sec. 306 (2).

849. Acquittal:—An order of acquittal can be pronounced only where after a charge has been drawn up the Magistrate is of opinion that the evidence is insufficient to justify a conviction. An order of acquittal cannot be passed in a case where no charge has been framed or before any charge is framed—Ranckhod, 37 Bom 369, 14 Cr.L.J. 77. Section 258 (1), Cr. P. C., must be read in the light of sec. 350, Cr. P. Code. Where a Magistrate ignores all previous proceedings including the charge and orders a de novo trial under sec. 350 (1), Cr. P. C., the previous charge does no longer remain in force and any order passed before framing a fresh charge is one of discharge and not of acquittal under this section—Tukaram, 37 Cr.L.J. 983, 164 I.C. 744, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 153, 1936 Cr.C. 708, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 92, 19 N.L.J. 115. But a contrary view has been taken in Raza Husam, 36 Cr.L.J. 912, 156 I.C. 126, 1935 A.L.R. 548, 7 R.A. 1057, A.I.R. 1935 All. 831, 1935 Cr.C. 980, 1935 A.L.J. 1022, following Chotu, 9 All. 52 (56) and Sri Ramulu v. Nalam Krishna Row, 25 I.C. 1001, 38 Mad. 585, 1914 M.W.N. 646, 16 M.L.T. 303, 27 M.L.J. 589, 15 Cr.L.J. 673. If a warrant case is tried as a summons case, and no charge is framed, the acquittal amounts to a discharge under sec. 253—Jadu, 1886 A.W.N. 260.

After a charge is framed, the Magistrate can pass no other order except that of acquittal or conviction. He cannot pass an order of discharge. Even, if he discharges the accused, the discharge would amount to an acquittal—Taba v. Hirba, 1883 P.R. 29; Sreeramah v. Veerasalingam, 38 Mad 585; Bishambar, 1 O.W.N. 705. So also, an order of dismissal of complaint would amount to an acquittal—Jadubar, 5 C.L.R. 359. If the Magistrate by inadvertence refers to sec. 253 instead of sec. 258, Cr. P. C., the order does not become any the less an order of acquittal because of that inadvertence, if the whole of the procedure shows that the order must be regarded as one of acquittal and not of discharge—Raza Husain, 36 Cr.L.J. 912 (913), AIR 1935 All. 834, 156 IC 186.

Where a Magistrate passes an order of acquittal under this section, the Sessions Judge cannot treat it as an order of discharge and direct a commitment of the accused under sec. 436 (now sec. 437)—Apparaju, 43 Mad 330, 21 Cr.L.J. 91.

An order of acquittal can be passed in a warrant case only where after the frame of a charge the Magistrate is of opinion that the evidence is insufficient to justify a conviction. It is not competent to a Magistrate to enter an order of acquittal in a warrant case on a private complainant's offering to withdraw from the prosecution in a non-compoundable case—Ranchhod, 37 Bom 369, 14 Cr.L.J. 77 (78), 15 Bom.L.R. 61, 18 IC 413. The acquittal must be based on the finding that the accused is not guilty; the Magistrate cannot acquit the accused merely because the complainant is absent. Where a charge has been framed against the accused and the latter has entered upon his defence and produced some defence witnesses, he cannot be acquitted on account of the absence of the complainant—Ram Baksh v. Jaiaram, 27 O.C. 316, 26 Cr.L.J. 264, 1 O.W.N. 613. But where after a charge is framed, the complainant is absent, and it is obvious that the complainant has no desire to proceed with his complaint, the Magistrate should acquit the accused, and not merely discharge him—Godhan, 1 O.W.N. 586, 26 Cr.L.J. 400. But see Nutbeham v. Saroda, 37 C.W.N. 712 (713), 1933 Cr.C. 494, 34 Cr.L.J. 498, 143 IC 83, where an order of acquittal under such circumstances was set aside. See also Note 852 under sec. 259.

The procedure of the Magistrate in directing the accused to be acquitted without writing a judgment is irregular. Whether the irregularity would vitiate the conviction would depend on whether the Court can hold that there had or had not been a failure of justice owing to the irregularity—Dhondha v. Sitaram, 34 Cr.L.J. 1036, 145 IC 664, AIR 1933 All 660, 1933 A.L.J. 1244, 1933 Cr.C. 1143. See Note 1015.

259. When the proceedings have been instituted upon complaint, and upon any day fixed for the hearing of the case the complainant is absent, and the offence may be lawfully compounded, or is not a cognizable offence, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, at any time before the charge has been framed, discharge the accused.

Change:—The italicised words have been added by sec. 74 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

851. Scope of section:—The primary reason of passing the order of discharge is, that the absence of the complainant raises a presumption that the complainant does not wish to proceed with the prosecution—Harun v. Abdul, 12 Cr.L.J. 184 (Sind). It is not in every warrant case that a Magistrate will be competent to pass an order of discharge on account of the absence of the complainant. The warrant case must fall under this section, i.e., must be compoundable—Goinda v. Dulali, 10 Cal 67 (68). But the Magistrate can discharge the accused in any warrant case, (whether compoundable or not), if in consequence of the absence of the complainant, the Magistrate considers the charge to be groundless, under sec. 253 (2)—Ibid.

This section does not make it compulsory upon the Magistrate to dismiss a complaint or application. He may in his discretion do so, but if he does not choose to exercise his discretion in that matter there can be no ground for interference in revision—Banke Lal v. Maiku, AIR 1933 Oudh 430, 10 O.W.N. 1037, 1933 Cr.C. 1315, 146 IC 638, 35 Cr.L.J. 121. See also Jamnabai, 35 Cr.L.J. 1139, 150 IC 858, 36 Bom.L.R. 105, AIR 1934 Bom. 130.

Under the old law, if the case was not compoundable no order of discharge could be passed—Yankya, 13 Bur.L.T. 244, 22 Cr.L.J. 753; Ramphal, 17 O.C. 18, 15 Cr.L.J. 230, 23 I.C. 182. Under the present section, however, it is not always necessary that the offence must be compoundable. If the offence is a non-cognizable one, though not compoundable, an order of discharge may be passed. But in such a case, i.e., if the offence is non-cognizable but non-compoundable, the Magistrate may in his discretion proceed with the trial, instead of discharging the accused; and the High Court will not ordinarily interfere with that discretion. See U Mo Gaung v. U. Po, 6 Rang. 664, 30 Cr.L.J. 345 (346).

In a warrant case the correct section is 259 and not 247. The order under sec. 259 has the effect of discharge and not of acquittal under sec. 403, Cr. P. Code—Suraj Bali, A.I.R. 1934 All. 340, 1934 Cr.C. 418, 152 I.C. 249, 36 Cr.L.J. 65, 56 All. 750.

This section does not apply when the case was not instituted upon a complaint (i.e., a police case) and could not be lawfully compounded—Munnu, 28 Cr.L.J. 816, 104 I.C. 256, 1 Luck.C. 337, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 352.

When one of the sections mentioned in the complaint deals with a cognizable and non-compoundable offence, this section does not properly apply—Alimahomed Joosab v. Kasturchand Balabhai Jhaveri, 40 Cr.L.J. 346, 180 I.C. 241, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 89, 41 Bom.L.R. 90; Moraji, 36 Bom.L.R. 1213, 154 I.C. 325, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 76, 1935 Cr.C. 137, 36 Cr.L.J. 483, 59 Bom. 171, 7 R.B. 305.

No withdrawal of complaint is allowed:—This section applies only where the complainant is absent, and does not provide for cases in which the complainant wants to withdraw the complaint. No withdrawal of complaint is permitted in warrant cases. If, however, in a warrant case, the Magistrate considers that although the charge is not groundless, there is little likelihood of the case being pursued to a successful termination, he can consult the District Magistrate, who would, if possible, instruct the Public Prosecutor under sec. 494 to withdraw the case—Maung Thu v. U. Po, 5 Rang. 136, 28 Cr.L.J. 649 (650).

The principle underlying the provisions dealing with non-compoundable or cognizable warrant cases is that, whether instituted on complaint or otherwise, the final responsibility for the conduct of such cases rests with the State, and that where there is a reasonable ground for believing that an offence has been committed, once the machinery of law has been set in motion, the right of arresting its progress rests with the State alone. In such cases, an application for withdrawal of complaint by the complainant is not entertainable—Maung Thu v. U. Po, 5 Rang. 136, 28 Cr.L.J. 649 (650). See also Ranchood, 37 Bom. 369, 14 Cr.L.J. 77 (78).

852. Absence of complainant:—A slight delay on the part of the complainant in attending the Court, especially where on the day the Court sat earlier than usual, would not be a proper ground of discharge—Danba, Ratanlal 988. Absence of complainant owing to his being prevented by floods is not a proper ground of discharge—Harun v. Abdul, 12 Cr.L.J. 184, 9 I.C. 1007 (Sind).

The Magistrate can discharge under this section if no charge has been framed. But if a charge has been framed, and complainant is absent this section cannot apply and it is not legal to discharge the accused. The Magistrate should in such circumstances either adjourn the case, or if there are no sufficient grounds for adjourning the case, acquit the accused—Nazir Husain, 1931 A.L.J. 3, 1930 Cr.C. 1017, 53 All. 3, A.I.R. 1930 All. 795, 129 I.C. 262. But see Har Kishan Das v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 All. 127 (129), 38 Cr.L.J. 361, 1937 A.L.R. 166, 167 I.C. 236, 1936 A.W.R. 1273, 9 R.A. 517, where, distinguishing Nazir Husain, supra, it has been laid down by the same High Court that there is no section which empowers a Magistrate to acquit the accused after charge sheet has been framed in the trial of a warrant case on the ground that the complainant and his witnesses are absent on the date fixed for cross-examination. See also Rai Singh v. Patia, 53 I.C. 491, 20 Cr.L.J. 763. The Lahore High Court holds that once a charge has been framed, it is the duty of the trial Court to proceed with the trial, even in the absence of the complainant, and to convict or acquit the accused on the merits—Narain v. Mewa Singh, 22 Cr.L.J. 312 (Lah.); Nabi Baksh, 25 Cr.L.J. 87, 76 I.C. 23, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 627; Ram Baksh v. Jairam, 27 O.C. 316, 26 Cr.L.J. 264, 1 O.W.N. 613. Where, after a charge has been framed, both parties are absent, the proper procedure for the Magistrate is to get the accused arrested under a warrant, and then decide whether he is guilty or not, and not to discharge the accused and then direct the taking of proceedings under sec. 514 for forfeiture of his bond—Godhan, 1 O.W.N. 586. If, at any stage after a charge has been framed, both parties are absent, the Magistrate can neither discharge the accused under section 259 nor acquit the accused under sec. 258. He should proceed with the trial—Nutbehari v. Saroda, 37 C.W.N. 712 (713), 1933 Cr.C. 494, 34 Cr.L.J. 498, 143 I.C. 83. If a case which is taken up by a Bench for summary trial, is, after a charge is orally framed, transferred to a Magistrate who is not empowered to try the case summarily, the second Magistrate cannot under sec. 350 act on the evidence taken and charge framed by the Bench in the summary trial. The proceedings before the second Magistrate will amount to a de novo trial. Therefore, if the complainant is absent on the day fixed for hearing, the provisions of sec. 259 will apply, as it will be deemed that no charge has been framed, and the accused will be discharged, and not acquitted, so that a second complaint will not be barred under sec. 403—Nannier v. Desalter, 55 Mad 795, 62 M.L.J. 738, 1932 Cr.C. 509, 33 Cr.L.J. 653, A.I.R. 1932 Mad 505, 1932 M.W.N. 244, 35 M.L.W. 760, 138 I.C. 581, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 594.

853. Discharge:—The proper order is one of discharge. An order of "striking off" the case is not a proper order under this section—Ramphal, 17 O.C. 18, 15 Cr.L.J. 230, 23 I.C. 182. If a summons case and a warrant case are tried together, the procedure of a warrant case is to be followed, and if the complainant is absent the proper order to be passed is one of discharge under this section in respect of both cases; and not an order of discharge in respect of the warrant case and an order of acquittal under sec. 247 in respect of the summons case—Raghavulu v. Singaram, 41 Mad 727 (729), 34 M.L.J. 369, 1918 M.W.N. 827, 19 Cr.L.J. 613, 45 I.C. 517.

The Magistrate has a discretion to discharge the accused. But in exercising this discretion in discharging the accused he should see whether there is a prima facie case against the accused; if there is such a case, the Magistrate should convict; if he discharges for the sole reason that the complainant is absent, his order is illegal—Kura, 1891 A.W.N. 116; Harun v. Abdul, 12 Cr.L.J. 181 (Sind). If the absence of the complainant is due to his death (and the death takes place after a charge has been framed), the Magistrate has a discretion in a proper case to allow the complaint to be continued by a proper and fit complainant, instead of discharging the accused—Mahomed Azam, 28 Bom.L.R. 288, 27 Cr.L.J. 491; Hazara, 2 Lah. 27; Narayana Naick, 54 Mad. 768, 1931 Cr.C. 1028, 61 M.L.J. 125, 1931 M.W.N. 767, A.I.R. 1931 Mad 772, 34 M.L.W. 42, 33 Cr.L.J. 14, 134 I.C. 990. If the complainant dies after he has been examined and cross-examined, so that his evidence can be used under sec. 33, Evidence Act, and the case is non-cognizable but non-compoundable, the Magistrate can, in his discretion, decide to proceed with the trial instead of discharging the accused, and the High Court will not interfere with the discretion—U Mo Gang v. U Po Sin, 6 Rang 664, 30 Cr.L.J. 345 (346), A.I.R. 1929 Rang 14, 114 I.C. 681.

854. Fresh complaint:—An order of discharge passed under this section is not a judgment; and the discharge does not amount to an acquittal; therefore, a Magistrate who has passed the order of discharge can re-hear the case or entertain a fresh complaint. Neither sec. 369 nor sec. 403 operates as a bar to such action—Dwarka v. Beni Madhab, 28 Cal 652 (658-660) (F.B.); Chinnathambi v. Gnanaseamy, 28 Mad. 310; Raghavulu v. Singaram, 41 Mad 727 (728); Balchand v. Chandoomal 8 S.L.R. 196, 16 Cr.L.J. 174; Asgar Ali v. Akbar Ali, 26 Cr.L.J. 1040, 87 I.C. 923, A.I.R. 1925 Nag 432; Abdul Hakim v. Haji Abdul 35 Cr.L.J. 170, 146 I.C. 443; Rambrosad v. Ganpatrao, 36 Cr.L.J. 57, 152 I.C. 223, A.I.R. 1934 Nag 215, 1934 Cr.C. 986. See also Nunmer v. Dasalter, 55 Mad 795; and Harbai v. Raja Premji, 40 Cr.L.J. 745, 183 I.C. 283, 1 L.R. 1940 Kar. 74, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 193 (F.B.) which overruled Tirthabai.

v. Sugnibai, 23 S.L.R. 43, 112 I.C. 681, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 61, 29 Cr.L.J. 1097 and also, by implication, Chellomal v. Kewalmal Jeramdas, 40 Cr.L.J. 287, 179 I.C. 898, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 38, 11 R.S. 164, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 228.

Where the accused is discharged under this section the Magistrate can either entertain a fresh complaint on the same facts or restore the original complaint to his file on a satisfactory cause being shown by the complainant for his absence—Akula Venkana, 28 Cr.L.J. 304, 100 I.C. 384, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 503. But see Ponnammal v. Salaxi Ammal, 1933 M.W.N. 1429, where it was held that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to set aside his own order but had power to entertain a fresh complaint. If a Magistrate discharges an accused under this section because of the non-appearance of the complainant, and subsequently excuses that non-appearance he must proceed de novo. None of the evidence recorded in the first case can be carried over to the second case—Venkatarama v. Soundaraja, 30 Cr.L.J. 403, 115 I.C. 64, 1929 M.W.N. 184, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 260, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 384.

Where the accused is discharged under this section and is subsequently summoned on a fresh complaint and the order of discharge is held illegal, the proper procedure is to set aside all the proceedings after the verification of the first complaint—Morariji Jivraj, 36 Bom.L.R. 1213, 154 I.C. 325, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 76, 1935 Cr.C. 137, 36 Cr.L.J. 483, 59 Bom. 171, 7 R.B. 305. Under similar circumstances the same High Court refused to interfere in revision when the effect of the interference would merely be that the evidence which had been recorded would have to be recorded over again, with the consequent waste of time and money—Alimahomed Joosab v. Kasturchand Balabhai Jhaveri, 40 Cr.L.J. 346, 180 I.C. 241, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 89, 41 Bom.L.R. 90.

See also Notes 681, 798 and 827.

Further inquiry:—A District Magistrate can order further inquiry in a case of discharge passed by a subordinate Magistrate if he thinks that the discharge was improper—Dajiba, Ratanlal 988. In ordering further inquiry the Court of Revision is not limited to the consideration of the materials which were before the Magistrate, but can consider other relevant facts. Thus, where the Magistrate discharged the accused owing to the absence of the complainant, but the cause of his absence was that he was prevented from appearing by reason of floods, and this fact was not known to the Magistrate when he discharged the accused, the High Court ordered further inquiry—Harun v. Abdul, 12 Cr.L.J. 184 (Sind).

CHAPTER XXII.

OF SUMMARY TRIALS.

855. Change of procedure during trial:—There is no section of the Code which expressly sanctions a change of procedure from a regular trial under Chap XXI to a summary trial under Chap XXII, but there is also no section which expressly prohibits such a change. The change of procedure is certainly not contemplated or sanctioned by the Code, but the High Court will regard it as a mere irregularity, which will not vitiate a trial unless it has occasioned a failure of justice. Thus, in a case the Magistrate commenced the trial of the accused in a regular manner under Chap. XXI, but after framing the charge he conducted the trial summarily under Chap. XXII; it was held that this change of procedure was a mere irregularity, and where there was no failure of justice, the High Court would not interfere in revision—Adoo, 10 S.L.R. 185, 18 Cr.L.J. 621. So also, where a complaint was made of an offence triable by the Court of Session, and the Magistrate commenced a regular inquiry, but after hearing the evidence and finding that the offence committed was triable summarily, tried it summarily, it was held that the Magistrate had acted bona fide in the interests of justice, and the High Court refused to interfere—Rangamani, 22 Mad. 459. But in Gesta

Behary v. Baistam, 26 C.W.N. 831 (833), 37 C.L.J. 105, 24 Cr.L.J. 157, 71 I.C. 509, it has been held that such a change of procedure in the midst of the trial is not authorised by law and is prejudicial to the accused, and that there should be a retrial before a different Magistrate.

260. (1) Notwithstanding anything
Power to try summarily. contained in this Code,—

- (a) the District Magistrate,
- (b) any Magistrate of the first class specially empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government, and
- (c) any Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class and especially empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government, may, if he or they think fit, try in a summary way all or any of the following offences:—

- (a) offences not punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months;
- (b) offences relating to weights and measures under sections 264, 265 and 266 of the Indian Penal Code;
- (c) hurt, under section 323 of the same Code;
- ✓ (d) theft, under section 379, 380 or 381 of the same Code, where the value of the property stolen does not exceed fifty rupees;
- (e) dishonest misappropriation of property under section 403 of the same Code, where the value of the property misappropriated does not exceed fifty rupees;
- (f) receiving or retaining stolen property under section 411 of the same Code, where the value of such property does not exceed fifty rupees;
- (g) assisting in the concealment or disposal of stolen property, under section 414 of the same Code, where the value of such property does not exceed fifty rupees;
- (h) mischief, under section 427 of the same Code;
- (i) house-trespass, under section 448, and offences under sections 451, 453, 454, 456 and 457 of the same Code;
- (j) insult with intent to provoke a breach of the peace, under section 504, and criminal intimidation, under section 506, of the same Code;
- (k) abetment of any of the foregoing offences;
- (l) an attempt to commit any of the foregoing offences, when such attempt is an offence;
- (m) offences under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871:

Provided that no case in which a Magistrate exercises the special powers conferred by section 34 shall be tried in a summary way.

(2) When in the course of a summary trial it appears to the Magistrate or Bench that the case is one which is of a character which renders it undesirable that it should be tried summarily, the Magistrate or Bench shall recall any witnesses who may have been examined and proceed to re-hear the case in manner provided by this Code.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

856. Magistrates empowered:—The District Magistrate of Bangalore has no power to try European British subjects summarily under this section, as his powers are confined to those conferred on him by the Declarations of the Governor-General in Council, and the power to try European British subjects summarily under this section is not included in such powers—Jeremiah, 39 Mad. 492, 16 Cr.L.J. 773

Where an Assistant Commissioner of a district who was, before his going to England on furlough, authorised to exercise summary powers in a certain local area, was on his return from furlough posted to another local area as a first class Magistrate, it was held that he had no jurisdiction to exercise summary powers in the latter area—Pursooram, 2 Cal. 117. But see sec. 40 as now amended.

Where the accused was summoned by a Magistrate of the Second Class who could not try case summarily, it was not open to the Additional District Magistrate to place the case on his own file and try it summarily—Bradley, 33 P.L.R. 177, 1932 Cr.C. 181, 33 Cr.L.J. 108 (109), 135 I.C. 220, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 188, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 92.

Presidency Magistrates:—The provisions of this chapter do not apply to trial before Presidency Magistrates, as such Magistrates are not mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c)—Abdul Ratanlal 539.

857. Offences triable summarily:—Whether an offence is to be tried summarily or not is to be determined by the facts stated in the complaint as well as the sworn testimony of the complainant—Fanindra, 36 Cal. 67, 12 C.W.N. 1041, 8 Cr.L.J. 227, 1 I.C. 519. The Magistrate is competent to dispose of a case summarily where the facts which are alleged to have taken place disclose an offence triable summarily, and the mere fact that the complainant enumerates sections of the I. P. Code relating to offences not triable summarily, does not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, unless the facts of which he really complains disclose such offences—Golap Pandey v. Boddam, 16 Cal. 715. Similarly, when the Magistrate ascertains from the evidence that the facts alleged to have taken place disclose an offence triable summarily, and the aggravating circumstances which render the offence not so triable are mere exaggerations, he can dispose of the case summarily—Vallabh, 1 Bom.L.R. 683.

Where a person is charged with a graver offence, the Magistrate ought not to cut down the offence to a less serious one at his own will, in order to give himself jurisdiction to try it summarily—Mitra Lal, 51 All. 510, 30 Cr.L.J. 686; Shro Bhajan v. Mosawi, 27 Cal. 983 (985); Bishu Shaik v. Saber, 6 C.W.N. 713, 29 Cal. 409; Mamanund v. Kovlash, 11 Cal. 236; Chandra Mohan, 27 C.W.N. 148 (149), 25 Cr.L.J. 528, 77 I.C. 992; Ghamman, 1888 P.R. 5; Mohammad Abdullah, 35 Cr.L.J. 1091, 150 I.C. 24, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 243, 1931 Cr.C. 466 following Sardar Khan, 5 P.R. 1887 (Cr.); D'Souza v. Annappa, 1932 M.W.N. 478; Sharma, 6 Bur.L.T. 137, 14 Cr.L.J. 462 (463). A charge of robbery cannot be treated as one of simple hurt for the purpose of trying it summarily—Barkat Khan, 21 P.L.R. 1907, 5 Cr.L.J. 21 (22). So also, no Magistrate is entitled to split up an offence into its component parts for the purpose of giving himself summary jurisdiction, thereby depriving the prisoner of his right of appeal—Abdool Karim, 4 Cal. 18

Where neither the complaint nor the evidence adduced in a case under sec. 457, I P. C. (criminal trespass with intent to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment) which is triable summarily, shows the actual offence which the accused intended to commit, and the only finding which could be arrived at is that the accused intended to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment, the conviction of the accused in a summary trial cannot be held to be illegal on the ground that the intention of the accused might have been to commit an offence which cannot be tried summarily—Madhab Chandra, 53 Cal. 738, 27 Cr.L.J. 1295. A Magistrate can try a person summarily for offences under secs 143 and 427, I P. C., and the fact that there are major offences suggested against the accused in the complaint, does not debar the Magistrate from having recourse to the summary procedure—Naubat, 28 Cr.L.J. 140, 99 I.C. 348, 7 A.I.Cr.C. 130, A.I.R. 1927 All. 136. Where the Police prosecute an accused person for an offence triable summarily and where the Magistrate convicts that accused person of an offence triable summarily, any exaggeration as to the nature of the offence should not have any effect on the jurisdiction—Sunder Teli, 32 Cr.L.J. 556, 130 I.C. 484, 1930 A.L.J. 1490, A.I.R. 1931 All. 51, 53 All. 218, 1931 Cr.C. 123, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 276

Joint charge of summary and non-summary offences—Where an accused person is charged with offences not triable summarily along with offences triable summarily, the Magistrate cannot disregard the former offences, and proceed to try the case summarily—Ramanand v. Koylash, 11 Cal. 236; Ghamman, 1888 P.R. 5. The Allahabad High Court holds that the mere fact of the complainant charging the accused with summary offences along with non-summary ones will not necessarily oust the summary jurisdiction of the Magistrate. No hard and fast rule can be laid down, much depending on the facts of each individual case. Whether a complaint does or does not afford sufficient grounds for a summary trial or requires a trial under the ordinary procedure is a question which must be left in a great measure to the discretion of the Magistrate—Jagwan, 10 All. 55. Where the accused was charged with summary as well as non-summary offences but the Magistrate tried the accused summarily for the offences triable summarily, and ignored the non-summary offence, held that it would have been preferable had the Magistrate proceeded regularly and tried the accused upon both the charges; but as there was no miscarriage of justice in the present case, a retrial need not be ordered—Kantila, 31 C.W.N. 583, 28 Cr.L.J. 697, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 505, 103 I.C. 553.

Summary trial of non-summary offences—Effect—Where a Magistrate deliberately disregards the offence complained of, which is an offence not triable summarily, and tries it summarily, his proceedings are absolutely void under sec. 530 (q). Where a complaint is made for an offence not triable summarily, and process is issued in respect of that offence, a summary trial is illegal and void even though the accused is ultimately convicted of an offence triable summarily—Ganu, 52 Bom. 254, 29 Cr.L.J. 492 (493), 109 I.C. 220, 30 Bom.L.R. 371, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 142, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 191; Chandra Mohan, 27 C.W.N. 148 (149), 77 I.C. 992, 25 Cr.L.J. 528; Tajazal Hoosain v. Hunt, 34 C.W.N. 556 (557), 1930 Cr.C. 1111, Kailash v. Joynuddin, 5 C.W.N. 252, Ram Narain, 46 All. 446, 25 Cr.L.J. 806, 81 I.C. 342, A.I.R. 1924 All. 675; Baluant Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All. 693, 1939 A.L.J. 783, 41 Cr.L.J. 91, 184 I.C. 712, I.L.R. 1939 All. 931.

858. Instances of summary offences:—(i) Offences under sec. 121, Indian Railways Act—Bmdeshri, 1902 A.W.N. 24;

(ii) offences under sec. 65 (a), Stamp Act, for failure to give a receipt—Navoo Routhen, 1 Weir 906;

(iii) proceedings under sec. 81, Bombay Act VI of 1873, for recovery of Municipal Taxes—Municipality of Ahmedabad v. Jumna, 17 Bom. 731;

(iv) offences under the Companies Act for not filing the balance sheet with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies—Dina Nath, 35 All. 173;

(v) offences under sec. 49, Bengal Abkari Act, XXI of 1836, the confiscation

Provided that no case in which a Magistrate exercises the special powers conferred by section 34 shall be tried in a summary way.

(2) When in the course of a summary trial it appears to the Magistrate or Bench that the case is one which is of a character which renders it undesirable that it should be tried summarily, the Magistrate or Bench shall recall any witnesses who may have been examined and proceed to re-hear the case in manner provided by this Code.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

856. Magistrates empowered:—The District Magistrate of Bangalore has no power to try European British subjects summarily under this section, as his powers are confined to those conferred on him by the Declarations of the Governor-General in Council, and the power to try European British subjects summarily under this section is not included in such powers—Jeremiah, 39 Mad. 492, 16 Cr.L.J. 773.

Where an Assistant Commissioner of a district who was, before his going to England on furlough, authorised to exercise summary powers in a certain local area, was on his return from furlough posted to another local area as a first class Magistrate, it was held that he had no jurisdiction to exercise summary powers in the latter area—Pursooram, 2 Cal. 117. But see sec. 40 as now amended.

Where the accused was summoned by a Magistrate of the Second Class who could not try case summarily, it was not open to the Additional District Magistrate to place the case on his own file and try it summarily—Bradley, 33 P.L.R. 177, 1932 Cr.C. 181, 33 Cr.L.J. 108 (109), 135 I.C. 220, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 188, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 92.

Presidency Magistrates:—The provisions of this chapter do not apply to trial before Presidency Magistrates, as such Magistrates are not mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c)—Abdul Ratanlal 539.

857. Offences triable summarily:—Whether an offence is to be tried summarily or not is to be determined by the facts stated in the complaint as well as the sworn testimony of the complainant—Fanindra, 36 Cal. 67, 12 C.W.N. 1041, 8 Cr.L.J. 227, 1 I.C. 519. The Magistrate is competent to dispose of a case summarily where the facts which are alleged to have taken place disclose an offence triable summarily, and the mere fact that the complainant enumerates sections of the I. P. Code relating to offences not triable summarily, does not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, unless the facts of which he really complains disclose such offences—Golap Pandey v. Boddam, 16 Cal. 715. Similarly, when the Magistrate ascertains from the evidence that the facts alleged to have taken place disclose an offence triable summarily, and the aggravating circumstances which render the offence not so triable are mere exaggerations, he can dispose of the case summarily—Vallabh, 1 Bom.L.R. 683.

Where a person is charged with a graver offence, the Magistrate ought not to cut down the offence to a less serious one at his own will, in order to give himself jurisdiction to try it summarily—Mewa Lal, 51 All. 510, 30 Cr.L.J. 686; Shro Bhajan v. Mosawi, 27 Cal. 983 (1985); Bishu Shaik v. Saber, 6 C.W.N. 713, 29 Cal. 409; Mamanund v. Annapita, 1932 M.W.N. 478; Sharma, 6 Bur.L.T. 137, 14 Cr.L.J. 462 (463). A charge of robbery cannot be treated as one of simple hurt for the purpose of trying it summarily—Bailat Khan, 21 P.L.R. 1907, 5 Cr.L.J. 21 (22). So also, no Magistrate is entitled to split up an offence into its component parts for the purpose of giving himself summary jurisdiction, thereby depriving the prisoner of his right of appeal—Abdoot Karim, 4 Cal. 18.

Where neither the complaint nor the evidence adduced in a case under sec. 457, I P. C. (criminal trespass with intent to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment) which is triable summarily, shows the actual offence which the accused intended to commit, and the only finding which could be arrived at is that the accused intended to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment, the conviction of the accused in a summary trial cannot be held to be illegal on the ground that the intention of the accused might have been to commit an offence which cannot be tried summarily—Madhab Chandra, 53 Cal. 738, 27 Cr L.J. 1295. A Magistrate can try a person summarily for offences under secs 143 and 427, I. P. C., and the fact that there are major offences suggested against the accused in the complaint, does not debar the Magistrate from having recourse to the summary procedure—Naubat, 28 Cr L.J. 140, 99 I.C. 348, 7 A.I.Cr.C. 130, A.I.R. 1927 All 136. Where the Police prosecute an accused person for an offence triable summarily and where the Magistrate convicts that accused person of an offence triable summarily, any exaggeration as to the nature of the offence should not have any effect on the jurisdiction—Sunder Tel, 32 Cr L.J. 556, 130 I.C. 481, 1930 A.L.J. 1490, A.I.R. 1931 All 51, 53 All. 218, 1931 Cr.C 123, Ind. Rul 1931 All. 276.

Joint charge of summary and non-summary offences—Where an accused person is charged with offences not triable summarily along with offences triable summarily, the Magistrate cannot disregard the former offences, and proceed to try the case summarily—Ramanand v. Koylash, 11 Cal 236; Ghamman, 1888 P.R. 5. The Allahabad High Court holds that the mere fact of the complainant charging the accused with summary offences along with non-summary ones will not necessarily oust the summary jurisdiction of the Magistrate. No hard and fast rule can be laid down, much depending on the facts of each individual case. Whether a complaint does or does not afford sufficient grounds for a summary trial or requires a trial under the ordinary procedure is a question which must be left in a great measure to the discretion of the Magistrate—Jagjiwan, 10 All. 55. Where the accused was charged with summary as well as non-summary offences but the Magistrate tried the accused summarily for the offences triable summarily, and ignored the non-summary offence, held that it would have been preferable had the Magistrate proceeded regularly and tried the accused upon both the charges; but as there was no miscarriage of justice in the present case, a retrial need not be ordered—Kantila, 31 C.W.N. 583, 28 Cr L.J. 697, A.I.R. 1927 Cal 505, 103 I.C. 553.

Summary trial of non-summary offences—Effect.—Where a Magistrate deliberately disregards the offence complained of, which is an offence not triable summarily, and tries it summarily, his proceedings are absolutely void under sec 530 (q). Where a complaint is made for an offence not triable summarily, and process is issued in respect of that offence, a summary trial is illegal and void even though the accused is ultimately convicted of an offence triable summarily—Ganu, 52 Bom 254, 29 Cr L.J. 492 (493), 109 I.C. 220, 30 Bom L.R. 371, A.I.R. 1928 Bom 142, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 191; Chandra Mohan, 27 C.W.N. 148 (149), 77 I.C. 992, 25 Cr L.J. 528; *Tajazal Hoosain v. 858. Instances of summary offences:—(i) Offences under sec 121, Indian Railways Act—Bmdeshri, 1902 A.W.N. 24;

(ii) offences under sec 65 (a), Stamp Act, for failure to give a receipt—Navoo Routhen, 1 Weir 906;

(iii) proceedings under sec 84, Bombay Act VI of 1873, for recovery of Municipal Taxes—Municipality of Ahmedabad v. Jumna, 17 Bom. 731;

(iv) offences under the Companies Act for not filing the balance sheet with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies—Dina Nath, 35 All. 173;

(v) offences under sec. 49, Bengal Abkari Act, XXI of 1856, the confiscation provided in that section being merely a consequence of the conviction and not forming part of the punishment—Baidanath, 3 Cal. 366;

(vi) violation of rule 8, div. (c), cl. (b) framed under the Criminal Tribes Act (XXVI of 1871) is punishable with a maximum sentence of 6 months' rigorous imprisonment and is triable summarily—Bihari, 50 All. 718, 30 Cr.L.J. 214 (215);

(vii) offences under the Child Marriage Restraint Act (XIX of 1929)—Jwala Prasad, 35 Cr.L.J. 677, 148 I.C. 351, 1934 Cr.C. 414, A.I.R. 1934 All. 331;

(viii) offences under sec. 22 of the Criminal Tribes Act (VI of 1924)—Bhari, 50 All. 718.

Property of value not exceeding fifty rupees :—Where a box containing fifty Rupees was stolen and the price of the box was annas eight, the theft was of property exceeding Rs. 50 in value (i.e., Rs 50-8 annas) and could not be tried summarily—Buzleh Ali, 22 W.R. 65. Since a tenant is entitled to the exclusive possession of the whole produce until it is divided under sec. 71 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, his complaint against the landlord for theft for having cut and carried away paddy worth Rs. 88 of which the latter was entitled to one-half, cannot be summarily tried by a Magistrate, as the value of the property in this case must be regarded as Rs. 88 and not Rs 44 only—Sheikh Habbu v. Sheikh Kariman, 1 P.L.T. 230, 20 C.W.N. 1212, 17 Cr.L.J. 473 (474).

Before a Magistrate can assume jurisdiction to try the accused in a summary form, he has to satisfy himself that the property in respect of which he is trying the accused is less than Rs. 50 in value. Where he did not direct his mind to this question at all and the record of the trial did not show on its face that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to try the accused summarily the conviction cannot stand—Brij Nandan, 25 Cr.L.J. 515, 81 I.C. 33, 6 P.L.T. 114, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 227.

If more than one offence of receiving or retaining stolen property, is by application of sec. 234, Cr. P. C., tried at one summary trial the value of the property stolen in each case should be taken separately for the purposes of sec. 260, cl. (1) (d). The trial under the summary procedure is legal when the value of property stolen in each case does not exceed fifty rupees but the aggregate value exceeds that amount—Chetumal, A.I.R. 1931 Sind 185, 1934 Cr.C. 1392, 36 Cr.L.J. 608, 154 I.C. 937, 28 S.L.R. 336.

859. Offences not triable summarily:—(i) Offences which are punishable with imprisonment for more than six months, e.g., an offence under sec. 60 of the U. P. Excise Act (IV of 1910) which is punishable with imprisonment for one year—Bhikka, 28 O.C. 123, 26 Cr.L.J. 800, 86 I.C. 432;

(ii) offences under sec. 6 of Act VII of 1851, for illegal demand of toll—Uttam Chunder v. Isser Chunder, 22 W.R. 76;

(iii) offences under the Press and Registration of Books Act (XXV of 1867), e.g., omission to make a declaration required by sec. 4 of that Act—Bara Narain, 9 P.R. 1889;

(iv) maintenance proceedings under sec. 488—Kali Dasi v. Durga, 20 Cal. 351;

(v) offence under sec. 60 of the U. P. Excise Act (IV of 1900) in respect of excisable articles other than cocaine (punishable with one year's imprisonment)—Ram Narain, 46 All. 416; Bhikka, 28 O.C. 123, 26 Cr.L.J. 800;

(vi) offence under sec. 9, Opium Act (punishable with one year's imprisonment)—Nga Sit, 4 Bur.L.T. 271, 13 Cr.L.J. 58;

(vii) cattle-lifting—Allahrakhio, 6 S.L.R. 101, 13 Cr.L.J. 780 (71); in Sind, the offence of cattle-theft is so prevalent and so often goes unpunished that deterrent sentences should be passed, and the offence should not be tried summarily—Amir Bux, 28 Cr.L.J. 959, 105 I.C. 671, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 257.

(viii) offences under sec. 224, I. P. Code—Harian Ali, 1894 A.W.N. 176;

(ix) offences under sec. 452, I. P. Code—Sharma, 6 Bur.L.T. 137, 11 Cr.L.J. 462;

(x) theft of property of value of more than Rs. 50—Darleh Ali, 22 W.R. 65; Dipchand, 11 N.L.R. 190; Sheikh Habbu v. Sheikh Kariman, 1 P.L.J. 230, 17 Cr.L.J. 473; under clause (i) of this section, an offence under sec. 457, I. P. C. (house breaking by night in order to commit theft) is triable summarily; but if the property stolen is worth more than Rs. 50, a summary trial would be improper—Dipchand, 14 N.L.R. 190, 19 Cr.L.J. 1003, 48 I.C. 343;

(xi) offence under sec. 211, I P. Code—Tofazal Hossain, 34 C.W.N. 556 (557);

(xii) a summary offence combined with a charge of previous conviction—Anonymous, 2 Weir 324; Bashir, 30 Cr.L.J. 505 (506), 115 I.C. 614, A.I.R. 1929 All. 267, Ind. Rul. 1929 All 390.

860. When summary trial is undesirable or improper:—A summary trial is undesirable in a case where a large number of correspondence has to be gone into and the case is by no means of a simple character—Dina Nath, 35 All. 173; or in a case in which from the nature of the dispute and the plea taken by the accused it is apparent that complicated questions of right and title and production of documentary evidence are involved—Bhūn Bahadur, 1 P.L.T. 121, 21 Cr.L.J. 374, 55 I.C. 854; Parmeshwar, 3 P.L.T. 347, 23 Cr.L.J. 440, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 296; Maung Shewe, 2 Bur.L.J. 55, 24 Cr.L.J. 929; Truthdas, 6 S.L.R. 120, 13 Cr.L.J. 771; or in a case which is hotly contested—Subramani v. Nachiar, 1931 M.W.N. 118, 32 Cr.L.J. 689, 131 I.C. 174, 33 M.L.W. 311, 1931 Cr.C. 329, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 233; or where the accused is a deaf and dumb person—Deaf and dumb man, 8 Bom.L.R. 849, 4 Cr.L.J. 444; or where the Magistrate takes cognizance of the case from his own knowledge or suspicion, and holds the trial on inadequate materials—Hamed, 3 C.W.N. cccxxx; Kanhaya Lal, 1905 P.L.R. 31, 2 Cr.L.J. 187; or where the charge is a serious or complicated one, and the trial goes on for a considerable time and a local inquiry has to be made or a large number of witnesses and accused persons are examined—Rustomji, 23 Bom.L.R. 984, 23 Cr.L.J. 21; Ghasia Mal, 3 Lah.L.J. 346, 22 Cr.L.J. 145, 59 I.C. 849; Rahimtulla, 82 I.C. 914, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 284, 19 S.L.R. 136, 26 Cr.L.J. 1026; Mohammad Abdullah, 35 Cr.L.J. 1094, 150 I.C. 24, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 243, 1934 Cr.C. 466, 15 Lah. 610, 36 P.L.R. 126; Chimanlal, 28 Cr.L.J. 537 (539), 102 I.C. 345, 29 Bom.L.R. 710, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 426. But a summary trial is not improper merely because there is a large number of accused in the case—Naubat, 28 Cr.L.J. 140, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 130, A.I.R. 1927 All. 136, 99 I.C. 348; or in a case where the only point of law that is hunted at is that the trespass, if any, was committed not on railway land but on land belonging to the P. W. D.—M. A. Khan v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 467, 1 L.R. 1939 Lah. 221, 41 Cr.L.J. 19, 181 I.C. 458, 41 P.L.R. 743.

A summary trial is also improper in a case where the conviction of the accused may entail further serious consequences (e.g., dismissal from service). Thus, where a Police officer of many years' standing was charged with criminal intimidation with a view to prevent a person from giving evidence against certain grave offenders, and was tried summarily and convicted (which conviction was likely to result in his dismissal from service), held that the Magistrate did not exercise a sound discretion in trying the case summarily and depriving the accused of the privilege of an appeal—Subramanya Ayyar, 6 Mad. 396, 2 Weir 328. For this reason a summary trial is inappropriate where Government servants (of whatever rank) or public servants are accused persons—Bradley, 33 P.L.R. 177, 1932 Cr.C. 181 (182), Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 92, 33 Cr.L.J. 108, 135 I.C. 220, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 188; D'Souza v. Annappa, 1932 M.W.N. 478; Sohan Singh, 12 Cr.L.J. 143. See also Hari Gopal, Ratanlal 778 (779); Haman, Ratanlal 781 (785). But see Sukhpat, 26 Cr.L.J. 1452, 92 I.C. 972, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 63. A summary trial is improper where the accused was already bound down under sec. 109, and the conviction of the accused would entail a forfeiture of the bond. Such a case requires a full hearing and record—Bashir, 30 Cr.L.J. 505 (506), 115 I.C. 614, A.I.R. 1929 All. 267, Ind. Rul. 1929 All 390. In a recent Patna case it has been said that if the charge is a simple one, then though the conviction of the accused may him liable to be dismissed from service, still a summary trial is not illegal, the amendment made in sec. 414, Cr. P. C., now gives a more extended right of—Jagdish, 30 Cr.L.J. 859, 118 I.C. 312, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 504, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. It cannot be laid down as a broad proposition of law that a Government should not be tried summarily or that generally the summary procedure is in cases in which Government servants are accused. There may be cases in which, though Government servants are involved, the summary procedure would be more appropriate than an ordinary and protracted trial. It is a question to be determined on the facts of each case whether one mode of trial or the other should be employed—M. A. Khan v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 467, I.L.R. 1939 Lah. 221, 41 Cr.L.J. 19, 184 I.C. 458, 41 P.L.R. 743.

The trial of a warrant case should not be conducted as a summary trial where the prosecution includes evidence given on commission in the Madras Presidency, Bombay and the Punjab. Evidence so recorded militates in its very nature against the object of a trial by summary procedure—Munna v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 87, 1939 N.L.J. 7, I.L.R. 1939 Nag. 457, 40 Cr.L.J. 846, 184 I.C. 44.

261. The Provincial Government may confer on any Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the second or third class, power to try summarily all or any of the following offences:—

- (a) offences against the Indian Penal Code, sections 277, 278, 279, 285, 286, 289, 290, 292, 293, 294, 323, 334, 336, 341, 352, 426, 447 and 504;
- (b) offences against Municipal Acts, and the conservancy clauses of Police Acts which are punishable only with fine or with imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month with or without fine;
- (c) abetment of any of the foregoing offences;
- (d) an attempt to commit any of the foregoing offences, when such attempt is an offence.

The italicised words at the end of clauses (a) and (b) have been added by sec. 75 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

A Bench of Magistrates cannot try summarily any other offence except those mentioned in sec. 260 and this section—Babheki, 21 W.R. 12; Havaldar v. Jagu Mian, 9 Cal. 96.

The desirability of entrusting the disposal of cases coming under sec. 447, I. P. C., to Bench Courts is doubtful as there seems to be a difficulty felt by Bench Courts in distinguishing between cases of civil trespass and cases of criminal trespass—Dakhamarri Kannava v. Vadali Venkatesan, 38 Cr.L.J. 581, 168 I.C. 703, 1937 M.W.N. 323, 9 R.M. 620, 45 M.L.W. 471, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 480.

262. (1) In trials under this Chapter, the procedure prescribed for summons-cases shall be followed in summons-cases, and the procedure prescribed for warrant-cases shall be followed in warrant-cases, except as hereinafter mentioned.

(2) No sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months shall be passed in the case of any conviction under this Chapter.

861. Procedure:—The scanty procedure laid down in this Chapter should be strictly followed—Erugadu, 15 Mad. 83. The responsibility thrown on Magistrates entrusted with summary powers is very great. Magistrates who are sufficiently alive to the responsibility entrusted to them should take care that the procedure and the record are not made more summary than what the law has laid down—Mukundi, 21 All 189 (191); Damodar, 3 P.L.T. 499, 23 Cr.L.J. 94. Thus, where the Magistrate without issuing process or making a record of the proceedings and without dismounting from the horse on which he was riding, convicted and fined a man summarily for causing obstruction in a public way, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was illegal—Erugadu, 15 Mad. 83.

In a summary trial of a warrant case, the Magistrate must adopt the procedure laid down in Chapter XXI (except that he has not to frame a charge and is not bound to record the evidence of the witnesses). Therefore, the provision of sec 256 which gives the accused an absolute right of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses after they have been examined-in-chief must apply to a summary trial of warrant cases—Tittu Sahu, 1 P.L.T. 652, 21 Cr.L.J. 630; Raju, 50 Mad 740, 28 Cr.L.J. 12. The accused is entitled to have processes issued compelling the attendance of the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination—Nepal, 22 Cr.L.J. 271 (Cal).

In a warrant case tried summarily, the Magistrate ought to grant an adjournment, if desired by the accused, to enable him to summon the witnesses for the defence under sec. 257, unless the Magistrate considers that the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay—Ameer Batcha, 5 L.B.R. 20, 9 Cr.L.J. 583.

862. Sentence:—In a summary case, a sentence of imprisonment for more than three months cannot be awarded; if an adequate sentence cannot be passed, the case should not be tried summarily—Po Ka, 4 L.B.R. 338, 9 Cr.L.J. 23. The limit of three months applies only to a substantive sentence; a Magistrate is, therefore, competent to award a sentence of imprisonment in default of fine, in addition to three months' imprisonment—Asghar Ali, 6 All 61, 1883 A.W.N. 207.

Fine of any amount may be imposed; there is no limit to the amount of fine awardable in a summary trial—Dina Nath, 35 All 173.

Solitary imprisonment can also be awarded as part of the sentence. Section 262 does not interfere with the Court's powers under sec. 73, I.P.C., to order solitary confinement—Annu Khan, 6 All 83.

The intention of clause (2) of this section is to restrict the passing of sentences of imprisonment of considerable length in a summary trial from a conviction in which the right of appeal is greatly restricted and the object of the clause would be defeated if it were possible to combine a number of separate charges in one trial and then inflict a sentence of three months' imprisonment on each charge and order such sentences to run consecutively. Under this clause the Magistrate cannot pass more than three months' imprisonment in aggregate—Nga Po Tay, 35 Cr.L.J. 1413, 151 I.C. 741, 12 Rang 122, 1934 Cr.C. 575, A.I.R. 1934 Rang 116. But see Chetumal, 36 Cr.L.J. 608, 154 I.C. 937, 28 S.L.R. 336, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 185, 1934 Cr.C. 1392, where it has been held that a separate sentence to the extent of three months may be passed for each separate conviction. In a summary trial where reference is made to the District Magistrate or the Subdivisional Magistrate under sec. 349, Cr.P.C., the nature of the trial is not changed thereby and the District Magistrate or Subdivisional Magistrate cannot pass imprisonment for more than three months in view of the provisions of cl. (2) of this section unless he holds a de novo trial at full length in accordance with regular procedure—Gopal, 33 Cr.L.J. 472, 137 I.C. 208, Ind. Rul. 1932 All 320, A.I.R. 1932 All 507, 1932 Cr.C. 595.

Section 262 (2), Cr.P.C., does not render illegal a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine if otherwise legal merely by reason of the fact that the aggregate of the terms of substantive sentence of imprisonment and of the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine exceeds three months or by reason of the Magistrate having passed a substantive sentence of imprisonment for the maximum term allowed by that section. The limit placed by sec. 262 (2), Cr.P.C., applies only to a substantive sentence of imprisonment—Po Hwa, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 171, 1940 Rang L.R. 223, 41 Cr.L.J. 768, 189 I.C. 627.

A Magistrate is competent to take security bond under sec. 106, on conviction in a summary trial—Lachman, 1886 A.W.N. 181; Meghu, 7 O.C. 338, 1 Cr.L.J. 1054.

Compensation:—Compensation may be awarded under section 250 to the accused in a trial held summarily—Basava, 11 Mad. 142; Palani v. Krishnappa, 59 M.L.J. 319, 32 Cr.L.J. 207 (208). But the requirements of sec. 250 must be satisfied, and the record should contain the reasons for considering the complaint to be false and vexatious. But omission to state reasons is a mere irregularity—Palani v. Krishnappa, supra.

263. In cases where no appeal lies, the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates need not record the evidence of the witnesses or frame a formal charge; but he or they shall enter in such form as the Provincial Government may direct the following particulars:—

Record in cases where there is no appeal.

- (a) the serial number;
- (b) the date of the commission of the offence;
- (c) the date of the report or complaint;
- (d) the name of the complainant (if any);
- (e) the name, parentage and residence of the accused;
- (f) the offence complained of and the offence (if any) proved, and in cases coming under clause (d), clause (e), clause (f) or clause (g) of sub-section (1) of section 260, the value of the property in respect of which the offence has been committed;
- (g) the plea of the accused and his examination (if any);
- (h) the finding, and, in the case of a conviction, a brief statement of the reasons therefor;
- (i) the sentence or other final order; and
- (j) the date on which the proceedings terminated.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937

863. Record:—Although the object of a summary procedure is to shorten the course of trial, it is nevertheless incumbent on the Magistrate to put on record sufficient evidence to justify his order—Aimuddi, 27 Cal. 450; Kash Mahomed, 10 C.W.N. 79, 3 Cr.L.J. 178; Gopal, Ratanlal 778. If the particulars required by this section are not clearly given in a judgment in a summary trial convicting the accused, the judgment is defective and the conviction cannot stand—Ghulam, 23 Cr.L.J. 161.

The record should be written by the Magistrate himself; there is no provision enabling him to delegate this duty to a clerk—Subramanya Ayyar, 6 Mad. 396. The record should be made at the time of the trial and not afterwards. The admission of the accused should also be recorded at once—Erugadu, 15 Mad. 83. "District Magistrates should satisfy themselves from time to time by examination of the records of summary trials that the law regarding such trials is properly observed and especially that Magistrates do not exceed their jurisdiction in this regard"—Cal G. R. & C. O., p. 16.

In summary proceedings a certain expedition is intended and indeed is most desirable. But the summary procedure laid down in the Cr. P. C., must not be made more summary. Section 263, Cr. P. C., lays down the minimum requirements of the law. Moreover, while sec. 263, Cr. P. C., dispenses with the formality of recording evidence, it does not dispense with the necessity of hearing evidence or of following the procedure set out in Chap XXII, Cr. P. C., for summary trials. Nor does it dispense with the necessity of complying with the provisions of sec. 342, Cr. P. C., relating to the examination of the accused after the case for the prosecution is closed. In short, sec. 263, Cr. P. C., merely relieves the Court of the burden of recording evidence—Choithram Menghraj v. Emp, 39 Cr L J. 474 (475), 174 I C. 685, A I R. 1938 Sind 70, 10 R S. 259, 32 S L R. 684.

864. Evidence:—In a summary trial of a non appealable case the Magistrate need not record the evidence of witnesses in writing—Shomeshar, 2 Cr L J. 336, 1905 A.W.N. 143; Howard v. Rustomji, Ratanlal 334. But this does not mean that this section excuses a Magistrate from hearing the evidence of witnesses. If the accused denies the charge, the complainant and his witnesses must be examined, and the case must be decided upon the effect of their evidence, though the evidence need not be recorded—Jabbar v. Tomiz, 39 Cal 931, 16 C.W.N. 984; Choithram Menghraj v. Emp, supra.

Notes of evidence:—If at the commencement of the trial, the Magistrate is unable to determine whether the proper sentence to be passed should be an appealable one or not, he must make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as his examination proceeds. But if he can, at this stage, determine that the sentence will be, in any event non-appealable, he need not record the evidence. If, however, he actually does so, the notes of the evidence form part of the record of the case and cannot be destroyed by him. Where the Magistrate had destroyed such record, the High Court in revison was unable to form an opinion on the propriety of the conviction and set it aside—Satish Chandra 48 Cal 280, 32 C L J 451, 22 Cr L J 452, 61 I C 846; Atma Ram, 49 All 131, 28 Cr L J 88; Lal Chand 26 Cr L J 1454, 89 I C 974, A I R. 1926 Nag 79. But in another case the Allahabad High Court has laid down that the destruction of the notes, whether in appealable or non-appealable cases, does not amount to any illegality. Under section 263, the Magistrate need not record any evidence, and, therefore, need not keep any notes of the evidence, under section 264, the Magistrate has only to record the substance of the evidence. Under these sections, the Magistrate is perfectly free to take notes to assist his recollection or, if he prefers, to take none at all; and whatever notes he makes are his private property which he can destroy if he pleases—Mantoo, 49 All 261, 25 A L J 140, 28 Cr L J 97 (per Walsh, J) (dissenting from 48 Cal 280); Tidpanna, 35 Cr L J. 841, 148 I C 1005, 58 Bom 298, 36 Bom L R 212, 1934 Cr C 544, A I R. 1934 Bom 157. A distinction should be drawn between 'recording of evidence' and making a few 'notes' of evidence. If he records the evidence formally, he must keep it on record; but if he jots down a few notes, merely for reference, those notes would not be a record of the evidence, and need not and should not be kept on the record—Ibid (per Boys, J). This case of Mantoo has been followed in Ismail, 49 All 562, 25 A L J 316, 28 Cr L J 442. The Oudh Chief Court is of opinion that in non-appealable cases the Code does not require the Magistrate to place upon record the notes of the evidence, and, therefore, where he made notes of the evidence for his own use which he destroyed after the case was disposed of, he committed no irregularity—Bhawani, 3 O W N. 946, 99 I C 108, A I R. 1927 Oudh 42, 28 Cr L J 76. See also Ahmad Jan, 33 Cr L J. 342, 136 I C. 641, 8 O W N. 1376, A I R. 1932 Oudh 98, Ind Rul 1932 Oudh 129, 1932 Cr C 161, 7 Luck. 498. The Bombay, Rangoon and Madras High Courts and the Sind Court are also of opinion that the rough and incomplete notes prepared by the Magistrate in a summary trial are outside the record, and cannot and should not be transcribed and attached to the record—Chimanlal, 29 Bom L R 710, 28 Cr L J. 537; Nagoor Kenni v. Sithu, 52 M L J. 32, 28 Cr L J. 138; Rahimtullah, 19 S L R 136, 25 Cr L J 1026; Maung Po Saw, 36 Cr L J. 892, 156 I C. 183, A I R. 1935 Rang 106, 13 Rang 225, 1935 Cr C. 315. This only to a substantive sentence of imprisonment—Po Htwa, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 171, 1940 Rang L.R. 223, 41 Cr.L.J. 768, 189 I.C. 627.

A Magistrate is competent to take security bond under sec. 106, on conviction in a summary trial—Lachman, 1886 A.W.N. 181; Meghu, 7 O.C. 338, 1 Cr.L.J. 1054.

Compensation:—Compensation may be awarded under section 250 to the accused in a trial held summarily—Basava, 11 Mad. 142; Palani v. Krishnappa, 59 M.L.J. 319, 32 Cr.L.J. 207 (208). But the requirements of sec. 250 must be satisfied, and the record should contain the reasons for considering the complaint to be false and vexatious. But omission to state reasons is a mere irregularity—Palani v. Krishnappa, supra.

263. In cases where no appeal lies, the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates need not record the evidence of the witnesses or frame a formal charge; but he or they shall enter in such form as the Provincial Government may direct the following particulars:—

Record in cases where there is no appeal.

- (a) the serial number;
- (b) the date of the commission of the offence;
- (c) the date of the report or complaint;
- (d) the name of the complainant (if any);
- (e) the name, parentage and residence of the accused;
- (f) the offence complained of and the offence (if any) proved, and in cases coming under clause (d), clause (e), clause (f) or clause (g) of sub-section (1) of section 260, the value of the property in respect of which the offence has been committed;
- (g) the plea of the accused and his examination (if any);
- (h) the finding, and, in the case of a conviction, a brief statement of the reasons therefor;
- (i) the sentence or other final order; and
- (j) the date on which the proceedings terminated.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937

863. Record:—Although the object of a summary procedure is to shorten the course of trial, it is nevertheless incumbent on the Magistrate to put on record sufficient evidence to justify his order—Ainuddi, 27 Cal. 450; Kash Mahomed, 10 C.W.N. 79, 3 Cr.L.J. 178; Gopal, Ratanlal 778. If the particulars required by this section are not clearly given in a judgment in a summary trial convicting the accused, the judgment is defective and the conviction cannot stand—Ghulam, 23 Cr.L.J. 161.

The record should be written by the Magistrate himself; there is no provision enabling him to delegate this duty to a clerk—Subramanya Ayyar, 6 Mad. 396. The record should be made at the time of the trial and not afterwards. The admission of the accused should also be recorded at once—Erugadu, 15 Mad. 83. "District Magistrates should satisfy themselves from time to time by examination of the records of summary trials that the law regarding such trials is properly observed and especially that Magistrates do not exceed their jurisdiction in this regard"—Cal G. R. & C. O. p. 16.

In summary proceedings a certain expedition is intended and indeed is most desirable. But the summary procedure laid down in the Cr. P. C., must not be made and do not apply to warrant cases; in the latter cases the examination is imperative—Mahomed Hosaïn, 41 Cal. 743; Parmeshwar, 3 P.L.T. 347, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 296, 23 Cr.L.J. 440. Even the plea of the accused cannot take the place of the examination of the accused and render it unnecessary—Parmeshwar, supra. But the Sind and Nagpur Courts are of opinion that the examination of the accused is imperative in all summary trials whether of summons or of warrant cases. The words "if any" in this section do not limit the obligation imposed on Courts by sec. 342, or render it inapplicable to summary trials, but merely have reference to those cases in which owing to the admission or plea of accused (sec. 243) or owing to the weakness of the evidence called in support of the prosecution (secs. 245, 253) the accused can either be convicted on his own plea without the taking of evidence or acquitted on the evidence without the examination referred to in sec. 342—Nabu, 20 S.L.R. 34, 26 Cr.L.J. 1554, 90 I.C. 434 (F.B.); Bhagwan, 22 N.L.R. 65, 27 Cr.L.J. 632. See also Choithram Menghraj v. Emp., in Note 863.

The Magistrate is not required to record a full statement of the examination of the accused. A brief note of the examination is sufficient—Bhawani, 3 O.W.N. 946, 28 Cr.L.J. 76, 99 I.C. 108, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 42.

The examination of the accused is an essential part of the procedure. Such examination need not be taken with all the formalities prescribed by sec. 364, Cr. P. C. That section itself contains a proviso saying that nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to the examination of an accused person under sec. 263, Cr. P. C. Nevertheless, such an examination there must be and some record of it must be contained in the proceedings—Devjimal, 26 Cr.L.J. 1484, 158 I.C. 923, 1935 Cr.C. 1047, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 193. It is the duty of the Magistrate to record not only the plea of the accused, but also his examination, if any. The words "if any" do not imply that it is optional to the Magistrate to examine the accused or not, but merely imply that where the accused has made a statement, particulars of his examination should be noted. The mere fact that the statement of the accused has not been recorded by the Magistrate in a summary trial, would not show either that the accused was never questioned at all or that the omission to record his statement is fatal. Such a defect is at the most a mere irregularity which can be cured under sec. 537, Cr. P. C., unless the defect has in fact occasioned a failure of justice—Sa Ram, A.I.R. 1935 All 217, 1935 A.L.J. 257, 158 I.C. 129, 1935 Cr.C. 260, 36 Cr.L.J. 1290, 57 All 660, 1935 A.L.R. 945. See also Murat, 29 Cr.L.J. 265, 107 I.C. 592, 26 A.L.J. 109, A.I.R. 1928 All 266. It would be absurd to say that the mere failure to record the examination has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Where the Magistrate considered the statements of the accused, they cannot possibly have been prejudiced by the mere fact that he did not reduce those statements to writing in the proper column provided in the summary register—Khan Mohammad v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 531, 187 I.C. 769, A.I.R. 1940 Pesh. 11. See Notes 973 and 1012A.

868. Finding:—In summary trials, it is very important that there should be clear findings on question of fact, because it is only through such findings that the Court of Revision can form its own judgment with regard to the legality or otherwise of the proceedings of the trial Court—Jagmohan, 24 Cr.L.J. 916 (Oudh), 75 I.C. 292. See also Baijoo v. Abdul Ahmad Khan, infra.

If a Magistrate thinks that all that is necessary for him to say by way of judgment is that he sentences an accused to imprisonment or fine, then he is not doing his duty properly. It has to be remembered that cases have to go to the higher Courts when persons are convicted and the Magistrates should understand that it is their duty to write their judgments carefully. They may be concise and they need not be elaborate, but they should show on the face of them that the cases of both parties have been carefully and properly considered. Section 253, cl. (h), Cr. P. C., enjoins that a brief statement of reasons for the order should be given by the Magistrate. It is absolutely necessary that this should be done, otherwise the general public is likely section does not prevent a Magistrate who tried a case in a summary way from recording evidence; it merely says that he need not, but if it does, it cannot by reason of sec. 264 form part of the record—Hemandas, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 40, 37 Cr.L.J. 455, 161 I.C. 267, 1936 Cr.C. 230, following Nannier v. Desalier, 55 Mad. 799. However summary a trial may be, the vital evidence against each accused must be recorded—Bhujbal, 37 Cr.L.J. 292, 160 I.C. 413, 18 N.L.J. 140.

865. Frame of charge:—This section exempts the Magistrate from framing a charge in case in which no appeal lies—Natabar, 27 C.W.N. 923 (924), 25 Cr.L.J. 1270, 82 I.C. 278, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 63. Although it is not necessary under this section to frame a charge, still the accused must be called upon to answer to the particulars of the offence charged; and the Magistrate must specify the offence complained of in such a way as to give the accused notice of what is charged against him—Jharu Sheikh, 16 C.W.N. 696, 13 Cr.L.J. 224, 14 I.C. 320. See also Notes in para. 870.

865A. Clause (b):—Failure of the Magistrate to enter the date of the commission of offence in a prescribed form as required by this clause, in a summary trial, does not vitiate the trial and the defect is cured by sec. 537, Cr. P. C., if such failure has not led to any prejudice or failure of justice—Mohsin v. Emp, 41 Cr.L.J. 283, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 272, 1940 P.W.N. 93, 186 I.C. 312.

866. Particulars of the offence:—See clause (f) The record should show clearly the precise nature of the offence, and should be complete in all particulars—Madho, 1882 A.W.N. 59. The facts found by the Magistrate must show what offence has been committed by the accused—Lalit Mohun v. Chunder Mohan, 3 C.W.N. 281; Mahtab, 1887 P.R. 7; Sher Singh, 1889 P.R. 5; Din Mahomed, 29 Cr.L.J. 877, 111 I.C. 461, 29 P.L.R. 647, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 378, 10 Lah. 231. Further, the record, however brief, ought to be sufficient to show the necessary ingredients of the offence of which the accused has been found guilty—Din Mahomed, supra; Kuchi, 3 L.B.R. 3, 2 Cr.L.J. 375. The offence charged, the offence proved, and the reasons for conviction must be recorded in such a manner as to enable the Revision Court to say aye or no from within the four corners of the record itself whether the offence charged is an offence in point of law, whether the offence proved is an offence in point of law, and whether the reasons for the conviction are good and sufficient—Kash Mahomed, 10 C.W.N. 79 (81), 3 Cr.L.J. 178.

Under clause (f) the value of the property must be set forth. The Magistrate ought to direct his mind to the question and satisfy himself that the property in respect of which he was trying the accused was less than Rs. 50 in value. It is not enough that it is ascertainable from the records—Brij Nandan, 6 P.L.T. 114, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 227, 25 Cr.L.J. 545, 81 I.C. 33, following Abheen Parrida, 20 W.R. 17 (Cr.). This view has not been followed by the same High Court in a recent case. It has been laid down that where the trying Magistrate did not comply with the requirements of cl (f) of this section but had before him the first information report which disclosed offences of house trespass and theft of grain worth Rs. 5-12-0 under secs 448 and 379, I. P. C., respectively it is impossible to assume that there was a real defect of jurisdiction by reason of the property alleged to have been stolen exceeding Rs. 50 in value, especially when no such suggestion was made below. The mere failure to enter the value in the form does not suffice to raise any question of possible or probable prejudice or failure of justice, the governing factor in sec 537 Cr. P. Code—Mohsin v. Emp, 41 Cr.L.J. 283 (284), A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 272, 1940 P.W.N. 93, 186 I.C. 312.

867. Examination and plea of accused:—See clause (g). The plea of the accused must be recorded; omission to record the plea will vitiate the conviction—Murat Singh, 26 A.L.J. 109, 107 I.C. 592, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 98, A.I.R. 1928 All. 266, 29 Cr.L.J. 265, Shib Chandra v. Nanda Ravi, 9 C.W.N. lxxvi.

In all warrant cases, there must be some examination of accused as laid down in sec. 312. Section 263 does not give the Magistrate any discretion whether he will examine the accused or not. The words "if any" in clause (g) are intended for summons cases with the provision of cl (h) of this section—Abdul Rahman, 35 Cr.L.J. 1464, 15 Lah. 277, 151 I.C. 999, 36 P.L.R. 310, 1934 Cr.C 925, AIR 1934 Lah. 596. Even in a summary trial the statement of reasons for a conviction which the Magistrate is bound to record under sec. 263 (h), Cr P. C., should present a clear statement of the facts constituting the offence and should show that each of the ingredients necessary for a conviction has been considered and held proved by the Magistrate—Dayaram, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 144, following Ram Harakh, A.I.R. 1915 Sind 53, 30 I.C. 1001, 16 Cr.L.J. 713, 9 S.L.R. 89. Where, in a case under sec 447, I. P. C., the judgment does not state what the evidence is either of the alleged encroachment or trespass or of the intention that lay behind it and it does not give a single reason in support of the finding that the accused are guilty, the judgment does not fulfil the elementary requirements of the law—Dakkamari Kannayya v. Vadali Venkatesan, 38 Cr.L.J. 581, 168 I.C. 703, 1937 M.W.N. 323, 9 RM 620, 45 M.L.W. 471, A.I.R. 1937 Mad 480. But if the record submitted under sec. 441, Cr P. C., disclosed sufficient grounds for the Magistrate's decision, the High Court condoned the irregularity, if no failure of justice had occurred—Derish, 46 Mad 253 (256). The Bombay High Court holds that the omission to record reasons for conviction on the part of the Bench Magistrate is only an irregularity which can be cured by sec. 537, where there is clear evidence justifying the conviction. It is an omission which does not occasion failure of justice—Namdeo, 26 Bom LR 1236, 26 Cr.L.J. 466, 85 I.C. 146, AIR 1925 Bom. 138. See also Thurman, 20 L.W. 330, 25 Cr.L.J. 1084.

869A. Revision:—Ordinarily the High Court should not interfere in revision in a case tried summarily in which a relatively small fine has been imposed, but where there has been such confusion in the minds of the Magistrates and the consequence in the mind of the accused as to the offence with which the accused has been tried and charged, it should do so—Chothram Menghraj v. Emp, 39 Cr.L.J. 474, 174 I.C. 685, 32 S.L.R. 684, 10 RS 259, AIR 1938 Sind 70

264. (1) In every case tried summarily by a Magistrate or Bench in which an appeal lies, such cases. Record in appealable Magistrate or Bench shall, before passing sentence, record a judgment embodying the substance of the evidence and also the particulars mentioned in section 263.

(2) Such judgment shall be the only record in cases coming within this section

870. Record:—The record of the trial must be made at the time of the trial, and not subsequently prepared, after the close of the trial, from memory or from rough notes—Eragadu, 15 Mad 83. The judgment, which is the only record in appealable cases, must be written by the Magistrate himself (see sec. 265). He cannot delegate that duty to a clerk, nor can affix his signature to the record or judgment by a stamp—Subramanya, 6 Mad 396

Frame of charge—Where a Magistrate passes an appealable sentence he cannot make his record in the manner prescribed by sec. 263, but must record the evidence and frame a charge. Whereas in non-appealable cases it is stated in so many words in sec. 263 that no charge need be framed, but in sec. 264 which deals with appealable cases there are no words to that effect, this omission when applied with sec. 262 is tantamount to a clear direction that the ordinary procedure in warrant cases is to be followed and a formal charge is to be framed—Natabar, 27 C.W.N. 923 (925), 82 I.C. 278, AIR. 1924 Cal 63, 25 Cr.L.J. 1270. But in a more recent case the same High Court has expressed the opinion that there is no provision requiring the framing of a charge in a summary trial, whether in appealable or non-appealable cases. Sec. 264 states that what the record shall consist of, viz., a judgment embodying the substance to lose faith in the administration of justice—Dal Chand v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 493, 187 I.C. 642, A.I.R. 1940 All. 195, 1940 A.L.J. 154.

869. Reasons for conviction:—In a summary trial sec. 263 (h) and (i), Cr. P. C., require only the reason for the finding to be stated and not the reasons for the sentence—Provincial Government v. Bhivram, 41 Cr.L.J. 544, 188 I.C. 80, 1940 N.L.J. 242, A.I.R. 1940 Nag 264.

The Magistrate, in a summary trial must, in recording the reasons for the conviction, state them in such a manner that the High Court may in revision judge whether there were sufficient materials before the Magistrate to justify the conviction—Murat Singh, 26 A.L.J. 109, 107 I.C. 592, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 98, A.I.R. 1928 All 266, 29 Cr.L.J. 265; Lalit v. Chunder, 3 C.W.N. 281; Jagan Nath, 16 O.C. 357, 14 Cr.L.J. 594, 21 I.C. 466; Punjab Singh, 6 Cal. 579; Me Da Li, 1 L.B.R. 208; Ahmad Jan, 7 Luck. 498, 1932 Cr.C. 161, 33 Cr.L.J. 342, 136 I.C. 641, 8 O.W.N. 1376, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 98, Ind. Rul 1932 Oudh 129; Damodar, 3 P.L.T. 499, 23 Cr.L.J. 94; Janaki v. Raghunath, 19 Cr.L.J. 719 (Pat.). The Magistrate should set out so much of the reasons that have influenced him as to satisfy the accused that the Magistrate has considered each of the ingredients of the offence necessary in law for the conviction to which the Magistrate has proceeded—Mukundi, 21 All. 189 (191); Brijbasi, 10 A.L.J. 251, 13 Cr.L.J. 708; Ram Harakh, 9 S.L.R. 89, 16 Cr.L.J. 713, A.I.R. 1915 Sind 53, 30 I.C. 1011; Dayaram Satoomal, 37 Cr.L.J. 715, 162 I.C. 281, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 144, 1935 Cr.C. 752; Baijoo v. Abdul Ahmad Khan, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 37, 1938 O.A. 915, 14 Luck. 325, 40 Cr.L.J. 141, 178 I.C. 722, 1938 O.L.R. 512, 1938 O.W.N. 1130, 1938 A.W.R. (C.C.) 123; and while this should be recorded with brevity, the brevity should not be such as to tend to obscurity—Mukundi, supra, and Baijoo v. Abdul Ahmad Khan, supra. These safeguards are essential so that in case of revision the High Court may have sufficient materials on record before it for arriving at the conclusion as to whether the order of the Magistrate is right or wrong—Baijoo v. Abdul Ahmad Khan, supra. Thus, a judgment in a single line is not a judgment according to law—Jankey, 20 Cr.L.J. 431 (Pat.).

Failure to record a brief statement of reasons is fatal, and the whole proceedings are illegal and liable to be set aside—Dina Nath v. Jogendra, 6 C.W.N. 40; Punjab Singh, 6 Cal. 579; Shidgauda, 18 Bom. 97; Dervish, 46 Mad 253; Magsud, 1 P.L.T. 716; Mainjan, 24 O.C. 293; Nisarali, 28 Cr.L.J. 495, 101 I.C. 671, A.I.R. 1927 Nag 250; Murat, 29 Cr.L.J. 265, 107 I.C. 592, 26 A.L.J. 109, A.I.R. 1928 All. 266; Mabub v. Kesavalu, 1933 M.W.N. 736; Dakkamarri Kannayya v. Vadali Venkatesan, 38 Cr.L.J. 581, 168 I.C. 703, 1937 M.W.N. 323, 9 R.M. 620, 45 M.L.W. 471, A.I.R. 1937 Mad 480. Even the defect could not be cured by the Magistrate (Presidency) subsequently submitting the reasons to the High Court when the record was called for under sec. 441—Dervish Hossain, 46 Mad. 253; Haladhar, 9 C.W.N. lxxv. In summary trial the judgment need not be a very long and detailed one but it is the duty of the Magistrate to give a brief summary of the evidence and a concise statement of the reasons if the trial ends in a conviction. These safeguards are essential so that in case of revision the High Court may have sufficient materials on the record before it for arriving at the conclusion as to whether the order of the Magistrate is right or wrong—Murli Dhar, 32 Cr.L.J. 50, 127 I.C. 849, 31 P.L.R. 317 and 576, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 481, Ind. Rul. 1930 Lah. 881, 1930 Cr.C. 593. Where in acquitting the accused the Magistrate wrote: "That at best is a case in which the accused are entitled to the benefit of doubt, and the accused are, therefore, acquitted" without discussing and not even mentioning the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, the acquittal was illegal and should be set aside Akbar Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 677, 148 I.C. 430, 11 O.W.N. 487, 1934 Cr.C. 585, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 177. A Magistrate should, in recording his reasons for the conviction in a summary trial under cl. (h) of sec. 263, Cr. P. C., show that there was sufficient material before him to support the conviction and his record, however brief, must state the necessary ingredients of the offence of which the accused has been found guilty. Where the Magistrate merely says: "I believe the prosecution," there has been no compliance

(2) The Provincial Government may authorize any Bench of Magistrates empowered to try offences summarily to prepare the aforesaid record or judgment by means of an officer appointed in this behalf by the Court to which such Bench is immediately subordinate, and the record or judgment so prepared shall be signed by each member of such Bench present taking part in the proceedings.

(3) If no such authorization be given, the record prepared by a member of the Bench and signed as aforesaid shall be the proper record.

(4) If the Bench differ in opinion, any dissentient member may write a separate judgment.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

871A. Sub-sections (1) and (3):—Sub-section (3) lays down that if the record is prepared by a member of the Bench, it shall have to be signed by each member taking part in the proceedings. This clause does not apply to the case of preparation of record or judgment by the presiding officer of the Court under sub-sec. (1). If the presiding officer himself prepares the record or judgment, it is sufficient if he alone signs it, and it is not necessary that the other members of the Bench should sign the record or judgment—Ramakottiah v. Subba Rao, 52 Mad 237, 55 M.L.J. 576, 29 Cr.L.J. 973 (1974). But the other members must be aware of the contents of the judgment and must approve of the judgment. So, where after the other members of the Bench had left the Court premises, the presiding officer prepared the judgment and delivered it so that those members had no opportunity either to express assent or dissent, held that the judgment was not a proper judgment—Ramakottiah, supra.

The "signing" must be by putting the full name of the Magistrate or Magistrates signing the judgment. Mere putting in of initials makes the judgment defective and the conviction must be set aside—Brahmanah, 54 Mad 252, 32 Cr.L.J. 430 (431), 59 M.L.J. 674, 1930 M.W.N. 787, 32 M.L.W. 280, 129 I.C. 633.

CHAPTER XXIII.

OF TRIALS BEFORE HIGH COURTS AND COURTS OF SESSION.

A.—Preliminary.

266. In this Chapter, except in sections 276 and 307, and in Chapter XVIII, the expression "High Court" defined. "High Court" means a High Court within the meaning of the Government of India Act, 1935, and includes such other courts as the Provincial Government may by notification in the Official Gazette, declare to be High Courts for the purposes of this Chapter and of Chapter XVIII.

Amendment:—In this section the words "the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind" have been substituted in place of the words "the Courts of the Judicial of the evidence, and the particulars set out in sec. 263; and in sec. 263 it is not necessary to frame a formal charge. In any case the omission to frame a formal charge under sec. 264 would be cured by sec. 535—Madhav Chandra, 53 Cal. 738, 27 Cr.L.J. 1295 (1296), 98 I.C. 191, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1202, distinguishing Natabar, supra. In Kallu, 26 Cr.L.J. 1334, 98 I.C. 310, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 722 and Salig Ram, 7 Lah. 303, 27 Cr.L.J. 639, 94 I.C. 415, T Lah.L.J. 140, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 301, 27 P.L.R. 265, it is laid down that even in appealable cases it is not necessary to frame a charge; and a similar view has been taken in Karu, Ratanlal 768, and Titu, 1 P.L.T. 652, 21 Cr.L.J. 630.

871. Substance of evidence:—The Magistrate is not bound to record the substance of every separate depositions, but he is to state generally what is the substance of the witnesses' evidence—Jamna Prasad, 6 O.W.N. 45, 30 Cr.L.J. 557, 116 I.C. 57, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 297. The substance of the evidence is a matter quite distinct from the facts which may be considered as proved by the evidence. It should be recorded in such a way as to enable the Appellate Court to form an opinion whether the evidence is sufficient to support a conviction—Po Ka, 9 Cr.L.J. 23, 4 L.B.R. 338; Murlihar, 31 P.L.R. 317, 32 Cr.L.J. 50, 127 I.C. 849, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 481, Ind. Rul. 1930 Lah. 881, 1930 Cr.C. 593. Where the judgment convicting the accused did not embody the substance of the evidence but the Magistrate merely recorded that the prosecution witnesses supported the complainant and that the evidence of the defence witnesses was conflicting and unreliable, held that the judgment was defective and the conviction could not stand—Salim, 24 Cr.L.J. 484, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 167; Nurudin, 30 Bom.L.R. 954, 20 Cr.L.J. 1005 (1006), 112 I.C. 221. The Court is not required to record any evidence at all and, therefore, there is no test by which the substantiality of its record can be gauged. It is right to assume that the matter rests with the Court—Subramania v. Nachiar, 32 Cr.L.J. 689, 131 I.C. 174, 1931 M.W.N. 118, 33 M.L.W. 311, 1931 Cr.C. 329, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 510, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 233.

When the substance of the evidence is very imperfectly recorded, the Appellate Court should not quash a conviction on that ground. If the Appellate Court found it impossible to dispose of the appeal because of such defect, it should have required the Lower Court to remedy the defect by properly recording the substance of evidence in a fresh judgment after re-examining the witnesses, if necessary, or to have ordered a retrial with that view—Karan Singh, 1 All. 680.

In a summary trial of an appealable case, a Magistrate made rough notes of the evidence which he subsequently copied and placed on the record and destroyed the original notes. It was held that the Magistrate's action was improper, because the destruction of the original notes was tantamount to destroying the original record, with the result that there was no legal evidence on the record which an Appellate Court could go into—Jagdish, 1 P.L.T. 63, 21 Cr.L.J. 229, 55 I.C. 101. See also Satish Chandra, 48 Cal. 280; Atma Ram, 49 All. 131 and Lal Chand, 26 Cr.L.J. 1454, 89 I.C. 974, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 79; as well as the contrary rulings cited in Note 864 under sec. 263.

Sub-section (2):—The Legislature has laid down in this clause that in the case of summary trials the judgment with certain particulars shall be the only record, and therefore the Appellate Court is not justified in travelling outside the record in hearing an appeal from a conviction in a summary trial—Chocklinga, 55 M.L.J. 117, 29 Cr.L.J. 625, 109 I.C. 897, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 597, 28 M.L.W. 394.

265. (1) Records made under section 263 and judgments recorded under section 264 shall be written by the presiding officer, either in English or in the language of the Court, or, if the

of the evidence, and the particulars set out in sec. 263; and in sec. 263 it is not necessary to frame a formal charge. In any case the omission to frame a formal charge under sec. 264 would be cured by sec. 535—Madhav Chandra, 53 Cal. 738, 27 Cr.L.J. 1295 (1296), 98 I.C. 191, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1202, distinguishing Natabar, supra. In Kallu, 26 Cr.L.J. 1334, 98 I.C. 310, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 722 and Salig Ram, 7 Lah. 303, 27 Cr.L.J. 639, 94 I.C. 415, T Lah.L.J. 140, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 301, 27 P.L.R. 265, it is laid down that even in appealable cases it is not necessary to frame a charge; and a similar view has been taken in Karu, Ratanlal 768, and Titu, 1 P.L.T. 652, 21 Cr.L.J. 630.

871. Substance of evidence:—The Magistrate is not bound to record the substance of every separate depositions, but he is to state generally what is the substance of the witnesses' evidence—Jamna Prasad, 6 O.W.N. 45, 30 Cr.L.J. 557, 116 I.C. 57, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 297. The substance of the evidence is a matter quite distinct from the facts which may be considered as proved by the evidence. It should be recorded in such a way as to enable the Appellate Court to form an opinion whether the evidence is sufficient to support a conviction—Po Ka, 9 Cr.L.J. 23, 4 L.B.R. 338; Murlidhar, 31 P.L.R. 317, 32 Cr.L.J. 50, 127 I.C. 849, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 481, Ind. Rul. 1930 Lah. 881, 1930 Cr.C. 593. Where the judgment convicting the accused did not embody the substance of the evidence but the Magistrate merely recorded that the prosecution witnesses supported the complainant and that the evidence of the defence witnesses was conflicting and unreliable, held that the judgment was defective and the conviction could not stand—Salim, 24 Cr.L.J. 484, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 167; Nurudin, 30 Bom.L.R. 954, 20 Cr.L.J. 1005 (1006), 112 I.C. 221. The Court is not required to record any evidence at all and, therefore, there is no test by which the substantiality of its record can be gauged. It is right to assume that the matter rests with the Court—Subramania v Nachiar, 32 Cr.L.J. 689, 131 I.C. 174, 1931 M.W.N. 118, 33 M.L.W. 311, 1931 Cr.C. 329, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad 510, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 233.

When the substance of the evidence is very imperfectly recorded, the Appellate Court should not quash a conviction on that ground. If the Appellate Court found it impossible to dispose of the appeal because of such defect, it should have required the Lower Court to remedy the defect by properly recording the substance of evidence in a fresh judgment after re-examining the witnesses, if necessary, or to have ordered a retrial with that view—Karan Singh, 1 All 680.

In a summary trial of an appealable case, a Magistrate made rough notes of the evidence which he subsequently copied and placed on the record and destroyed the original notes. It was held that the Magistrate's action was improper, because the destruction of the original notes was tantamount to destroying the original record, with the result that there was no legal evidence on the record which an Appellate Court could go into—Jagdish, 1 P.L.T. 63, 21 Cr.L.J. 229, 55 I.C. 101. See also Satish Chandra, 48 Cal 280; Atma Ram, 49 All 131 and Lal Chand, 26 Cr.L.J. 1454, 89 I.C. 974, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 79; as well as the contrary rulings cited in Note 864 under sec. 263.

Sub-section (2):—The Legislature has laid down in this clause that in the case of summary trials the judgment with certain particulars shall be the only record, and therefore the Appellate Court is not justified in travelling outside the record in hearing an appeal from a conviction in a summary trial—Chocklinga, 55 M.L.J. 117, 29 Cr.L.J. 625, 109 I.C. 897, A.I.R. 1928 Mad 597, 28 M.L.W. 394.

265. (1) Records made under section 263 and judgments recorded under section 264 shall be written by the presiding officer, either in English or in the language of the Court, or, if the Court to which such presiding officer is immediately subordinate so direct, in such officer's mother-tongue.

not form a body but each acts and expresses his opinion individually and the Judge is to invite the opinion of each separately and record it—Thurumalai, 24 Mad. 523; Shaker, 14 Bom L.R. 710, 13 Cr.L.J. 677; Jaisukh, 43 All 125, 19 A.L.J. 1; Jairam, 20 N.L.R. 129, 25 Cr.L.J. 459, 77 I.C. 811, A.I.R. 1924 Nag 287. In a trial held with the aid of assessors, the individual opinion of each assessor is taken, but in a trial by jury, the individual opinions of the members of the jury are never intended to be disclosed—Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585, 15 Cr.L.J. 197. But the law makes no distinction as to the procedure between a trial by jury and a trial with aid of assessors, except as to summing up of the case and the manner in which the verdict of the jury and the opinions of the assessors are respectively taken—Mansing, 33 Bom. 423

As regards appeal, the considerations governing the appeal from the trial held with aid of assessors differ greatly from those governing an appeal from the trial by a jury. In the latter case, the appeal is restricted by the provisions of sec. 423 (2) whereas in the former case the whole case is before the Appellate Court—Champa, 29 Cr.L.J. 325 (329), 108 I.C. 81, A.I.R. 1928 Pat 326, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 545

It is clear that a juror stands on a higher footing, speaks with greater authority and takes a larger share in the decisions of a criminal case than does an assessor and it may be taken as axiomatic, therefore, that in the absence of a specific prohibition an objection that could not be upheld regarding a juror would be ruled out in the case of an assessor—Pahlu, A.I.R. 1939 Lah 475 (476), 11 L.R. 1939 Lah. 243, 41 Cr.L.J. 55, 184 I.C. 549, 41 P.L.R. 731.

The assessors try nothing and decide nothing they merely assist the Judge. The jury, on the other hand, actually try the matters with which they are entrusted. They are invested with a status akin to that of the Judge himself. The fundamental conception underlying all jury trials is that the jury are there actually to try the case and not merely to aid the Judge in arriving at a conclusion. They are invested with a special status and given special powers and the ultimate responsibility for all decisions within their sphere is meant to be theirs and theirs alone. One important effect of this is that when the trial lasts for more than one day the Judge has to consider under sec. 296 whether the jurors shall be allowed to go to their respective homes or whether they shall be kept together under the charge of an officer of the Court. Sections 298 and 299 define the respective functions of the Judge and jury, and sec 297 directs the Judge to "charge the jury" while sec 300 states that "no person other than a juror shall speak to or hold any communication with" any member of a jury after the charge. Compare this with sec 309 which deals with assessors and the fundamental nature of the difference at once becomes evident. No charge is delivered to them; on the contrary, the Judge is given a discretion "to sum up" the evidence for the prosecution and the defence or not as he thinks fit. It is not obligatory. No question about segregation arises and the Judge "is not bound to conform to the opinion of the assessors." He has not got anything like the same freedom of action in a jury trial. If he agrees with the verdict, then, of course, no difficulty arises but if he disagrees, then his hands are very considerably tied. In the first place, he has no powers of acquittal or conviction or even ordering a fresh trial. He can only 'submit the case' to the High Court. But even this he cannot do merely because he disagrees. He has to be 'clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice' to submit the case—Dattatraya Sadashiv v Emp, A.I.R. 1940 Nag 17 (19), 186 I.C. 402, 41 Cr.L.J. 289, 11 L.R. 1940 Nag 391 (F B)

269. (1) The Provincial Government may, by order in the official Gazette, direct that the trial of all offences, or of any particular class of offences, before any Court of Session, shall be by jury in any district, and may, revoke or alter such order.

(2) The Provincial Government, by like order, may also Commissioners of the Central Provinces and Sind" by the Central Provinces Courts (Supplementary) Act (VIII of 1935). This amendment was thought necessary in view of the establishment of the High Court of Judicature at Nagpur.

The words "means a High Court within the meaning of the Government of India Act, 1935, and includes such other courts as the Provincial Government may by notification in the Official Gazette" have been substituted in this section for "means a High Court of Judicature established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, and includes the Chief Court of Oudh, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind and such other Courts as the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

871B. The Judicial Commissioner (e.g., of Sind) is a High Court only for the purposes of Chapters 18 and 23, but not for the purpose of Ch 31 (Appeal). A Judicial Commissioner holding a sessions trial on the Original Side is to be deemed a Sessions Judge and not a High Court for the purposes of Ch 31, so that an appeal will lie from his decision to the Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court—Khudabux, 19 S.L.R. 309, 26 Cr L.J. 562.

Trials before High Court to be by jury. 267. All trials under this Chapter before a High Court shall be by jury; and, notwithstanding anything herein contained, in all criminal cases transferred to a High Court under this Code or under the Letters Patent of any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, or the Government of India Act, 1935, the trial may, if the High Court so directs, be by jury.

Amendment:—The words "or the Government of India Act, 1935" have been inserted after "Act, 1915" in this section by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

Trials before Court of Session to be by jury or with assessors. 268. All trials before a Court of Session shall be either by jury, or with the aid of assessors.

872. Trials ordinarily with assessors:—In the absence of a Notification under sec 269, a trial in the Court of Session must be with the aid of assessors—Skilling, 18 P.R. 1888.

In the Administered Areas in Hyderabad State the discretionary power of dispensing with a jury and aid of assessors is conferred upon the Sessions Judge. The Additional Sessions Judge is, therefore, also entitled to exercise his discretion under sec. 268, Cr P. C., and try cases without jury or aid of assessors—Fakira v Emp., 38 Cr L.J. 498 (499), 167 I.C. 790, 39 P.L.R. 334, 1937 O.L.R. 216, 41 C.W.N. 741, 1937 M.W.N. 546, 9 R.P.C. 231, 1937 A.Cr.C. 74, 3 B.R. 426, 1937 O.W.N. 412, A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 119 (P.C.).

Trial by jury and trial with assessors—Difference:—In a trial by jury, the jury is the real tribunal and is aided by the Judge, and in certain matters directed by the Judge; but in a trial with the aid of assessors, the Judge is the sole tribunal and Judge of law and fact, and the responsibility of the decision rests solely with him, though in the decision of the case he is expected to take into consideration the opinion of each assessor. In a trial by jury, the jury form a tribunal or body with a foreman, and the verdict is the verdict of the body, and when there is no unanimity among the members of the body, the opinion of the majority prevails as the verdict of the body. But in the case of a trial with the aid of assessors, the assessors do that ground—Mohim Chander, 3 Cal. 765. And unless the accused objects to such procedure before the verdict is delivered, he cannot be allowed to object with regard to it subsequently in appeal—Mansingh, 33 Bom. 423; Gulab Chand, 27 Bom.L.R. 1416, 27 Cr.L.J. 650. The accused were charged under sec. 412, I. P. Code, which was an offence triable by jury, and were tried by jury. The jury however brought in a verdict of guilty under sec. 411, I. P. Code, which was an offence triable with the aid of assessors. It was contended that the jury was wrong in convicting the accused for an offence triable with assessors and that the trial ought to have been held with the jurors as assessors, under sec. 269 (3). Held that sec. 269 (3) did not apply as no charge was framed for an offence under sec. 411, I. P. Code. The conviction of the accused under sec. 411, I. P. C., was not illegal, vide sec. 238, Cr. P. Code—Gulab Chand, supra. Where an assessor-case is tried by jury, the Judge cannot treat the verdict of the jury as the opinion of assessors so as to be able to concur with the opinion of the minority, if he disagrees with the opinion of the majority. If the Judge disagrees with the opinion of the majority, he must submit the case to the High Court under sec. 307—Surja, 25 Cal. 555.

875. Joint trial of jury-case and assessors-case:—The plain meaning of the language used is that the procedure indicated in sec. 269 (3), Cr. P. C., is applicable when the accused are charged with more than one offence, and when these offences are not all triable by jury. Where no accused person was charged with more than one offence, one was charged with conspiracy to murder, a charge triable by assessors and others were charged with murder, a charge triable by jury, sec. 269 (3), Cr. P. C., was not applicable and the form of the trial with the aid of the jury sitting also as assessors was erroneous—Ram Govinda Ghose v Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 625 (626), 175 I.C. 529, 10 R.C. 802, 42 C.W.N. 781, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 364.

Under sub-sec. (3) an accused may be tried simultaneously at one trial by the jury for offences triable by jury, and by the Judge with the aid of the same jurors as assessors for offences triable with the aid of assessors—Sennimalai, 2 L.W. 933, 16 Cr.L.J. 717. But in such a trial, the Judge must always preserve a distinction between the two cases (the jury-case and the assessor-case) and must not treat the whole case as a jury-case. He must separately record the verdict of the jury in the jury-case, and must separately record the opinions of the jurors as assessors in the assessor-case. If he disagrees with the verdict of the jury, he must not send the whole case to the High Court but must send only the jury-case under sec. 307, and pass judgment with reference to the assessor-case under sec. 309—Vyankatsingh, 9 Bom.L.R. 1057, 7 Cr.L.J. 236; Kalidas, 8 Bom.L.R. 599, 4 Cr.L.J. 192; Kambala Narayana, 36 M.L.J. 452; Pachaimuthu, 55 Mad. 715, 33 Cr.L.J. 533 (534); Chanbasappa, 33 Bom.L.R. 1571, 33 Cr.L.J. 172; Devu, Ratanlal 600. In such cases it is desirable that the Judge should explain clearly to the jurors the double capacity in which they are acting—Sivaga, 2 Weir 334. If in the course of such trial it appears that only one offence was committed, viz., an offence triable with assessors, and the Judge tries the case with the jury and disagrees with the verdict of the jury, he cannot send the case to the High Court under sec. 307, but should pass judgment under sec. 309, because he must treat the case as one triable with the aid of assessors, treating the jurors as assessors—Anga Valayan, 22 Mad. 15.

Again, in such joint trial (trial of jury-case and assessor-case) all persons who would serve as jurors in the jury-case must serve as assessors in the assessor-case. Where the Judge after taking the verdict of the jurors in a jury-case, took only the opinions of two of them in the assessor-case, it was held that the Judge's procedure was illegal; he should have taken the opinion of all the jurors as assessors—Ramkrishna, 23 Mad. 598. Similarly, where in such joint trial the Judge selected five gentlemen as jurors in the jury-case, and two of them only as assessors in the assessor-case, it was held that the Judge acted illegally; he ought to have taken ~~all~~ ^{the} five jurors as assessors in the assessor-case—Pingai, 21 M.L.J. 520, 12 Cr.L.J. 239.

In such cases at the ~~conclusion~~ ^{close} of the trial the Court ~~of the~~ ^{must} take the opinion of the jury, and then the opinion of the jurors as assessors. At ~~the~~ ^{the} of the jury declare that, in the case of any district in which the trial of any offence is to be by jury, the trial of such offences shall, if the Judge, on application made to him or of his own motion so directs, be by jurors summoned from a special jury list, and may revoke or alter such order.

(3) When the accused is charged at the same trial with several offences of which some are and some are not triable by jury, he shall be tried by jury for such of those offences as are triable by jury, and by the Court of Session, with the aid of the jurors as assessors, for such of them as are not triable by jury.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

873. Scope:—In view of the provisions of this section there can be no doubt that the normal procedure under the Code is trial by assessors, and it is only when the Local Government publish an order in the Gazette that the trial of an offence becomes trial by jury. Such orders may be made or revoked at any time—Jogueswar Ghosh, A.I.R. 1936 Cal 527, 40 C.W.N. 1186, 166 I.C. 418, 1936 Cr.C. 137, 38 Cr.L.J. 212, I.L.R. (1937) 1 Cal 306, 65 C.L.J. 351, 9 R.C. 29.

The plain words of sec. 269, Cr. P. C., are that any particular class of offences before a Court of Session may be directed to be tried by a jury. This implies that the offences must be before the Court of Session and cannot derogate from the power otherwise given to prescribe which offences should not come before that Court. Further, this clause speaks of "all or any particular class of offences" and of "any district" and thus gives discretion both as regards the crime and the place of trial. Section 269, Cr. P. C., cannot be read with sec. 29, Cr. P. C., so as to hold that the Local Government may direct that all or any class of offences not punishable with death shall be tried by jury before the Sessions Court, and not by Magistrates invested with power under sec. 30, Cr. P. Code—Prithvinath, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 56 (58), 20 N.L.J. 151, I.L.R. 1938 Nag. 248, 175 I.C. 935, 39 Cr.L.J. 660, 11 R.N. 18.

'Class of offences':—The classes of offences referred to in this section are not restricted to the classification found in the Penal Code, e.g., offences against the State, offences against public tranquillity, etc., or to the classification found in this Code, e.g., bailable offences, cognizable offences, etc. Offences may be classified according to the persons who commit them, or according to the person or property against whom or which they are committed, or in regard to the particular occasion in connection with when they are committed—Ganapathi, 23 Mad 632, 2 Weir 331. Where by a Notification the Government directed that in a particular district an offence under sec. 436, I. P. C., was to be tried by jury and not with the aid of assessors, held that an offence under sec. 436 read with sec. 149, I. P. C., should also be tried by jury and not with the aid of assessors, because an offence under sec. 436-149, I. P. C., is not a different offence from an offence under sec. 436, I. P. Code—Ramsundar, 5 Pat. 238, 7 P.L.T. 178, 27 Cr.L.J. 512.

Counter case:—It is not proper that the case and the counter-case arising out of the same incident and committed to the Sessions should be tried at one and the same time—Jaggu Naidu, 1932 M.W.N. 692. See Notes 830A and 883

874. Trial of jury-case with assessors and vice versa:—If a jury-case is tried with the aid of assessors, and no objection is taken at the trial, the trial will stand good by virtue of sec. 536 (2)—Ganapathifi, 23 Mad 632; Sakhawat v. Emp., 33 Cr.L.J. 330, 167 I.C. 61, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 50, 19 N.L.R. 320, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 277.

So also, the trial by jury of a case properly triable with assessors is not invalid on in the districts of the 24-Parganas, Hooghly, Burdwan, Murshidabad, Nadia, Patna and Dacca (vide Notification, dated the 27th March 1893, published in the Calcutta Gazette of 1893, Pt. I, p. 252 and Notification No 226-J D., dated the 2nd September 1895, published in the Calcutta Gazette of 1895, Pt. I, p. 867) and Chittagong, Mymensingh, Rajshahi and Jessore (vide Notification No 2330-J., dated the 19th April 1897, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 21st April 1897) and Khulna (vide Notification No 3773-J., dated the 15th November 1905, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 22nd November 1905) that is to say—

Offences defined in the following chapters of the Indian Penal Code, viz. :—

Chapter VIII—(Offences against the public tranquillity);

“ XI—(False evidence and offences against public justice);

“ XVI—(Offences affecting the human body);

“ XVII—(Offences against property);

“ XVIII—(Offences relating to documents and to trade or property marks); and “ XX—(Offences relating to marriage); and abetments of, and attempts to commit, such offences

The trial of offences in the districts of Bakarganj, Bankura, Birbhum, Bogra, Dinajpur, Faridpur, Maldah, Midnapur, Noakhali, Pabna, Rangpur and Tipperah under Chapters VIII, XI, XII, XVI, XVII, XVIII and XX of the Indian Penal Code and of offences under sec. 52 of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, shall be by jury (Vide Notification No 2505-J, dated the 15th July 1918, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 17th July 1918, Pt. I, p. 1062)

Any trial commencing before any Court of Sessions in the districts of 24-Parganas, Hooghly, Howrah, Burdwan, Murshidabad, Nadia, Dacca, Chittagong, Mymensingh, Rajshahi, Jessore and Khulna, of offences of the following classes, namely —

(a) offences under Chapter XII (offences relating to coin and Government stamps) of the Indian Penal Code, 1860;

(b) offences under section 52 of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898 (VI of 1898); and

(c) abetments of, and attempts to commit, such offences, shall be by jury. (Vide Notification No 2531-J, dated the 15th July 1918, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 17th July 1918)

So much of the orders contained in the Notifications, dated the 7th January 1861, and the 13th October 1862 and Notifications No 2360-J, dated the 19th April 1897, No. 3773-J., dated the 15th November 1905, and No 2505-J, dated the 15th July 1918, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 8th January 1861, the 15th October 1862, the 21st April 1897, the 22nd November 1905 and the 17th July 1918, respectively, as applies to offences under sections 400 and 401, Chapter XVII of the Indian Penal Code, has been revoked (Vide Notification No 55-J., dated the 3rd January 1933)

Bengal Government Notification No 3347-J, 22nd September, 1939—In exercise of the power conferred by sub-section (1) of section 269, of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, (Act V of 1898), the Governor is pleased to direct that any trial commencing on and after the 1st January, 1940 before any Court of Session of an offence under Chapter V-A of the Indian Penal Code (Criminal Conspiracy) shall be by jury when it is a conspiracy to commit an offence which is triable by jury. By order of the Governor, A L Blank, Secy to the Govt. of Bengal.

In Nurul Amin v. Emp., 40 Cr L J. 667 (668), 182 I.C. 386, AIR 1939 Cal. 335, ILR (1939) 1 Cal 511, Rau, J., pointed out an anomaly (sc. whereas certain offences were triable by jury, a mere conspiracy to commit any one of them was not so triable) resulting from the state of the notifications under this section and suggested some sort of revision of the same. The abovementioned notification seems to have been issued to remove the aforesaid anomaly.

Under sub-sec. (2):—In the districts of the 24-Parganas, Hooghly, Burdwan, Murshidabad, Nadia, Patna, Dacca, Chittagong, Mymensingh, Rajshahi and Jessore

the Court takes their opinion as assessors and then gives its judgment as regards the charge tried with the aid of assessors. It will often happen that the Judge so far as the charge triable by him with the aid of the assessors is concerned, will have to take into consideration the same evidence which has been believed or disbelieved by the jury, and will base a conviction or acquittal on that very evidence. He is not fettered in any manner by the opinion of the jury expressed in respect of the charges triable by the jury, for the simple reason that the charge with which the Judge is dealing was not triable by the jury at all, and so their opinion about the evidence so far as that charge triable by the Judge alone with the aid of the assessors was concerned, is no way binding on the Judge—Ram Das, 35 Cr.L.J. 1349 (1354), 151 I.C. 442, 1934 Cr.C. 130, 1934 A.L.J. 852, A.I.R. 1934 All. 61. See also Mhasku, A.I.R. 1935 Bom 165, 37 Cr.L.J. 26, 158 I.C. 1090, 37 Bom L.R. 109, 1935 Cr.C. 325.

If the conviction for the offences triable by jury is set aside because of certain defect in the verdict, it does not follow as a necessary consequence of it that the conviction for the other offences for which the accused has been tried with the aid of assessors must also be set aside—Saldeo, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 164, 159 I.C. 919, 1936 O.W.N. 28, 1936 O.L.R. 18, 37 Cr.L.J. 182. But it would certainly be a most extraordinary thing that, if the main part of the case were disbelieved and an order of acquittal passed on the basis of a verdict of not guilty returned by the jury, the accused should be convicted in the same trial, ignoring their verdict as assessors in respect of offences triable with the aid of assessors, on the substratum, if any, which remains, without assigning reasons for such conviction—Jogneswar Ghosh, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 527, 40 C.W.N. 1186, 166 I.C. 418, 1936 Cr.C. 737, 38 Cr.L.J. 212, 1 L.R. (1937) 1 Cal. 306, 65 C.L.J. 351, 9 R.C. 529. See also Cheru Sheikh, 40 C.W.N. 1374, where the combined procedure of a trial by jury of some of the charges and a trial with the aid of jurors as assessors of the other charges was deprecated. This is, however, the procedure not merely contemplated, but required by the provisions of sec. 263 (3), Cr. P. C., and an accused may legitimately complain if this procedure is not followed—Goloke Behari Takal v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 161 (169), 173 I.C. 65, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 51, 66 C.L.J. 225, 42 C.W.N. 129, 10 R.C. 441, 1 L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 290. But the practice of adding a charge under sec. 120B, I. P. C., in case where it is not necessary with the result that the jurors sit in the same trial as assessors, has been condemned more than once—Abdul Gafur Kotwal v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 101 (102), 178 I.C. 637, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 658, 1 L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 636. The High Court has also condemned the practice of withdrawing the charge of substantive offence and substituting a charge of conspiracy as the effect of the alteration in the charges has been to deprive the accused of their right to be tried by a jury—Benoy Bhusan Chatterjee v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 166, 179 I.C. 156, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 857.

876. Transfer of case from jury-district to non-jury district and vice versa:—The words "trial shall be by jury in any district" mean that the trial shall be by jury if the case is tried in a district in which the notification is in force; they do not mean that the case shall be tried by jury even if it is transferred from a jury-district to a district where jury trial does not prevail. The High Court has power under sec. 526 to transfer a sessions case from a jury-district to a non-jury district, and section 269 does not in any way limit that power; but in such a case the trial in the latter district will be with the aid of assessors—Jumo, 10 S.L.R. 154, 18 Cr.L.J. 51, A.I.R. 1917 Sind 42, 37 I.C. 35; Hari, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 145 (180), 28 S.L.R. 397, 1935 Cr.C. 753, 157 I.C. 697, 36 Cr.L.J. 1161. But see Hari, 39 C.W.N. 929 (933) (P.C.). Similarly, the High Court has power to transfer a case from a non-jury district to a jury-district under section 526 (d) on the ground of convenience of parties; and the High Court cannot refuse to do so on the ground that by such a transfer the accused will get the benefit of a jury trial where previously he had none—Durga Charan, 8 C.L.J. 59, 8 Cr.L.J. 131. See Note 1143.

By order of the Governor, A L Blank, Secy to the Govt of Bengal

In Nurul Amin v. Emp., 40 Cr L.J. 667 (60S), 182 IC 385, AIR 1939 Cal 335, ILR (1939) 1 Cal 511, Rau, J, pointed out an anomaly (i.e., whereas certain offences were triable by jury, a mere conspiracy to commit any one of them was not so triable) resulting from the state of the notifications under this section and suggested some sort of revision of the same. The abovementioned notification seems to have been issued to remove the aforesaid anomaly.

Under sub-sec. (2):—In the districts of the 24-Parganas, Hooghly, Burdwan, Murshidabad, Nadia, Patna, Dacca, Chittagong, Mymensingh, Rajshahi and Jessore

(Vide Notification No. 2360-J., dated the 19th April, 1897, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 21st April 1897) and Khulna (Vide Notification No. 3773-J., dated the 15th November 1905, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 22nd November 1905) and Bakarganj, Bankura, Birbhum, Bogra, Dinajpur, Faridpur, Maldah, Midnapur, Noakhali, Pabna, Rangpur and Tippera (Vide Notification No. 2505-J., dated the 15th July 1918, published in the Calcutta Gazette—1918, Pt. I, p. 1062), the trial of offences punishable with death and of any other offences triable by a Jury, shall, if the Judge, on application made to him or of his own motion, so directs, be by jurors summoned from a special jury list.

270. In every trial before a Court of Session the prosecution shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor.

877. The prosecution shall be conducted by the Public Prosecutor; if the complainant engages a counsel, the Public Prosecutor may always avail himself of the services of such counsel and in doing so he does not deprive himself of the management of the case—Narayan, 11 B.H.C.R. 102. An Advocate of the High Court may appear on behalf of the prosecution in the Court of Session and may conduct the prosecution without being specially empowered by the District Magistrate for that purpose—Cungadhur, 23 W.R. 14. But it is highly undesirable that the prosecution should be conducted by Police Officers—Ram Chander, 13 W.R. 18.

The provisions of this section are merely directory, and omission to appoint a Public Prosecutor is merely an irregularity curable by sec. 537—Ismail, 35 P.R. 1887.

B.—Commencement of Proceedings.

271. (1) When the Court is ready to commence the trial, the accused shall appear or be brought before it, and the charge shall be read out in Court and explained to him, and he shall be asked whether he is guilty of the offence charged, or claims to be tried.

(2) If the accused pleads guilty, the plea shall be recorded, and he may be convicted thereon.

878. Charge shall be read and explained:—Where the charge is merely read out to the accused but not explained, the conviction will be quashed, especially in a case of trial for murder—Aiyaru, 9 Mad 61; Trimbaka, 3 Bom L.R. 489. The charge should be read out and so explained to the accused that the Court is sure that he has understood the nature of the charge thoroughly and it is then only that he should be called upon to plead—Vaimbilee, 5 Cal 826; Gurrapu, 2 Weir 336; Jinga, 2 Weir 339; and the Judge ought to satisfy himself by interrogation of the accused, if necessary, that he fully understands the responsibility which he assumes in making a plea of guilty—Kesho Singh, 20 O.C. 136, 18 Cr.L.J. 742.

As regards consolidation of two or more cases committed to the Court of Session, see Arumugum v. Emp., in Note 774.

The charge-sheet to which the accused is called upon to plead is a very important document. It should be drawn up and considered with extreme care and caution, so that the accused may have no doubt whatever as to the offences to which he is called upon to answer, and the Judge of the Appellate Court also may have no doubt upon the matter. Every addition and alteration made in the charge has to be read over and explained to the accused—Jagdro, 18 A.L.J. 442, 21 Cr.L.J. 410, 56 I.C. 58.

879. Plea:—If there are two heads of a charge (e.g., if the accused is charged with the offence of culpable homicide or in the alternative with the offence of grievous hurt) the accused should not be called upon to plead in the alternative but to each of the heads of the charge separately. Where in such a case he pleaded guilty to the second charge only (grievous hurt) and the Judge convicted him on that plea, the conviction was set aside—Lakshman, Ratanlal 327.

The accused must himself plead guilty or not guilty; admission by a pleader (especially by a pleader engaged by the Court for the accused and not by the accused himself) is not binding on him—Sangaya, 2 Bom L.R. 751. Cf. Sur Singh, 6 Bom.L.R. 861, 1 Cr L.J. 939

There is no implication that when an accused in the course of the trial withdraws his claim to be tried and pleads guilty, the Court is not entitled to record the plea and either accept it or continue the trial—Shyama, 35 Cr L.J. 1322 (1325), 151 I.C. 393, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 330, 1934 Cr.C. 722.

880. What is a sufficient plea:—The accused must distinctly and unequivocally admit the guilt; otherwise it is not sufficient. Where the accused instead of pleading guilty made a long rambling statement more or less admitting the guilt, it would be much safer if the Judge recorded a formal plea of 'not guilty' and proceeded to try the accused in the ordinary way—Deoki, 5 A.L.J. 157, 7 Cr.L.J. 295. The plea must distinctly admit every fact necessary to constitute the offence. Thus, where in a trial for murder the accused merely admitted that he beat his wife and she died but he did not say whether he had any intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, it was held that this was not a sufficient plea of guilty to a charge of culpable homicide, because the intention was absent—Gurrapu, 2 Weir 336; Chinia, 8 Bom.L.R. 240, 3 Cr L.J. 337; Sonaoolah, 25 W.R. 23. Where the plea of guilty is accompanied by qualifying statements, such a plea is not properly speaking a plea of guilty. Thus, where the accused said that he killed his wife, but that he did so under grave provocation (e.g., in consequence of discovering her in an act of adultery), such a statement was not a plea of guilty to a charge of murder—Netai, 11 Cal 410. So also, it could not be taken to be a plea of guilty if the prisoner admitted the guilt but said that he had committed the offence under the influence of certain persons mentioned—Sundar, 1886 A.W.N. 66; or that he committed the offence because he was subject to epileptic fits—Mhataraya, Ratanlal 698, or that he was not in his right mind at the time of committing the act—Cheit Ram, 5 N.W.P. 110.

Plea of 'not guilty'—The accused can plead "guilty" under sec 271 or he can claim to be tried under sec 272, or he can refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried. The plea of 'not guilty' is not recognised by this Code—Nirmal Kanta, 41 Cal 1072. If he pleads 'not guilty,' he must be regularly tried.

Record of plea—If the accused pleads guilty, the plea should be recorded. Where no such plea appears on the record, the conviction is bad and must be set aside—Gopal, 7 Cal 96; Deoki, 5 A.L.J. 157, 7 Cr L.J. 295, Jagdeo, 21 Cr L.J. 410, 56 I.C. 58, 18 A.L.J. 442. If the statement is made by the accused in a foreign language, it is not necessary that the plea must be recorded in the words of that language. It should be recorded in the language in which it is conveyed to the Court by the interpreter—Viamblee, 5 Cal 826.

The conviction of an accused in his absence is entirely illegal—Abdullah, 28 Cr L.J. 971, 105 I.C. 683, 26 P.L.R. 239, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 870

881. Conviction on plea:—Before a Judge convicts the accused on his plea, he ought to explain the charge to the accused and to satisfy himself by interrogations of the accused, if necessary, that he fully understands the responsibility which he assumes by making a plea of guilty. Having done so, the Judge is then in a position to exercise properly the discretion which the law allows and to put upon record the reasons which guide his discretion in either direction. The course which he intends to presume should not be left in doubt—Keshab Singh, 20 O.C. 136, 18 Cr.L.J. 742 (746). See also Nga Yua, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 49 (51), 12 Rang 616, 153 I.C. 390.

The plea of guilty is a plea to the charge and does not necessarily amount to a confession of all the facts alleged—Supdt. v. Jnanendra, 49 C.L.J. 432 (434). A plea of guilty is not a confession such as is dealt with in the Indian Evidence Act, in respect of relevance or irrelevance. It is a statement which, if accepted by the Court, amounts to a waiver on the part of the accused of trial in which alone a confession might be utilized in evidence—Shyama, 35 Cr.L.J. 1322 (1326), 151 I.C. 393, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 330, 1934 Cr.C. 722.

Where an accused person pleads guilty to the specific offence with which he is charged, he cannot on such plea be convicted of an offence other than that specifically charged—Anonymous, 2 Weir 335. Thus, where the prisoner has pleaded guilty to the offence of murder, he can not be convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Watu, 2 S.L.R. 58, 10 Cr.L.J. 5. Where the accused pleaded guilty to a charge of culpable homicide, he could not be convicted of the offence of grievous hurt for which he was not tried—Raghu, Ratanlal 413.

Conviction discretionary.—It is discretionary with the Sessions Judge to accept or not the plea of guilty. He may or may not convict the accused on such plea. It is open to the Judge to proceed to try the accused, to go into the evidence and leave the case to the jury, despite a plea of guilty—Anonymous, 2 Weir 335; Shanker, 24 A.L.J. 318, 27 Cr.L.J. 449; Gobadur, 13 W.R. 55 (56); Chinna, 23 Mad. 151; Kesho Singh, 20 O.C. 136, 18 Cr.L.J. 742 (745); Hasaruddin, 30 Cr.L.J. 508, 115 I.C. 582, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 775, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 406. Where there are several co-accused who are to be tried jointly, and one accused has pleaded guilty, the Judge has a discretion to decide either that the accused be convicted on such plea or that he should be put on his trial in spite of his plea of guilty. The proper procedure to follow in such a case is, that if the Judge convicts the accused on the plea of guilty, he should be removed from the dock, in which case he can be called as a witness against the other accused; or that the Judge should put it on his record that he decides to put the accused on his trial in spite of his plea of guilty—Kesho Singh, 20 O.C. 136, 18 Cr.L.J. 742 (746); Chinna, 23 Mad. 151.

Where the accused has pleaded guilty to one offence (culpable homicide not amounting to murder on grave and sudden provocation) but there is clear prima facie evidence of a different offence (murder) the Judge ought not to convict the accused on his plea, but should proceed to try the case—Malhari, Ratanlal 410.

A plea of guilty should not be accepted in capital offences. It is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty in a case where the natural sequence would be a sentence of death—Chinia, 8 Bom.L.R. 240, 3 Cr.L.J. 337; Pala Singh, 1905 P.R. 54; Laxmya, 19 Bom.L.R. 356. In a case of murder, it has long been the practice of the Court not to accept the plea of guilty, for murder is a mixed question of fact and law, and requires a certain intention or certain knowledge. Unless the Court is perfectly satisfied that the accused knew exactly what was implied by his plea of guilty, and the effect of such plea, the case should be regularly tried—Chinia, supra; Dalli, 20 A.L.J. 326, 23 Cr.L.J. 283, 66 I.C. 427; Lahari, 26 Cr.L.J. 1316, 89 I.C. 260, 23 A.L.J. 587, A.I.R. 1925 All. 647; Achar, 36 Cr.L.J. 324, 153 I.C. 288, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 204, 1934 Cr.C. 1410; Hasaruddin, 30 Cr.L.J. 508, 115 I.C. 582, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 775, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 406; Sukha, 20 A.L.J. 669; Bhadu, 19 All. 119. If the accused pleads guilty to a charge of murder, the Court should not accept the plea without examining the accused in order to find out whether he knows what exactly he is pleading to, and it is extremely desirable that sufficient evidence should be recorded by the Judge so that he may have something before him from which he can ascertain whether the plea is genuine and bona fide and whether any extenuating circumstances exist—Kessim, 17 S.L.R. 268, 26 Cr.L.J. 177 (178). The Nagpur Court holds that it is not illegal to convict in a murder case on a plea of guilty, and in each case the circumstances must be examined to see whether the plea of guilty is one which should have been acted on. Where the accused is represented by a pleader, and a trial is not claimed, and the accused's answer amounts to a plea of guilty, it is quite legal to convict him on that plea—Manjoo, 21 Cr.L.J. 570 (Nag.).

The expression by the Court in sec. 271 and a "Court of Session" in sec. 412 obviously mean the "Judge" only, who, in his discretion, may convict. Once he has exercised his discretion under sec. 271 (2) no consideration can be adduced to show that discretion was not properly exercised so as to affect the provisions of sec. 412—Shyama, 35 Cr.L.J. 1322 (1325), 151 I.C. 393, A I R. 1934 Pat. 330, 1934 Cr.C. 722.

882. Charge for one offence, conviction on plea for another:—It is illegal to convict a person of an offence upon his own plea, when there is no formal charge in respect of that offence. Thus, where an accused person was charged with the offence of murder, and the charge was not proved, but the Court convicted her of the offence of concealment of birth which, it considered, was admitted by her in her examination by the Court, it was held that such conviction was illegal. A charge of concealment of birth should have been framed and the accused tried thereon—Sarwel, Ratanlal 386

Postponement of conviction:—Where an accused person pleads guilty, the Court should record his confession and forthwith convict him thereon. If there are other persons being tried with him, it is illegal for the Court to postpone his conviction, in order that he may technically be said to be tried jointly for the same offence with the other co-accused, and so that any statement in the nature of a confession he may have made, may be considered against the co-accused—Kheraj, 30 All 540; Surjan, 12 A.L.J. 1239, 16 Cr.L.J. 103; Sukdeb Tewari, 13 C.W.N. 552, 9 C.L.J. 291, 10 Cr.L.J. 484 (485), Mahammad Yusuf, 32 Cr.L.J. 667, 131 I.C. 142, 58 Cal. 1214, 35 C.W.N. 490, A I R. 1931 Cal. 341, 1931 Cr.C. 403. It is always desirable to pass sentence completely, before calling one accused in a joint trial to give evidence against his co-accused—Mahammad Yusuf, supra. After an accused pleaded guilty, the trial may be continued against the other accused persons without convicting him, when it is thought necessary to ascertain the part taken by him in order to assess the punishment; but it is unfair to defer his conviction solely with the view of having his confession considered against those accused persons—Paltua, 23 All 53. See also Amduniyan Guljar Patel v Emb, A I R 1937 Nag. 17 (23), 11 R 1937 Nag. 315, 38 Cr.L.J. 237, 168 I.C. 582 (F.B.).

272. If the accused refuses to, or does not, plead, or if Refusal to plead or he claims to be tried, the Court shall claim to be tried. proceed to choose jurors or assessors as hereinafter directed and to try the case:

Provided that, subject to the right of objection hereinafter mentioned, the same jury may try, Trial by same jury or assessors of several offenders in succession. or the same assessors may aid in the trial of, as many accused persons successively as the Court thinks fit.

There is an obvious omission in this section; it does not provide for the case where the Judge does not convict the accused on his plea of guilty under section 271 (2). It is suggested that the words "or if the Court does not convict him on his plea of guilty under sub-section (2) of the preceding section" should be added to the second line of this section, just as similar words have been added in sec. 244 (1). Vide Muhammad Yusuf, 35 Cr.L.J. 667 (669), 131 I.C. 142, 58 Cal. 1214, 35 C.W.N. 490, A I R 1931 Cal. 341, 1931 Cr.C. 403, where it has been laid down that if the plea of guilty be not accepted there is no provision in the Code for proceeding with the trial, because sec. 272 does not apply when the accused has pleaded guilty.

883. 'If the accused refuses to or does not plead':—The accused cannot be called upon to plead 'not guilty'; such a plea is not recognised by the Code.

The accused may either claim to be tried, or refuse to plead (i.e., remain silent) which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried—Nirmal Kanta, 41 Cal. 1072; Muhammad Yusuf, supra. If he pleads 'not guilty' the Judge will proceed to try him.

"Same jury may try several persons successively" :—But the term 'successively' is understood that one trial is to follow the other, i.e., on the conclusion of one trial the same jury may proceed to try the accused in the next case. The law does not contemplate that the two trials shall be conducted piece-meal in such a manner that at their conclusion the jury shall be called upon to decide at one and the same time upon two distinct classes of evidence, which, though they may have points in common, require careful discrimination as bearing upon the guilt or innocence of two sets of accused. Such a procedure would put the jury in an embarrassing position—Hussain, 6 Cal. 96. There is no provision for trying two cases, specially two cross-cases, being heard at the same time before the same jurors. The proper procedure is to try the one case immediately after the termination of the other, and if there is no objection to the jury by either of the parties, the second case may be tried by the same jurors who tried the first case—Rajatullya v. Khudia, 54 C.L.J. 146, 32 Cr.L.J. 1233, 1931 Cr.C. 989, 134 I.C. 896, 32 Cr.L.J. 1233, 54 C.L.J. 146, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 709. Where the law requires the trial of two accused to be separate, the accused must be tried separately, but it is not necessary that the two trials should be held by separate juries. The accused in the second case is not entitled as of right to be tried by a separate jury; there is nothing illegal in the Judge hearing the second case with the same jury who tried the first case. Such a procedure is provided by the proviso to sec. 272. No doubt the accused in the second case can ask for a second jury, and it would be in the discretion of the Judge to grant or refuse such application. Prima facie there would seem to be no more reason why a jury should not try a second case than there is reason why a Sessions Judge should not try two cross-cases of riot—Rafuzzaman v. Chhotey Lal, 48 All. 325, 24 A.L.J. 472, 27 Cr.L.J. 445. See also Notes in para 830A.

273. (1) In trials before the High Court, when it appears Entry on unsustainable to the High Court, at any time before charges. the commencement of the trial of the person charged, that any charge or any portion thereof is clearly unsustainable, the Judge may make on the charge an entry to that effect.

(2) Such entry shall have the effect of staying proceedings upon the charge or portion of the charge, as Effect of entry. the case may be.

884. If the Court is clearly of opinion that no offence has been made out, it is the duty of the Court to stay the proceedings by making an entry as contemplated by this section—Sukee, 21 Cal. 97.

Applications under this section should be disposed of by the High Court in its original criminal jurisdiction—Charoo Chunder, 9 Cal. 397.

- This section does not apply to cases of illegal commitment. It is only intended to provide short and effective way by which charges which have no merits may be disposed of—Girish Chunder, 34 C.W.N. 13 (29), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 756, 123 I.C. 433, 1929 Cr.C. 468 (F.B.).

Under the Criminal Procedure Code a Court of Sessions has not the power to withdraw a case from the jury on any ground whatsoever—Jogeshwar, 5 C.W.N. 411 (413). See also Maroti, A.I.R. 1935 Nag 202, 36 Cr.L.J. 1389, 158 I.C. 537, 18 N.L.J. 227, 1935 Cr.C. 1099.

C.—Choosing a Jury.

274. (1) In trials before the High Court
 Number of jury. the jury shall consist of nine persons.

(2) In trials by jury before the Court of Session the jury shall consist of such uneven number, not being less than five or more than nine, as the Provincial Government, by order applicable to any particular district or to any particular class of offences in that district, may direct:

Provided that, where any accused person is charged with an offence punishable with death, the jury shall consist of not less than seven persons and, if practicable, of nine persons.

Amendment:—The word 'five' has been substituted for 'three' and the proviso has been added by sec. 13 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923. "In the Sessions Court the number should be any uneven number from five to nine which the Local Government may select. Thus, five should be substituted for three in section 274, as the minimum number of jury in a Session Court. In murder cases, before the Sessions Court, we are of opinion that the number of jury should if practicable be nine"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, para 25

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937

884A. Number of jurors:—The number fixed by the Local Government must be strictly adhered to. Where the Local Government has fixed the number at five, a trial by a jury consisting of seven members is ultra vires—Booth, 26 All 211. But where no objection as to the number of jurors was raised at the trial, but was raised for the first time at the hearing of the appeal before the High Court, and there was no allegation that the accused were prejudiced in any way, the High Court refused to entertain the objection—Bhajo, 57 Cal 1062, 34 CWN 106 (110); Supdt v Ajit, A.I.R. 1932 Cal 750, 1932 CrC 744, 33 CrLJ 869, 140 IC 18

Sections 274 and 326:—The proviso to sec. 274 lays down that if in the Court of Session the accused is charged with an offence punishable with death, the jury shall consist of not less than seven persons, and if practicable, of nine persons. In sec. 326 it is provided that the number of persons summoned to serve on the jury must not be less than double the number required for the trial. A large number of cases have recently cropped up in the Calcutta High Court as to the effect of these two sections read together, and the result of those decisions may be summed up as follows:—

(1) According to the proviso to sec. 274, in a trial of an offence punishable with death, the jury must consist of 9 persons; and before the case can be tried with a jury of 7 persons, it must be shewn that it was not practicable to have jury of 9 persons—Amir Khan, 33 CWN 1053 (1054), 31 CrLJ 425, 122 IC 557, Ind Rul. 1930 Cal 253, 51 CLJ 574. The Judge must primarily take into consideration the question whether it is or is not practicable to have a jury of nine persons. He must not assume that seven is the required number—Benozir, 34 CWN. 735 (736), 1930 CrC. 1116; Shakebali Sheikh, 58 Cal 1272, 35 CWN. 711 (715). Where there is nothing on the record to show otherwise, the High Court ought to proceed on the principle embodied or implied in the phrase "Omnia rite acta" that is to say, the High Court ought to proceed upon the assumption that the trial in the Court below took place in full accordance with the requirements of sec. 274, sub-sec. (2) and its proviso and that everything in connection with the empanelling of a jury was done in due form of law—Benal Pramanik, 39 CWN. 954 (958), dissenting from Shakebali's Case. But it cannot be said that it was impracticable to have a jury of 9 if an insufficient number of persons have been summoned (under sec. 326) from the jury list. Thus, where only 12 persons were summoned under sec. 326, of whom 8 persons appeared, and consequently 9 persons could not be chosen, and so 7 persons were chosen as jurors, held that the jury was not properly constituted, and the trial was illegal—Serajul Islam, 55 Cal. 794, 111 I.C. 735, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 645, 11 A.I.Cr.R. 66, 29 Cr.L.J. 927. So also, where out of the number summoned, only 7 jurors appeared, and all of them were empanelled, held that it was not a legally constituted jury—Shahebbali, supra.

(2) If it is practicable to empanel a jury of 9 persons, it is illegal to choose only 7. Thus, where 14 persons were summoned under sec. 326, of whom 11 attended, so that the Judge could have a jury of 9 persons, but he chose only 7, the jury was illegally constituted, and the trial must be set aside—Dwarika, 33 C.W.N. 692 (693). See also Supdt. v. Benozir Ahmed, 51 C.L.J. 578, 34 C.W.N. 735 where it did not appear anywhere that it was not practicable to have a jury of nine persons, or that the Judge ever took that question into consideration. But unless there is an indication on the face of the record itself or there is other material before the Court which leads to the conclusion that it was or might have been practicable to have the jury composed of nine jurors rather than seven, one must assume that it was not practicable to have nine jurors—Emp. v. Benat Paramanik, 39 C.W.N. 954, 62 Cal. 900, 36 Cr.L.J. 944, 8 R.C. 1, 156 I.C. 481, 1935 Cr.C. 630, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 407, following Damuliyia, 128 I.C. 808, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 261, 1932 Cr.C. 293, 32 Cr.L.J. 187, 34 C.W.N. 1127 and dissenting from Shaheb Ali, 135 I.C. 435, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 793, 33 Cr.L.J. 129, 58 Cal. 1272, 35 C.W.N. 711, 54 C.L.J. 307, 1931 Cr.C. 1057, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 115. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have, very recently, confirmed this view of the Calcutta High Court. In this connection Lord Wright, J., has observed: "There has been some difference of judicial opinion as to true effect of the sec. 274, but the more recent and, in Their Lordships' opinion, better, view is that adopted in Emperor v. Benat Paramanik, which is that if the Judge proceeds with seven jurors, it must be assumed in the absence of anything on the record to satisfy the Appeal Court that it was practicable to have more than seven jurors, that sec. 274 had been complied with"—Akbar v. King-Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 871 (873), 190 I.C. 233, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 176. This is, however, an obiter dictum.

Where the number of jurors present was eight, it cannot be held that it was the duty of the Judge to send his Court Officers to search for jurors in adjacent Sessions Court. In this case, which was one under sec. 302, I.P.C., read with sec. 114, I.P.C., the trial with seven jurors was held legal as there were not nine suitable persons present in Court and it was not practicable for the trial Judge to empanel nine jurors—Mukunda, 36 Cr.L.J. 803, 155 I.C. 599, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 10, 1934 Cr.C. 26, 61 Cal. 190. So also, where 14 persons were summoned, of whom 9 attended, but the Judge empanelled a jury of 7, the jury was not properly constituted and the trial was illegal—Amir Khan, 33 C.W.N. 1053 (1054), 51 C.L.J. 574, 31 Cr.L.J. 425, 122 I.C. 557.

(3) The provision in sec. 326 which speaks of summoning not less than double the number required is not mandatory. Therefore, in a trial of a murder case, which is to be tried by a jury of 9 persons, if 14 persons are summoned, and 9 attend, and the 9 persons are chosen as jurors, the trial is not vitiated. It is not necessary that 18 persons should be summoned under sec. 326—Erman Ali, 57 Cal. 1228, Ind. Rul. 1930 Cal. 860, 34 C.W.N. 296, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 212, 51 C.L.J. 171, 31 Cr.L.J. 536, 123 I.C. 664 (F.B.), overruling Munshi Tamizuddin, 33 C.W.N. 1054, where it was held that it was compulsory to summons 18 persons for the constitution of the jury. The Full Bench decision also overrules Amir Khan, 33 C.W.N. 1053, and Dwarika, 33 C.W.N. 692, so far as they lay down that 18 persons must be summoned under sec. 326. The above Full Bench case has been followed by the Patna High Court—Bihari Mahton, 10 Pat. 107, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 241, 131 I.C. 801, 12 Pat.L.T. 798, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 152, 1931 Cr.C. 392, 32 Cr.L.J. 797; and also by the Calcutta High Court in Mukunda, 36 Cr.L.J. 803, 155 I.C. 599, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 10, 1934 Cr.C. 26, 61 Cal. 190; and by the Allahabad High Court in Lala, AIR. 1933 All. 941 (945), 1933 A.L.J. 1446, 1933 Cr.C. 1561, 35 Cr.L.J. 668, 148 I.C. 339, 56 All. 210.

Where the trial of one of the accused is vitiated on account of non-compliance with the provisions of this section, the conviction of the other persons who were tried jointly with him should also be set aside—Shakebali, 58 Cal. 1272, 35 C.W.N. 711 (716), 1931 Cr.C. 1057, 54 C.L.J. 307, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 793; Benozir, 34 C.W.N. 735 (736), 51 C.L.R. 578.

275. (1) In a trial by jury before the High Court or Court of Session of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European or Indian British subject, a majority of the jury shall, if such person before the first juror is called and accepted so requires, consist, in the case of an European British subject, of persons who are Europeans or Americans and, in the case of an Indian British subject, of Indians.

(2) In any such trial by jury of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European (other than an European British subject) or an American, a majority of the jury shall, if practicable and if such European or American before the first juror is called and accepted so requires, consist of persons who are Europeans or Americans

This section has been redrafted by sec. 14 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923 Prior to the amendment, it stood as follows —

"In a trial by jury before the Court of Session of a person not being an European or an American, a majority of the jury shall, if he so desires, consist of persons who are neither Europeans nor Americans"

The reason of the amendment has been thus stated.—"The most difficult question for the Committee to decide is that of trial by the jury of European British subjects. This is the point on which non-official European opinion is most emphatic, namely that it is essential that a mixed jury should remain both in the High Court and in the Sessions Court in all cases which are to be tried by jury under our proposals, subject however, to certain provisions and safeguards, namely —The same law as to the composition of the jury shall apply to Indians as to Europeans, that is to say, the majority of the jury, if an Indian accused so desires, shall consist of persons who are not Europeans or Americans. This is already the law in Sessions Court, and section 275 should be so amended as to make it apply to the High Court also"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, para. 25.

835. This section must be read as controlled by the provisions of section 528B. That section lays down that if a person does not claim to be dealt with as an Indian subject before the committing Magistrate, he shall not assert the claim at any subsequent stage of the case. It follows, therefore, that if an Indian subject does not claim to be dealt with as such before the committing Presidency Magistrate, he will not be entitled to claim before the High Court, to be tried by a jury the majority of which must be Indians, according to the provisions of section 275—Harendra, 51 Cal. 980 (991), 29 C.W.N. 384, 26 Cr.L.J. 385; Soomar Abdulla, 29 Cr.L.J. 721, 110 I.C. 577, 22 S.L.R. 472, A.I.R. 1929 Sind 23. See also H. W. Scott, 35 Cr.L.J. 595, 154 I.C. 837, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 67, 13 Rang. 104, 1935 Cr.C. 167 (F.B.). The same result will happen if the claim to be dealt with as an Indian subject is made before the Presidency Magistrate but is rejected by him—Harendra, 51 Cal. 980 (990), 29 C.W.N. 384, 26 Cr.L.J. 385.

A Native Christian is not entitled to say that he must be tried by a Christian jury. But he can, like any other accused, object to the jurors individually—Bharat Chunder, 1 W.R. 2.

In a case of abduction of a Hindu girl by Muhammadans the law does not provide for a mixed jury of Hindus and Muhammadans—Jessarai, 26 Cr.L.J. 1009 (1010), 87 I.C. 833, 29 C.W.N. 526, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 729.

An Anglo-Indian is not a European within the meaning of this section. Where, therefore, he sat as one of the European jurors required in accordance with the provisions of this section, the trial was not legally constituted and the conviction was illegal—Guthrie, 35 Cr.L.J. 827, 148 I.C. 933, 15 P.L.T. 82, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 200, 1934 Cr.C. 384.

276. The jurors shall be chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act as such in such manner as the High Court may from time to time by rule direct:

Jurors to be chosen by lot.

Provided that—first, pending the issue under this section of rules for any Court, the practice now prevailing in such Court in respect to the choosing of jurors shall be followed;

Existing practice maintained;

secondly, in case of a deficiency of persons summoned, the number of jurors required may, with the leave of the Court, be chosen from such other persons as may be present;

persons not summoned when eligible; thirdly, in a trial before any High Court in the town which is the usual place of sitting of such High Court, trials before special jurors.

- (a) if the accused person is charged with having committed an offence punishable with death, or
- (b) if in any other case a Judge of the High Court so directs, the jurors shall be chosen from the special jury list hereinafter prescribed; and fourthly, in any district for which the Provincial Government has declared that the trial of certain offences may be by special jury, the jurors shall, in any case in which the Judge so directs, be chosen from the special jury list prescribed in section 325.

Change:—In the third proviso, the words “in a trial...sitting of such High Court” have been substituted for the words “in the Presidency towns,” by sec. 77 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The object of this amendment is to include those High Courts which are not situated in Presidency Towns, e.g., the High Courts at Allahabad, Lahore, Patna, Rangoon. Similar amendments have been made in sections 315 and 316.

The words “Provincial Government” have been substituted for “Local Government” in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

886. ‘Chosen by lot’:—The object of the Legislature in choosing a jury by lot is to render impossible any intentional selection of jurors to try a particular case, and the accused is entitled to a strict observance of the provisions contained in this section and sec. 279. Irregularities in choosing the jury by lot affect the constitution of the Court, and cannot be cured by sec. 537—Brojendra, 7 C.W.N. 188; Bradshaw, 33 All. 385, 12 Cr.L.J. 46; Suba v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Cal 389, 170 I.C. 237, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 482, 38 Cr.L.J. 870, 10 R.C. 123; Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (220), 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 184 I.C. 474. In Jhubboo, 8 Cal. 739 and Anipe Pelladu, 1917 M.W.N. 1, 18 Cr.L.J. 15 (16), however, where the Judge himself selected the jurors instead of choosing them by lot, it was held that such a procedure was merely irregular and the verdict would not be interfered with if no prejudice was caused to the accused, and no objection was taken by him to such a procedure at the trial. See also Ram Adhin, 30 Cr.L.J. 384, 114 I.C. 814, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 154, 6 O.W.N. 97, Ind. Rul. 1929 Oudh 206 and Akbar Ali, 28 Cr.L.J. 881, 8 P.L.T. 800, 7 Pat. 61, 104 I.C. 897, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 1.

The persons who are to be chosen by lot ought to be selected from the entire number of persons summoned to act as jurors, and the selection ought to be made from one box—Vithaldas, 1 Bom. 462. Where one of the Jurymen had not been summoned and was not entitled to sit on the Jury, the Court was not properly constituted and the verdict of the Jury should be treated as a nullity. The verdict, being in accordance with the facts of the case, was however, not set aside—Irjan, 28 Cr.L.J. 874, 104 I.C. 714, 46 C.L.J. 241, A.I.R. 1927 Cal 820.

Second proviso :—The second proviso provides that in case of a deficiency of persons summoned, the number of the jurors required, may, with the leave of the Court, be chosen from such other persons as may be present. Where the Judge acts under this proviso and chooses some jurors from the persons present in Court, it is not necessary for him to choose them by lot. The method of choosing by lot applies only to persons summoned as jurymen and not to persons chosen under the second proviso. This is evident from sec. 279 (2)—Anipe Pelladu, 1917 M.W.N. 1, 18 Cr.L.J. 15 (16). The words "the jurors shall be chosen by lot" occurring in the first para are not applicable to the second proviso. This proviso does not require that in case of deficiency in the number of persons summoned to act as jurors, the deficient jurors (chosen from bystanders) should be chosen by lot or from among persons who are on the jury list—Muchu Khan, 29 C.W.N. 652, 26 Cr.L.J. 819. If the Judge is unable to obtain a panel in the manner provided by the second proviso, his duty is to postpone the trial and to summon jurors under the provisions of sec. 326 (2)—Brojendra, 7 C.W.N. 188.

The term "jurors" in this clause is a general term meaning both common and special jurors. This clause is intended to meet an emergency not only in the case of common jurors, but also in the case of special jurors—Shahebal, 58 Cal. 1272, 35 C.W.N. 711 (714), 1931 Cr.C. 1057, 54 C.L.J. 307, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 793, Manir, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 638, 60 Cal. 725, 34 Cr.L.J. 1098, 145 I.C. 889, 1933 Cr.C. 1037; Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (219), 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 184 I.C. 474.

The second proviso lays down that in the case of a deficiency of persons summoned the number of jurors may be chosen from such other persons as may be present. It does not require that those persons should be on the jury list at all. The Emperor v. Latifun Bibi, Jury Reference No. 13 of 1939, decided by Henderson and Latifur Rahman, JJ. on 1st June 1939, referring to Shahebal, supra (Unreported Calcutta High Court case.)

The second proviso distinctly lays down that in case of deficiency of persons summoned, other persons must be added to fill up the deficiency. When out of 12 jurors summoned in a case only five attended and those five persons were empanelled as jurors and the Court proceeded to hear and decide the case, held, that the provisions of sec. 276 were not complied with and the trial was vitiated. The proper course for the Judge to follow was to choose some other persons, who were present, as jurors, to add their names to those of the jurors who attended, and from the whole body to choose the necessary quorum by lot to act as the jury in the case—Bholanath, 41 C.L.J. 541, 23 Cr.L.J. 194; Roshan Ali, 31 C.W.N. 1102 (1107), 28 Cr.L.J. 889; Bradshaw, 33 All. 385;

Tajali, 7 Pat. 50, 28 Cr.L.J. 843 (846). The word 'required' in the second proviso does not mean 'required to constitute the quorum for a jury' but it means 'required to make up the minimum number of jurors summoned under sec. 326 to attend'—Roshan Ali, supra.

But a contrary view has been taken in the following cases. Thus, where of the persons summoned to act as jurors only five persons appeared and those five persons were appointed jurors, it was held that the procedure followed was not illegal and the trial was not vitiated. It was further held that the provisions of choosing jurors by lot in the first para of this section is applicable only when the persons summoned to act as jurors are present in such number as to make it possible to choose them by lot, but when such number is not present, the Judge is to take the help of the persons present in Court to form the jury, according to the second proviso, without any further drawing of lots. The words "deficiency" and "number of jurors required" in the second proviso mean deficiency in the number of jurors required to make up the jury and not to make up a sufficient number for the purpose of selection by lot—Rahamat, 54 Cal 1026, 31 C.W.N. 711 (715) (dissenting from Bholanath, supra). The same view has been taken by the Patna High Court in Akbar Ali, 7 Pat. 61, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 1, 104 I.C. 897, 8 P.L.T. 800, 28 Cr.L.J. 881 (882) (following Muchu Khan, 29 C.W.N. 652, and dissenting from Bholanath, supra).

In the Full Bench case of Kedar Nath Mahato, 55 Cal. 371, 32 C.W.N. 221, 29 Cr.L.J. 437, the view taken in Rahamat, supra, has been approved, and the contrary view taken in Bholanath, 44 C.L.J. 511, 28 Cr.L.J. 194, and Roshan Ali, 31 C.W.N. 1102, 28 Cr.L.J. 889 disapproved. The Allahabad High Court has also followed the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Kedar Nath Mahato's case—Lala, A.I.R. 1933 All. 941, 1933 A.L.J. 1446, 1933 Cr.C. 156, 35 Cr.L.J. 668, 148 I.C. 339. See also Panch, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 178, 34 C.W.N. 1154, 128 I.C. 811, 32 Cr.L.J. 190, 1931 Cr.C. 242 (F.B.).

There is no provision for requisition of jurors from a local school or from anywhere else. The selection will have to be made from jurors attending in obedience to summons and chosen in the manner provided by this section or if there is no such other juror present then any other person present in the Court, whose name is on the list of jurors or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury may be selected—Abedali Fakir, 121 I.C. 560, 31 Cr.L.J. 281, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 728, 56 Cal. 835, 1929 Cr.C. 364, 33 C.W.N. 722; Muhammad Sagiruddin, 30 Cr.L.J. 120, 113 I.C. 280, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 551, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 123; Sadarat, 30 Cr.L.J. 136, 113 I.C. 328, 48 C.L.J. 479, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 125. Requisition of persons from outside the Court to make up the deficiency in the number of jurors to be empanelled is not proper, and as this is an irregularity which affects the constitution of the Court, there must be a retrial—Suba v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 389, 170 I.C. 237, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 482, 38 Cr.L.J. 870, 10 R.C. 123. Persons even qualified cannot be called from outside the precincts of the Court—Shevaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (219), 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 184 I.C. 474. The words "persons present" do not necessarily mean persons who are present within the four walls of the room; but they include persons who are within precincts of the Court building either because they have been summoned for other cases or by mere chance—Israel, 59 Cal. 1123, 36 C.W.N. 377, 33 Cr.L.J. 694. But this section does not cast a duty upon the trial Judge to send his Court Officers to adjacent Sessions Court to find out men to serve Jurors in his Court—Mukunda, 36 Cr.L.J. 803, 155 I.C. 599, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 10, 1934 Cr.C. 26, 61 Cal. 190. Where one of the jurors selected intimated to the Court that he had heard something about the case and he was discharged and the Sessions Judge summoned certain gentlemen living in the locality and selected another juror by lot to fill the vacancy, held that the procedure was not wrong and that there was no reason to interfere with the verdict of the jury as it was not even contended that any prejudice was caused to the accused—Kakia Bibi, 40 C.W.N. 1411.

A deficiency is only apparent after the names of all those summoned and present have been exhausted by the chances of lottery and challenge and secs. 276 and 279 do not appear to contemplate that a deficiency shall be recognized and then obviated by the summoning of fresh jurors, so that the jury can be summoned and chosen in three instalments—Shewaram v. Emp., A I R 1939 Sind 209 (219), 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 184 I.C. 474.

Where five jurors are required the Court shall summon not less than ten, under sec. 326 (1), Cr. P. C.; if more than 5 attend, 5 jurors shall be chosen by lot from those attending under sec. 276, Cr. P. C.; if only 5 attend those 5 shall form the jury (unless an objection is taken to any one of them) as there is no reason why the drawing of lot should be insisted upon when only the required number is present: see Rahamat, supra. If less than the requisite number is present, then the deficiency may be made up by choosing jurors from such other persons as may be present in Court under the second proviso to sec. 276, Cr. P. C. The name of each juror is then called out under sec. 277, Cr. P. C., and the accused is asked if he objects to be tried by such juror. The objections are then decided under sec. 278, Cr. P. C., and under sec. 279 (1), Cr. P. C., the decision is final. If an objection is allowed, the place of such juror shall be supplied by any other juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen in the manner provided by sec. 276, Cr. P. C., or if there is no such other juror present, then by any other person present in the Court whose name is on the list of jurors or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury—Surajpalsingh, 39 Cr.L.J. 818 (826), I.L.R 1938 Nag 516, 176 I.C. 853, 11 R.N. 81, 1938 N.L.J. 185, A I R 1938 Nag. 328.

Third proviso—In the absence of words in the context to the contrary, "chosen" in Proviso 3 and also in Proviso 4 must mean chosen by lot, as in the substantive part of the section, and that this is the meaning; and the jurors must be summoned and chosen by lot in such manner as the High Court by rules directs—Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R 1939 Sind 209 (219), 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 184 I.C. 474.

Proviso 3 to sec. 276, Cr. P. C., so far as the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court is concerned, now refers to that Court in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, and sec. 276 in 266, Cr. P. C., must be read as referring to the section itself and not to the Provisos. It matters not that this jurisdiction is exercised, owing to the peculiar constitution of that Court through a Sessions Court. In a matter which affects the summoning and empanelling of a jury the procedure of a High Court should be followed by that Court exercising its original criminal jurisdiction—Shewaram v. Emp., supra.

886A. Allahabad High Court Rules:—For rules made by the Allahabad High Court, see United Provinces and Oudh Gazette, 1902, Pt II, p. 539.

Calcutta High Court Rules:—In order to nominate a jury for the trial of any prisoner, or other persons to be tried by jury, the Sessions Judge shall cause to be put together, in one box, cards or pieces of paper containing the names of all the persons summoned to attend, except such of the said persons as shall have been excused by the Sessions Judge from serving on that day in consequence of their having served as jurors on the previous day, or for any other cause. Such cards or pieces of paper shall be, as nearly as may be, of equal size, and each shall bear the name of one person summoned to attend. The Sessions Judge shall then, in open Court, draw, or cause to be drawn, out of the said box, one after another, as many of the said cards or pieces of paper as may represent the number of jurors required to try the case. As the name of each juror is drawn it shall be called aloud and upon the juror appearing the prisoner or person to be tried shall be asked if he objects to be tried by such juror. If any of the jurors whose names shall be so drawn shall not appear, or if any be objected to, and the objection be allowed, then such further number shall be drawn as may be necessary to complete the number of jurors required for the case. [Vide page 19, Rule 51, of the General Rules and Circular Orders of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, Appellate Side (Criminal), Vol. I.]

Madras High Court Rules:—See High Court Proceedings, No 1353, dated 11th April, 1883.

Patna High Court Rules:—The rule made by the High Court under this section directs that the names of all the persons summoned to attend, except such as have been excused from attendance by the Sessions Judge, shall be put into a box, and in open Court as many names as are required to make up the Jury shall be drawn out one after another and if any of the Jurors whose names shall be so drawn shall not appear, or if any be objected to and the objection be allowed, then such further number shall be drawn as may be necessary to complete the number of Jurors required for the case—Akbar Ali, 28 Cr.L.J. 881 (885), 104 I.C. 897, 8 P.L.T. 800, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 1, 7 Pat. 61.

277. (1) As each juror is chosen, his name shall be called aloud, and, upon his appearance, the accused shall be asked if he objects to be tried by such juror.

Names of jurors to be called.

(2) Objection may then be taken to such juror by the accused or by the prosecutor, and the grounds of objection shall be stated:

Objection to jurors.

Provided that, in the High Court, objections without grounds stated shall be allowed to the number of eight on behalf of the Crown and eight on behalf of the person or all the persons charged.

Objection without grounds stated.

886B. Where the Judge, instead of hearing and deciding objections, proceeded to exempt some of the persons present merely on their own representations, the procedure was irregular and the irregularity could not be cured by sec. 537—Brojendra, 7 C.W.N. 188.

Where the accused was not given an opportunity of challenging the jurors and stated that he would have objected to being tried by Mahomedan jurors, held that the omission was doubtless a serious one but not more serious than that cured by sec. 536 (2) and did not invalidate the conviction—Illahi Bux, 13 C.W.N. cxi

278. Any objection taken to a juror on any of the following grounds, if made out to the satisfaction of the Court, shall be allowed:—

Grounds of objection.

- (a) some presumed or actual partiality in the juror;
- (b) some personal grounds, such as alienage, deficiency in the qualification required by any law or rule having the force of law for the time being in force, or being under the age of twenty-one or above the age of sixty years;
- (c) his having by habit or religious vows relinquished all care of worldly affairs;
- (d) his holding any office in or under the Court;
- (e) his executing any duties of police or being entrusted with police duties;
- (f) his having been convicted of any offence which in the opinion of the Court renders him unfit to serve on the jury;
- (g) his inability to understand the language in which the evidence is given, or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted;
- (h) any other circumstance which, in the opinion of the Court, renders him improper as a juror.

886C. Clause (a):—An objection to a juror on the ground that there was a litigation pending between the accused's master and the juror's principal must be allowed—Tajoh, 7 Pat 50, 28 Cr.L.J. 843 (844), 101 I.C. 459, A.I.R. 1928 Pat 31

Clause (d):—The fact that a person is a clerk in the office of the Magistrate of the district is not sufficient to disqualify him from sitting as a juror—Rochia, 7 Cal. 42, 8 C.L.R. 273.

Clause (g):—Where one of the seven jurors did not understand English, the language in which some of the evidence appears to have been given and in which the addresses of Counsel were made and the charge of the Sessions Judge was delivered, the conviction cannot stand. According to ordinary procedure in criminal trials the accused has a right of challenge either peremptory, or for cause; and it may very well be that knowing the alleged defect he stands by and takes his chance of a verdict he is precluded from thereafter taking the objection. But if the cause of objection is in fact unknown to him, there appears to be no reason why the Court in a proper case should not give effect to it—Ras Behari, 34 Cr.L.J. 843, 144 I.C. 911, 1933 A.L.J. 893, A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 208, 14 P.L.T. 641, 65 M.L.J. 513, 38 M.L.W. 646, 1933 Cr.C. 1306, 1933 M.W.N. 1025, 35 Bom.L.R. 1087, 12 Pat. 811, 58 C.L.J. 300, 38 C.W.N. 11 (P.C.).

Where the language of the Court is Hindi and it has never been doubted that Hindi knowing jurors and assessors are competent to take part in the trial of cases in which the evidence, arguments and summing-up are given in Hindi, the fact that evidence is taken down in English would not make any difference. There is a provision in sec. 282, Cr. P. C., for the case in which in the course of a trial it appears that any juror is unable to understand the language in which evidence is given, or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted; in such a case a new juror has to be added, or the jury has to be discharged and the trial must commence anew. There is no similar provision with regard to assessors; but assuming that the principle applies, the fact that an assessor does not understand English will not invalidate a trial unless there had been a failure to interpret in Hindi evidence which had been given in English. Where some of the documents are in English, it may be less convenient to have an assessor who does not know the language of the documents thereby necessitating loss of time in interpreting, etc., but the matter does not go to the competency of the assessor or the lawful constitution of the Court—Ram Babu Jadav v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 302 (305), 173 I.C. 418, 4 B.R. 266, 10 R.P. 402, 18 P.L.T. 964, A.I.R. 1938 Pat 60, distinguishing Ras Behari, supra.

Clause (h):—If there are certain documents written in English, and the identity of the handwriting is in issue, objection may be taken to a juryman who does not understand English, and the Court may choose only such jurors as are able to read English—Mohiuddin, 51 C.L.J. 352, 1930 Cr.C. 745 (748), 32 Cr.L.J. 455, 129 I.C. 834. If the accused are all Muhammadans charged with the abduction of a Hindu girl, and the jurors are all Hindus, the accused cannot object on the ground that they will not get a fair trial from such jurors, and cannot claim a mixed jury consisting of Hindus and Muhammadans—Jessarai, 29 C.W.N. 526, 26 Cr.L.J. 1009 (1010), 87 I.C. 833, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 729. In this case, it has further been held that the objection has certainly some force, and if a petition for mixed jury would have been made before the jurors were summoned, the Judge might have in his discretion made arrangements for a mixed panel—Ibid. See 40 C.W.N. cix in this connection.

Where an objection was taken, presumably on behalf of the accused, that a person was not a European British subject and was so not competent to sit as a juror but the Judge after examining him came to the conclusion that he was a European British subject, the objection that he was not, was an objection under s.c. 278, Cr. P. C., either under cl. (b) or cl. (h), and the decision of the Judge on the point was final under sec. 279 (1), Cr. P. Code—Surajpalsingh, 39 Cr.L.J. 818 (826), 11 L.R. 1938 Nag 516, 176 I.C. 853, 11 R.N. 81, 1938 N.L.J. 185, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 328.

279. (1) Every objection taken to a juror shall be decided by the Court, and such decision shall be recorded and be final.

Decision of objection.

(2) If the objection is allowed, the place of such juror shall be supplied by any other juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen in manner provided by section 276, or if there is no such other juror present, then by any other person present in the Court whose name is on the list of jurors, or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury:

Provided that no objection to such juror or other person is taken under section 278 and allowed.

887. Under sub-section (1) the trial Judge has a wide discretion in the matter of accepting or overruling objections to jurors, and his decision is final—Muchu Khan, 29 C.W.N. 652, 86 I.C. 457, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 798, 26 Cr.L.J. 819. If the Court decides that no presumed or actual partiality in the juror has been made out, that decision is absolutely final and cannot be challenged in appeal. If, however, a Court were to find that some presumed or actual partiality in the juror had been made out, but in spite of this finding were to overrule the objection, the decision of the Court overruling the objection might perhaps be challenged in appeal—Syed Yawar Bakht v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 474 (477), A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 277 (279), 41 Cr.L.J. 719, 189 I.C. 173, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 531, 71 Cr.L.J. 181.

It is provided in clause (2) that the place of a juror may be taken by any other person present in Court whose name is on the list of jurors or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury. This shows that the Legislature contemplated the possibility of a person not in the jury list being chosen to serve on the jury in case of an emergency—Muchu Khan, supra. Under clause (2) the Court may allow some non-summoned persons present in Court to serve on the jury, where by reason of challenges or other causes such as some of them being excused, no summoned jury is left to take the place of the last challenged juror. In such an eventuality some other person present in Court may be empanelled. But this is to take place only in the exceptional conditions stated and in emergent circumstances—Roshan Ali, 31 C.W.N. 1102 (1107), 28 Cr.L.J. 889, 104 I.C. 905. This clause lays down that the place of a juror against whom objection has been allowed may be supplied by a juror attending in obedience to summons and chosen in the manner provided by sec. 276 and failing him, by any other person present in Court whose name is on the list of jurors or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury. But the vacancy cannot be filled up by a person who is then not present in Court, by requisitioning him from outside the Court, even though his name is on the special jurors' list—Abedali, 56 Cal. 835, 33 C.W.N. 722, 1929 Cr.C. 364, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 728, 121 I.C. 560, 31 Cr.L.J. 281; Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (220), 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 184 I.C. 474.

280. (1) Where the jurors have been chosen, they shall appoint one of their number to be foreman.

Foreman of jury.

(2) The foreman shall preside in the debates of the jury, deliver the verdict of the jury, and ask any information from the Court that is required by the jury or any of the jurors.

(3) If a majority of the jury do not, within such time as the Judge thinks reasonable, agree in the appointment of a foreman, he shall be appointed by the Court.

281. When the foreman has been appointed, the jurors shall be sworn under the Indian Oaths Act, 1873.

Swearing of jurors.

282. (1) If, in the course of a trial by jury at any time before the return of the verdict, any juror, from any sufficient cause, is prevented from attending throughout the trial, or if any juror absents himself and it is not practicable to enforce his attendance, or if it appears that any juror is unable to understand the language in which the evidence is given or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted, a new juror shall be added, or the jury shall be discharged and a new jury chosen.

Procedure when juror ceases to attend, etc.

(2) In each of such cases the trial shall commence anew.

888. Scope of the section:—The Legislature intended to limit this section to cases where a jury had been properly empanelled at the outset and one or more of those casualties which are bound to occur at some time in human lives has in fact occurred. Sub-section (2) of this section also appears to contemplate the addition of a juror after the trial of the case has begun and not before—Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (220), 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 184 I.C. 474. When the trial of the case has not begun, sec. 276, Proviso 2, would apply—Ibid.

"Unable to understand language" :—Where a juror was deaf and blind, he was held to be 'unable to understand the language' of the trial, and was discharged, and the case was tried de novo—Virasami, 19 Mad. 375. Where one of the seven jurors did not understand English, the language in which some of the evidence appears to have been given and in which the addresses of Counsel were made and the charge of Sessions Judge was delivered, the trial was a mistrial and the convictions could not be sustained. The view that no evidence is admissible after verdict to establish the inability of a juror to understand the proceedings, is erroneous—Ras Behari Lal, 34 Cr.L.J. 843, 144 I.C. 911, 1933 A.L.J. 893, A.I.R. 1933 (P.C.) 208, 38 C.W.N. 11, 58 C.L.J. 300, 12 Pat. 811, 1933 M.W.N. 1025, 1933 Cr.C. 1306, 33 M.L.W. 646, 65 M.L.J. 513 (P.C.).

Illness of juror :—Where a juror is prevented from attending throughout the trial by illness, the Judge has a discretion under this section either to postpone the trial to a date on which the juror would be able to attend, or to discharge the jury, or to have another juror. If a juror is going to be able to attend in a very short time, it is a wrong exercise of discretion to discharge the jury—Manmotha, 31 C.W.N. 144, 28 Cr.L.J. 141 (143), A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 199.

Absence of witness :—The Judge can discharge the jury owing to the absence of a juror but he cannot do so owing to the absence of a witness—Putaswamy, 4 Bom.L.R. 939.

Trial shall commence anew :—Where a juror was discharged and replaced by another and the trial was not commenced anew, but the Judge called the witnesses who had been examined, read out their statements to them which they admitted to be correct and the trial proceeded, it was held that there was no valid trial—Narain, 36 All. 481, 16 Cr.L.J. 538, 12 A.L.J. 802, 24 I.C. 946. But the trial which becomes null and void owing to the incompetence of a juror under this section is not null and void for all purposes. Thus, if a witness has given false evidence during such trial, he can be prosecuted under sec. 193, I. P. Code. The nullity of the trial will not affect the liability of the witness for prosecution for perjury—Virasami, 19 Mad. 375.

889. Discharge of jury for misconduct:—After the close of the prosecution case, and before the counsel for the accused called his witnesses, the foreman of the jury informed the Court that they had arrived at an unanimous verdict (which was unfavourable to the prisoner) and did not desire to hear anything more. The Court remarked that the conduct of the jury in anything at such a verdict before hearing the defence evidence was unfair to the accused and against all principles of justice. The counsel for the accused thereupon pressed for the discharge of the jury for such misconduct and for empanelling a fresh jury. But the Standing Counsel remarked that the case was not covered by sec. 282 or sec. 283 (which were the only sections relating to discharge of the jury during the trial) and the jury could not therefore be discharged; but under instructions from the Advocate-General he entered a nolle prosequi—Olu Muhammad, 7 C.W.N. xxxi. The point was therefore left undecided in that case. But in another case of the same High Court the question arose again, and it has been decided that although section 282 or 283 does not provide for the discharge of the jury for improper conduct during the trial, (as for instance where some of the jury were seen one day associating with the man who was looking after the case for the accused), nor is it specifically provided by any other section, still the Sessions Judge has an inherent power to discharge the jury for misconduct. But such power is not to be exercised lightly, nor until the Judge has satisfied himself, by such inquiry as in the circumstances he can adopt, that reasonable grounds for exercising such a power exist—Rahim Sheikh, 50 Cal. 872, 37 C.L.J. 595, 73 I.C. 773, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 724, 24 Cr.L.J. 677; Rebati Moohan, 32 C.W.N. 945 (947), 56 Cal. 150, 30 Cr.L.J. 435; Abdur Rashid, 56 Cal. 1032, 33 C.W.N. 425, 122 I.C. 194, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 343, 31 Cr.L.J. 366, Ind. Rul. 1930 Cal. 194; Bipat Gope v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 777 (779), 169 I.C. 495, 16 Pat. 8, 1937 P.W.N. 271, 10 R.P. 19, 3 B.R. 584, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 369. The inherent power of a Sessions Judge to discharge a jury is not confined to cases of misconduct and plainly extends to cases where the Judge finds reason for doubting the impartiality of the jury. If the impartiality of the foreman of the jury is doubted, all the jurors should be discharged. The Judge should not discharge the foreman only—Bipat Gope v. Emp., supra. The High Court can inquire into the validity of the reasons for discharging a jury—Abdur Rashid, supra and Bipat Gope v. Emp., supra. Suspicion in the mind of a Public Prosecutor is not and could never be recognized as a good or valid ground for discharging a jury. Something much more definite and tangible than this is necessary—Abdul Rashid, supra and Bipat Gope v. Emp., supra. In England also, the Judge has the power to discharge the jury for improper conduct, e.g. where one of the jurors had left the box without leave—Reg v. Ward, (1867) 10 Cox. C.C. 573.

The discharge of the jury for misconduct is not equivalent to a verdict of acquittal, but the prisoner can be remanded for a fresh trial and a new jury should be empanelled—Reg. v. Davison, (1860) 8 Cox. C.C. 360; Rahim Sheikh, supra. If the jury have misconducted themselves, they may be discharged and a new trial directed with a n established by .. (430, 431), 81 .. 2 I.C. 334, 27 C.W.N. 240, 33 C.L.J. 122, 22 Cr.L.J. 510; Jesarat, 26 Cr.L.J. 1009, 87 I.C. 833, 29 C.W.N. 526, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 729.

If a juror expresses his opinion clearly regarding the guilt or innocence of an accused person before the charge to the jury has been delivered, the Sessions Judge would be well advised in discharging the jury and holding a fresh trial with a fresh jury—Bideshi, 37 Cr.L.J. 719, 162 I.C. 705, 1936 O.W.N. 457, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 258, following Nazir, supra. But the mere circumstance that a man is betrayed by his friend for having mentioned to him in a conversation that he does not think the prosecution case to be true in the particular case in which he has been serving as a juror, does not seem to be a matter which at the end of the trial can be used as a reason why the trial should begin afresh—Supdt. v. Ajit, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 750, 33 Cr.L.J. 869, 110 I.C. 18, 1932 Cr.C. 744.

If a juror is discharged for misconduct before any hearing of the case takes place at all, it is necessary for the Judge to discharge the whole jury and empanel a new jury, but he can select another juror from the persons present in Court (sec 276, second proviso)—Rcbati Mohan, 56 Cal. 150, 32 C.W.N. 945 (1947).

When the conduct of the jury is taken exception to during the progress of the trial in the Session Court, the Presiding Judge has undoubted jurisdiction to enquire into the same. An enquiry such as is referred to must in the nature of things be a judicial enquiry. In the course of such an enquiry the Sessions Judge is entitled to call upon persons to appear before him, to administer oath to such persons and to require them to give evidence—Bhuban, 28 Cr.L.J. 783, 104 I.C. 111, 31 C.W.N. 828, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 628, 55 Cal. 279. There is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for holding an inquiry into the misconduct of a juror. There is authority for the view that the Sessions' Judge has jurisdiction to hold such an inquiry but it is clear that the question whether the Judge should or should not hold an inquiry is a matter within his discretion. He is not bound by any rule of procedure to hold the inquiry. Where the application submitted to him is vague in its language and is not supported by an affidavit, he does not exercise a wrong discretion in refusing to hold an inquiry into the truth of the allegations—Bideshi, supra.

It is entirely for the Judge to determine, and it is entirely within his discretion to determine, whether there is such misconduct on the part of a juror as necessitated a discharge of the jury, and the decision given by the Judge on the question is not open to review. Following the rule recognized in the English Law, the Judge, in India, has also the power to discharge the jury, if necessity arises, before or after the verdict in the absence of any provision to the contrary in the Indian Statute. Where one of the jurors had without the leave of the Court separated from the rest of the jury, and went to say his Jumma prayer, held that this was sufficient for setting aside the verdict and for ordering a retrial—Nagen, 35 Cr.L.J. 941, 149 I.C. 345, 38 C.W.N. 501, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 428, 1934 Cr.C. 538, 59 C.L.J. 516.

The Criminal Procedure Code cannot be said to be exhaustive in regard to the conditions under which a jury can be discharged. Where the Judge empanelled a common jury to try the accused persons who were committed for trial on a charge under sec. 304, I. P. C., altered the charge later on to one under sec. 302, I. P. C., and discharged the jury as upon the alteration of the charge to one of murder the accused were entitled to be tried by a special jury, held that he had the power to discharge the jury and to direct that the trial should take place upon the altered charge with a special jury—Yeshvant Vithu, 38 Cr.L.J. 850, 170 I.C. 153, I.L.R. 1937 Bom 369, 39 Bom.L.R. 355, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 260, 10 R.B. 49.

See also Note 1151.

283. The Judge may also discharge the jury whenever the prisoner becomes incapable of remaining at the bar.

Discharge of jury in case of sickness of prisoner.

D.—Choosing Assessors.

284. When the trial is to be held with the aid of assessors, not less than three and, if practicable, four Assessors how chosen. shall be chosen from the persons summoned to act as such.

Change:—The italicised words have been substituted for the words "two or more" by sec. 15 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. "We add the further recommendation that in all cases triable with the aid of assessors, there shall be, if possible, four and in any case, not less than three, assessors"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, para. 26.

890. Choosing assessors:—This section does not prescribe that the assessors are to be chosen by lot. In fact it does not say that they ought to be chosen in any particular manner. Until the amendment of 1923, the law was "two or more shall be chosen as the Judge thinks fit" and though the words "as the Judge thinks fit" have been omitted from the section as it now stands, it cannot be said that the effect of the amendment is to require the assessors to be chosen in any particular manner. It is not the law that the assessors must be chosen by lot. The use of the word "chosen" does not necessarily imply that there ought to be a selection from a larger number—Babu Ram Jadav v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 302 (304), 173 I.C. 418, 4 B.R. 266, 10 R.P. 402, 18 P.L.T. 964, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 60. The choice of jurors is by lot, but the choice of assessors is entirely with Judge, who in the exercise of this power should pay every consideration to any reasonable objection raised, although the law does not, as in the case of jurors, provide for objection being taken to an assessor. In the selection of assessors, regard must be had to the nature of the case, to the person tried, and to the public feeling excited. They ought not to be pleaders nor young men fresh from the College and devoid of experience. They ought to be persons of independent conditions in life, men of judgment and experience—Ram Dutt, 23 W.R. 35.

Though there is no express provision for objecting to the selection of an assessor, still there is no reason why an objection of presumed or actual partiality should not be allowed, particularly when it is urged at the time of selection of the assessor. The opinions of assessors are of great value both to the Judge who tries the case and to the Superior Courts. It is therefore necessary as an elementary principle that they should be above suspicion. The relationship of landlord and tenant or of master and servant creates an incapacity in a person to sit as an assessor in a case. An objection to an assessor that he is a tenant of the person interested in the prosecution is a valid objection—Shivadhan, 3 P.L.T. 32, 22 Cr.L.J. 262, 60 I.C. 662, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 116.

'From the persons summoned':—The assessors must be chosen from the persons summoned to act as such. The Judge is not competent to select any one to act as an assessor who has not been summoned under sec. 326 or sec. 327. Where out of several persons summoned the Judge selected only one, and he selected two other persons at random from the persons present in Court, it was held that the trial was bad, as it was practically conducted with one assessor only—Badri, 1894 A.W.N. 207; Man Singh, 35 All. 470, 21 I.C. 891, 11 A.L.J. 930, 14 Cr.L.J. 654; Balak Singh, 44 I.C. 587, A.I.R. 1918 Pat. 420, 5 P.L.W. 16, 3 P.L.J. 141, 19 Cr.L.J. 363. Where in the absence of assessors duly summoned, the Judge appointed the Nazir of the Court to act as an assessor, the trial was held to be illegal, as the Nazir was not duly summoned, and in choosing assessors there is no provision corresponding to the second proviso to sec. 276 (in choosing jurors)—Khub Singh, 13 O.C. 337, 11 Cr.L.J. 724. But where a person was summoned to serve as an assessor on a particular date in a particular case and he failed to appear in Court on that date but appeared on a subsequent day when another trial had to commence, and he was selected to act as an assessor in that trial, his selection would not be improper—Chutta, 17 Cr.L.J. 17 (All.). Section 326, Cr. P. C., lays down the procedure which "shall ordinarily" be followed and is not mandatory. Section 327, Cr. P. C., gives an emergency power to cause jurors or assessors to be summoned when such direction is found to be necessary. Where, therefore, the usual precept was issued to the District Magistrate for summoning assessors in accordance with sec. 326, Cr. P. C., but when the case came up for trial, only three of the assessors summoned were present and the Judge caused a summons to be served on a gentleman who was present in Court and whose name was on the list of persons qualified to serve as assessors and chose these four persons as assessors, the trial was not illegal—Ram Babu Jadav v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 302 (304), 173 I.C. 418, 4 B.R. 266, 10 R.P. 402, 18 P.L.T. 964, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 60; even when the person, whose name was in the list of assessors and who was present in Court, was chosen without any formal summons having been served upon him the order of the Judge to requisition the services of such a person amounted to summoning him—

Ramsidh Rai, 39 Cr L.J. 725, 176 I.C. 530, 10 R.P. 79, 4 B.R. 724, 1938 P.W.N. 559, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 352. Jurors were summoned and the trial began as a jury trial, and continued to be regarded as such right down to the day on which arguments were heard. The Judge then passed orders that the jurors would thenceforth be considered as assessors as he came to the conclusion that the case was triable with the aid of assessors and not with the aid of jurors. Held that the trial ought to have been held throughout with the aid of assessors chosen from persons summoned to act as such, that there was no lawful trial by a lawfully constituted tribunal and that sec. 536 (1), Cr.P.C., did not apply to the case—Sheopal, 34 Cr L.J. 1093, 145 I.C. 803, 10 O.W.N. 619, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 351, 1933 Cr C 994.

Number of assessors.—Under this section as now amended, there must be at least three assessors. A trial held with less than the required number of assessors is null and void, and the illegality cannot be cured by sec. 537—Jairam, 20 N.L.R. 129, 77 I.C. 811, A.I.R. 1924 Nag 287, 25 Cr L.J. 459; Pragi, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 417; Ram Narain, 27 O.C. 213, 26 Cr L.J. 359, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 110, 84 I.C. 711. A trial commencing with the aid of one assessor is not a legal trial, and section 537 cannot cure the defect—Jairam, 25 Bom. 694; Silva, 15 Bom. 514. If there were two assessors (which was the required number prior to the present amendment) but one of them was deaf and blind, there was properly speaking only one assessor and the trial was invalid—Babu Lal, 21 All 106; Anonymous, 2 Weir 340.

This section lays down that the number of assessors should be not less than three, and if practicable four. Where four assessors are not chosen, it is right that the Court should give reasons in the order-sheet to explain the impracticability of choosing four. But the trial with three assessors, without the record of these reasons, is not irregular but is still according to law—Jamal, 7 P.L.T. 14, 26 Cr L.J. 713, 86 I.C. 153, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 381.

Trial without assessors.—The trial will be invalid if a portion of the trial which consists in the taking of additional evidence takes place after the discharge of the assessors—Ram Lal, 15 All 136.

284A. (1) In a trial with the aid of assessors of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European or Indian British subject, if the European or Indian British subject accused, or, where there are several European British subjects accused or several Indian British subjects accused, all of them jointly, before the first assessor is chosen, so require, all the assessors shall, in the case of European British subjects, be persons who are Europeans or Americans or, in the case of Indian British subjects, be Indians.

Assessors for trial of European and Indian British subjects and others.

(2) In a trial with the aid of assessors of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European (other than an European British subject) or an American, all the assessors shall, if practicable and if such European or American before the first assessor is chosen so requires, be persons who are Europeans or Americans.

This section has been added by sec. 16 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. Under this section, Indians and Europeans can claim to be tried before their own countrymen as assessors. "In any district in which for any class of offences Indians are normally triable in a Court of Session with the aid of assessors, and in which no racial considerations are involved, the accused, whether Indian or European, shall be tried with assessors, who, if the accused so claims, shall all be of the nationality of the accused"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, para. 26.

Sub-section (2) embodies the old section 460 with certain modifications.

891. The accused, if he intends to avail himself of the provisions of this section must make a claim to the privilege conferred by it; failure to make a claim will amount to waiver—Ruffe, 1912 P.R. 6, 13 Cr.L.J. 197.

285. (1) If in the course of a trial with the aid of assessors, at any time before the finding, any assessor is unable to attend, assessor is, from any sufficient cause, prevented from attending throughout the trial, or absents himself, and it is not practicable to enforce his attendance, the trial shall proceed with the aid of the other assessor or assessors.

(2) If all the assessors are prevented from attending, or absent themselves, the proceedings shall be stayed and a new trial shall be held with the aid of fresh assessors.

892. Absence of assessors:—This section contemplates that at least one assessor must attend continuously throughout the trial—Messuruddin, 6 C.W.N. 715; Thirumalai, 24 Mad 523. Therefore, where in a Sessions trial beginning with three assessors, one of the assessors died at an early stage of the proceedings and later on another assessor became too ill to be present, and the third was absent before the pleader for the defence addressed the Court, it was held that the trial was a nullity—Muhammad Mahomed Khan, 13 All. 337.

An assessor who is absent during a part of the trial cannot be allowed to resume his seat as assessor; once he is absent he ceases to occupy the position of an assessor. Where such an assessor was allowed to resume his seat, and the evidence recorded in his absence was read over to him and he gave his opinion just like the other assessors, the procedure was illegal. His opinion ought not to have been taken—Messuruddin, 6 C.W.N. 715; Piso, Ratanlal 695. In a Madras case, however, such a procedure was held to be merely irregular and not illegal. Though the proper course would have been to proceed with the trial with the aid of the other assessor alone, and to accept his opinion only, still the fact that the absent assessor was allowed to resume his seat and take part in the trial and give his opinion would not vitiate the opinion of another assessor which was validly given. The assessors merely assist the Court but do not form part of the tribunal which decides the case, and the assessors unlike the jury give their opinions separately and not as members of a body—Thirumalai, 24 Mad. 523.

If assessor is an interested person:—Where in the course of a trial it is found that one of the assessors is an interested person, and unfit to sit as an assessor, there is no provision of law to meet such a contingency. In such a case, the proper course is to refer the case to the High Court to set aside the order appointing the incompetent assessor and all subsequent proceedings in the trial. Then the Sessions Judge will be asked by the High Court to choose another assessor and proceed with the trial de novo—Thiagaraja, 1912 M.W.N. 378, 13 Cr.L.J. 473, 15 I.C. 313. Similar procedure was followed in Lal Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 926, 1933 Cr.C. 1385, 15 Lah. 20, 146 I.C. 446, 35 Cr.L.J. 107 where the Judge discovered in the course of the trial that one of the assessors stated that he was determined to help the accused and was not going to allow the accused to be convicted and a retrial was ordered with the help of other assessors. But where at the end of a Sessions trial three of the four assessors expressed the opinion that the case against the accused had not been established, but the fourth held that the accused were guilty, adding that he had personal knowledge about the matter, this expression of opinion does not necessitate a de novo trial with the aid of other assessors. The proper course for the Judge is simply to ignore the opinion of the assessor if he comes to the conclusion that it was improperly expressed, or that he had been improperly influenced by extra-judicial considerations. There is nothing illegal in a Judge acting in that manner—Pahlu, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 475 (479), I.L.R. 1939 Lah 243, 41 Cr.L.J. 55, 184 IC 549, 41 P.L.R. 731.

DD.—Joint Trials.

285A. In any case in which an European or American is accused jointly with a person not being an European or American, or an Indian British subject is accused jointly with a person not being an Indian, and such European, Indian British Subject or American is committed for trial before a Court of Session, he and such other person may be tried together, but if he requires to be tried in accordance with the provisions of section 275 or section 284A and is so tried, and the other person accused requires to be tried separately, such other person shall be tried separately in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter.

This section has been newly added by sec. 17 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. It provides that in cases in which Indians and Europeans are sought to be tried jointly, they can claim to be tried separately before jurors or assessors who are their own countrymen.

The words "and is so tried" in this section mean "if he is in fact so tried", or "if he is eventually so tried", for unless the European British accused was in fact tried in accordance with the provisions of sec. 275, Cr P. C., the Indian accused's ground for claiming a separate trial would disappear—Surajpalsingh, 39 Cr.L.J. 818 (826), 176 IC. 853, 1938 N.L.J. 185, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 328, I.L.R. 1938 Nag. 516, 11 R.N. 81.

In the Committing Magistrate's Court one of the three accused claimed under sec. 443, Cr. P. C., that he was a European British subject and entitled to be tried as such, and his right to be so tried was conceded by the Crown. When the case came before the Sessions Judge he again put forward his claim to be tried as a European British subject and the other two accused stated that they did not claim an Indian majority in the jury but wished to be tried jointly with the other accused. The Sessions Judge at once decided not to proceed with the case as it was impossible to obtain sufficient European jurors there and referred the case for the order of the High Court though the question of empanelling a jury did not arise until the accused claimed to be tried. The High Court ordered the case to be tried by a Sessions Judge of a different place before whom one of the two accused, who wished previously to be tried jointly with the third accused who claimed to be tried as a European British subject, claimed to be tried separately. The Sessions Judge held that he had already made his choice and must adhere to that choice. An application in revision to the High Court was rejected. On appeal the validity of the order was again contested. Held that the application in revision having been rejected, the order was final and could not be contested in appeal and that the joint trial was legal inasmuch as when the accused was asked before the original Court of Session he did not require to be tried separately—Surajpalsingh, supra.

E.—Trial to close of cases for Prosecution and Defence.

286. (1) When the jurors or assessors have been chosen, the prosecutor shall open his case by reading from the Indian Penal Code or other law the description of the offence charged, and stating shortly by what evidence he expects to prove the guilt of the accused.

Opening case for prosecution. Examination of witnesses. (2) The prosecutor shall then examine his witnesses.

Trial cannot be postponed:—After the jurors have been chosen, the prosecutor shall open his case, and the trial cannot be postponed to enable the prosecutor to examine a witness by commission—Jacob, 19 Cal. 113.

Shall open his case:—It is a rule of universal application that in a criminal trial Counsel for the prosecution, in opening the case to the jury, can only state all that it is proposed or intended to prove in the case, so that the jury may see if there is any discrepancy between the opening statements of Counsel and the evidence afterwards adduced in support of them and that it is wholly improper for Counsel for the prosecution to open any matter to the jury in respect whereof no evidence is intended to be or can be adduced at the trial. (Per Ghose, J.). So far as criminal cases are concerned, the opening for the prosecution ought always to be confined to matters which are necessary to enable the jury to follow the evidence when it is brought before them. This is not the stage of a case at which doubtful questions of admissibility should be either raised or decided. The opening speech of the Counsel for the prosecution does not afford a proper occasion for the determining of such questions (per Rankin, C.J.).—Padam Prosod, 50 C.L.J. 106, 33 C.W.N. 1121, 30 Cr.L.J. 993, 119 I.C. 193, 1929 Cr.C. 228, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 617 (F.B.).

When the prosecution proposes to examine new witnesses, the prosecuting Counsel should always mention in his opening address the names of the new witnesses and the purpose for which they are being called, and the Court should always insist upon this being done—Dhondiba, 36 Cr.L.J. 344, 153 I.C. 278, 36 Bom.L.R. 950, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 487, 1934 Cr.C. 1413. See also Niamat, in Note 893 and Yusuf Mia v. Emp., in Note 915 (18).

893. Examination of witnesses:—The prosecutor is bound to call all the witnesses who prove their connection with the transaction in question, and who also must be able to give important information. If such witnesses are not produced without sufficient reason being shown, the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution—Dhurno, 8 Cal. 121 (125); Muhammad Yunus, 50 Cal. 318 (326); Nayan Mandal, 34 C.W.N. 170 (173), A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 134; Nababali, 34 C.W.N. 1151 (1153), 32 Cr.L.J. 228; Tulla, 7 All. 904; Brahmadeo, 1 P.L.T. 161, 21 Cr.L.J. 33, 54 I.C. 241; Jumo, 3 S.L.R. 200, 11 Cr.L.J. 410. The duty of the prosecution is not to secure a conviction but to assist the Court in arriving at the truth, and for that purpose to place before the Court all the material evidence at its disposal—Fateh Chand, 44 Cal. 477, 21 C.W.N. 33 (F.B.); Amrita Lal, 42 Cal. 967. The purpose of a criminal trial is not to support, at all costs, a theory, but to investigate the offence and to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, and the duty of the Public Prosecutor is to represent not the police but the Crown, and this duty should be discharged by him fairly and fearlessly and with a full sense of the responsibility that attaches to his position. The guilt or innocence of the accused is to be determined by the tribunals appointed by law and not according to the tastes of any one else—Ram Ranjan, 42 Cal. 422, 19 C.W.N. 28, 16 Cr.L.J. 170, 27 I.C. 554, A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 545. The prosecutor is not free to choose how much evidence he will bring before the Court; he is bound to produce all the evidence in his power directly bearing upon the charge.

It is his duty to call all witnesses who can throw any light on the case, whether they support the prosecution theory or the defence theory—Brahamadeo, 1 P.L.T. 161, 54 I.C. 241, 21 Cr.L.J. 33; Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121 (124); Kunja, 8 Pat. 289, 1929 Cr.C. 62, 10 P.L.T. 549, 116 I.C. 770, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 275, 30 Cr.L.J. 675; Mathura, 8 Pat. 625, 1929 Cr.C. 155, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 343, 10 P.L.T. 177, 30 Cr.L.J. 1136, 120 I.C. 37. All the persons alleged or known to have knowledge of the facts ought to be brought before the Court and examined. The fact that certain witnesses were examined by the committing Magistrate against the express desire of the police-officer conducting the prosecution is not a ground for not calling them—Ram Sahai, 10 Cal. 1070 (1072). All the witnesses who were present at the scene of the crime must be called by the prosecution even if they give contradictory versions, so that the jury may draw their own conclusions from their depositions—Dhamba, Ratanlal 581; and it is not a sufficient reason not to call such a witness, simply because the opinion he has formed shows an unconscious bias on his part—Munni, 9 C.W.N. 438. The prosecutor should not refuse to call and examine any witnesses for the prosecution merely because his evidence may in some respects be favourable to the defence—Durga, 16 All. 84 (F.B.).

It is the duty of the prosecution to examine important witnesses who are personally eye-witnesses of the occurrence, and the failure of the Public Prosecutor to do so requires explanation—Keshwar Gope, 1 P.L.T. 491, 21 Cr.L.J. 743, 58 I.C. 247. In a capital case, he should place before the Court the testimony of all the available eye-witnesses—Ram Ranjan, 42 Cal. 422, 19 C.W.N. 28. All important eye-witnesses of the scene of occurrence should be examined by the prosecution as to the several facts known to them which are relevant to the case, though other witnesses might have spoken to the same facts. Merely tendering them for cross-examination without examining them, is a practice which should not be encouraged—Veera Koravan, 53 Mad. 69, 30 L.W. 701, 1929 Cr.C. 685 (688). When witnesses, who are independent and are named in the first information report, are not called by the prosecution, the Court is justified in assuming that their evidence would not have supported the prosecution—Ghulam Rasul v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 7, 171 I.C. 906, 10 R.L. 247, 40 P.L.R. 17. But see Girish Chandra Namdas, infra.

Although it may be in many cases unsafe to expose the source from which information is obtained by the police, still when the evidence of a witness supplying such information is vital, e.g., on the question of identity, such witness must be called, and omission to do so will lead to an inference adverse to the prosecution—Molla Khan, 37 C.W.N. 1061 (1064).

But the prosecution is not bound to call any particular witness, when there is reasonable ground for believing that he will not, if called, speak the truth, or to call any witness whom he believes to be false or whose evidence is unnecessary for the trial—Ramjit, 2 Pat. 309 (315), 74 I.C. 705, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 413, 24 Cr.L.J. 801; Reed, 69 I.C. 630, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 461, 23 Cr.L.J. 742, 49 Cal. 277; Muhammad Yunus, 50 Cal. 318; Dhunno, 8 Cal. 121 (125); Durga, 16 All. 84; Balaram, 71 I.C. 685, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 382, 24 Cr.L.J. 221, 49 Cal. 358 (367); Santon, 14 All. 521; Kaimi, 1916 P.R. 12; Doraisami, 45 M.L.J. 846; Mathura, 8 Pat. 625, 1929 Cr.C. 155; Nayan Mandal, 34 C.W.N. 170 (171). If the Police or Public Prosecutor is of opinion that a witness is likely to give false testimony or that his evidence is unnecessary, he is justified in not sending up or producing that witness, but his absence at the trial ought not to be a reason for disbelieving the other prosecution witnesses if they are otherwise worthy of credit—Ramjit, 2 Pat. 309 (314, 315), 24 Cr.L.J. 801, 74 I.C. 705, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 413.

When the prosecution have produced sufficient evidence and the best evidence it is not always incumbent on them to produce all possible evidence on the less important facts—Yusuf Mia v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 577 (581), 40 Cr.L.J. 147, 178 I.C. 934, 20 P.L.T. 51, 5 B.R. 185, 1938 P.W.N. 727.

Before the prosecution launches any case, they ought to be satisfied of the truth of the case which they are going to place before the Court. Consequently, it is absurd to expect the prosecution to call witnesses who will speak against that case. If the prosecution find that a number of those who are present will not support the prosecution case, they must make up their minds whether they are truthful witnesses or not. If they come to the conclusion that they are truthful witnesses, they ought to withdraw the prosecution forthwith. If, on the other hand, they come to the conclusion that they are not truthful witnesses, there is no obligation for the prosecution to call them. Practically speaking, therefore, the prosecution ought to call those witnesses who, they think, will support the prosecution case and no others. If the witnesses who are prepared to speak against that case are respectable witnesses who ought to be believed, then the prosecution ought to withdraw the case. It is quite useless to pursue a case and then call a whole series of witnesses who are going to speak against it. On the other hand, if the defence comes to the conclusion that the witnesses are witnesses of truth who ought to have been called, then it is the duty of the defence to call them—Bhuban Bejoy, 37 C.W.N. 1098 (1100). See also Hpa Wa v. Emp., 37 Cr.L.J. 234, 160 I.C. 113, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 506, 1935 Cr.C. 1303, 8 R.R. 341. Speaking generally, it cannot be laid down that a prosecution must call witnesses irrespective of considerations of number and reliability, or that a prosecution ought to discharge the functions both of prosecution and defence. If it does so, confusion is very apt to result, and never is it more likely to result than if the prosecution calls witnesses and then proceeds almost automatically to discredit them by cross-examination. Witnesses essential to the unfolding of the narrative on which the prosecution is based, must, of course, be called by the prosecution, whether in the result the effect of their testimony is for or against the case for the prosecution—Stephen Seneviratne, 37 Cr.L.J. 963, A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 289 (300), 41 C.W.N. 65, 164 I.C. 545, 9 R.P.C. 83, 44 M.L.W. 661, 1936 Cr.C. 900, 1936 M.W.N. 340, 39 Bom.L.R. 1 (P.C.). Their Lordships of the Privy Council, observing that no rule can be laid down to fetter the discretion of the prosecution to call witnesses which is dependent on the particular circumstance of each case, go on to say that they do not in general approve of the idea that a prosecution must call witnesses irrespective of considerations of number and of reliability, but that witnesses essential to the unfolding of a narrative on which the prosecution is based must of course be called by the prosecution whether in the result the effect of their testimony is for or against the case for the prosecution—Muktavandas v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 393 (396), 180 I.C. 602, A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 13, 1938 N.L.J. 434, I.L.R. 1939 Nag. 109, 11 R.N. 377. The prosecution is not bound to call any particular witness or witnesses when there is reasonable ground for the Public Prosecutor to come to the conclusion and believe that such witness or witnesses, if called, will not speak the truth; nor is it incumbent on the prosecution to call any witness when the Public Prosecutor believes that the evidence of such person is wholly unnecessary for the trial—Brinchipada Dafadar v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 964, 177 I.C. 929, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 625, 67 C.L.J. 45, 11 R.C. 296. It is not the duty of the prosecution to call as witnesses every one whose statements have been taken by the police but only to call such people as may be likely to give truthful and reliable evidence with regard to the matter in question—Nga Kyaw Hla v. The King, 39 Cr.L.J. 248 (250), 173 I.C. 94, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 45, 10 R.P. 306. But it is the duty of a Public Prosecutor to conduct the case for the Crown fairly; his object should be, not to obtain an unrighteous conviction, but, as representing the Crown, to see that justice is vindicated; and in exercising his discretion as to the witnesses whom he should or should not call, he should bear that in mind. It is his bounden duty to place before the Court for the adjudication of the Court, all the evidence against all the accused persons. Where he asks the permission of the Court not to call the principal witness against the accused on the ground that he does not believe the witness's evidence, he constitutes himself the Judge of the case, that is, coming to a conclusion in regard to the guilt or innocence of the accused. It is for the Judge, and not for the Public Prosecutor, to decide whether the evidence should be believed or not and it is therefore essential that the Public Prosecutor should place the whole of the evidence before the Court—Nga Sar Kee v. The King, 41 Cr.L.J. 153 (155), 185 I.C. 303, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 390. There is no duty upon those who are charged with the preparation of a prosecution case to produce in Court every person examined by the police. But in a murder case where a witness has given evidence which supports a plea of alibi taken by one of those who have been charged with the murder, the witness ought beyond all doubt to be produced. In no circumstances should the fact of his statement be withheld from the Court. The prosecution authorities have no right to take it upon themselves to decide whether a witness who gives vital evidence of this sort is or is not a reliable witness. That is the function of the Court which the prosecution has no right to usurp—Neri Singh, 57 All. 267 (275), A.I.R. 1934 All. 908, 36 Cr.L.J. 152, 152 I.C. 741, 1934 A.L.R. 1033, 1934 Cr.C. 1167, 21 A.J. Cr.R. 212, 4 A.W.R. (H.C.) 5. See also Note 915 (25).

The mere fact that certain persons are mentioned in the first information report as being witnesses of the occurrence does not in itself make it necessary for the prosecution to call any of them, if the prosecution comes to the conclusion that they are not really eye-witnesses and cannot give relevant evidence—Girish Chandra Namadas, 58 Cal. 1335, 1932 Cr.C. 103 (104), A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 118, 135 I.C. 443, 33 Cr.L.J. 135. But see Gulam Rasul v. Emp., supra.

There may be some doubt as to the duty of the Public Prosecutor, but there is a duty cast upon the Court to arrive at the truth by all lawful means and one of such is the examination of witnesses of its own accord when for certain obvious reasons neither party is prepared to call witnesses who are known to be in a position to speak to important relevant facts. When the trial Court fails to do this, the Appellate Court should avail itself of the power conferred by sec. 428, Cr. P. Code—Donald Dixon, 40 Cr.L.J. 35 (36), 178 I.C. 341, 1938 M.W.N. 817, 48 M.L.W. 363, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 900; Nga Kan Chai v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 1040, 171 I.C. 129, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 139, 10 R.R. 133. But see Hari Lal, infra and Ibrahim v. Emp., A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 95 (96), 153 I.C. 466, 1935 Cr.C. 208, 36 Cr.L.J. 348, where it has been laid down that the Public Prosecutor is not obliged to examine persons as prosecution witnesses, if he has reason to believe that they would not support the prosecution case. Nor is the Court bound to examine any person as a Court witness, unless, the evidence of such person appears to be essential to the just decision of the case. It would, however, be wholly inappropriate to take these observations as laying down a general proposition with regard to the effect of, and the inference to be drawn or not to be drawn from the absence of relevant witnesses from the witness-box. That is a matter to be considered with reference to the circumstances of each particular case and the facts which the witness, if called, would have been required to prove; and the jury should be asked to consider it in the light of those circumstances and those facts—Yusuf Mia v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 147 (148), 178 I.C. 934, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 579, 1938 P.W.N. 727, 5 B.R. 185, 20 P.L.T. 51. See also Bankey Singh v. Dasrath Pandey, 1938 P.W.N. 681, which was a case instituted on a petition of complaint.

All the witnesses sent up by the committing Magistrate must be examined, and the Sessions Judge is not competent to pick and choose among them. It is the duty of the Court to examine all such witnesses unless it has good and sufficient reason, on the representation of the Public Prosecutor or otherwise, to believe that the witnesses came to the Court house with a pre-determined intention of giving false evidence—Bankhandi, 15 All. 6. The prosecution is not bound to put in a witness who was examined before the committing Magistrate, when there is reason to believe that such witness is unreliable. The only duty of the prosecution in such a case is to have in attendance every witness examined before the committing Magistrate, so that the witness may be cross-examined or not by the defence counsel as he chooses—Stanton, 14 All. 521; Kali-prosonno, 14 Cal. 245. If some of the prosecution witnesses examined before the committing Magistrate are not examined before the Sessions Judge by the Public Prosecutor, still the accused is entitled to have them put into the box for cross-examination—Nagendra, 27 C.W.N. 820, 38 C.L.J. 203; Nayan Mandal, 34 C.W.N. 170 (171), 31 Cr.L.J. 918, 125 I.C. 746, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 134, 1930 Cr.C. 134. See also Marsang, 11 Bom.L.R. 1162, 10 Cr.L.J. 538 (539), 4 I.C. 273. When a witness has been examined as a witness in the committal Court it is not the duty of the Public Prosecutor to call him unless it is thought that he can give material information in connexion with the offence charged: nor is it his duty to tender him for cross-examination. If what the Judge says to the Public Prosecutor is in the nature of advice as to how the latter should exercise his discretion, no exception can be taken to it; but if the Judge goes further and instructs the Public Prosecutor not to call witness, this is going too far—Brahmaya v. The King, 40 Cr.L.J. 265, 179 I.C. 783, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 442 (444), following Nga Aung Gyi v. Emp., 14 Rang. 45. When the committal proceedings are finished and it is perfectly plain that certain witnesses, who had been cited as prosecution witnesses and are related to the accused, are going to tell a story quite different from the case put forward by the Crown, the Public Prosecutor should refuse to call them at the Sessions trial—Nga Ba U v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 217 (218), 172 I.C. 926, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 429, 10 R.R. 289. When the Public Prosecutor does not call a witness examined before the committing Magistrate, on the ground that he will not speak the truth, he should explain to the Court that this is the reason, and should tender him for cross-examination. In the absence of any such explanation or other reasonable grounds apparent on the face of the proceedings, inference unfavourable to the prosecution will be drawn from the non-production of the witness—Tulla, 7 All. 904.

The witnesses must be orally examined in Court before the jury; it would be a faulty procedure to dispense with their examination and to read over to the jury the recorded statement of the evidence given by them at a previous hearing of the case. If such a procedure is adopted, the jury would have no opportunity of gauging the value of the testimony of each individual witness by his general demeanour. A witness may show a suspicious hesitancy in answering certain questions put by the counsel for the prosecution or he may show an equally suspicious excess of zeal. But Judge and jury are undoubtedly influenced to a considerable extent by the manner in which a witness gives his evidence-in-chief; and moreover the demeanour of a witness during the examination-in-chief may be of the greatest help to the counsel for the defence in his cross-examination. All these advantages would be lost if a mere record of the evidence is read over, instead of examining the witness—Lyme, 4 Lah 382 (386). And so in an English case, Sir John Coleridge has made the following remarks on the impropriety of reading over at the retrial of a case the Judge's note of the evidence given by the witnesses at the previous trial, instead of examining them fully:—"Those of their Lordships who have been used, on motion for new trials, to hear the Judge's note of the evidence read, probably know well by experience how difficult it is to sustain the attention or collect the value of particular parts when that evidence is long . . . But this is not at all. The most careful note must often fail to convey the evidence fully in some of its most important elements, those for which the open and oral examination of the witness in the presence of the prisoner, Judge, and jury is so justly prized. It cannot give the look or manner of the witness; his hesitation, his doubts, his variations of language, his confidence of precipitancy, his calmness or consideration; it cannot give the manner of the prisoner, when that has been important, upon the statement of anything of particular moment. . . . It is in short the dead body of the evidence without its spirit which is supplied when given openly and orally by the ear and eye of those who receive it"—Attorney-General v. Beland, (1867) 36 L.J. P.C.C. 51 (57), L.R. 1 P.C. 520 (535).

If the Crown has not called a witness as a Crown witness, and if the Sessions Judge thinks that he is a material witness, it is open to him either to draw an adverse inference against the Crown in not calling the witness or to examine him as a Court witness. But he cannot compel the Crown either to examine him as a Crown witness or to tender him for cross-examination—Dulo, 36 Cr.L.J. 869, 155 I.C. 1114, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 60. See also Hpa Wa v. Emp., 37 Cr.L.J. 234, 160 I.C. 113, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 506, 1935 Cr.C. 1303, 8 R.R. 341.

It is true that it is the duty of the prosecution to produce before the Court all eye-witnesses of the occurrence, but if the Government Pleader takes upon himself the responsibility of not producing certain eye-witnesses, then it is not the duty of the Appellate Court to fill up the gap in the prosecution evidence by summoning that witness—Hari Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 814 (816), 155 I.C. 753, 1935 O.W.N. 592. But see Donald Dixon, supra.

There is no rule that every eye-witness ought to be called by the prosecution. No doubt the duty of the prosecution is not to endeavour to obtain a conviction at any cost, but to see that the facts are fairly presented before the Court. But prima facie it is for the prosecution to call such witnesses as they think will establish their case. No doubt if the Public Prosecutor knows of a witness who favours the accused, it is his duty either to call the witness himself or to see that the defence is supplied with the name of the witness and given an opportunity of calling him—Vasudeo, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 279 (282), 56 Bom. 434, 34 Bom.L.R. 571, 1932 Cr.C. 391, 138 I.C. 503, 33 Cr.L.J. 613.

Further evidence throwing doubt on the prosecution story:—It is possible that at some stage of the case, the prosecution may have come to know of some further evidence which may possibly throw doubt on the prosecution story which had been put forward as a result of the inquiry made by the investigating officer. When such a situation arises, the most vital question for consideration is as to what is the duty of the prosecution? The proper and fair course is to place the fresh evidence or information before the Court which has to adjudicate the question of guilt or innocence of the accused persons. It is a well established rule of law that it is the bounden duty of the prosecution to place before the trial Court all evidence relating to the case which is at its disposal and then invite a judicial decision. Prosecution takes a grave risk if it takes upon itself the duty of withholding evidence relating to the crime. It is not the function of the prosecution to decide which portion of the evidence is true and which portion is false. This does not mean that where conflicting evidence is produced during an enquiry the prosecution cannot elect to rely on the statements of one set. That power is undoubtedly there. But the duty of the prosecution is that the trial Judge must be informed about the opposite version and then it will be for the Judge to decide whether he should hear the evidence or not. In other words, it is the duty of the prosecution to let the Judge know of the entire evidence at its disposal—Abdul Subhan v. Emp, A.I.R. 1940 All. 46 (52), 1939 A.L.J. 966, 41 Cr.L.J. 258, 186 I.C. 192, 1939 A.W.R. (H.C.) 768, 1939 A.Cr.C. 182.

Change of Judge:—A Sessions Judge is not competent to proceed with a Sessions trial from the point where his predecessor has left it and the consent of the accused makes no difference. On a change of the Judge, the trial must begin de novo—Durga Charan, 8 C.L.J. 59. During a Sessions trial in the High Court a jury was sworn and the Counsel for the Crown had started opening his case when the Judge was taken ill and was succeeded by another Judge under the directions of the Chief Justice. On an objection being taken that the Court, as constituted by the new Judge and a Jury which had been sworn in the presence of his predecessor, had no jurisdiction to try the case; held that the Court, as constituted, had such jurisdiction and that the mere fact that the swearing in of the jury and reading out of the charges to the jury took place before another Judge, would at most amount to an irregularity under sec. 537, Cr. P. C., which covers the case of an error, omission or irregularity in the proceedings before or during trial or in any inquiry or other proceedings under this Code—Dorabji, 28 Cr.L.J. 402, 101 I.C. 178, 29 Bom.L.R. 204, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 161.

Where a Judge is succeeded by another, and the latter decides to hold the trial de novo, he must examine the witnesses orally again. If the witnesses' depositions in the previous trial are merely exhibited in the second trial, without actually examining them de novo, the procedure is illegal; even the fact that the accused consented to such course in order to save cross-examination will not cure the illegality—Umar Hajee, 49 Mad. 117.

Defence case:—The prosecution must give positive evidence of the guilt of the accused and cannot depend upon the weakness of his adversary's case. The Court is concerned not so much with the truth or otherwise of the theory suggested by the accused as with the case for the prosecution. The proof of the case against the prisoners must depend for its support not upon the absence or weakness of explanation on their part, but upon the positive and affirmative evidence of their guilt that is given by the Crown—Mamfru, 51 Cal. 418 (425, 426).

Witnesses not examined before the Committing Magistrate:—The prosecution cannot demand, as of right, that any witness not examined in the preliminary inquiry should be called and examined at the trial. But the Court, if it considers necessary, may call and examine him—Heyfield, 14 All. 212, 1892 A.W.N. 63. But the mere fact that a witness has not been examined before the committing Magistrate, is no ground for refusing to take the evidence of such witness, if he is a relevant witness. There is nothing in the Code which restricts the examination at the trial only to the witnesses examined before the committing Magistrate. But the prosecutor should, as a matter of justice and fairness to the accused, state in his opening address the name of such witness—Khan Muhammad, 1889 P.R. 1; Dhondiba, 36 Cr.L.J. 344, 153 I.C. 278, 36 Bom L.R. 950, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 487, 1934 Cr.C. 1413; Muhammad Panah, 35 Cr.L.J. 1170 (1173), 150 I.C. 917, 1934 Cr.C. 732, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 78. The general effect of a consideration of relevant sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that the prosecutor is at liberty to examine witnesses in the Sessions Court which he has not produced in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, but that only those witnesses so examined in the Committing Magistrate's Court can be bound down to attend in the Sessions Court. The prosecution in the Sessions Court, if the witnesses are not examined in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, has to depend upon such witnesses being willing to give evidence without being bound down to appear, or upon being able to persuade the Court to act under sec. 540, Cr. P. C., and summon such a witness. In accordance with the practice in the English Courts, a summary of the evidence proposed to be called should be given to the Sessions Court and the accused before trial, if a witness has not been called in the Committing Magistrate's Court. There is no provision in the Cr. P. C., making this course compulsory, but, in fairness to the accused, it should be followed—Niamat, 37 Cr.L.J. 742 (745, 746), 162 I.C. 976, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 533, 17 Lah. 176, 38 P.L.R. 421, 1936 Cr.C. 568 (F.B.).

If the Public Prosecutor produces a new witness at the Sessions trial, and if he is not allowed to examine him as his own witness, then it would be the duty of the Court to examine him as a Court witness. If this were done, then an opportunity of cross-examining must be allowed both to the Prosecutor and to the accused. It will be therefore rather to the advantage of the prosecution that such a witness be examined as a Court witness and to the advantage of the accused that he should be examined in the ordinary way as a witness for the prosecution—Muhammad Panah, supra.

894. Cross-examination:—As a rule, the cross-examination of a witness should take place after his examination-in-chief, and cannot be postponed. There is no provision of law which authorises the Judge to allow all the prosecution witnesses to be examined at once, and to permit the cross-examination to be reserved for a subsequent date—Gothuri Venkatappa, 2 Weir 381. But though the accused is not entitled to such postponement as of right, still there is no reason why the Sessions Judge should refuse an application for such postponement where the application was a reasonable one under the circumstances of the case—Sadasiv, 41 Cal. 299, 15 Cr.L.J. 596.

A Sessions Judge is not justified in stopping the cross-examination and turning the witness out of Court because he is of opinion that the witness is not speaking the truth—Meharban, 1900 A.W.N. 149.

A Judge is and always must be in control of the proceedings in his Court. On the other hand, the right of cross-examination must be carefully guarded, and it must be remembered that it may be necessary for an advocate to approach delicately and with caution the point upon which he is seeking to obtain admissions. It may be important that a witness whom he does not consider truthful should not be put on his guard by immediate presentation of the case set up by the opposing side. If questions are couched in too blunt a form he may readily deny them. Hence considerable latitude is desirable since the admissions sought to be elicited may only be forthcoming when the witness, if he is concealing something, is thrown off his guard; and there are cases in which it is necessary to drop a particular issue in the course of cross-examination and to return to it again discreetly at a later stage. On the other hand the length of cross-examination is by no means the criterion of its excellence, and it is lamentably true that lack of skill in advocacy often leads to a failure to appreciate this fact. When irrelevant topics are pursued at great length, and persistence is shown in going over the same ground again and again in the hope of making the witness appear discrepant, some limit must be placed upon the latitude given. Continued irrelevancies and repetitions are not to be endured indefinitely. If after several warnings an advocate persists in abusing his position in this way, he may be directed to resume his seat, but only when the Judge has enquired what are the material matters on which he still desires to cross-examine and is satisfied that no satisfactory reply has been forthcoming from the advocate and that no legitimate questions by him have been shut out. In any case the Judge should make a note of the submission of any advocate as to further questions which he desires to put or as to any specific question which has been disallowed—Brahmaya v. The King, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 442 (444), 40 Cr.L.J. 265, 179 I.C. 783. While it is the duty of every Court to keep the cross-examination of a witness within legitimate bounds it must be careful, in the discharge of that duty, not to exercise too effective a control so as to unduly curtail legitimate cross-examination. Too much interference by the presiding Judge in the course of the cross-examination of witnesses by the Counsel for the accused has, more often than not, the result of robbing the cross-examination of its efficacy and, therefore, undue interference in cross-examination must be avoided by the presiding Judge—Salay Ram v Emp, 38 Cr.L.J. 416 (418), 167 I.C. 515, A.I.R. 1937 All. 171, 1937 A.L.R. 201, 9 R.A. 550.

For procedure of trial in cross-cases see Notes in para 830A.

287. The examination of the accused duly recorded by or

Examination of accused before Magistrate to be evidence. before the committing Magistrate shall be tendered by the prosecutor and read as evidence.

895. "The examination of the accused"—This section contemplates an examination of the accused, although sec. 209 does not make it imperative on the committing Magistrate to examine the accused—Sita, Ratanlal 100 (101). The examination of the accused recorded by the Magistrate should be put in as part of the case for the prosecution, before the accused is called on to enter on his defence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 361; Cal. G. R. & C. O., p. 23.

If the conviction is to be based solely on a statement of the accused, it is fair that the statement should be taken in its entirety, unless there is good reason to the contrary—Kamakka, 12 Cr.L.J. 142, 9 I.C. 790, 2 M.W.N. 199, 9 M.L.T. 316.

Where the prisoner had made two statements before the Magistrate, the one amounting to a confession of the guilt, and the other to a denial thereof, the trial Court ought to consider both the statements and their relative credibility—Soobjan, 10 B.L.R. 332; Mahabir, 18 All. 78. If in an examination of the accused some objectionable questions have been asked by the committing Magistrate, such questions and the answers thereto must be omitted, but the whole examination should not be excluded from evidence—Khudiram, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625. Where the accused was examined about a confession which was not admissible in evidence, the questions and answers to them could not be said to be 'duly recorded' as the questions were not such as were allowed by the law to be put; and the answers to these questions were not admissible in evidence against the accused—Gang Gye, 4 L.B.R. 244, 8 Cr.L.J. 62.

This section permits a previous statement of the accused to be read as a part of the case for the prosecution only so far as such statement refers to the offence (i.e., the present offence) for which the accused is being tried, and not so far as it relates to a previous conviction. The portion as to previous conviction cannot be read out to the jury or assessors under sec. 310 until they have given their verdict or opinion—Tata Ahir, 5 P.L.J. 705, 22 Cr.L.J. 219, 60 I.C. 331. See also Ghous Baksh Muhammad Amin v. Emp., in Note 945.

The examination of the accused before the committing Magistrate must be given in evidence at the trial. It is not optional with the prosecution to put in such statement or not. If it is not tendered by the prosecution, the Judge is bound to call for it—Rama Tevan, 15 Mad. 352; Ameer Chand, 13 W.R. 63.

The accused, when asked by the committing Magistrate, if he wished to make any statement, said that he did not. The following day he made a statement to the Superintendent of the District Jail and asked that it might be placed on the record. The Superintendent forwarded the statement to the Magistrate who examined the accused with reference to the statement and filed it with the case at the request of the accused. Held that the statement was admissible in evidence under this section—Chidambaram, 32 Mad. 3 (15).

"Committing Magistrate" :—The phrase 'committing Magistrate' in secs. 287 and 288 is merely a convenient way of referring to the Magistrate or Magistrates who held the preliminary inquiry on which the committal was made. Where a subordinate Magistrate inquired into a case and discharged the accused, and the District Magistrate acting under sec. 436 (now 437) committed the accused for trial, the examination recorded by the subordinate Magistrate would be the examination recorded by the 'committing Magistrate' within the meaning of this section—Malinga, 31 Mad. 40, 7 Cr.L.J. 29. Where the Magistrate, who recorded the statement of the accused, was subsequently transferred and the case was eventually committed to the Court of Sessions by his successor; held that the statement was rightly admitted in evidence under this section in view of sec. 350, Cr. P. Code—Ghulam, 7 Lah. 70.

Read as evidence :—Where in the Committing Magistrate's Court the accused made admission, it is evidence under this section—Mosaheb Dome v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 14 (15), 40 Cr.L.J. 833, 183 I.C. 660, 1939 P.W.N. 627.

288. The evidence of a witness duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Chapter XVIII may, in the discretion of the presiding Judge, if such witness is produced and examined, be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

895A. Change:—The word 'record' has been substituted for 'taken'; the words "under Chapter XVIII" have been substituted for the words "before the committing Magistrate," and the italicised words at the end of the section have been newly added, by section 78 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment, XVIII of 1923. "The words 'under Chapter XVIII' have been used in place of the 'committing Magistrate' to cover the case of evidence recorded by a Magistrate, other than the committing Magistrate, under sec. 219"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916. The amendment of the section by substituting the words 'duly recorded in presence of the accused under Chapter XVIII' for the words "duly taken in the presence of the accused before the committing Magistrate" is intended to cover cases where evidence may be recorded by the committing Magistrate but not for the purpose of commitment, as under sec. 219, Cr. P. Code. Besides, there is no special procedure laid down in Ch. XVIII for recording evidence; and any evidence recorded by a Magistrate before commitment, whether recorded with a view to commitment or in the ordinary course of trial, is evidence "recorded in the presence of the accused under Ch. XVIII"—Abdul Gani, 53 Cal. 181, 42 C.L.J. 205, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 235, 90 I.C. 537, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577. See also Nagendra, in Note 896, where a contrary view was taken.

896. Object and scope of section:—This section should be applied when there is reason to believe that a witness who is produced before the Court of Session is departing from the evidence, which he gave before the Magistrate in the preliminary inquiry, and consequently it is considered desirable by the Judge to bring the whole statement made before the Magistrate on record as substantive evidence—Abdul Jalil, 1930 A.L.J. 1105, 32 Cr.L.J. 152; Mulu, 2 All 646.

This section refers only to the evidence of witnesses recorded under Chap. XVIII. It does not contemplate statements made by witnesses before a Police officer or to an investigating Magistrate—Sankappa, 31 Mad 127, 7 Cr.L.J. 325; or a statement made by a witness at a search—Venkat Row, 36 Mad. 159; or a statement given by a witness before a monigar—Malaya, 42 M.L.J. 278, 23 Cr.L.J. 262, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 303.

Evidence of approver:—Where a conditional pardon was tendered to an accomplice, and he was examined as a witness before the committing Magistrate, his deposition made before the Magistrate may be used as evidence against the accused, even if it is retracted at the Sessions trial—Soneju, 21 All 175; Rama Tevan, 15 Mad 352; Bhola Nath v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All. 557 (572), 1939 A.L.J. 785, 40 Cr.L.J. 856, 184 I.C. 191, 1 L.R. 1939 All. 736. See also Faqir Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Lah 429 (431), 41 P.L.R. 333. The reliability of such statement is no doubt injuriously affected by the fact of its being retracted before the Sessions Court, but it does not follow that it is not entitled to any weight or credibility—Punhu, 8 S.L.R. 203, 16 Cr.L.J. 233. If the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the statement of an approver made before the committing Magistrate (though retracted at the trial) was a substantially truthful evidence and the record contains ample corroboration of almost all the facts deposed to by him, the Judge can regard the statement as evidence along with the evidence of other witnesses—Bhikari Pati, 9 Pat 592, 32 Cr.L.J. 66 (69), 128 I.C. 114, A.I.R. 1930 Pat 545, 11 P.L.T. 787, 1930 Cr.C. 1089, Ind Rul 1931 Pat 2. It is open to the Judge under the provisions of law to hold that the statement made by the approver before the Committing Magistrate is a correct statement and that it should be relied upon in spite of the statements which the approver introduces before him in the Court of Session—Bhola Nath v. Emp., supra.

"Duly recorded in the presence of accused".—A statement made in the absence of the accused cannot be treated as evidence against him under this section—Pathana, 3 P.R. 1904; Alimuddin, 23 Cal 361; Gulaba, 35 All 260, 14 Cr.L.J. 211. So also, where the accused was merely allowed to be present but was not allowed to cross-examine the witnesses before the committing Magistrate, the evidence of such witnesses cannot be said to be duly taken in the presence of the accused, and cannot be treated as evidence under this section. To allow the accused to be present merely to hear such ex parte statement of witnesses without allowing him to rebut the statements by cross-examination defeats the real object of the law, for it deprives the accused of any substantial benefit from being present—Sagal, 21 Cal 642 (665). The prosecution witnesses were examined by the Committing Magistrate in a hospital where both the deceased and the accused were in-door patients. The accused declined to cross-examine them alleging that he was not in a proper condition to do so or to follow their evidence properly. The prosecution witnesses were, therefore, again tendered for cross-examination when they all went back upon their previous statements and supported the defence version. Held that the statements of the witnesses on the first day were duly recorded within the meaning of this section and could legally be treated as evidence in the case—Muhammad Aslam Khan, 28 Cr.L.J. 33, 99 I.C. 65, A.I.R. 1926 Lah 590, 27 P.L.R. 469, 9 Lah.L.J. 45.

The accused was convicted in a case which was tried as a warrant case. The appellate Court set aside the conviction, observing that if the Magistrate wished to proceed further he might commit the accused to the Court of Sessions. Thereupon the Magistrate, without holding any enquiry under Chap. XVIII of the Code, committed the accused to the Court of Sessions. Held that the accused would not be able to make use of the statements made by the prosecution witnesses at that trial for all purposes as he might under this section, if there had been an inquiry held according to the provisions of Chap XVIII—Nagendra, 33 Cr.L.J. 770, 139 I.C. 470, 36 C.W.N. 926, 1932 Cr.C. 636, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 683, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal 628. But see Abdul Gani in Note 895A, where a contrary view was taken.

Following Abdul Gani, supra, the Lahore High Court has very recently held that provided a Magistrate, in acting under sec. 347, Cr. P. C., commits the accused subject to the safeguards relating to the rights of the accused as provided for in secs 208, 211, 212 and 213, Cr. P. C., any statement recorded by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused prior to the commitment would be the evidence of a witness duly recorded under Chap. XVIII, and may therefore be transferred and treated as substantive evidence in the trial before the Sessions Court—Fazal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 389 (391), I.L.R. 1940 Lah. 151.

897. "Produced and examined":—The evidence of witnesses given before the committing Magistrate may be used as evidence if the witnesses have been produced and examined at the trial; a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a person who has since disappeared is inadmissible in evidence, because the witness is not produced and examined before the Sessions Judge—Ajodhi, 16 N.L.R. 30, 21 Cr.L.J. 486. See also Natha Singh, 35 Cr.L.J. 349 (351), 147 I.C. 234, 35 P.L.R. 75, 1934 Cr.C. 447, A.I.R. 1934 Lah 212. If the witness is incapable of giving his evidence, his deposition before the committing Magistrate can be admitted in evidence under section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act—Natha Singh, supra. The witnesses who had given deposition before the committing Magistrate must be examined by the Judge, before the former deposition can be treated as evidence. The mere examination of the witness by the Judge as to his making the deposition before the committing Magistrate, is not an examination within the meaning of this section—Subba, 9 Mad. 83. Mere producing of the witnesses is not sufficient; they must be produced and examined, i.e., examined as witnesses, and not merely cross-examined or tendered for cross-examination. Where certain prosecution witnesses who had given evidence before the committing Magistrate were not examined by the Sessions Judge afresh, but their depositions were read out to them, and the accused was allowed to cross-examine them, the procedure was illegal—Subba, supra; Kottagadu, 1915 M.W.N. 544, 16 Cr.L.J. 615. If a witness who has given an important piece of evidence before the committing Magistrate, is not examined by the Sessions Judge, but is merely tendered for cross-examination, and even in his cross-examination he is asked certain unimportant questions having no bearing upon the story of the offence, the Sessions Judge acts illegally in mentioning to the jury the statement made by that witness before the committing Magistrate, for such a procedure would amount to treating as evidence what has not been put on record as evidence—Khadem, 57 Cal. 940, 32 Cr.L.J. 180 (182), 128 I.C. 801, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 706, Ind Rul. 1931 Cal. 97, 1930 Cr.C. 1106. In this case the deposition in the committing Magistrate's Court was not put in under this section. It was also held that it would have been unfair to have put it under this section in the circumstances of this particular case. This section does not allow the use of the deposition as a substitute for examination at the trial. This section is not exception to sec. 286; it does not dispense with the examination of the witnesses directed by sec. 286—Subba, 9 Mad. 83. Further, the statements made by a witness before the committing Magistrate should not be read out to the witness in the trial before the defence has had an opportunity of cross-examining him—Narain Das, 3 Lah. 144 (154), 23 Cr.L.J. 513.

Moreover, the deposition of the witness before the committing Magistrate can be used as evidence if the witness is examined at the trial as a witness. Where the witness before the committing Magistrate, being found concerned in the offence, was committed to take his trial along with the accused in the case, the deposition in the Magistrate's Court could not be treated as evidence against the accused under this section, he not being a witness in the trial—Shibdayal, 23 P.R. 1883.

898. Retracted statement:—Where the witnesses made certain statements implicating the accused, before the committing Magistrate, but at the trial before the

Sessions Judge they resiled from those statements and told an altogether different story, held, that the statements before the committing Magistrate were not merely relevant for the purpose of contradicting or negating the statements made before the Court of Sessions under sec 155, Evidence Act, but that under sec 288 could also be treated as "evidence in the case," i.e., as substantive evidence of all the facts therein deposed to—Maruti, 46 Bom. 97, 22 Cr.L.J. 636; Amir Zaman, 6 Lah. 199, 26 P.L.R. 361, 26 Cr.L.J. 1245; Ala Singh, 29 Cr.L.J. 73, 106 I.C. 585; Abdul Gani, 53 Cal 181, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577; Tulli, 47 All 276, 26 Cr.L.J. 450; Rakha, 6 Lah. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 438; Bahadur, 88 I.C. 7, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 289, 19 S.L.R. 71, 26 Cr.L.J. 1063; Puran, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 743, 15 Lah. 765, 149 I.C. 476, 35 Cr.L.J. 1005, 1934 Cr.C. 1095; Shankar, 35 Cr.L.J. 894, 149 I.C. 69, 1934 Cr.C. 673, 11 O.W.N. 636, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 222; Samero, 37 Cr.L.J. 1045, 164 I.C. 1036, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 140. See also Ram Gobinda Ghosh v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 625, 175 I.C. 529, 10 R.C. 802, 42 C.W.N. 781, A.I.R. 1938 Cal 364; Kataru Chinna Papiiah, A.I.R. 1940 Mad 136 (137), 1939 M.W.N. 1134, 50 M.L.W. 742, 1939 M.Cr.C. 282, 41 Cr.L.J. 323, 186 I.C. 484. A certain witness made a statement before the committing Magistrate, but resiled from that statement before the Sessions Judge, whereupon his statement made before the committing Magistrate was put in evidence under sec. 288, and in order to corroborate this statement, a statement made by that witness before the Police was proved and put in evidence. Held that the statement made before the committing Magistrate was 'testimony' within the meaning of sec. 157 of the Evidence Act, and therefore the prior statement made before the Police was admissible in evidence to corroborate the statement made before the committing Magistrate—Mam Chand, 5 Lah. 324 (328), 25 Cr.L.J. 1201. So also, a statement by a witness recorded by a Magistrate under sec. 164 is admissible in evidence to corroborate the statement made by that witness before the committing Magistrate, from which he subsequently resiled in the Sessions Court—Velliah Kone, 45 Mad 766, followed in Manarali, 37 C.W.N. 1066 (1068), 58 C.L.J. 60, 60 Cal 1339, 147 I.C. 1203, A.I.R. 1934 Cal 124, 1934 Cr.C. 169, 35 Cr.L.J. 567; Mathura Tewari, 8 Pat 625, 120 I.C. 37, A.I.R. 1929 Pat 343, 1929 Cr.C. 155, 30 Cr.C. 1136, 10 P.L.T. 177, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 677. So also a statement by a witness recorded by a Magistrate under sec 512, Cr. P. C., may be used to corroborate his statement before the committing Magistrate from which he subsequently resiled in the Court of Sessions—Lajji Rai, 37 Cr.L.J. 235 (238), 160 I.C. 181, A.I.R. 1936 Pat 11, 1936 Cr.C. 6, 16 P.L.T. 730. But the admission of the deposition in the committing Magistrate's Court in which witness admitted having made a certain statement when examined under sec 164, Cr. P. C., does not entail the admission of the statement under sec 164 as substantive evidence in the case. It is a statement which can be used simply to contradict the witness and to show that the witness is unreliable with a view to taking his evidence out of the case which otherwise might react unfavourably upon the evidence of other prosecution witnesses—Karuppana, 28 Cr.L.J. 279, 100 I.C. 359, A.I.R. 1927 Mad 1112. Where a Sessions Judge, being of opinion that certain prosecution witnesses had been gained over by the accused, allowed their depositions given before the committing Magistrate to be received in evidence, held that this section enabled the Court to treat such depositions as substantive evidence in the case at the trial. Such evidence may be used as much in favour of the defence as of the prosecution, and not merely for the purpose of contradicting the witnesses at the Sessions trial—Dorai Sami, 24 Mad 414, Gansa Oraon, 2 Pat 517, 24 Cr.L.J. 641. See also Kataru Chinna Papiiah, supra. Depositions of witnesses taken before the committing Magistrate, and subsequently retracted before the Session Judge, may, in the discretion of the Judge, be admitted in evidence at the trial in the Sessions Court; and when so admitted, they are on the same footing as any other evidence on the record—Dwarka, 28 All 383; Mamchand, 5 Lah 324 (328), 25 Cr.L.J. 1201; Velliah, 45 Mad. 766, 43 M.L.J. 222. That is, the evidence recorded by the committing Magistrate, even though retracted in the Sessions Court, may be considered by the jury or by the assessors and the Judge, as part of the material or as substantive evidence upon which the verdict or the finding has to be given—Umar, 51 P.R. 1887; Abdul Gani, 53 Cal. 181, 42 C.L.J. 205,

A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 235, 90 I.C. 537, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577; Fazaruddin, 42 C.L.J. 111, 26 Cr.L.J. 1553, 90 I.C. 433, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 105; Basappa, 86 I.C. 145, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 266, 26 Cr.L.J. 705. This course is justified when there is a close relationship between the witnesses and the accused—Krishna, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 479 (482), 1935 M.W.N. 82, 1934 M.Cr.C. 378, 1935 Cr.C. 742, 157 I.C. 297, 36 Cr.L.J. 1107. Where the wife of the accused while deposing in the Court of Sessions resiled from her statement before the committing Court which was corroborated by her statement recorded under sec 164, Cr. P. C., the Madras High Court accepted the statement made before the committing Magistrate in preference to the statement before the Court of Sessions and based a conviction of the accused thereon—Vellai Kone, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 20, 72 I.C. 529, 24 Cr.L.J. 417, 43 M.L.J. 222, 45 Mad 766, 16 M.L.W. 239, 1922 M.W.N. 506, 31 M.L.T. 175. But there is nothing in this section which prescribes the value or weight to be attached to the evidence. Whether any portion or the whole of the evidence given before the committing Magistrate is entitled to credit, and if so, to such a degree that a conviction may be based upon it wholly or in part, are very important questions for the jury and the assessors, but they are in no way affected by this section—Umar, 51 P.R. 1887. It is a matter for the discretion of the Judge whether such evidence should be used in the interests of justice. In many cases it would be extremely dangerous to rely upon such evidence where the witnesses have proved themselves in the Sessions Court altogether unworthy of credit—Gansa Oraon, 2 Pat. 517, 24 Cr.L.J. 641. A judgment may be based upon the deposition taken before the committing Magistrate, which has been retracted at the trial, when the Sessions Court can see special reason for believing the original statement to be true either from the statements of the same witnesses before itself or when that statement is to a certain extent corroborated by independent testimony. If there is no such corroborative evidence, it is not proper to base a conviction solely upon the deposition given before the Magistrate—Jeochi, 21 All. 111; Amanulla, 21 W.R. 49; Jadub Das, 27 Cal. 295 (306), 4 C.W.N. 129; Mamchand, 5 Lah. 324 (328), 25 Cr.L.J. 1201; Rangi, 10 Mad 295 (314); Bharmappa, 12 Mad 123; Nirmal Das, 22 All 445; Somadu, 47 Mad. 232, 25 Cr.L.J. 715; Pirithi, 37 P.R. 1917, 18 Cr.L.J. 703; Nga Nyein, 11 Rang 4, 1933 Cr.C. 452 (454), 142 I.C. 87, 34 Cr.L.J. 286, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 57; see also Note 915 (18); especially when there is nothing on the record to show that the witnesses have in fact become hostile or have been won over by the accused—Pahalwan, 35 Cr.L.J. 797 (799), 148 I.C. 937, 10 Luck. 1, 11 O.W.N. 508, 1934 Cr.C. 578, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 182. A conviction based solely on evidence given by the witnesses before the committing Magistrate and retracted by them at the trial is unsustainable—Sher Dil, 17 P.R. 1919, 20 Cr.L.J. 792, 53 I.C. 696. The evidence of such a witness is not to be safely relied upon in the absence of corroboration—Kataru Chinna Papiiah, A.I.R. 1940 Mad 136 (137), 1939 M.W.N. 1134, 50 M.L.W. 742, 1939 M.Cr.C. 282, 41 Cr.L.J. 323 (324), 186 I.C. 484. If it were permissible to convict an accused person, relying solely upon the evidence given by a witness before the committing Magistrate, the logical consequence would be that the taking of evidence before the Sessions Court might be altogether dispensed with—Amanulla, 21 W.R. 49. Evidence given before a committing Magistrate cannot be effectually utilised in support of a conviction unless it is shown by other corroborative evidence that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for the evidence given at the trial—Jehal Teli, 3 Pat. 781 (794), 6 P.L.T. 53, 26 Cr.L.J. 270; Lalji Rai, 37 Cr.L.J. 235 (238), 160 I.C. 181, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 11, 1936 Cr.C. 6, 16 P.L.T. 730; Jadub Das, 27 Cal 295 (306); Bigna Kumhar, 27 Cr.L.J. 591, 91 I.C. 258, A.I.R. 1926 Pat 440; Nebti Mandal, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 289 (293), 1940 P.W.N. 73. This view of law was, however, dissented from by the Allahabad High Court in Raja Ram, 36 Cr.L.J. 823, 155 I.C. 657, A.I.R. 1935 All. 691, 1935 A.L.J. 668 and by the Lahore High Court in Narain Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 567 (568), 162 I.C. 379, A.I.R. 1936 Lah 357, 17 Lah 419, 38 P.L.R. 820, 1936 Cr.C. 298, where it has been held that there is nothing in this section to show that there need be corroboration of evidence so recorded, that it has like other evidence to be examined with care and to be considered with all the other surrounding circumstances and that no general law can, therefore, be laid down as to this. The evidence of prosecution witnesses recorded before the committing Magistrate and transferred to the record of the Sessions Court, under the provisions of this section, is on the same footing with all other evidence in the case for all purposes and it is not necessary that there should be 'corroboration of those statement otherwise'—Parmanand v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 340 (347), 1940 N.L.J. 459. A conviction cannot be based upon statements of witnesses made before the committing Magistrate, when they afterwards came forward before the Sessions Judge and gave only circumstantial evidence insufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the crime—Ghanuara, 1915 P.W.R. 15, 16 Cr.L.J. 612. A Sessions Judge does not show a proper discretion in allowing a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a witness to be used as evidence under this section, when the witness repudiates it at the Sessions and says that it was given under pressure from the police in the course of the investigation—Bhut Nath, 7 C.W.N. 345 (350). In such a case the Judge should make some inquiry by examining the Inspector of Police regarding the restraint and pressure put upon the witness, before admitting such statement as evidence—Bajragi, 4 C.W.N. 49 (55); Jadub Das, 27 Cal. 295 (300).

Where every one of the witnesses for the prosecution has been demonstrated at the trial to have contradicted the statement that he made before the Committing Magistrate it would not be safe to convict the accused—Harnam Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 765, 169 I.C. 434, 10 R.L. 13, 39 P.L.R. 555, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 597.

899. "Subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act":—These words do not mean that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can only be utilized at a trial in a case where the Evidence Act specifically authorises its use. Such a construction is erroneous, because there are only certain sections in the Evidence Act (secs 32, 33, 145, 155, 157) which can in any way be regarded as even remotely dealing with this subject, but none have any direct bearing. There is indeed in the Evidence Act nothing at all which permits or specifically provides for the use of evidence taken before a Magistrate as evidence at a trial. What is really meant by the words is that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can be used for all purposes in a trial Court so long as the evidence is 'evidence' within the meaning of the Evidence Act, i.e., if the matter contained therein is, according to the rules laid down in the Evidence Act, of evidential value. For instance, hearsay evidence taken before a Magistrate would not be capable of being utilized by a Sessions Judge as of evidential value at the trial. These words may also probably mean that the evidence taken before a Magistrate can only be used at the trial subject to the procedure laid down in the Evidence Act—Jehal Teli, 3 Pat. 781 (788-790), 6 P.L.T. 53, 26 Cr.L.J. 270; Bahadur, 19 S.L.R. 71, 26 Cr.L.J. 1063.

The words 'for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act' do not mean that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate can be used in the Court of Session only for the purpose of corroboration and contradiction in accordance with sections 155 and 157 of the Evidence Act. Such evidence may be acted upon by the Sessions Court precisely as if that evidence has been deposed to before the Sessions Judge. The words merely mean that the law of evidence enacted in the Evidence Act must be complied with. For instance, evidence which had been wrongly admitted by the committing Magistrate, in violation of the provisions of the Evidence Act, cannot be transferred to the file of the Sessions Judge and used at the trial. The amendment is obviously introduced for the purpose of removing any doubts as to the right of the Court to treat the evidence given before the committing Magistrate as substantive evidence in the trial, when such evidence has in the discretion of the trial Court been properly brought on that Court's record—Amir Zaman, 6 Lah. 199, 26 P.L.R. 361, 26 Cr.L.J. 1245; Abdul Gani, 53 Cal. 181, 42 C.L.J. 205, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577; Basappa, 27 Bom.L.R. 113, 26 Cr.L.J. 705, 86 I.C. 145, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 266; Behari, 49 All. 251, 27 Cr.L.J. 1365 (1367). The words "subject Evidence Act" mean nothing more than that such statements should not contain matters which would be irrelevant or inadmissible under the Evidence Act—Behari, supra. See also Bahadur, 26 Cr.L.J. 1063, 88 I.C. 7, 19 S.L.R. 71, A.I.R. 1925 Sind. 289.

accused as with the case for the prosecution. The proof of the case against the prisoners must depend for its support not upon the absence or weakness of explanation on their part, but upon the positive and affirmative evidence of their guilt that is given by the Crown—Mamfru, 51 Cal. 418 (425, 426).

Witnesses not examined before the Committing Magistrate:—The prosecution cannot demand, as of right, that any witness not examined in the preliminary inquiry should be called and examined at the trial. But the Court, if it considers necessary, may call and examine him—Heyfield, 14 All. 212, 1892 A.W.N. 63. But the mere fact that a witness has not been examined before the committing Magistrate, is no ground for refusing to take the evidence of such witness, if he is a relevant witness. There is nothing in the Code which restricts the examination at the trial only to the witnesses examined before the committing Magistrate. But the prosecutor should, as a matter of justice and fairness to the accused, state in his opening address the name of such witness—Khan Muhammad, 1889 P.R. 1; Dhondiba, 36 Cr.L.J. 344, 153 I.C. 278, 36 Bom.L.R. 950, A.I.R. 1934 Bom 487, 1934 Cr.C. 1413; Muhammad Panah, 35 Cr.L.J. 1170 (1173), 150 I.C. 917, 1934 Cr.C. 732, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 78. The general effect of a consideration of relevant sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that the prosecutor is at liberty to examine witnesses in the Sessions Court which he has not produced in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, but that only those witnesses so examined in the Committing Magistrate's Court can be bound down to attend in the Sessions Court. The prosecution in the Sessions Court, if the witnesses are not examined in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, has to depend upon such witnesses being willing to give evidence without being bound down to appear, or upon being able to persuade the Court to act under sec. 540, Cr. P. C., and summon such a witness. In accordance with the practice in the English Courts, a summary of the evidence proposed to be called should be given to the Sessions Court and the accused before trial, if a witness has not been called in the Committing Magistrate's Court. There is no provision in the Cr. P. C., making this course compulsory, but, in fairness to the accused, it should be followed—Namat, 37 Cr.L.J. 742 (745, 746), 162 I.C. 976, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 533, 17 Lah 176, 38 P.L.R. 421, 1936 Cr.C. 568 (F.B.).

If the Public Prosecutor produces a new witness at the Sessions trial, and if he is not allowed to examine him as his own witness, then it would be the duty of the Court to examine him as a Court witness. If this were done, then an opportunity of cross-examining must be allowed both to the Prosecutor and to the accused. It will be therefore rather to the advantage of the prosecution that such a witness be examined as a Court witness and to the advantage of the accused that he should be examined in the ordinary way as a witness for the prosecution—Muhammad Panah, supra.

894. Cross-examination:—As a rule, the cross-examination of a witness should take place after his examination-in-chief, and cannot be postponed. There is no provision of law which authorises the Judge to allow all the prosecution witnesses to be examined at once, and to permit the cross-examination to be reserved for a subsequent date—Gothuri Venkatappa, 2 Weir 381. But though the accused is not entitled to such postponement as of right, still there is no reason why the Sessions Judge should refuse an application for such postponement where the application was a reasonable one under the circumstances of the case—Sadasiv, 41 Cal. 299, 15 Cr.L.J. 596.

A Sessions Judge is not justified in stopping the cross-examination and turning the witness out of Court because he is of opinion that the witness is not speaking the truth—Meharban, 1900 A.W.N. 149.

A Judge is and always must be in control of the proceedings in his Court. On the other hand, the right of cross-examination must be carefully guarded, and it must be remembered that it may be necessary for an advocate to approach delicately and with caution the point upon which he is seeking to obtain admissions. It may be important that a witness whom he does not consider truthful should not be put on his guard by immediate presentation of the case set up by the opposing side. If questions are couched in too blunt a form he may readily deny them. Hence considerable no general law can, therefore, be laid down as to this. The evidence of prosecution witnesses recorded before the committing Magistrate and transferred to the record of the Sessions Court, under the provisions of this section, is on the same footing with all other evidence in the case for all purposes and it is not necessary that there should be 'corroboration of those statement otherwise'—Parmanand v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag 340 (347), 1940 N.L.J. 459. A conviction cannot be based upon statements of witnesses made before the committing Magistrate, when they afterwards came forward before the Sessions Judge and gave only circumstantial evidence insufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the crime—Ghanwara, 1915 P.W.R. 15, 16 Cr.L.J. 612. A Sessions Judge does not show a proper discretion in allowing a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a witness to be used as evidence under this section, when the witness repudiates it at the Sessions and says that it was given under pressure from the police in the course of the investigation—Bhut Nath, 7 C.W.N. 345 (350). In such a case the Judge should make some inquiry by examining the Inspector of Police regarding the restraint and pressure put upon the witness, before admitting such statement as evidence—Bajragi, 4 C.W.N. 49 (55); Jadub Das, 27 Cal. 295 (300).

Where every one of the witnesses for the prosecution has been demonstrated at the trial to have contradicted the statement that he made before the Committing Magistrate it would not be safe to convict the accused—Harnam Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 765, 169 I.C. 434, 10 R.L. 13, 39 P.L.R. 555, A.I.R. 1937 Lah 597.

This course is justified when there is a close relationship between the witnesses and the accused—Krishna, A.I.R. 1935 Mad 479 (482), 1935 M.W.N. 82, 1934 M.Cr.C. 378, 1935 Cr.C. 742, 157 I.C. 297, 36 Cr.L.J. 1107. Where the wife of the accused while deposing in the Court of Sessions resiled from her statement before the committing Court which was corroborated by her statement recorded under sec 164, Cr P. C., the Madras High Court accepted the statement made before the committing Magistrate in preference to the statement before the Court of Sessions and based a conviction of the accused thereon—Vellai Kone, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 20, 72 I.C. 529, 24 Cr.L.J. 417, 43 M.L.J. 222, 45 Mad. 766, 16 M.L.W. 239, 1922 M.W.N. 506, 31 M.L.T. 175. But there is nothing in this section which prescribes the value or weight to be attached to the evidence. Whether any portion or the whole of the evidence given before the committing Magistrate is entitled to credit, and if so, to such a degree that a conviction may be based upon it wholly or in part, are very important questions for the jury and the assessors, but they are in no way affected by this section—Umar, 51 P.R. 1887. It is a matter for the discretion of the Judge whether such evidence should be used in the interests of justice. In many cases it would be extremely dangerous to rely upon such evidence where the witnesses have proved themselves in the Sessions Court altogether unworthy of credit—Gansa Oraon, 2 Pat. 517, 24 Cr.L.J. 641. A judgment may be based upon the deposition taken before the committing Magistrate, which has been retracted at the trial, when the Sessions Court can see special reason for believing the original statement to be true either from the statements of the same witnesses before itself or when that statement is to a certain extent corroborated by independent testimony. A conviction based solely on evidence given by the witnesses before the committing Magistrate and retracted by them at the trial is unsustainable—Sher Dil, 17 P.R. 1919, 20 Cr.L.J. 792, 53 I.C. 696. The evidence of such a witness is not to be safely relied upon in the absence of corroboration—Kataru Chinna Pappiah, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 136 (137), 1939 M.W.N. 1134, 50 M.L.W. 742, 1939 M.Cr.C. 282, 41 Cr.L.J. 323 (324), 186 I.C. 484. If it were permissible to convict an accused person, relying solely upon the evidence given by a witness before the committing Magistrate, the logical consequence would be that the taking of evidence before the Sessions Court might be altogether dispensed with—Amanulla, 21 W.R. 49. Evidence given before a committing Magistrate cannot be effectually utilised in support of a conviction unless it is shown by other corroborative evidence that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for the evidence given at the trial—Jehal Teli, 3 Pat. 781 (794), 6 P.L.T. 53, 26 Cr.L.J. 270; Lalji Rai, 37 Cr.L.J. 235 (238), 160 I.C. 181, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 11, 1936 Cr.C. 6, 16 P.L.T. 730; Jadub Das, 27 Cal. 295 (306); Bigna Kumhar, 27 Cr.L.J. 591, 94 I.C. 258, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 440; Nebti Mandal, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 289 (293), 1940 P.W.N. 73. This view of law was, however, dissented from by the Allahabad High Court in Raja Ram, 36 Cr.L.J. 823, 155 I.C. 657, A.I.R. 1935 All. 691, 1935 A.L.J. 668 and by the Lahore High Court in Narinjan Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 567 (568), 162 I.C. 379, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 357, 17 Lah. 419, 38 P.L.R. 820, 1936 Cr.C. 298, where it has been held that there is nothing in this section to show that there need be corroboration of evidence so recorded, that it has like other evidence to be examined with care and to be considered with all the other surrounding circumstances and that no general law can, therefore, be laid down as to this. The evidence of prosecution witnesses recorded before the committing Magistrate and transferred to the record of the Sessions Court, under the provisions of this section, is on the same footing with all other evidence in the case for all purposes and it is not necessary that there should be 'corroboration of those statement otherwise'—Parmanand v Emp, AIR. 1940 Nag 340 (347), 1940 N.L.J. 459. A conviction cannot be based upon statements of witnesses made before the committing Magistrate, when they afterwards came forward before the Sessions Judge and gave only circumstantial evidence insufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the crime—Ghanwara, 1915 P.W.R. 15, 16 Cr.L.J. 612. A Sessions Judge does not show a proper discretion in allowing a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a witness to be used as evidence under this section, when the witness repudiates it at the Sessions and says that it was given under pressure from the police in the course of the investigation—Bhut Nath, 7 C.W.N. 345 (350). In such a case the Judge should make some inquiry by examining the Inspector of Police regarding the restraint and pressure put upon the witness, before admitting such statement as evidence—Bajragi, 4 C.W.N. 49 (55); Jadub Das, 27 Cal. 295 (300).

Where every one of the witnesses for the prosecution has been demonstrated at the trial to have contradicted the statement that he made before the Committing Magistrate it would not be safe to convict the accused—Harnam Singh v. Emp, 38 Cr.L.J. 765, 169 I.C. 434, 10 R.L. 13, 39 P.L.R. 555, AIR. 1937 Lah 597.

899. "Subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act":—These words do not mean that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can only be utilized at a trial in a case where the Evidence Act specifically authorises its use. Such a construction is erroneous, because there are only certain sections in the Evidence Act (secs 32, 33, 145, 155, 157) which can in any way be regarded as even remotely dealing with this subject, but none have any direct bearing. There is indeed in the Evidence Act nothing at all which permits or specifically provides for the use of evidence taken before a Magistrate as evidence at a trial. What is really meant by the words is that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can be used for all purposes in a trial Court so long as the evidence is 'evidence' within the meaning of the Evidence Act, i.e., if the matter contained therein is, according to the rules laid down in the Evidence Act, of evidential value. For instance, hearsay evidence taken before a Magistrate would not be capable of being utilized by a Sessions Judge as of evidential value at the trial. These words may also probably mean that the evidence taken before a Magistrate can only be used at the trial subject to the procedure laid down in the Evidence Act—Jehal Teli, 3 Pat 781 (788-790), 6 P.L.T. 53, 26 Cr.L.J. 270; Bahadur, 19 S.L.R. 71, 26 Cr.L.J. 1063.

The words 'for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act' do not mean that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate can be used in the Court of Session only for the purpose of corroboration and contradiction in accordance with sections 155 and 157 of the Evidence Act. Such evidence may be acted upon by the Sessions Court precisely as if that evidence has been deposed to before the Sessions Judge. The words merely mean that the law of evidence enacted in the Evidence Act must be complied with. For instance, evidence which had been wrongly admitted by the committing Magistrate, in violation of the provisions of the Evidence Act, cannot be transferred to the file of the Sessions Judge and used at the trial. The amendment is obviously introduced for the purpose of removing any doubts as to the right of the Court to treat the evidence given before the committing Magistrate as substantive evidence in the trial, when such evidence has in the discretion of the trial Court been properly brought on that Court's record—Amir Zaman, 6 Lah. 199, 26 P.L.R. 361, 26 Cr.L.J. 1245; Abdul Gam, 53 Cal. 181, 42 C.L.J. 205, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577; Basappa, 27 Bom.L.R. 113, 26 Cr.L.J. 705, 86 I.C. 145, AIR 1925 Bom. 266; Behari, 49 All. 251, 27 Cr.L.J. 1365 (1367). The words "subject Evidence Act" mean nothing more than that such statements should not contain matters which would be irrelevant or inadmissible under the Evidence Act—Behari, supra. See also Bahadur, 26 Cr.L.J. 1063, 88 I.C. 7, 19 S.L.R. 71, AIR. 1925 Sind 289.

accused as with the case for the prosecution. The proof of the case against the prisoners must depend for its support not upon the absence or weakness of explanation on their part, but upon the positive and affirmative evidence of their guilt that is given by the Crown—Mamru, 51 Cal. 418 (425, 426).

Witnesses not examined before the Committing Magistrate:—The prosecution cannot demand, as of right, that any witness not examined in the preliminary inquiry should be called and examined at the trial. But the Court, if it considers necessary, may call and examine him—Heyfield, 14 All. 212, 1892 A.W.N. 63. But the mere fact that a witness has not been examined before the committing Magistrate, is no ground for refusing to take the evidence of such witness, if he is a relevant witness. There is nothing in the Code which restricts the examination at the trial only to the witnesses examined before the committing Magistrate. But the prosecutor should, as a matter of justice and fairness to the accused, state in his opening address the name of such witness—Khan Muhammad, 1889 P.R. 1; Dhondiba, 36 Cr.L.J. 344, 153 I.C. 278, 36 Bom.L.R. 950, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 487, 1934 Cr.C. 1413; Muhammad Panah, 35 Cr.L.J. 1170 (1173), 150 I.C. 917, 1934 Cr.C. 732, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 78. The general effect of a consideration of relevant sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that the prosecutor is at liberty to examine witnesses in the Sessions Court which he has not produced in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, but that only those witnesses so examined in the Committing Magistrate's Court can be bound down to attend in the Sessions Court. The prosecution in the Sessions Court, if the witnesses are not examined in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, has to depend upon such witnesses being willing to give evidence without being bound down to appear, or upon being able to persuade the Court to act under sec 540, Cr. P. C., and summon such a witness. In accordance with the practice in the English Courts, a summary of the evidence proposed to be called should be given to the Sessions Court and the accused before trial, if a witness has not been called in the Committing Magistrate's Court. There is no provision in the Cr. P. C., making this course compulsory, but, in fairness to the accused, it should be followed—Niamat, 37 Cr.L.J. 742 (745, 746), 162 I.C. 976, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 533, 17 Lah. 176, 38 P.L.R. 421, 1936 Cr.C. 568 (F.B.).

If the Public Prosecutor produces a new witness at the Sessions trial, and if he is not allowed to examine him as his own witness, then it would be the duty of the Court to examine him as a Court witness. If this were done, then an opportunity of cross-examining must be allowed both to the Prosecutor and to the accused. It will be therefore rather to the advantage of the prosecution that such a witness be examined as a Court witness and to the advantage of the accused that he should be examined in the ordinary way as a witness for the prosecution—Muhammad Panah, supra.

894. Cross-examination:—As a rule, the cross-examination of a witness should take place after his examination-in-chief, and cannot be postponed. There is no provision of law which authorises the Judge to allow all the prosecution witnesses to be examined at once, and to permit the cross-examination to be reserved for a subsequent date—Gothuri Venkatappa, 2 Weir 381. But though the accused is not entitled to such postponement as of right, still there is no reason why the Sessions Judge should refuse an application for such postponement where the application was a reasonable one under the circumstances of the case—Sadasiv, 41 Cal. 299, 15 Cr.L.J. 596.

A Sessions Judge is not justified in stopping the cross-examination and turning the witness out of Court because he is of opinion that the witness is not speaking the truth—Meharban, 1900 A.W.N. 149.

A Judge is and always must be in control of the proceedings in his Court. On the other hand, the right of cross-examination must be carefully guarded, and it must be remembered that it may be necessary for an advocate to approach delicately and with caution the point upon which he is seeking to obtain admissions. It may be important that a witness whom he does not consider truthful should not be put on his guard by immediate presentation of the case set up by the opposing side. If questions are couched in too blunt a form he may readily deny them. Hence considerable latitude is desirable since the admissions sought to be elicited may only be forthcoming when the witness, if he is concealing something, is thrown off his guard : and there are cases in which it is necessary to drop a particular issue in the course of cross-examination and to return to it again discreetly at a later stage. On the other hand the length of cross-examination is by no means the criterion of its excellence, and it is lamentably true that lack of skill in advocacy often leads to a failure to appreciate this fact. When irrelevant topics are pursued at great length, and persistence is shown in going over the same ground again and again in the hope of making the witness appear discrepant, some limit must be placed upon the latitude given. Continued irrelevancies and repetitions are not to be endured indefinitely. If after several warnings an advocate persists in abusing his position in this way, he may be directed to resume his seat, but only when the Judge has enquired what are the material matters on which he still desires to cross-examine and is satisfied that no satisfactory reply has been forthcoming from the advocate and that no legitimate questions by him have been shut out. In any case the Judge should make a note of the submission of any advocate as to further questions which he desires to put or as to any specific question which has been disallowed—Brahmayya v. The King, A I.R. 1938 Rang 442 (444), 40 Cr L.J. 265, 179 I.C. 783. While it is the duty of every Court to keep the cross-examination of a witness within legitimate bounds it must be careful, in the discharge of that duty, not to exercise too effective a control so as to unduly curtail legitimate cross-examination. Too much interference by the presiding Judge in the course of the cross-examination of witnesses by the Counsel for the accused has, more often than not, the result of robbing the cross-examination of its efficacy and, therefore, undue interference in cross-examination must be avoided by the presiding Judge—Salay Ram v Emp, 38 Cr L.J. 416 (418), 167 I.C. 515, A I.R. 1937 All 171, 1937 A L.R. 201, 9 R.A. 550.

895. "The examination of the accused"—This section contemplates an examination of the accused, although sec. 209 does not make it imperative on the committing Magistrate to examine the accused—Sita, Ratanlal 100 (101). The examination of the accused recorded by the Magistrate should be put in as part of the case for the prosecution, before the accused is called on to enter on his defence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 361; Cal. G. R. & C. O., p. 23.

If the conviction is to be based solely on a statement of the accused, it is fair that the statement should be taken in its entirety, unless there is good reason to the contrary—Kamakka, 12 Cr L.J. 142, 9 I.C. 790, 2 M.W.N. 199, 9 M.L.T. 316.

Where the prisoner had made two statements before the Magistrate, the one amounting to a confession of the guilt, and the other to a denial thereof, the trial Court ought to consider both the statements and their relative credibility—Soobjan, 10 B.L.R. 332; Mahabir, 18 All 78. If in an examination of the accused some objectionable questions have been asked by the committing Magistrate, such questions and the answers thereto must be omitted, but the whole examination should not be excluded from evidence—Khudiram, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625. Where the accused was examined about a confession which was not admissible in evidence, the questions and answers to them could not be said to be 'duly recorded' as the questions were not such as were allowed by the law to be put; and the answers to these questions were not admissible in evidence against the accused—Gaung Gye, 4 L.B.R. 244, 8 Cr L.J. 62.

This section permits a previous statement of the accused to be read as a part of the case for the prosecution only so far as such statement refers to the offence (i.e., the present offence) for which the accused is being tried, and not so far as it relates to a

It cannot be maintained that the deposition, when admitted under sec. 288, Cr. P. C., can only be used for the purpose of cross-examination within the provisions of sec. 153 of the Indian Evidence Act. This contention is clearly untenable in view of the express provisions of sec. 288 of the Code that it is to be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes; the words "subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872" cannot be read so as to limit the purposes for which it may be used—Fakira v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 498, 167 I.C. 790, 39 P.L.R. 334, 1937 O.L.R. 216, 41 C.W.N. 741, 1937 M.W.N. 546, 9 R.P.C. 231, 1937 A.Cr.C. 74, 3 B.R. 425, 1937 O.W.N. 412, A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 119, 1937 A.L.R. 328, 64 I.A. 148, 46 M.L.W. 134, 39 Bom.L.R. 966, 11 L.R. (1937) Bom. 711, 1937 A.W.R. (P.C. 1128, 1937 A.L.J. 1055, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 323 (P.C.)). See also Nebti Mandal, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 289 (293), 1940 P.W.N. 73.

900. Practice and procedure:—The counsel for the prisoner is not entitled to refer to the deposition for the purpose of contradicting the witness without having drawn the attention of the witness to the alleged contradiction in his deposition, and without having given him an opportunity of explaining it—Zaukar, 31 Cal. 142; Lachmi Lal, 3 P.L.T. 398, 23 Cr.L.J. 218, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 40. Before a Judge can use as evidence the deposition given before the Magistrate, he is bound to let his intention, or the possibility that he may do so, be known to the accused and to the prosecution, in order to afford the accused and the prosecution an opportunity for testing such statement by cross-examination or otherwise dealing with such statement as part of the case which may be taken into consideration by the Judge. Otherwise it is impossible for the prosecution or the defence to deal with the matters which may influence the Judge's mind in coming to a decision—Behari, 1886 A.W.N. 256; Musa, 30 Cr.L.J. 333, 114 I.C. 609, Ind. Rul. 1929 Nag. 81, A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 233.

It is improper for the Judge trying a case to take a witness's deposition bodily from the committing Magistrate's record, and to treat it as evidence before the Court itself—Dan Sahai, 7 All. 862; Jeochi, 21 All. 111. The Judge is bound to put to the witnesses, whom he proposes to contradict by their previous statement, the whole or such portion of their depositions as he intends to rely upon, so as to afford them an opportunity of explaining their meaning or denying that they had made any such statements and so forth—Dan Sahai, 7 All. 862; Sadar Din, 10 Lah.L.J. 460, 29 Cr.L.J. 1047 (1048), 112 I.C. 471, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 111. Depositions given in the lower Court which contradict the statements in the Sessions Court should be put to the witness before they are admitted under sec. 288, Cr. P. Code—Nanku Mahton, 32 Cr.L.J. 438 (440), 129 I.C. 666, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 338, 11 P.L.T. 772, 12 P.L.T. 239, 1930 Cr.C. 710, Ind. Rul. 1930 Pat. 122.

Section 288, Cr. P. C., is not a section to be lightly used. This section is not to be used as a matter of course but in the discretion of the Judge, and the fact that the whole statement is to be brought on the record and used as substantive evidence suggests that the proper occasion to use it is when the Judge is satisfied that the statement made before him is substantially false and the statement before the Committing Magistrate is substantially true. The existence of minor discrepancies between statements made in the Committing Magistrate's Court and the Sessions Court is not sufficient to justify the bringing bodily on to the record of the statement of a witness under sec. 288, Cr. P. Code. The provisions of secs. 145, 151, 155 and 157, Evidence Act, may, in such circumstances, be more appropriately used—Manghan Khan v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 487, 167 I.C. 943, 9 R.S. 213, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 61, 30 S.L.R. 238. The depositions before the Magistrate were used during the trial for the purpose of cross-examining the witnesses, and extracts from those depositions were put in evidence, yet because the depositions were not formally tendered as evidence to the Court, they were not included in the record. Held that such formality amounts to absurdity and that if questions are put and extracts included from depositions, during the trial of a case, it must be obvious that the evidence has been admitted by the

G. R. & C. O.*, p. 23.

If the conviction is to be based solely on a statement of the accused, it is fair that the statement should be taken in its entirety, unless there is good reason to the contrary—Kamakka, 12 Cr.L.J. 142, 9 I.C. 790, 2 M.W.N. 199, 9 M.L.T. 316

Where the prisoner had made two statements before the Magistrate, the one amounting to a confession of the guilt, and the other to a denial thereof, the trial Court ought to consider both the statements and their relative credibility—Soobjan, 10 B.L.R. 332; Mahabir, 18 All. 78 If in an examination of the accused some objectionable questions have been asked by the committing Magistrate, such questions and the answers thereto must be omitted, but the whole examination should not be excluded from evidence—Krudiram, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625 Where the accused was examined about a confession which was not admissible in evidence, the questions and answers to them could not be said to be 'duly recorded' as the questions were not such as were allowed by the law to be put; and the answers to these questions were not admissible in evidence against the accused—Gaung Gye, 4 L.B.R. 244, 8 Cr.L.J. 62

This section permits a previous statement of the accused to be read as a part of the case for the prosecution only so far as such statement refers to the offence (i.e., the present offence) for which the accused is being tried, and not so far as it relates to a accused as with the case for the prosecution. The proof of the case against the prisoners must depend for its support not upon the absence or weakness of explanation on their part, but upon the positive and affirmative evidence of their guilt that is given by the Crown—Mamfru, 51 Cal 418 (425, 426).

Witnesses not examined before the Committing Magistrate:—The prosecution cannot demand, as of right, that any witness not examined in the preliminary inquiry should be called and examined at the trial. But the Court, if it considers necessary, may call and examine him—Heyfield, 14 All. 212, 1892 A.W.N. 63. But the mere fact that a witness has not been examined before the committing Magistrate, is no ground for refusing to take the evidence of such witness, if he is a relevant witness. There is nothing in the Code which restricts the examination at the trial only to the witnesses examined before the committing Magistrate. But the prosecutor should, as a matter of justice and fairness to the accused, state in his opening address the name of such witness—Khan Muhammad, 1889 PR 1; Dhondiba, 36 Cr.L.J. 344, 153 I.C. 278, 36 Bom.L.R. 950, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 487, 1934 Cr.C. 1413; Muhammad Panah, 35 Cr.L.J. 1170 (1173), 150 I.C. 917, 1934 Cr.C. 732, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 78. The general effect of a consideration of relevant sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that the prosecutor is at liberty to examine witnesses in the Sessions Court which he has not produced in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, but that only those witnesses so examined in the Committing Magistrate's Court can be bound down to attend in the Sessions Court. The prosecution in the Sessions Court, if the witnesses are not examined in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, has to depend upon such witnesses being willing to give evidence without being bound down to appear, or upon being able to persuade the Court to act under sec 540, Cr. P. C., and summon such a witness. In accordance with the practice in the English Courts, a summary of the evidence proposed to be called should be given to the Sessions Court and the accused before trial, if a witness has not been called in the Committing Magistrate's Court. There is no provision in the Cr. P. C., making this course compulsory, but, in fairness to the accused, it should be followed—Niamat, 37 Cr.L.J. 742 (745, 746), 162 I.C. 976, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 533, 17 Lah 176, 38 P.L.R. 421, 1936 Cr.C. 568 (F.B.).

If the Public Prosecutor produces a new witness at the Sessions trial, and if he is not allowed to examine him as his own witness, then it would be the duty of the Court to examine him as a Court witness. If this were done, then an opportunity of cross-examining must be allowed both to the Prosecutor and to the accused. It will be therefore rather to the advantage of the prosecution that such a witness be examined as a Court witness and to the advantage of the accused that he should be examined in the ordinary way as a witness for the prosecution—Muhammad Panah, supra.

894. Cross-examination:—As a rule, the cross-examination of a witness should take place after his examination-in-chief, and cannot be postponed. There is no provision of law which authorises the Judge to allow all the prosecution witnesses to be examined at once, and to permit the cross-examination to be reserved for a subsequent date—Gothuri Venkatappa, 2 Weir 381. But though the accused is not entitled to such postponement as of right, still there is no reason why the Sessions Judge should refuse an application for such postponement where the application was a reasonable one under the circumstances of the case—Sadasiv, 41 Cal 299, 15 Cr.L.J. 596.

A Sessions Judge is not justified in stopping the cross-examination and turning the witness out of Court because he is of opinion that the witness is not speaking the truth—Meharban, 1900 A.W.N. 149.

A Judge is and always must be in control of the proceedings in his Court. On the other hand, the right of cross-examination must be carefully guarded, and it must be remembered that it may be necessary for an advocate to approach delicately and with caution the point upon which he is seeking to obtain admissions. It may be important that a witness whom he does not consider truthful should not be put on his guard by immediate presentation of the case set up by the opposing side. If questions are couched in too blunt a form he may readily deny them. Hence considerable latitude is desirable since the admissions sought to be elicited may only be forthcoming when the witness, if he is concealing something, is thrown off his guard: and there are cases in which it is necessary to drop a particular issue in the course of cross-examination and to return to it again discreetly at a later stage. On the other hand the length of cross-examination is by no means the criterion of its excellence, and it is lamentably true that lack of skill in advocacy often leads to a failure to appreciate this fact. When irrelevant topics are pursued at great length, and persistence is shown in going over the same ground again and again in the hope of making the witness appear discrepant, some limit must be placed upon the latitude given. Continued irrelevancies and repetitions are not to be endured indefinitely. If after several warnings an advocate persists in abusing his position in this way, he may be directed to resume his seat, but only when the Judge has enquired what are the material matters on which he still desires to cross examine and is satisfied that no satisfactory reply has been forthcoming from the advocate and that no legitimate questions by him have been shut out. In any case the Judge should make a note of the submission of any advocate as to further questions which he desires to put or as to any specific question which has been disallowed—Brahmayya v. The King, AIR. 1938 Rang. 442 (444), 40 Cr.L.J. 265, 179 I.C. 783. While it is the duty of every Court to keep the cross-examination of a witness within legitimate bounds it must be careful, in the discharge of that duty, not to exercise too effective a control so as to unduly curtail legitimate cross-examination. Too much interference by the presiding Judge in the course of the cross-examination of witnesses by the Counsel for the accused has, more often than not, the result of robbing the cross-examination of its efficacy and, therefore, undue interference in cross-examination must be avoided by the presiding Judge—Salay Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 416 (418), 167 I.C. 515, AIR 1937 All 171, 1937 A.L.R. 201, 9 R.A. 550.

For procedure of trial in cross-cases see Notes in para 830A.

287. The examination of the accused duly recorded by or before the committing Magistrate shall be tendered by the prosecutor and read as evidence.

Examination of accused before Magistrate to be evidence.

895. "The examination of the accused" :—This section contemplates an examination of the accused, although sec. 209 does not make it imperative on the committing Magistrate to examine the accused—Sita, Ratanlal 100 (101). The examination of the accused recorded by the Magistrate should be put in as part of the case for the prosecution, before the accused is called on to enter on his defence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 361; Cal. G. R. & C. O., p. 23.

If the conviction is to be based solely on a statement of the accused, it is fair that the statement should be taken in its entirety, unless there is good reason to the contrary—Kamakka, 12 Cr.L.J. 142, 9 I.C. 790, 2 M.W.N. 199, 9 M.L.T. 316.

Where the prisoner had made two statements before the Magistrate, the one amounting to a confession of the guilt, and the other to a denial thereof, the trial Court ought to consider both the statements and their relative credibility—Soobjan, 10 B.L.R. 332; Mahabir, 18 All. 78. Where the accused was examined about a confession which was not admissible in evidence, the questions and answers to them could not be said to be 'duly recorded' as the questions were not such as were allowed by the law to be put; and the answers to these questions were not admissible in evidence against the accused—Gaung Gye, 4 L.B.R. 244, 8 Cr.L.J. 62.

This section permits a previous statement of the accused to be read as a part of the case for the prosecution only so far as such statement refers to the offence (i.e., the present offence) for which the accused is being tried, and not so far as it relates to a

287. The examination of the accused duly recorded by or before the committing Magistrate shall be tendered by the prosecutor and read as evidence.

Examination of accused before Magistrate to be evidence.

895. "The examination of the accused" :—This section contemplates an examination of the accused, although sec. 209 does not make it imperative on the committing Magistrate to examine the accused—Sita, Ratanlal 100 (101). The examination of the accused recorded by the Magistrate should be put in as part of the case for the prosecution, before the accused is called on to enter on his defence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 361; Cal G. R. & C. O., p. 23.

If the conviction is to be based solely on a statement of the accused, it is fair that the statement should be taken in its entirety, unless there is good reason to the contrary—Kamakka, 12 Cr.L.J. 142, 9 I.C. 790, 2 M.W.N. 199, 9 M.L.T. 316.

Where the prisoner had made two statements before the Magistrate, the one amounting to a confession of the guilt, and the other to a denial thereof, the trial Court ought to consider both the statements and their relative credibility—Soobjan, 10 B.L.R. 332; Mahabir, 18 All. 78. If in an examination of the accused some objectionable questions have been asked by the committing Magistrate, such questions and the answers thereto must be omitted, but the whole examination should not be excluded from evidence—Khudiram, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625. Where the accused was examined about a confession which was not admissible in evidence, the questions and answers to them could not be said to be 'duly recorded' as the questions were not such as were allowed by the law to be put; and the answers to these questions were not admissible in evidence against the accused—Gang Gye, 4 L.B.R. 244, 8 Cr.L.J. 62.

This section permits a previous statement of the accused to be read as a part of the case for the prosecution only so far as such statement refers to the offence (i.e. the present offence) for which the accused is being tried, and not so far as it relates to a

as he might under this section, if there had been an inquiry held according to the provisions of Chap. XVIII—Nagendra, 33 Cr.L.J. 770, 139 I.C. 470, 36 C.W.N. 926, 1932 Cr.C. 636, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 683, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 628. But see Abdul Gani in Note 895A, where a contrary view was taken.

Following Abdul Gani, supra, the Lahore High Court has very recently held that provided a Magistrate, in acting under sec. 347, Cr. P. C., commits the accused subject to the safeguards relating to the rights of the accused as provided for in secs. 208, 211, 212 and 213, Cr. P. C., any statement recorded by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused prior to the commitment would be the evidence of a witness duly recorded under Chap. XVIII, and may therefore be transferred and treated as substantive evidence in the trial before the Sessions Court—Fazal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 389 (391), I.L.R. 1940 Lah. 151.

897. "Produced and examined":—The evidence of witnesses given before the committing Magistrate may be used as evidence if the witnesses have been produced and examined at the trial; a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a person who has since disappeared is inadmissible in evidence, because the witness is not produced and examined before the Sessions Judge—Ajodhi, 16 N.L.R. 30, 21 Cr.L.J. 486. See also Natha Singh, 35 Cr.L.J. 349 (351), 147 I.C. 234, 35 P.L.R. 75, 1934 Cr.C. 447, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 212. If the witness is incapable of giving his evidence, his deposition before the committing Magistrate can be admitted in evidence under section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act—Natha Singh, supra. The witnesses who had given deposition before the committing Magistrate must be examined by the Judge, before the former deposition can be treated as evidence. The mere examination of the witness by the Judge as to his making the deposition before the committing Magistrate, is not an examination within the meaning of this section—Subba, 9 Mad. 83. Mere producing of the witnesses is not sufficient; they must be produced and examined, i.e., examined as witnesses, and not merely cross-examined or tendered for cross-examination. Where certain prosecution witnesses who had given evidence before the committing Magistrate were not examined by the Sessions Judge afresh, but their depositions were read out to them, and the accused was allowed to cross-examine them, the procedure was illegal—Subba, supra; Kottagadu, 1915 M.W.N. 544, 16 Cr.L.J. 615. If a witness who has given an important piece of evidence before the committing Magistrate, is not examined by the Sessions Judge, but is merely tendered for cross-examination, and even in his cross-examination he is asked certain unimportant questions having no bearing upon the story of the offence, the Sessions Judge acts illegally in mentioning to the jury the statement made by that witness before the committing Magistrate, for such a procedure would amount to treating as evidence what has not been put on record as evidence—Khadem, 57 Cal. 940, 32 Cr.L.J. 180 (182), 128 I.C. 801, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 706, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 97, 1930 Cr.C. 1106. In this case the deposition in the committing Magistrate's Court was not put in under this section. It was also held that it would have been unfair to have put it under this section in the circumstances of this particular case. This section does not allow the use of the deposition as a substitute for examination at the trial. This section is not exception to sec. 286; it does not dispense with the examination of the witnesses directed by sec. 286—Subba, 9 Mad. 83. Further, the statements made by a witness before the committing Magistrate should not be read out to the witness in the trial before the defence has had an opportunity of cross-examining him—Narain Das, 3 Lah. 144 (154), 23 Cr.L.J. 513.

Moreover, the deposition of the witness before the committing Magistrate can be used as evidence if the witness is examined at the trial as a witness. Where the witness before the committing Magistrate, being found concerned in the offence, was committed to take his trial along with the accused in the case, the deposition in the Magistrate's Court could not be treated as evidence against the accused under this section, he not being a witness in the trial—Shibdayal, 23 P.R. 1883.

898. Retracted statements:—Where the witnesses made certain statements implicating the accused, before the committing Magistrate, but at the trial before the

Sessions Judge they resiled from those statements and told an altogether different story, held that the statements before the committing Magistrate were not merely relevant for the purpose of contradicting or negating the statements made before the Court of Sessions under sec 155, Evidence Act, but that under sec 288 could also be treated as "evidence in the case," i.e., as substantive evidence of all the facts therein deposed to—Maruti, 46 Bom 97, 22 Cr L.J. 636; Amir Zaman, 6 Lah. 199, 26 P.L.R. 361, 26 Cr L.J. 1245; Ala Singh, 29 Cr L.J. 73, 106 I.C. 585; Abdul Gani, 53 Cal 181, 26 Cr L.J. 1577; Tulli, 47 All. 276, 26 Cr L.J. 450; Rakha, 6 Lah. 171, 27 Cr L.J. 438; Bahadur, 88 I.C. 7, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 289, 19 S.L.R. 71, 26 Cr L.J. 1063; Puran, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 743, 15 Lah. 765, 149 I.C. 476, 35 Cr L.J. 1005, 1934 Cr.C. 1095; Shankar, 35 Cr L.J. 894, 149 I.C. 69, 1934 Cr.C. 673, 11 O.W.N. 636, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 222; Samero, 37 Cr L.J. 1045, 164 I.C. 1036, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 140. See also Ram Gobinda Ghosh v. Emp., 39 Cr L.J. 625, 175 I.C. 529, 10 R.C. 802, 42 C.W.N. 781, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 364; Kataru Chinna Papiiah, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 136 (137), 1939 M.W.N. 1134, 50 M.L.W. 742, 1939 M.Cr.C. 282, 41 Cr L.J. 323, 186 I.C. 484. A certain witness made a statement before the committing Magistrate, but resiled from that statement before the Sessions Judge, whereupon his statement made before the committing Magistrate was put in evidence under sec 288, and in order to corroborate this statement, a statement made by that witness before the Police was proved and put in evidence. Held that the statement made before the committing Magistrate was 'testimony' within the meaning of sec. 157 of the Evidence Act, and therefore the prior statement made before the Police was admissible in evidence to corroborate the statement made before the committing Magistrate—Mam Chand, 5 Lah. 324 (328), 25 Cr L.J. 1201. So also, a statement by a witness recorded by a Magistrate under sec 164 is admissible in evidence to corroborate the statement made by that witness before the committing Magistrate, from which he subsequently resiled in the Sessions Court—Velliah Kone, 45 Mad. 766, followed in Manarali, 37 C.W.N. 1066 (1068), 58 C.L.J. 60, 60 Cal. 1339, 147 I.C. 1203, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 124, 1934 Cr.C. 169, 35 Cr L.J. 567; Mathura Tewari, 8 Pat. 625, 120 I.C. 37, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 343, 1929 Cr.C. 155, 30 Cr.C. 1136, 10 P.L.T. 177, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 677. So also a statement by a witness recorded by a Magistrate under sec. 512, Cr. P. C., may be used to corroborate his statement before the committing Magistrate from which he subsequently resiled in the Court of Sessions—Lalji Rai, 37 Cr L.J. 235 (238), 160 I.C. 181, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 11, 1936 Cr.C. 6, 16 P.L.T. 730. But the admission of the deposition in the committing Magistrate's Court in which witness admitted having made a certain statement when examined under sec 164, Cr. P. C., does not entail the admission of the statement under sec. 164 as substantive evidence in the case. It is a statement which can be used simply to contradict the witness and to show that the witness is unreliable with a view to taking his evidence out of the case which otherwise might react unfavourably upon the evidence of other prosecution witnesses—Karuppana, 28 Cr L.J. 279, 100 I.C. 359, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1112. Where a Sessions Judge, being of opinion that certain prosecution witnesses had been gained over by the accused, allowed their depositions given before the committing Magistrate to be received in evidence, held that this section enabled the Court to treat such depositions as substantive evidence in the case at the trial. Such evidence may be used as much in favour of the defence as of the prosecution, and not merely for the purpose of contradicting the witnesses at the Sessions trial—Dorai Sami, 24 Mad. 414; Gansa Oraon, 2 Pat. 517, 24 Cr L.J. 641. See also Kataru Chinna Papiiah, supra. Depositions of witnesses taken before the committing Magistrate, and subsequently retracted before the Session Judge, may, in the discretion of the Judge, be admitted in evidence at the trial in the Sessions Court; and when so admitted, they are on the same footing as any other evidence on the record—Duarka, 28 All. 383; Mamchand, 5 Lah. 324 (328), 25 Cr L.J. 1201; Velliah, 45 Mad. 766, 43 M.L.J. 222. That is, the evidence recorded by the committing Magistrate, even though retracted in the Sessions Court, may be considered by the jury or by the assessors and the Judge, as part of the material or as substantive evidence upon which the verdict or the finding has to be given—Umar, 51 P.R. 1887; Abdul Gani, 53 Cal. 181, 42 C.L.J. 205, as he might under this section, if there had been an inquiry held according to the provisions of Chap. XVIII—Nagendra, 33 Cr.L.J. 770, 139 I.C. 470, 36 C.W.N. 926, 1932 Cr.C. 636, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 683, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 628. But see Abdul Gani in Note 895A, where a contrary view was taken.

Following Abdul Gani, supra, the Lahore High Court has very recently held that provided a Magistrate, in acting under sec. 347, Cr. P. C., commits the accused subject to the safeguards relating to the rights of the accused as provided for in secs. 208, 211, 212 and 213, Cr. P. C., any statement recorded by the Magistrate in the presence of the accused prior to the commitment would be the evidence of a witness duly recorded under Chap. XVIII, and may therefore be transferred and treated as substantive evidence in the trial before the Sessions Court—Fazal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 389 (391), I.L.R. 1940 Lah. 151.

897. "Produced and examined":—The evidence of witnesses given before the committing Magistrate may be used as evidence if the witnesses have been produced and examined at the trial; a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a person who has since disappeared is inadmissible in evidence, because the witness is not produced and examined before the Sessions Judge—Ajodhi, 16 N.L.R. 30, 21 Cr.L.J. 486. See also Natha Singh, 35 Cr.L.J. 349 (351), 147 I.C. 234, 35 P.L.R. 75, 1934 Cr.C. 447, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 212. If the witness is incapable of giving his evidence, his deposition before the committing Magistrate can be admitted in evidence under section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act—Natha Singh, supra. The witnesses who had given deposition before the committing Magistrate must be examined by the Judge, before the former deposition can be treated as evidence. The mere examination of the witness by the Judge as to his making the deposition before the committing Magistrate, is not an examination within the meaning of this section—Subba, 9 Mad. 83. Mere producing of the witnesses is not sufficient; they must be produced and examined, i.e., examined as witnesses, and not merely cross-examined or tendered for cross-examination. Where certain prosecution witnesses who had given evidence before the committing Magistrate were not examined by the Sessions Judge afresh, but their depositions were read out to them, and the accused was allowed to cross-examine them, the procedure was illegal—Subba, supra; Kottaigadu, 1915 M.W.N. 544, 16 Cr.L.J. 615. If a witness who has given an important piece of evidence before the committing Magistrate, is not examined by the Sessions Judge, but is merely tendered for cross-examination, and even in his cross-examination he is asked certain unimportant questions having no bearing upon the story of the offence, the Sessions Judge acts illegally in mentioning to the jury the statement made by that witness before the committing Magistrate, for such a procedure would amount to treating as evidence what has not been put on record as evidence—Khadem, 57 Cal. 940, 32 Cr.L.J. 180 (182), 128 I.C. 801, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 706, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 97, 1930 Cr.C. 1106. In this case the deposition in the committing Magistrate's Court was not put in under this section. It was also held that it would have been unfair to have put it under this section in the circumstances of this particular case. This section does not allow the use of the deposition as a substitute for examination at the trial. This section is not exception to sec. 286; it does not dispense with the examination of the witnesses directed by sec. 286—Subba, 9 Mad. 83. Further, the statements made by a witness before the committing Magistrate should not be read out to the witness in the trial before the defence has had an opportunity of cross-examining him—Narain Das, 3 Lah. 144 (154), 23 Cr.L.J. 513.

Moreover, the deposition of the witness before the committing Magistrate can be used as evidence if the witness is examined at the trial as a witness. Where the witness before the committing Magistrate, being found concerned in the offence, was committed to take his trial along with the accused in the case, the deposition in the Magistrate's Court could not be treated as evidence against the accused under this section, he not being a witness in the trial—Shibdayal, 23 P.R. 1883.

898. Retracted statement:—Where the witnesses made certain statements implicating the accused, before the committing Magistrate, but at the trial before the

Sessions Judge they resiled from those statements and told an altogether different story, held that the statements before the committing Magistrate were not merely relevant for the purpose of contradicting or negating the statements made before the Court of Sessions under sec. 155, Evidence Act, but that under sec. 288 could also be treated as "evidence in the case," i.e., as substantive evidence of all the facts therein deposed to—Maruti, 46 Bom 97, 22 Cr.L.J. 636; Amir Zaman, 6 Lah. 199, 26 P.L.R. 361, 26 Cr.L.J. 1245; Ala Singh, 29 Cr.L.J. 73, 106 I.C. 585; Abdul Gani, 53 Cal 181, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577; Tulli, 47 All 276, 26 Cr.L.J. 450; Rakha, 6 Lah 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 438; Bahadur, 88 I.C. 7, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 289, 19 S.L.R. 71, 26 Cr.L.J. 1063; Puran, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 743, 15 Lah 765, 149 I.C. 476, 35 Cr.L.J. 1005, 1934 Cr.C. 1095; Shankar, 35 Cr.L.J. 894, 149 I.C. 69, 1934 Cr.C. 673, 11 O.W.N. 636, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 222; Samero, 37 Cr.L.J. 1045, 164 I.C. 1036, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 140. A certain witness made a statement before the committing Magistrate, but resiled from that statement before the Sessions Judge, whereupon his statement made before the committing Magistrate was put in evidence under sec. 288, and in order to corroborate this statement, a statement made by that witness before the Police was proved and put in evidence. Held that the statement made before the committing Magistrate was 'testimony' within the meaning of sec. 157 of the Evidence Act, and therefore the prior statement made before the Police was admissible in evidence to corroborate the statement made before the committing Magistrate—Mam Chand, 5 Lah. 324 (328), 25 Cr.L.J. 1201. So also, a statement by a witness recorded by a Magistrate under sec. 164 is admissible in evidence to corroborate the statement made by that witness before the committing Magistrate, from which he subsequently resiled in the Sessions Court—Velliah Kone, 45 Mad. 766, followed in Manarali, 37 C.W.N. 1066 (1068), 58 C.L.J. 60, 60 Cal 1339, 147 I.C. 1203, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 124, 1934 Cr.C. 169, 35 Cr.L.J. 567; Mathura Tewari, 8 Pat 625, 120 I.C. 37, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 343, 1929 Cr.C. 155, 30 Cr.C. 1136, 10 P.L.T. 177, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 677. So also a statement by a witness recorded by a Magistrate under sec. 512, Cr. P. C., may be used to corroborate his statement before the committing Magistrate from which he subsequently resiled in the Court of Sessions—Lalji Rai, 37 Cr.L.J. 235 (238), 160 I.C. 181, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 11, 1936 Cr.C. 6, 16 P.L.T. 730. But the admission of the deposition in the committing Magistrate's Court in which witness admitted having made a certain statement when examined under sec. 164, Cr. P. C., does not entail the admission of the statement under sec. 164 as substantive evidence in the case. It is a statement which can be used simply to contradict the witness and to show that the witness is unreliable with a view to taking his evidence out of the case which otherwise might react unfavourably upon the evidence of other prosecution witnesses—Karuppana, 28 Cr.L.J. 279, 100 I.C. 359, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1112. Where a Sessions Judge, being of opinion that certain prosecution witnesses had been gained over by the accused, allowed their depositions given before the committing Magistrate to be received in evidence, held that this section enabled the Court to treat such depositions as substantive evidence in the case at the trial. Such evidence may be used as much in favour of the defence as of the prosecution, and not merely for the purpose of contradicting the witnesses at the Sessions trial—Dorai Sami, 24 Mad. 414; Gansa Oraon, 2 Pat. 517, 24 Cr.L.J. 641. See also Kataru Chinna Papiah, supra. Depositions of witnesses taken before the committing Magistrate, and subsequently retracted before the Session Judge, may, in the discretion of the Judge, be admitted in evidence at the trial in the Sessions Court; and when so admitted, they are on the same footing as any other evidence on the record—Duarka, 28 All. 383; Mamchand, 5 Lah. 324 (328), 25 Cr.L.J. 1201; Velliah, 45 Mad. 766, 43 M.L.J. 222. That is, the evidence recorded by the committing Magistrate, even though retracted in the Sessions Court, may be considered by the jury or by the assessors and the Judge, as part of the material or as substantive evidence upon which the verdict or the finding has to be given—Umar, 51 P.R. 1887; Abdul Gani, 53 Cal 181, 42 C.L.J. -

A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 235, 90 I.C. 537, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577; Fazaruddin, 42 C.L.J. 111, 26 Cr.L.J. 1553, 90 I.C. 433, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 105; Basappa, 86 I.C. 145, A.I.R. 1925 Bom 266, 26 Cr.L.J. 705. This course is justified when there is a close relationship between the witnesses and the accused—Krishna, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 479 (482), 1935 M.W.N. 82, 1934 M.Cr.C. 378, 1935 Cr.C. 742, 157 I.C. 297, 36 Cr.L.J. 1107. Where the wife of the accused while deposing in the Court of Sessions resiled from her statement before the committing Court which was corroborated by her statement recorded under sec. 164, Cr. P. C., the Madras High Court accepted the statement made before the committing Magistrate in preference to the statement before the Court of Sessions and based a conviction of the accused thereon—Vellai Kone, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 20, 72 I.C. 529, 24 Cr.L.J. 417, 43 M.L.J. 222, 45 Mad. 766, 16 M.L.W. 239, 1922 M.W.N. 506, 31 M.L.T. 175. But there is nothing in this section which prescribes the value or weight to be attached to the evidence. Whether any portion or the whole of the evidence given before the committing Magistrate is entitled to credit, and if so, to such a degree that a conviction may be based upon it wholly or in part, are very important questions for the jury and the assessors, but they are in no way affected by this section—Umar, 51 P.R. 1887. It is a matter for the discretion of the Judge whether such evidence should be used in the interests of justice. In many cases it would be extremely dangerous to rely upon such evidence where the witnesses have proved themselves in the Sessions Court altogether unworthy of credit—Gansa Oraon, 2 Pat. 517, 24 Cr.L.J. 641. A judgment may be based upon the deposition taken before the committing Magistrate, which has been retracted at the trial, when the Sessions Court can see special reason for believing the original statement to be true either from the statements of the same witnesses before itself or when that statement is to a certain extent corroborated by independent testimony. If there is no such corroborative evidence, it is not proper to base a conviction solely upon the deposition given before the Magistrate—Jeochi, 21 All. 111; Amanulla, 21 W.R. 49; Jadub Das, 27 Cal. 295 (306), 4 C.W.N. 129; Mamchand, 5 Lah. 324 (328), 25 Cr.L.J. 1201; Rangi, 10 Mad. 295 (314); Bharmappa, 12 Mad. 123; Nirmal Das, 22 All. 445; Somadu, 47 Mad. 232, 25 Cr.L.J. 715; Pirithi, 37 P.R. 1917, 18 Cr.L.J. 703; Nga Nyein, 11 Rang. 4, 1933 Cr.C. 452 (454), 142 I.C. 87, 34 Cr.L.J. 286, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 57; see also Note 915 (18); especially when there is nothing on the record to show that the witnesses have in fact become hostile or have been won over by the accused—Pahalwan, 35 Cr.L.J. 797 (799), 148 I.C. 937, 10 Luck. 1, 11 O.W.N. 508, 1934 Cr.C. 578, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 182. A conviction based solely on evidence given by the witnesses before the committing Magistrate and retracted by them at the trial is unsustainable—Sher Dil, 17 P.R. 1919, 20 Cr.L.J. 792, 53 I.C. 696. The evidence of such a witness is not to be safely relied upon in the absence of corroboration—Kataru Chinna Pappiah, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 136 (137), 1939 M.W.N. 1134, 50 M.L.W. 742, 1939 M.Cr.C. 282, 41 Cr.L.J. 323 (324), 186 I.C. 484. If it were permissible to convict an accused person, relying solely upon the evidence given by a witness before the committing Magistrate, the logical consequence would be that the taking of evidence before the Sessions Court might be altogether dispensed with—Amanulla, 21 W.R. 49. Evidence given before a committing Magistrate cannot be effectually utilised in support of a conviction unless it is shown by other corroborative evidence that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for the evidence given at the trial—Jehal Teli, 3 Pat. 781 (794), 6 P.L.T. 53, 26 Cr.L.J. 270; Lalji Rai, 37 Cr.L.J. 235 (238), 160 I.C. 181, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 11, 1936 Cr.C. 6, 16 P.L.T. 730; Jadub Das, 27 Cal. 295 (306); Bigna Kumhar, 27 Cr.L.J. 594, 91 I.C. 258, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 440; Nrbti Mandal, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 289 (293), 1940 P.W.N. 73. This view of law was, however, dissented from by the Allahabad High Court in Raja Ram, 36 Cr.L.J. 823, 155 I.C. 657, A.I.R. 1935 All. 691, 1935 A.L.J. 668 and by the Lahore High Court in Narain Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 567 (568), 162 I.C. 379, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 357, 17 Lah. 419, 38 P.L.R. 820, 1936 Cr.C. 298, where it has been held that there is nothing in this section to show that there need be corroboration of evidence so recorded, that it has like other evidence to be examined with care and to be considered with all the other surrounding circumstances and that no general law can, therefore, be laid down as to this. The evidence of prosecution witnesses recorded before the committing Magistrate and transferred to the record of the Sessions Court, under the provisions of this section, is on the same footing with all other evidence in the case for all purposes and it is not necessary that there should be 'corroboration of those statement otherwise'—Parmanand v Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 340 (347), 1940 N.L.J. 459. A conviction cannot be based upon statements of witnesses made before the committing Magistrate, when they afterwards came forward before the Sessions Judge and gave only circumstantial evidence insufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the crime—Ghanwara, 1915 P.W.R. 15, 16 Cr.L.J. 612. A Sessions Judge does not show a proper discretion in allowing a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a witness to be used as evidence under this section, when the witness repudiates it at the Sessions and says that it was given under pressure from the police in the course of the investigation—Bhut Nath, 7 C.W.N. 345 (350). In such a case the Judge should make some inquiry by examining the Inspector of Police regarding the restraint and pressure put upon the witness, before admitting such statement as evidence—Bajragi, 4 C.W.N. 49 (55); Jadub Das, 27 Cal 295 (300).

Where every one of the witnesses for the prosecution has been demonstrated at the trial to have contradicted the statement that he made before the Committing Magistrate it would not be safe to convict the accused—Harnam Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 765, 169 I.C. 434, 10 R.L. 13, 39 P.L.R. 555, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 597.

899. "Subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act":—These words do not mean that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can only be utilized at a trial in a case where the Evidence Act specifically authorises its use. Such a construction is erroneous, because there are only certain sections in the Evidence Act (secs 32, 33, 145, 155, 157) which can in any way be regarded as even remotely dealing with this subject, but none have any direct bearing. There is indeed in the Evidence Act nothing at all which permits or specifically provides for the use of evidence taken before a Magistrate as evidence at a trial. What is really meant by the words is that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can be used for all purposes in a trial Court so long as the evidence is 'evidence' within the meaning of the Evidence Act, i.e., if the matter contained therein is, according to the rules laid down in the Evidence Act, of evidential value. For instance, hearsay evidence taken before a Magistrate would not be capable of being utilized by a Sessions Judge as of evidential value at the trial. These words may also probably mean that the evidence taken before a Magistrate can only be used at the trial subject to the procedure laid down in the Evidence Act—Jehal Teli, 3 Pat. 781 (788-790), 6 P.L.T. 53, 26 Cr.L.J. 270; Bahadur, 19 S.L.R. 71, 26 Cr.L.J. 1063.

The words 'for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act' do not mean that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate can be used in the Court of Session only for the purpose of corroboration and contradiction in accordance with sections 155 and 157 of the Evidence Act. Such evidence may be acted upon by the Sessions Court precisely as if that evidence has been deposed to before the Sessions Judge. The words merely mean that the law of evidence enacted in the Evidence Act must be complied with. For instance, evidence which had been wrongly admitted by the committing Magistrate, in violation of the provisions of the Evidence Act, cannot be transferred to the file of the Sessions Judge and used at the trial. The amendment is obviously introduced for the purpose of removing any doubts as to the right of the Court to treat the evidence given before the committing Magistrate as substantive evidence in the trial, when such evidence has in the discretion of the trial Court been properly brought on that Court's record—Amir Zaman, 6 Lah. 199, 26 P.L.R. 361, 26 Cr.L.J. 1245; Abdul Gani, 53 Cal 181, 42 Cr.L.J. 205, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577; Basappa, 27 Bom.L.R. 113, 26 Cr.L.J. 705, 86 I.C. 145, A.I.R. 1925 Bom 266; Behari, 49 All. 251, 27 Cr.L.J. 1365 (1367). The words "subject. . . Evidence Act" mean nothing more than that such statements should not contain matters which would be irrelevant or inadmissible under the Evidence Act—Behari, supra. See also Bahadur, 26 Cr.L.J. 1063, 88 I.C. 7, 19 S.L.R. 71, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 289.

It cannot be maintained that the deposition, when admitted under sec. 288, Cr. P. C., can only be used for the purpose of cross-examination within the provisions of sec. 155 of the Indian Evidence Act. This contention is clearly untenable in view of the express provisions of sec. 288 of the Code that it is to be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes; the words "subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872" cannot be read so as to limit the purposes for which it may be used—Fakira v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 498, 167 I.C. 790, 39 P.L.R. 334, 1937 O.L.R. 216, 41 C.W.N. 741, 1937 M.W.N. 546, 9 R.P.C. 231, 1937 A Cr.C. 74, 3 B.R. 426, 1937 O.W.N. 412, A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 119, 1937 A.L.R. 328, 64 I.A. 148, 46 M.L.W. 134, 39 Bom.L.R. 966, 1 I.R. (1937) Bom. 711, 1937 A.W.R. (P.C. 1128, 1937 A.L.J. 1055, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 323 (P.C.). See also Nebti Mandal, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 289 (293), 1940 P.W.N. 73.

900. Practice and procedure:—The counsel for the prisoner is not entitled to refer to the deposition for the purpose of contradicting the witness without having drawn the attention of the witness to the alleged contradiction in his deposition, and without having given him an opportunity of explaining it—Zawar, 31 Cal 142; Lachmi Lal, 3 P.L.T. 398, 23 Cr.L.J. 218, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 40. Before a Judge can use as evidence the deposition given before the Magistrate, he is bound to let his intention, or the possibility that he may do so, be known to the accused and to the prosecution, in order to afford the accused and the prosecution an opportunity for testing such statement by cross-examination or otherwise dealing with such statement as part of the case which may be taken into consideration by the Judge. Otherwise it is impossible for the prosecution or the defence to deal with the matters which may influence the Judge's mind in coming to a decision—Behari, 1886 A.W.N. 256; Musa, 30 Cr.L.J. 333, 114 I.C. 609, Ind. Rul. 1929 Nag. 81, A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 233.

It is improper for the Judge trying a case to take a witness's deposition bodily from the committing Magistrate's record, and to treat it as evidence before the Court itself—Dan Sahai, 7 All. 862; Jeochi, 21 All. 111. The Judge is bound to put to the witnesses, whom he proposes to contradict by their previous statement, the whole or such portion of their depositions as he intends to rely upon, so as to afford them an opportunity of explaining their meaning or denying that they had made any such statements and so forth—Dan Sahai, 7 All. 862; Sadar Din, 10 Lah.L.J. 460, 29 Cr.L.J. 1047 (1048), 112 I.C. 471, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 111. Depositions given in the lower Court which contradict the statements in the Sessions Court should be put to the witness before they are admitted under sec. 288, Cr. P. Code—Nanhu Mahton, 32 Cr.L.J. 438 (440), 129 I.C. 666, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 338, 11 P.L.T. 772, 12 P.L.T. 239, 1930 Cr.C. 710, Ind. Rul. 1930 Pat. 122.

Section 288, Cr. P. C., is not a section to be lightly used. This section is not to be used as a matter of course but in the discretion of the Judge, and the fact that the whole statement is to be brought on the record and used as substantive evidence suggests that the proper occasion to use it is when the Judge is satisfied that the statement made before him is substantially false and the statement before the Committing Magistrate is substantially true. The existence of minor discrepancies between statements made in the Committing Magistrate's Court and the Sessions Court is not sufficient to justify the bringing bodily on to the record of the statement of a witness under sec. 288, Cr. P. Code. The provisions of secs. 145, 154, 155 and 157, Evidence Act, may, in such circumstances, be more appropriately used—Manghan Khan v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 487, 167 I.C. 913, 9 R.S. 213, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 61, 30 S.L.R. 238. See also Kataru Chinna Papiah, 41 Cr.L.J. 323 (325), 186 I.C. 484, A.I.R. 1910 Mad. 136, 1939 M.W.N. 1134, 50 M.L.J. 742, 1939 M.Cr.C. 282.

The depositions before the Magistrate were used during the trial for the purpose of cross-examining the witnesses, and extracts from those depositions were put in evidence, yet because the depositions were not formally tendered as evidence to the Court, they were not included in the record. Held that such formality amounts to absurdity and that if questions are put and extracts included from depositions, during the trial of a case, it must be obvious that the evidence has been admitted by the

Judge and that it must form part of the record, whether, technically speaking, it has properly been tendered or not—Molla Khan, 37 C.W.N. 1061 (1063)

Power of High Court:—Where, in an appeal, the High Court was of opinion that the statements made before the committing Magistrate by certain witnesses who were also examined before the Sessions Judge should have been brought upon the record by the exercise of the powers conferred by section 288, it directed the Sessions Judge to take proceedings for the purpose, after giving notice to the accused persons that it was proposed to use those statements against them—Nagina, 19 A.L.J. 947, 27 Cr.L.J. 813, 95 I.C. 477.

289. (1) When the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution and the examination (if any) of the accused are concluded, the accused shall be asked whether he means to adduce evidence.

(2) If he says that he does not, the prosecutor may sum up his case; and, if the Court considers that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence, it may then, in a case tried with the aid of assessors, record a finding, or in a case tried by a jury, direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty.

(3) If the accused, or any one of several accused, says that he means to adduce evidence, and the Court considers that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence, the Court may then, in a case tried with the aid of assessors, record a finding, or, in a case tried by a jury, direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty.

(4) If the accused, or any one of several accused, says that he means to adduce evidence, and the Court considers that there is evidence that he committed the offence, or if, on his saying that he does not mean to adduce evidence, the prosecutor sums up his case and the Court considers that there is evidence that the accused committed the offence, the Court shall call on the accused to enter on his defence.

901. Examination of the accused:—The words "if any" in this section show that although under sec 342 it is imperative on the Judge to examine the accused, still the examination may be dispensed with in some cases, e.g., where the accused has admitted his guilt and had been examined by the committing Magistrate—Khudiram Bose, 9 CLJ 55, 3 I.C. 625, 10 Cr.L.J. 325. This section prima facie implies the possibility of their being no examination of the accused. But that is up to the stage when he is asked "whether he means to adduce evidence." This section has to be read in conjunction with the provisions of sec. 342 of the Code, which makes it the duty of the Court, for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any evidence against him, to question him generally on the case "before he is called on for his defence." But the questioning of the accused referred to in the section is not meant to be lengthy cross-examination as regards all evidence produced by the prosecution—Jhabwala, 34 Cr.L.J. 967 (972), 145 I.C. 481, A.I.R. 1933 All. 690, 1933 Cr.C. 1202.

There is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code for the alleged practice allowing an accused person in a Sessions Trial to put in a written statement. The written statement, if put in, cannot be regarded as part of the record of the trial of the accused—Tarak Nath, 39 C.W.N. 1309 (1311), 37 Cr.L.J. 30, 159 I.C. 149, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 687, 1935 Cr.C. 1079, 63 Cal. 481. Written statements filed on behalf of accused persons are evolved out of the brains of the Counsel for the accused helped by the paikars and friends of the accused, and seldom represent the idea of the accused or the facts as known to the accused. Little or no importance should, therefore, be attached to such written statements and all Magistrates and Sessions Judges should sternly discountenance the practice of filing written statements on behalf of accused persons—Mohammad Anis, 37 Cr.L.J. 955 (957), 164 I.C. 482, 1936 O.W.N. 691, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 405, 1936 O.L.R. 459.

Sum up:—The prosecution has a right to sum up under sub-section (2) only when all the accused persons say that they do not mean to adduce evidence. Where one of the accused adduces evidence and the other accused do not, they must all follow one another in their defence under sec. 290—Sadanand, 18 Bom. 364.

902. 'No evidence':—Sub-section (2) or (3) applies only where there is no evidence, and would not cover cases where the Court considers that the charge is itself improper—Dwarka Lal v. Mahadeo, 12 All 551.

The prosecution has to prove all the facts necessary to constitute the offence charged against the accused. If it fails to do so, then in a sessions case, after the case for the prosecution has been closed, the Court should acquit the accused, where no evidence of any of the links necessary to establish the offence has been adduced by the prosecution—Jeremiah v. Vas, 36 Mad 457 (462). Where there is no evidence, the jury should be directed to find a verdict of not guilty; and it is wrong to leave it to the jury to say whether the accused is guilty or not guilty—Greedhary, 7 W.R. 39; Rutton Das, 16 W.R. 19.

The words 'no evidence' do not mean "no satisfactory, trustworthy or conclusive evidence" If the Court is satisfied that there is not upon the record any evidence which even if it were perfectly true, would amount to legal proof of the offence, then the Court has power, without consulting the assessors, to record a finding of not guilty; but the Sessions Judge has no power merely because he considers the evidence untrustworthy, or unsatisfactory or inconclusive. It is not the intention of the Legislature that the assessors or the jury should give their opinion or verdict in those cases only where the Judge is inclined to consider the evidence for the prosecution to be trustworthy or satisfactory or conclusive—Munna Lal, 10 All. 414; Vajiram, 16 Bom 414; Ramchariter Singh, 8 P.L.T. 691, 28 Cr.L.J. 692 (695), 7 Pat. 15, 103 I.C. 548; Navala Kishore, 30 Cr.L.J. 519 (521), 115 I.C. 692, 10 P.L.T. 101, A.I.R. 1929 Pat 121, Ind. Rul 1929 Pat 244; Rup Narain, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 172 (175), 10 Pat. 140, 1931 Cr.C. 460, 132 I.C. 876, 32 Cr.L.J. 975, 12 P.L.T. 746. A Court can acquit the accused under sec. 289 only in a case in which there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence. So, if there is any direct evidence which would establish the offence, the accused must be called upon to enter upon his defence, and the trial should be completely gone through, even though the Sessions Judge himself did not believe the evidence—Nalli Gonudan, 2 Weir 382. But see Labbai Kutti in Note 918.

The accused must be acquitted under this section if there is no evidence on the prosecution side; and he cannot be convicted on the evidence given against him by the witnesses called by the co-accused in his defence—Raghava, 5 M.L.T. 75, 10 Cr.L.J. 68

Direct the jury:—The expression "direct" leaves no room for doubt that the intention of the Legislature was that the jury was bound to accept the opinion of the Judge, whether they agreed with that view or not. The direction of the Judge that there is no evidence that the accused committed an offence is binding on the jury and must be followed by them. In other words, the question of absence of evidence is treated as a question of law and not a mere question of fact—Qudrat, A.I.R. 1939 All. 708, 1939 A.L.J. 980, 41 Cr.L.J. 142, 185 I.C. 271, I.L.R. 1939 All. 871.

903. Defence:—It is not a mere formality, but an essential part of the criminal trial, to call upon the accused to enter on his defence; an omission to do so is not a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537—Imam Ali, 23 Cal. 252. In Premgir, 16 A.L.J. 41, 19 Cr.L.J. 209, 43 I.C. 785, however, the omission to call upon the accused to enter on his defence was held to be a mere irregularity cured by sec. 537, unless the accused was prejudiced thereby. This view has been followed in—Thoppa, 37 Cr.L.J. 45, 159 I.C. 30, 1935 M.W.N. 1091, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 82.

What clause (4) of this section means is that if the accused calls no witnesses, he or his pleader is to make his final address to the Court—Thoppa, supra.

290. The accused or his pleader may then open his case, stating the facts or law on which he intends to rely, and making such comments as he thinks necessary on the evidence for the prosecution. He may then examine his witnesses (if any) and after their cross-examination and re-examination (if any) may sum up his case.

Defence.

904. Examination of defence witnesses:—The accused is at liberty to meet the case in any way he likes. He can, as to the whole or any part of the case against him, rely on the witnesses for the prosecution, or may call fresh evidence himself. No adverse inference will be drawn against him, if he does not produce or examine any witnesses—Dhunno, 8 Cal 121; Hurry Churn, 10 Cal 140; Ashraf, 21 C.W.N. 1152 (per Huda J.). But where a prima facie case of circumstances making out or tending to support the charge against the accused is established, and he withholds evidence in disproof or explanation available to him and not accessible to the prosecution, an inference unfavourable to the accused may legitimately be drawn—Ashraf Ali, 21 C.W.N. 1152 (per Teunon J.)

The burden lies on the prosecution to prove beyond all reasonable doubt that the offence was committed by the accused. If the prosecution cannot prove it, the accused is under no obligation to explain how the offence was committed or who committed the offence or by what means—Jethmal, Ratanlal 686. When there is no prima facie evidence sufficient to convict the accused, he is not under any obligation to explain to the Court his movements at the time of the offence—Bepm, 10 Cal 970.

905. Cross-examination:—An accused person must be allowed to cross-examine the witnesses called by another co-accused for his defence, if the case of the latter is adverse to that of the former—Ram Chand v Hanif, 21 Cal 401. But the accused cannot cross-examine his own witnesses. Thus, where a prosecution witness was examined before the committing Magistrate but was not called in the Sessions Court, and thereupon the counsel for the defence examined him, he would be treated as a witness for the defence, and the defence counsel was not entitled to cross-examine him, unless it appeared that he was suppressing the truth or was lying or refusing to give information—Zawar Husen, 20 All 155.

905A. Sum up:—This section contemplates that, where there are more accused than one, their Counsel should all be heard after the conclusion of the whole of the defence evidence—Mohinder, 33 Cr.L.J. 97 (103), 135 I.C. 209, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 81, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 103, 1932 Cr.C. 123, 33 P.L.R. 891.

291. The accused shall be allowed to examine any witness not previously named by him, if such witness is in attendance; but he shall not, except as provided in sections 211 and 231, be entitled of right to have any witness summoned, other than the witness named in the list delivered to the Magistrate by whom he was committed for trial.

Right of accused as to examination and summoning of witnesses.

906. Summoning of witnesses:—The accused is entitled as a matter of right to secure the attendance of all witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate and a conviction without summoning and examining the defence witnesses is liable to be set aside—Mookun, 12 W.R. 22; Faizuddin, 47 Cal. 758. It is ordinarily incumbent on the accused to put in his list of defence witnesses at once, that is to say on the day when the order of commitment is made and that if he does not do so the Magistrate will have a discretion to allow or not to allow any such application if it is made on any subsequent date. If, however, such an application is made and allowed, then the application whether under sub-sec. (1) or sub-sec. (2) of sec. 211 will be governed by the same principle. The discretion having been exercised and summonses on the defence witnesses having been issued the Sessions Judge is bound to enforce the attendance of these witnesses who were in contempt—Kali Bilash, 31 Cr.L.J. 695, 124 I.C. 513, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 188.

If some of the witnesses whose names have been entered in the list given to the committing Magistrate (under sec. 211) fail to appear in the Sessions Court, the Judge ought to summon them, and he cannot refuse to do so on the ground that the application for summons has been made at a late stage of the trial (viz., at a time when the examination of the other defence witnesses has been ended and the case is ready for arguments)—Faizuddin, 47 Cal. 758, 24 C.W.N. 527, 21 Cr.L.J. 842. The accused is entitled as of right to have the witnesses named in the list delivered to the committing Magistrate (sec. 211) examined on his behalf, and the Sessions Judge is not justified in refusing to summon any such witness, if he is absent, merely on the ground that it would be inconvenient to adjourn the case in order to secure the attendance of the witness. An accused person has the right to defend himself, and in order to support his defence he is entitled to cite such witnesses as he thinks will help him. Undoubtedly it is very inconvenient to all parties including the jurors to adjourn a case in the midst of a trial, and it is therefore proper that before a case commences the Sessions Judge should ascertain whether the case is ready, i.e., whether the witnesses on both sides are in attendance—Ram Mamud, 58 Cal. 412, 34 C.W.N. 1014 (1016), 32 Cr.L.J. 316.

The accused person cannot however require the Sessions Judge, as of right, to summon and examine witnesses other than those named in the list—Boidnath, 3 W.R. 29. And the Judge's refusal to grant an adjournment to summon a witness not named in the list is not illegal—Nazir Singh, 7 Lah.L.J. 428, 26 P.L.R. 767, 27 Cr.L.J. 134, 91 I.C. 806, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 557. But the Sessions Judge has an inherent power, if he thinks proper to exercise it, to summon those witnesses—Raja of Kantit, 8 All. 668.

A Sessions Judge should not refuse to enforce the attendance of certain witnesses for the defence, on the ground that there is ample evidence on the record about the matter; it is for the accused person and not for the Judge to say what amount of evidence it would be proper to place before the jury in order to establish the case for the defence—Brojendra, 7 C.W.N. 188.

In a serious case the accused should be allowed an opportunity of adducing such evidence as they chose. If at the examination of the witnesses for the defence the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the statements made by them are not admissible or are not relevant in evidence he can rule them out. He does not exercise a proper discretion in refusing an adjournment for examination of defence witnesses on the ground that those witnesses will not prove relevant matters or any matter admissible in evidence under the law, without allowing the accused to produce their witnesses and then deciding about the relevancy of their evidence—Mukhtal Hossein, 31 Cr.L.J. 1077, 126 I.C. 720, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 362.

An accused person cannot ask as of right that newly named witnesses shall be summoned for his defence, but his prayer would not ordinarily be refused if there were time to secure the attendance of the witnesses before the conclusion of the trial—Ramsewar, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 559, 1933 Cr.C. 1259.

The accused is entitled to have the assistance of the Court in obtaining the attendance of all the persons whose names he gives in at once on being required to do under sec. 211, Cr. P. C. Sec. 211 (2), Cr. P. C., gives the Magistrate a discretion to allow the accused to give in any further list of witnesses at a subsequent time.

There is a departure from the procedure contemplated by the Code when the accused present their list of witnesses not to the Magistrate under sec. 211 (2), Cr. P. C., but to the Sessions Judge and probably the most correct procedure for the Sessions Judge at that time is at once to forward the application to the committing Magistrate for disposal under sec 211 (2), Cr P. Code. Assuming that it is open to the Sessions Judge to deal with the application to summon defence witnesses as the case has already come on his file, then the principles which he ought to follow would be the same as those which the Magistrate should follow. Where the list presented to the Sessions Judge is not a list of witnesses in addition to the number already summoned but is the first list which has been presented to any officer, it would seem in such a case desirable to summon at least some of the witnesses regarding the effect of whose testimony some explanation could be given. When amendments and additions are made to the charges after the commencement of the trial in the Court of Session, the prosecutor and the accused have the right not only to recall and resummon any witness who may have been examined but also to call any further witnesses whom the Court may think to be material. A request to summon a fresh witness can only be refused on the ground that the evidence of the witness is not thought by the Court to be material—Musahru v. Emp., AIR. 1940 Pat. 355 (358, 359), 21 P.L.T. 13, 19 Pat. 413, 1940 P.W.N. 83.

Prosecutor's right of reply. 292. The prosecutor shall be entitled to reply—

- (a) if the accused or any of the accused adduces any oral evidence; or
- (b) with the permission of the Court, on a point of law; or
- (c) with the permission of the Court, when any document which does not need to be proved is produced by any accused person after he enters on his defence:

Provided that, in the case referred to in clause (c) the reply shall, unless the Court otherwise permits, be restricted to comment on the document so produced.

Change:—This section has been redrafted by section 79 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Prior to this amendment, the section stood as follows :—

"292. If the accused or any of the accused adduces any evidence, the prosecutor shall be entitled to reply."

907. Object and scope of section:—The object of the law in this section is to let each side have an opportunity of commenting on the evidence of the other, and not to give an additional advantage to the prosecution. Therefore, where the defence counsel first said that he meant to adduce evidence, but afterwards informed the Court that he did not mean to call evidence, and did not actually call any witnesses, the Judge should not allow the right of reply—Hurry Churn, 10 Cal. 140. In other words, this section makes the right of reply dependent upon the fact of oral evidence having been actually adduced.

908. Adducing of evidence:—The putting in of the depositions of certain prosecution witnesses made before the committing Magistrate and of the statements of the accused made under sec. 162 to a Police constable, forming part of the record sent up by the Magistrate, cannot be said to be adducing evidence by the accused within the meaning of this section. The tender of them as evidence by the accused is merely an application to the Judge for the exercise of the discretion vested in him by sec. 288—Stewart, 31 Cal. 1050.

Documentary evidence put in by accused through prosecution witnesses :—Prior to the amendment of this section, there was a conflict of decisions relating to the question whether the putting in of documentary evidence by the defence during the cross-examination of prosecution witnesses amounted to "adducing of evidence" by the accused and gave the prosecutor a right of reply. In the following cases, it was held that where during the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and before the close of the case for the Crown or before entering upon his defence, the accused put in some documentary evidence, but did not examine any witnesses for the defence, it did not give a right of reply to the Crown, because so long as the case was in the hands of the prosecution, the putting in of documents could not be said to take the prosecution by surprise, and this is the correct test for determining whether the prosecution should have the right of reply—Timol, 10 C.W.N. cclxvii; Kaliprosonno, 14 Cal. 245; Solomon, 7 Cal. 930 (932); Sreenath, 43 Cal. 426; Greesh Chunder, 10 Cal. 1024; Krishnaji Baburao, 40 Bom. 436. Abdulali, 11 Bom.L.R. 177, 9 Cr.L.J. 284 (291); Berch, 7 L.B.R. 84, 15 Cr.L.J. 241. In the following cases it was held that the prosecution was entitled to a right of reply even if any documentary evidence was put in by the defence before the close of the evidence for the prosecution (e.g., if any document was produced by the defence during the cross-examination of a prosecution witness)—Hayfield, 14 All. 212 (216); Venkatapathi, 11 Mad. 339; Moss, 16 All. 88; Bhaskar, 30 Bom. 421; Manuel, 4 L.B.R. 5, 6 Cr.L.J. 115.

The conflict between various Courts had been set at rest by the Legislature by using the words "adduces any oral evidence" in the present Act in sec. 292 (a) instead of the words "adduces any evidence" which were used in the previous enactments. The right of reply depends, under the present law, on the accused adducing oral evidence in defence after the close of the prosecution case and the mere fact of their having proved certain documents through a prosecution witness in cross-examination does not deprive them of their right of reply. An erroneous decision as to the right of reply is an irregularity, but by no means so material or substantial as to justify the setting aside of the trial—Kundar Singh, 32 Cr.L.J. 944, 132 I.C. 692, 32 P.L.R. 435, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 534, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 660, 1931 Cr.C. 774.

909. Reply:—Reply means generally to the whole case. Even if one of the accused calls witnesses, and the others do not, the prosecution is entitled to reply not merely on the evidence adduced by one of the accused, but generally on the whole case. It is not the intention of this section that the prosecution is to sum up as to such of the accused as do not call evidence, and to reply only on the evidence adduced by the others—Sadanand, 18 Bom. 364.

909A. Argument.—It seems to be plain that any arbitrary and undue curtailment of the parties' right of argument is to be deprecated. But although it cannot be denied that for the proper administration of justice the parties should be allowed a full and unrestricted right of addressing the jury, yet it cannot be overlooked that the summing up of the case by the Judge in his charge to the jury plays a very important part in a jury trial. It is obvious that in those cases where the accused is defended or where he is defended by an incompetent Counsel or is too poor to engage the services of a competent lawyer, his case cannot generally be adequately placed before the jury by means of argument. If, however, in those cases the Judge has properly charged the jury, the mere fact that the case not been adequately argued on behalf of the accused cannot by itself be a good ground for ordering retrial. On the same principle a retrial should not be ordered, unless it can be shown that matters which Counsel would have placed have not been placed before the jury or the charge of the Judge is defective and erroneous in material particulars—K. K. Ali, 15 Pat. 817 (840, 841), 38 Cr.L.J. 673 (683), 169 I.C. 48, 18 P.L.T. 535, 9 R.P. 526, 3 B.R. 514, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 263.

293. (1) Whenever the Court thinks that the jury or assessors should view the place in which the offence charged is alleged to have been committed, or any other place in which any other transaction material to the trial is alleged to have occurred, the Court shall make an order to that effect, and the jury or assessors shall be conducted in a body, under the care of an officer of the Court, to such place, which shall be shown to them by a person appointed by the Court.

(2) Such officer shall not, except with the permission of the Court, suffer any other person to speak to, or hold any communication with, any of the jury or assessors, and, unless the Court otherwise directs, they shall, when the view is finished, be immediately conducted back into Court.

This section speaks of the view of the place of offence by jurors and assessors, whereas section 539B relates to the view of the place by Judges and Magistrates

Examination of witness, not permitted.—The assessors can only view the scene of the alleged offence, and cannot examine any witnesses on the spot; because by sub-section (2) the officer conducting the jurors or assessors to the spot cannot suffer any other person to speak to them—Chutterdharee, 5 WR 59.

The juror or assessor form an integral part of the Court. Any proceedings taken by the Judge in the absence of the jurors or assessors are necessarily void and illegal. When the Sessions Judge made local inspection in absence of the assessors, the inspection note made by him must be ruled out, as having been made in contravention of the provisions of the Cr. P Code—Raj Bahadur, 35 Cr.LJ 1496 (1499), 152 I.C. 103, 11 O W N 1309.

294. If a juror or assessor is personally acquainted with

When juror or assessor may be examined.

any relevant fact, it is his duty to inform the Judge that such is the case, whereupon he may be sworn, examined, cross-examined and re-examined in the same manner as any other witness.

See Note 892.

295. If a trial is adjourned, the jury or assessors shall

Jury or assessors to attend at adjourned sitting.

attend at the adjourned sitting, and at every subsequent sitting, until the conclusion of the trial.

910. When trial should be adjourned:—A Judge is bound to adjourn a case in which a witness summoned for the defence is absent, especially if he is a material witness and the case cannot be satisfactorily decided in his absence—Ishan, 15 W.R. 34; Rajnarain, 18 WR. 20; Kali Prosunno, 23 W.R. 58. But under such circumstances the Judge will not be justified in discharging the jury in the midst of a trial adjourning the case to the next Sessions—Putaswamy, 4 Bom.L.R. 939.

296. The High Court may, from time to time, make rules

Locking up jury. as to keeping the jury together during a trial before such Court lasting for more than one day; and subject to such rules, the presiding Judge may order whether and in what manner the jurors shall be kept together under the charge of an officer of the Court, or whether they shall be allowed to return to their respective homes.

In every case involving the punishment of death or of transportation for life in which the trial lasts for more than one day, the jury should be kept together during the trial by the Sheriff or Deputy Sheriff or such other officers as the presiding Judge appoints for that purpose; and in every other case in which the trial shall last for more than one day, it shall be in the discretion of the presiding Judge whether the jury shall be kept together in manner aforesaid or shall be allowed to return to their respective homes—Bombay Gazette, 1875, Part I. p. 653.

F.—Conclusion of Trial in Cases tried by Jury.

297. In cases tried by jury, when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court shall proceed to charge the jury, summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided.

911. "When the case.....are concluded" :—This section specially enacts that the Judge shall only charge the jury when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply are concluded, i.e., after all the evidence has been taken on both sides, and the counsel of both parties have finished addressing the jury. A Judge who charges the jury and takes verdict as regards some only of the accused, and afterwards hears arguments and takes verdict as regards the remaining accused, will be acting irregularly and contrary to the provision of this section—Abdul Hameed, 36 Mad 585, 15 Cr.L.J. 197. All the witnesses on both sides must be examined before the Judge can put the case to the jury. Where after the examination of some of the prosecution witnesses the Judge asked the jury whether they wished to hear any more evidence and they stated they did not believe the evidence and wished to stop the case, and the Judge recorded a verdict of acquittal, it was held that the procedure was wrong. All the remaining witnesses ought to have been examined before any verdict was recorded—Ramalingam, 20 Mad. 445. After the witnesses for the prosecution and a certain number of witnesses for the defence had been examined, the foreman of the jury asked if the defence could not cut down the number of witnesses they had summoned; the defence thereupon agreed to dispense with all further witnesses save one. The Judge taking the foreman's intervention as an indication that the jury had decided to acquit, proceeded to charge the jury upon the case as it stood. The jury however found the accused guilty, whereupon the Judge ordered the remaining witnesses for the defence to be examined, and after this was done he again addressed the jury and then the jury again gave their verdict. Held that the procedure was entirely illegal, because all the evidence on both sides must have been concluded before the case could be submitted to the jury. Both the verdicts were therefore null and void—Lyne, 4 Lah 382, 25 Cr.L.J. 377, 77 I.C. 425, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 17.

Where the Judge required the jury to give a finding on one of two questions of fact constituting the proof in the case, before he concluded his charge with reference to the other question of fact, held that the procedure was irregular, if not illegal, and was certainly calculated to embarrass the jury in arriving at a proper verdict as to the character of the offence, if any proved—Badava Kunhi, 2 Weir 499 (500). See also Nasar Darzi, 33 C.W.N. 451.

Although it is desirable that the Judge should charge the jury immediately after the pleaders on both sides have finished their addresses, while the arguments are fresh in the minds of the jury, still if the Judge has to adjourn the case for a week after the pleaders' addresses owing to the intervention of holidays and for special duty elsewhere, and then he charges the jury, the charge does not become illegal. Such adjournments are inevitable, and it is not necessary that the pleaders should address the jury again—Sur Nath, 50 All. 365, 28 Cr.L.J. 950 (952), 105 I.C. 662, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 342, A.I.R. 1927 All. 721, 25 A.L.J. 1077.

912. Charge to jury:—The form and contents of a charge vary with the circumstances of individual cases, with the nature of the evidence, and with the mode in which the case for the prosecution and the defence is conducted. Generally speaking, it is usual to begin a charge by setting out the offence or offences with which the prisoner is charged, and explaining the law relating to those offences. Then the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence may be referred to, and such comments made on the evidence adduced by the other side as the Sessions Judge may think desirable or useful. Care should be taken to place the defence set up fairly before the jury and to ensure that the jury appreciate the issue or issues which they have to try—Afiruddi, 23 C.W.N. 833, 20 Cr.L.J. 661. Some sequence must be adopted by a Judge in charging a jury. Any sort of sequence will do, preferably chronological, but even alphabetical sequence is better than none at all—Kamiraddi, 37 C.W.N. 1102 (1103).

To charge the jury at very great length may itself be an obstacle to their arriving at a correct decision. They are laymen and to enable them to come to a correct decision it is necessary that essentials should be clearly brought out and not overwhelmed and obscured by too great mass of detail—Ardali Afian, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 496, 35 Cr.L.J. 56, 146 I.C. 460, 1933 Cr.C. 1061.

The heads of the charge should represent with absolute accuracy the substance of the charge, and be such as to enable the High Court on appeal to see distinctly, whether the case was fairly and properly placed before the jury—Fanindra Nath, 36 Cal. 281, 13 C.W.N. 197. It is not only desirable but necessary that the charge should be recorded in an intelligible form and with sufficient fulness to enable the Appellate Court to satisfy itself that all points of law were clearly explained to the jury in reference to the facts and the evidence in the case—Panchu Das, 34 Cal. 698, 11 C.W.N. 666; Biru Mandal, 25 Cal. 561; Asanulla, 39 C.W.N. 924, 36 Cr.L.J. 1246, 157 I.C. 837, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 534, 62 Cal. 911, 1935 Cr.C. 910. A charge to a jury ought to be delivered extemporaneously, immediately after the conclusion of the final speeches of the lawyers engaged in the trial, or of the evidence, in the absence of such speeches. Obviously, it ought not to be written out before and in extenso and equally obviously it is not humanly possible except, perhaps, in isolated and very exceptional cases, to write it out afterwards in extenso from memory—Asanulla, supra.

In addressing the jury the Judge should endeavour to speak in a manner simple and direct. The charge must not be involved, nor should the language be extravagant—Harendra Pal, 11 Cr.L.J. 538 (539) (Cal.). He should not use expressions assuming the guilt of the accused, nor should he use slang and colloquial phrases and the interrogative method in charging the jury—Amiruddin, 45 Cal. 557, 22 C.W.N. 213. It is not a proper language of addressing the jury, to call certain witnesses as "a contemptible pair of cowards," or as "a precious pair of poltroons" or to describe the evidence of a medical witness as "shilly-shallying evidence of a person who showed a tendency to hedge and play for safety in giving evidence"—Khijiruddin, 53 Cal. 372, 27 Cr.L.J. 266 (268), 92 I.C. 442, 42 C.L.J. 504, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 139.

If a charge is to be delivered in Bengali, and the Sessions Judge is not sufficiently acquainted with that language to prepare the charge in Bengali, it is open to him to obtain such assistance as he requires from the officers of his Court. But it is not desirable that he should resort to the services of the Public Prosecutor for this purpose—Afiruddi, 23 C.W.N. 833, 20 Cr.L.J. 661. But where the charge was written by the Judge in English, and he got it translated in the vernacular, and then it was read to the jury by the Government Pleader, held that there was no illegality in the procedure—Sur Nath, 50 All. 365, 28 Cr.L.J. 950 (952), 105 I.C. 662, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 342, A.I.R. 1927 All. 721, 25 A.L.J. 1077. Where the Judge prepared the charge in may order whether and in what manner the jurors shall be kept together under the charge of an officer of the Court, or whether they shall be allowed to return to their respective homes.

In every case involving the punishment of death or of transportation for life in which the trial lasts for more than one day, the jury should be kept together during the trial by the Sheriff or Deputy Sheriff or such other officers as the presiding Judge appoints for that purpose; and in every other case in which the trial shall last for more than one day, it shall be in the discretion of the presiding Judge whether the jury shall be kept together in manner aforesaid or shall be allowed to return to their respective homes—Bombay Gazette, 1875, Part I. p. 653

F.—Conclusion of Trial in Cases tried by Jury.

297. In cases tried by jury, when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court shall proceed to charge the jury, summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided.

911. "When the case.....are concluded":—This section specially enacts that the Judge shall only charge the jury when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply are concluded, i.e., after all the evidence has been taken on both sides, and the counsel of both parties have finished addressing the jury. A Judge who charges the jury and takes verdict as regards some only of the accused, and afterwards hears arguments and takes verdict as regards the remaining accused, will be acting irregularly and contrary to the provision of this section—Abdul Hameed, 36 Mad. 585, 15 Cr.L.J. 197. All the witnesses on both sides must be examined before the Judge can put the case to the jury. Where after the examination of some of the prosecution witnesses the Judge asked the jury whether they wished to hear any more evidence and they stated they did not believe the evidence and wished to stop the case, and the Judge recorded a verdict of acquittal, it was held that the procedure was wrong. All the remaining witnesses ought to have been examined before any verdict was recorded—Ramalingam, 20 Mad. 445. After the witnesses for the prosecution and a certain number of witnesses for the defence had been examined, the foreman of the jury asked if the defence could not cut down the number of witnesses they had summoned; the defence thereupon agreed to dispense with all further witnesses save one. The Judge taking the foreman's intervention as an indication that the jury had decided to acquit, proceeded to charge the jury upon the case as it stood. The jury however found the accused guilty, whereupon the Judge ordered the remaining witnesses for the defence to be examined, and after this was done he again addressed the jury and then the jury again gave their verdict. Held that the procedure was entirely illegal, because all the evidence on both sides must have been concluded before the case could be submitted to the jury. Both the verdicts were therefore null and void—Lyne, 4 Lah. 382, 25 Cr.L.J. 377, 77 I.C. 425, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 17.

Where the Judge required the jury to give a finding on one of two questions of fact constituting the proof in the case, before he concluded his charge with reference to the other question of fact, held that the procedure was irregular, if not illegal, and was certainly calculated to embarrass the jury in arriving at a proper verdict as to the character of the offence, if any proved—Badava Kunki, 2 Weir 499 (500). See also Nasar Darzi, 33 C.W.N. 451.

Although it is desirable that the Judge should charge the jury immediately after the pleaders on both sides have finished their addresses, while the arguments are fresh in the minds of the jury, still if the Judge has to adjourn the case for a week after the pleaders' addresses owing to the intervention of holidays and for special duty elsewhere, and then he charges the jury, the charge does not become illegal. Such adjournments are inevitable, and it is not necessary that the pleaders should address the jury again—Sur Nath, 50 All. 365, 28 Cr.L.J. 950 (952), 105 I.C. 662, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 342, A.I.R. 1927 All. 721, 25 A.L.J. 1077.

912. Charge to jury:—The form and contents of a charge vary with the circumstances of individual cases, with the nature of the evidence, and with the mode in which the case for the prosecution and the defence is conducted. Generally speaking, it is usual to begin a charge by setting out the offence or offences with which the prisoner is charged, and explaining the law relating to those offences. Then the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence may be referred to, and such comments made on the evidence adduced by the other side as the Sessions Judge may think desirable or useful. Care should be taken to place the defence set up fairly before the jury and to ensure that the jury appreciate the issue or issues which they have to try—Afruddi, 23 C.W.N. 833, 20 Cr.L.J. 661. Some sequence must be adopted by a Judge in charging a jury. Any sort of sequence will do, preferably chronological, but even alphabetical sequence is better than none at all—Kamraddi, 37 C.W.N. 1102 (1103).

To charge the jury at very great length may itself be an obstacle to their arriving at a correct decision. They are laymen and to enable them to come to a correct decision it is necessary that essentials should be clearly brought out and not overwhelmed and obscured by too great mass of detail—Ardali Afian, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 496, 35 Cr.L.J. 56, 146 I.C. 460, 1933 Cr.C. 1061.

The heads of the charge should represent with absolute accuracy the substance of the charge, and be such as to enable the High Court on appeal to see distinctly, whether the case was fairly and properly placed before the jury—Fanindra Nath, 36 Cal. 281, 13 C.W.N. 197. It is not only desirable but necessary that the charge should be recorded in an intelligible form and with sufficient fulness to enable the Appellate Court to satisfy itself that all points of law were clearly explained to the jury in reference to the facts and the evidence in the case—Panchu Das, 34 Cal. 698, 11 C.W.N. 666; Biru Mandal, 25 Cal. 561; Asanulla, 39 C.W.N. 924, 36 Cr.L.J. 1246, 157 I.C. 837, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 534, 62 Cal. 911, 1935 Cr.C. 910. A charge to a jury ought to be delivered extemporaneously, immediately after the conclusion of the final speeches of the lawyers engaged in the trial, or of the evidence, in the absence of such speeches. Obviously, it ought not to be written out before and in extenso and equally obviously it is not humanly possible except, perhaps, in isolated and very exceptional cases, to write it out afterwards in extenso from memory—Asanulla, supra.

In addressing the jury the Judge should endeavour to speak in a manner simple and direct. The charge must not be involved, nor should the language be extravagant—Harendra Pal, 11 Cr.L.J. 538 (539) (Cal.). He should not use expressions assuming the guilt of the accused, nor should he use slang and colloquial phrases and the interrogative method in charging the jury—Amiruddin, 45 Cal. 557, 22 C.W.N. 213. It is not a proper language of addressing the jury, to call certain witnesses as "a contemptible pair of cowards," or as "a precious pair of poltroons" or to describe the evidence of a medical witness as "shilly-shallying evidence of a person who showed a tendency to hedge and play for safety in giving evidence"—Khijiruddin, 53 Cal. 372, 27 Cr.L.J. 266 (268), 92 I.C. 442, 42 C.L.J. 504, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 139.

If a charge is to be delivered in Bengali, and the Sessions Judge is not sufficiently acquainted with that language to prepare the charge in Bengali, it is open to him to obtain such assistance as he requires from the officers of his Court. But it is not desirable that he should resort to the services of the Public Prosecutor for this purpose—Afruddi, 23 C.W.N. 833, 20 Cr.L.J. 661. But where the charge was written by the Judge in English, and he got it translated in the vernacular, and then it was read to the jury by the Government Pleader, held that there was no illegality in the—Sur Nath, 50 All. 365, 28 Cr.L.J. 950 (952), 105 I.C. 662, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 342, A.I.R. 1927 All. 721, 25 A.L.J. 1077. Where the Judge prepared the English and gave it to the peshkar to translate it into Bengali, but the peshkar could not satisfactorily do it, not having sufficient knowledge of English, and then it was arranged that the Public Prosecutor would translate the charge to the jury, the pleader for the defence being told that he could take objection whenever necessary, held that under the circumstances the procedure was not illegal—Dwijapada, 47 C.L.J. 449, 29 Cr.L.J. 438.

If practicable, the Judge should write out his charge before delivery. But as it is not always possible, he should reduce the charge to writing immediately after charging the jury, so that what he said is fresh in his mind. A delay makes it impossible for an Appellate Court to know whether the written charge was really the charge which was given to the jury—Jagmohan, 52 All. 207, 30 Cr.L.J. 1146 (1147); Rupan Singh, 4 Pat. 626, 27 Cr.L.J. 49 (53).

913. Summing up of evidence:—The object of a summing up is to enable the Judge to place before the Jury the facts and circumstances of the case both for and against the prosecution so as to help them in arriving at a right decision upon the points which arise in their consideration—Khijiruddin, 53 Cal. 372, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 139, 92 I.C. 442, 42 C.L.J. 504, 27 Cr.L.J. 266 (268); Bapurao Maroti, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 221, 1940 N.L.J. 264, 190 I.C. 283. It is mandatory upon the Judge to charge the jury and in so doing, to sum up the evidence for the prosecution and the defence and to lay down the law. The object of requiring the Judge to sum up the evidence is that he may render such assistance as he can to the jury by pointing out to them the salient evidence for both the prosecution and for the defence. It is not necessary for him to read his notes of the evidence to the jury, though it may often be desirable to read his notes of important parts of the evidence: nor is it necessary for him to go through the whole of the evidence. But he ought to refer to the salient parts of the evidence. It is, no doubt, legitimate for a Judge to ask the jury whether they have a particular piece of evidence in mind, or whether it would help them for him to read his notes on the subject; but the Judge is bound to sum up the evidence, whether or not the jury desire him to do so—Puttan Hassan, 37 Cr.L.J. 366, 160 I.C. 1060, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 52, 38 Bom.L.R. 19, 60 Bom. 599, 1936 Cr.C. 164 (F.B.). In charging the jury on facts it is not sufficient merely to recount and repeat chronologically the evidence as it has been given by the various witnesses. It is necessary to sift and weigh and value the evidence. The final weighing is for the jury but the Judge should see that all essential facts go into the scales of justice and on the proper side of the balance. Further, the facts must be marshalled by the Judge under separate heads as they affect each separate incident in the story—Nagendra Nath, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 742, 1929 Cr.C. 390, 124 I.C. 492, 57 Cal. 740, 31 Cr.L.J. 673, 34 C.W.N. 164 (168); Hachuni, 34 C.W.N. 390, 32 Cr.L.J. 33; Natabur Haldar, 34 C.W.N. 223, 31 Cr.L.J. 572. The 'summing up' contemplated by this section is a full and distinct statement of the evidence on both sides, with proper advice as to the legal bearing of the evidence and the weight to be attached to it. The Judge must formulate and specify simple issues for consideration and collate the evidence pro and con bearing upon the issues in order to assist the jury to arrive at the correct decision thereon. Merely summarising the evidence, the examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination of the different witnesses, and putting before the jury all that has been said by the witnesses and lawyers on the two sides and huddling together important facts as well as trivial points without any attempt at discrimination, is not a proper summing up. Such a summing up, instead of aiding the jury, only confuses them—Jessarat, 29 C.W.N. 526, 26 Cr.L.J. 1009 (1013), 87 I.C. 833, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 729. For the purposes of proper and intelligent summing up it is necessary that the Judge should appreciate evidence properly. The expression "summing up the evidence of the prosecution and defence" under this section does not mean that a Judge should give merely a summary of the evidence. He must marshal the evidence so as to bring out the lights and the shades, the probabilities and the improbabilities, so as to give proper assistance to the jury who are required to decide which view of the facts is true—Ilu, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 847 (849), 7 R.C. 378, 36 Cr.L.J. 358, 1934 Cr.C. 1364, 153 I.C. 454; Enayet Karim, 62

Cal. 337 (341). Where in summing up the case the Judge did not take up the different issues separately, calling attention to the pros and cons of the whole evidence bearing on each point but gave a bare summary of the oral evidence, witness by witness and then dealing with the case of each individual accused, stated seriatim, the evidence of different prosecution witnesses against him, this can never be a very satisfactory way of dealing with a case. A cataloguing of the witnesses may be useful in a way, but it can never be a substitute for the marshalling of the evidence, point by point, which is so necessary for presenting to the jury a complete picture with all its lights and its shades—Golok Behari Takal v Emp, 39 Cr.L.J. 161 (179), 173 I.C. 65, 1 L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 290, 10 R.C. 441, 66 C.L.J. 225, 42 C.W.N. 129, AIR 1938 Cal. 51 (per Biswas, J). Where the Judge, after stating the case for the prosecution, gave the jury a short summary of the evidence of each witness in numerical order and dealt also with the evidence against each individual accused but failed to marshal the evidence relating to each element of the charge, or to indicate to the jury how far in his opinion each element has been substantiated by the evidence before them, this would not of itself amount to misdirection, but, coupled with the omission and inaccuracies, it may amount to misdirection within the meaning of sec. 423, sub-sec. (2), Cr. P. Code—Ibid., page 167 (per McNair, J). It is the duty of the Judge to analyse, to sift and to weigh evidence, to marshal the facts properly and so out of the whole of the evidence that has been given to discover and arrange in some sort of order before the jury the facts which are really material and upon which they should concentrate their attention. In dealing with each individual prisoner he must take the evidence against each one, summarise it, point out clearly to the jury how each prisoner is affected by the evidence which has been given. He must point out the kind of weight which ought to be given to this or that or the other set of facts in order to show to the jury some light and shade in the submission of the facts to them, that some matters are particularly important, some less, and some of little importance. Otherwise it is impossible for the members of the jury to grasp the particular facts which are essential and important and concentrate their attention upon them. The duty of a Judge in these respects is all the more important in a lengthy trial. A mere resume of evidence in such cases is wholly insufficient—K-E. v. Akbar Sheikh, 35 C.W.N. 401 (406), 33 Cr.L.J. 486, 137 I.C. 682, AIR. 1932 Cal. 395, 1932 Cr.C. 342, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 360. See also Asanulla, 39 C.W.N. 924, 62 Cal. 911, 36 Cr.L.J. 1246, 157 I.C. 837, AIR. 1935 Cal. 534, 1935 Cr.C. 910. It is impracticable to set forth every bit of evidence on either side to the minutest detail and dilate on the minor discrepancies or contradictions occurring in the evidence in the meticulous manner. It is id est to stress unduly the multitude of discrepancies and contradictions which are bound to creep into the evidence—James Dowdall, 37 Cr.L.J. 607 (609), 162 I.C. 430, AIR. 1936 Nag. 103, 31 N.L.R. 215 (Sup.); Bafurao Maroti, AIR. 1940 Nag. 221, 1940 N.L.J. 264, 190 I.C. 283. The omission to mention before the jury some small items of corroborative or discrepant evidence may be comparatively unimportant, particularly in a case where the jury had been addressed by Advocates on each side. But the omission to make it clear to them exactly what they have to decide and how they have to proceed to decide it or the stating of these points in a manner which is positively misleading is a very serious misdirection since it is the business of the Judge to explain clearly to the jury what is the point which they have to decide—Rajendra Nath Lala, 38 Cr.L.J. 129 (132), 166 I.C. 91, AIR. 1937 Pat. 191, 18 P.L.T. 210, 3 BR. 124, 9 R.P. 249. No doubt the Judge must point out the important evidence in the case as well as emphasize the points for and against the accused, draw the attention of the jury to the contradictions and discrepancies in the evidence and even express his own opinion as to what conclusion the evidence on particular points leads to, provided he makes it perfectly clear to the jury that they are the final Judges on the questions of the fact. It is not for the Judge to propound new theories which have never been suggested at the Bar and to put them before the jury which would have no other effect than that of confusing them. Of course where he is satisfied that there is no legal evidence against any accused person he is bound to tell the jury that there is no such evidence and that they should acquit that particular accused—Bansidhar, 36 Cr.L.J. 322, 153 I.C. 364, A.I.R. 1934 All. 1032, 1934 A.L.J. 1160, 1934 Cr.C. 1339, 4 A.W.R. 788. See also Sumera, 35 Cr.L.J. 688, 148 I.C. 504, 1933 A.L.J. 1634. Whatever the conditions and the difficulties may be in this country Judges, Advocates and Police must realize that in a trial where a man's life is in jeopardy, it is essential to take the greatest possible care to avoid mistakes being made. It is not sufficient for the Judge simply to point out this piece of evidence and that this presumption, and that this bit of law and that. It is his duty to help and guide the jury to a proper conclusion. It is his duty to direct the attention of the jury to essential points. It is his duty to point out to them the weight to be attached to the evidence, and it is his duty to warn them gravely about the responsibility which rests upon their shoulders in a trial of this kind, and to impress upon them that if there is any doubt in their minds, they must give the benefit of that doubt to the accused—Molla Khan, 35 Cr.L.J. 601 (604), 148 I.C. 172, 37 C.W.N. 1061, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 169. Where the charge consists of a long, rambling repetition of the evidence, without any attempt to marshall the facts under appropriate heads, or to assist the jury to sift and weigh the evidence, so that they will be in a position to understand which are the really important parts of the evidence and which are of secondary importance, especially where the Judge has failed altogether to deal with the case of each of the accused separately, that is to say, he has omitted to point out to the jury exactly the evidence against each of the accused separately, although the last words of his charge were that they would consider the case of each accused separately, held that though it cannot be said that there is any actual misdirection of the jury, the Judge has failed almost entirely to give the jury the help and guidance which they are entitled to expect from the Judge and which it is his duty to give and that it is his duty to consider the case of each accused separately and to describe to the jury the evidence against each of the accused—Nabi Khan, 62 Cr.L.J. 43 (45), 37 Cr.L.J. 673, 162 I.C. 566, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 186, 1936 Cr.C. 308. In summing up the evidence, the Judge must be careful that whatever he says to the jury must be true. A Judge is not justified in stating that there is definite evidence against the accused, which as a matter of fact is not on the record—Nehru Mal, 2 Luck. 597, 4 O.W.N. 616, 28 Cr.L.J. 683 (684). So also, it would be a misdirection to tell the jury that the approver's evidence against a particular accused has received independent corroboration, when that is in fact not the case—Raghunath Pande, 13 P.L.T. 802, 1933 Cr.C. 249, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 96, 142 I.C. 809, 34 Cr.L.J. 421. A Judge should explain to the jury the issues of facts which the jury has to determine upon the charge on which the accused is being tried, and having made the jury understand these issues, the most convenient way of summing up the case is to present to the jury, as materially and impartially as he can, a summary of the evidence and the considerations and inferences to be drawn from the evidence, and as they appear both on the negative and the affirmative sides of the case—Enayet Hussain, 49 All. 209, 28 Cr.L.J. 15. The jurors ordinarily are not men who are used to weighing the evidence and it is therefore necessary that all help should be given to them in the light of the observations made by eminent Judges in decided cases—Abdul Gani, 53 Cal 181, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 235, 90 I.C. 537, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577, 42 C.L.J. 205. But it is not necessary for the Judge, in his charge to the jury, to go into minutest details in the evidence—Samaruddin, 40 Cal 367, 13 Cr.L.J. 821. It is impossible for the Judge to state every item of the evidence or to draw the attention of the jury to every fact which has been deposed; but he can, without difficulty, give a summary of the leading points of the evidence and the considerations and inferences to be drawn from them on the one side or on the other—Enayet Hussain, 49 All. 209, 28 Cr.L.J. 15, 99 I.C. 47, 6 A.I.Cr. 282, A.I.R. 1926 All. 752, 25 A.L.J. 33; Jati Mali, 33 C.W.N. 918, 1929 Cr.C. 477, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 765. Where, however, various weaknesses in the prosecution evidence are not pointed out and points in favour of the accused are omitted, the conviction cannot be allowed to stand—Sanyasi Gain v. Emp., 33 Cr.L.J. 1018 (1021), 171 I.C. 183, 10 R.C. 235, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 269. See also Subba Valayan v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 552. But where all the main points in the evidence had been carefully placed before the jury, the fact that one or two minor details had not been placed before the jury would not amount to such a misdirection on account of which it could be said that the entire trial was vitiated—Fajer Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 536, 147 I.C. 1043, 57 C.L.J. 583, 1934 Cr.C. 180, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 142; Brinchipada Dafadar v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 964 (1966), A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 625, 67 C.L.J. 45, 177 I.C. 929, 11 R.C. 296. It is not possible, however, for any Judge to bring all the important facts together in one paragraph for the benefit of the jury. Where there are a large number of important points to be discussed, it is necessary that some of those points should be separated by some considerable time from the other items of the charge—Thevar Servai, 39 Cr.L.J. 323 (325), 173 I.C. 450, 1938 M.W.N. 215, 10 R.M. 587, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 477. In a case where numerous points arise with a greater or less bearing on the main issue, the Judge cannot be expected to place them all before the jury, nor is it fair to criticize every phrase in his summing up—Abdul Gafur Kotwal v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 101 (105), 178 I.C. 637, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 658, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 636. But where a charge to the jury did not show what the facts of the case were, what the evidence adduced was, or what the case for the accused was, held that the case was not put to the jury as required by law, or in such a way as to enable them to exercise their functions as jurymen—Birendra Lal, 30 Cal. 822 (830). It is the duty of a Judge to place the case before the jury in such a way as to enable them to come to a reasonable and fair conclusion. Where the Judge's charge to the jury is so confusing that the jury received no assistance from it whatsoever, in no part of the charge can one find a connected account of what the case for the prosecution is or what the defence case is and the Judge has mixed up the arguments of the defence with the statement of the case for the prosecution, muddling the whole charge, the unsatisfactory feature of the charge to the jury by itself would be a sufficient ground for setting aside the verdict of the jury—Mohsena Khatun v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 610 (611), 43 C.W.N. 893, 40 Cr.L.J. 880, 184 I.C. 222.

A charge to a jury must be read as a whole. If there are salient propositions in law in it, these will, of course, be the subject of separate analysis. But in a protracted narrative of fact, the determination of which is ultimately left to the jury, it must needs be that the view of the Judge may not coincide with the views of others who look upon the whole proceedings in black type. It would, however, not be in accordance either with usual or with good practice to treat such cases as cases of misdirection, if, upon the general view taken, the case has been fairly left within the jury's province—Channing Arnold v. King-Emp., 41 Cal. 1023 (1062), 18 C.W.N. 785, A.I.R. 1914 P.C. 116, 23 I.C. 661, 15 Cr.L.J. 309, 8 L.B.R. 16, 41 I.A. 149, (P.C.); Jagadish Dutt v. Emp., A.I.R. 1910 Oudh 337 (340), 1940 O.W.N. 481, 1940 O.L.R. 306, 188 I.C. 110, 41 Cr.L.J. 545. In considering whether a Judge has misdirected the jury, the tenor and general effect of the whole summing up should be looked at and if, upon the whole summing up the Court is of opinion that substantially the proper direction has been given to the jury, it will not interfere, though the Judge omitted to direct the jury expressly on some important point—C. B. Plucknett, 43 C.W.N. 133 (138), A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 682, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 187, 41 Cr.L.J. 59, 184 I.C. 614. It is not right or fair to judge by one single sentence but one must not only consider the whole of the passage in which the sentence occurs, but also consider the antecedent passages and the subsequent passages in the summing up. Before one can arrive at any opinion as to whether any particular passage in the summing amounts to a misdirection or not, one must look at and consider the summing up in its entirety—Ibid.

It is not in every case when the charge to the jury is open to criticism in matters of detail that the High Court will interfere in appeal. Language may be used too broadly or not happily in its expression; but the essential point for consideration is whether the case against the accused has been fairly brought to their notice which may appropriately guide them in deciding whether the accused is guilty or innocent —Yusuf M'a v. Emp, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 579 (583), 1938 P.W.N. 727, 5 B.R. 185, 20 P.L.T. 51, 178 I.C. 934, 40 Cr.L.J. 147.

In summing up the case, it is not enough to merely read out the evidence to the jury; the Judge must analyse the evidence and place before the jury all facts which legitimately arise in favour of the accused—Rajab Ali, 31 C.W.N. 881, 28 Cr.L.J. 742 (744); Ram Charittar, 34 C.W.N. 954, 32 Cr.L.J. 186, 128 I.C. 807, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 10, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 103, 1931 Cr.C. 42; Mira, 6 Bom.L.R. 31; and this he must do, even though the pleader for the accused thought it unnecessary to place much reliance on the defence of the accused—Sangan, 17 Cr.L.J. 19 (Mad.); Golapdi, 37 C.W.N. 261, 34 Cr.L.J. 1078, 145 I.C. 821, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 656, 1933 Cr.C. 1102. The charge should deal with the defence evidence if there is such evidence even though it is not urged by the defence pleader—Bapurao Maroti, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 221 (224), 1940 N.L.J. 264, 190 I.C. 283. Where the charge to the jury was entirely one-sided, and the jury were practically told that there was no doubt as to the facts of the case and that there was no use of considering the matter from any point of view other than that presented by the prosecution, held that the charge was entirely defective, and there must be a retrial—Rajab Ali, supra; Tajali Miam, 7 Pat. 50, 28 Cr.L.J. 843 (846), 104 I.C. 459, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 31, 9 P.L.T. 57. The Judge is entitled to have regard to the elaboration and skill with which the trial contentions have been placed before the jury by the advocates on both sides, but he cannot omit any matters of prime importance, especially if they favour the accused, merely because they have been elaborately discussed by the advocate—Malgowda, 27 Bom. 644; Munhwesayo, 3 S.L.R. 102, 11 Cr.L.J. 13; Fakira, 40 Bom. 220; Abdul Aziz, 35 Cr.L.J. 957, 149 I.C. 447, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 94, 1934 Cr.C. 377. So also, he cannot omit to draw the attention of the jury to what appears to be a possible defence for the accused, notwithstanding that it has not been suggested by the counsel of the accused—Upendra Nath Das, 19 C.W.N. 653, 21 C.L.J. 377, 30 I.C. 113, A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 773, 16 Cr.L.J. 561 (568). But at the same time it would be a most undesirable practice for Judges to put hypothetical defences before the jury which were not taken by the accused and which might cause serious prejudice to him—Upendra Nath Das, supra. Omission to put the material facts or to put the defence, before the jury is sufficient to cause the High Court to quash the conviction if this Court comes to the conclusion that the verdict of the jury was affected thereby—Barendra Kumar Ghose, 28 C.W.N. 170 (199), 81 I.C. 353, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 257, 25 Cr.L.J. 817, 38 C.L.J. 411; R. v. Hill, (1911) 7 Cr. App. 26; R. v. Wilson, (1913) 9 Cr. App. Rep. 124; R. v. Smith, (1920) 84 J.P. 67. But where the Judge made a reference to the statement made by the accused, the mere omission to draw the attention of the jury to the defence of the accused is not a misdirection and does not vitiate the trial—Barendra Kumar Ghose, supra. The Judge is to put everything in favour of the accused before the jury, but he is not bound to do anything more. It is not his business to assume the part of the defence counsel. It is his duty to place the evidence before the jury as he finds it, and it is open to the jury to believe what the witnesses said, and to accept it if they choose to do so—Samiuddin, 32 C.W.N. 616 (619), 29 Cr.L.J. 497, 109 I.C. 225, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 500, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 223.

Where there was no specific defence put forward and the defence really was a denial of the charge coupled with destructive criticism of the prosecution evidence, the Judge did all that could be expected of him when he drew the juror's attention to the discrepancies in the evidence and to the criticism of the evidence advanced by the pleader for the defence. No useful purpose would have been served by his formally charging the jury that the defence was a denial of the prosecution case—Irail, 33 Cr.L.J. 694, 138 I.C. 756, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 536, 36 C.W.N. 377, 55 C.L.J. 132, 1932 Cr.C. 564, 59 Cal. 1123, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 517. It is a well recognised rule of prudence, that in summing up a case before the jury, it is not enough merely to read the evidence to the jury; the Judge must analyse the evidence and place before the jury all facts which legitimately arise in favour of the accused—Hari, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 145 (166), 36 Cr.L.J. 1161, 157 I.C. 697, 28 S.L.R. 397, 1935 Cr.C. 753 following

Rajabali, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 631, 103 I.C. 790, 28 Cr.L.J. 742; Ram Charitar, A.I.R. 1931 Cal 10, 1931 Cr.C. 42, 128 I.C. 807, 32 Cr.L.J. 186 and Mina Gajbar, 6 Bom.L.R. 31. When the statement of the accused under sec. 342, Cr. P. C., only amounted to an assertion of innocence and an explanation of how he had made the retracted confession, the omission of the Judge to deal specifically with the statement of the accused in the Sessions Court did not cause any harm to the accused when having regard to the language of the Judge, the jury must have throughout appreciated perfectly well what his defence was and the reasons for which he maintained that the jury should disregard his confession—Baldeo, 34 Cr.L.J. 369 (371), 142 I.C. 639, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 187, 1933 Cr.C. 233, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal 310. Where the defence was substantially put to the jury, a mere omission to refer to this or that circumstance or suggestion is not non-direction, which amounts to misdirection. It is not the function of the Judge to repeat to the jury every argument or suggestion urged on behalf of the defence—Manar Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 567 (570), 147 I.C. 1203, 37 C.W.N. 1066, 58 C.L.J. 66, 60 Cal 1339, A.I.R. 1934 Cal 124, 1934 Cr.C. 169; Aziz Khan, 36 Cr.L.J. 612 (614), 154 I.C. 1019, A.I.R. 1935 All. 103, 1935 Cr.C. 89; Fajer Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 536, 147 I.C. 1043, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 142, 57 C.L.J. 583, 1934 Cr.C. 180. See also Mangal Singh, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 171, 8 O.W.N. 344, 1931 Cr.C. 443, 132 I.C. 232, 32 Cr.L.J. 858; Ramsarup Singh, A.I.R. 1930 Pat 513, 1930 Cr.C. 1009, 128 I.C. 121, 32 Cr.L.J. 72, 9 Pat. 606, 11 P.L.T. 867; Bapurao Maroti, A.I.R. 1940 Nag 221, 1940 N.L.J. 254. It is quite open to the Judge and indeed it is his duty, to assist the jury with his advice and certainly with his criticism of the arguments on behalf of the defence provided that he warns them that it is their duty to make up their minds and if he states to them that they are not bound by his expressions of opinion—Hari Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 1026 (1029), 156 I.C. 921, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 263, 14 Pat. 225, 16 P.L.T. 380, 1935 Cr.C. 749. There is no misdirection when the Judge has set out the defence case and discussed the evidence led in support of it at great length, and if his presentation of it was at times coloured by the view he had formed, he at least left every point of any importance whatever to the jury—Abdul Gafur Kotwal v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 101 (103), 178 I.C. 637, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 658, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal 636, following Barendra Kumar Ghose, 38 C.L.J. 411, 81 I.C. 353, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 257, 25 Cr.L.J. 817, 28 C.W.N. 170, where Sir Ashutosh Mukherjee, J., observed: "The impression left on my mind is that, taken as a whole, it is what is sometimes designated as a charge for a conviction. But it cannot fairly be said that the facts were not left to the jury to decide, and that the Judge usurped their function, merely because he gave expression, as he was entitled, to his opinion on the evidence strongly."

Generally speaking, it is desirable and indeed obligatory that a Judge in summing up to the jury should divide up the evidence as it affects each individual accused. Where, however, all the evidence was such that it affected all the accused persons equally or not at all, the omission to divide up the evidence did not constitute misdirection as no injustice could thereby have been caused to any of the accused—Khoda Bux, 35 Cr.L.J. 554 (557), 61 Cal. 6, 147 I.C. 1124, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 105, 37 C.W.N. 1122, 1934 Cr.C. 156. See also Akabar Sheikh, supra and Khijiruddin in Note 915 (6).

Where a Judge has sought to discount the evidence which went in favour of the accused by considering arguments which seems to have been drawn from the speeches of the Public Prosecutor and which were not based on any evidence before the Court and has dogmatically asserted with regard to certain of the charges made by the defence that they cannot stand and that the jury must not place any faith in them and remarks of that description, held that this is not the proper way to charge the jury and that he must leave the matter to the jury, though he may express his own opinion about it—Kamiraddi, 37 C.W.N. 1102 (1104).

It is no misdirection for the Judge to point out that there was nothing shown in cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution which would discredit their evidence within the meaning of the Evidence Act—Shree Kishen, A.I.R. 1935 All 928, 37 Cr.L.J. 173, 159 I.C. 900 But it is a serious error to tell a jury, in any form of words, that the law in a criminal trial requires them prima facie to accept the particular statements of a witness and it is only when the defence have shown good reason to reject his statements that the jury have any option in the matter. A jury cannot be required to make the presumption against an accused person that the particular statements of a particular witness are true still less can it be required to make such a presumption as regards the prosecution witnesses as a body or the prosecution evidence as a whole. The jury should be told that it is their duty to consider carefully and to say whether they are convinced by the prosecution evidence and that, if they are not convinced, there is no law which obliges them to convict. If they do in such a case convict they stand without excuse before the law—Tazem Ali, 33 Cr.L.J. 196 (199), 135 I.C. 727, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 796, 1931 Cr.C. 1060, 58 Cal. 1095, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 135, dissenting from Ambar Ali, 117 I.C. 684, 33 C.W.N. 55, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 769, 48 C.L.J. 473, 30 Cr.L.J. 825. It is a misdirection to tell the jury that there is a presumption in law that a witness who comes to Court and deposes on oath should be believed until there is good reason to disbelieve him. By all means let Judges warn juries against rejecting testimony for no reason whatever, but the less that is heard of legal presumptions in favour of veracity the better—Saroj Kumar, 33 Cr.L.J. 854 (857), 139 I.C. 873, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 474, 55 C.L.J. 439, 1932 Cr.C. 464, 59 Cal. 1361, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 667. If a witness goes into the witness-box and testifies on oath the jury, unless there is something to operate on their minds, may draw an inference—not as a matter of law, but rather as a matter of fact—that he is prima facie likely to be speaking the truth, particularly in capital cases—C. B. Plucknett, 43 C.W.N. 133 (139), A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 682, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 187, 41 Cr.L.J. 59, 184 I.C. 614. The main propositions are two: (1) that it is a mis-direction to tell the jury that they must presume that a witness is telling the truth; and (2) that under sec. 114 of the Evidence Act they may presume that a witness is telling the truth. Unless a Court of fact may presume that a witness is telling the truth it would be impossible to carry on the administration of justice under the present system. Unless such a presumption may be drawn, evidence would always have to be given aliunde to show that a witness was speaking the truth and the process would have to go on ad infinitum. To go further and say that this presumption must be drawn is of course quite a different thing. In every case it will be for the Court of fact to say whether they are prepared to presume that a certain witness is speaking the truth or not. That is really saying no more than that they will decide whether they will believe him or not. It is going too far to suggest that a jury should not disbelieve a witness unless some positive ground is elicited in the course of cross-examination. They may disbelieve him for many reasons—Shaikh Tarkal v. Emp., 43 C.W.N. 695. There was no misdirection when the Judge said that certain witnesses corroborated the prosecution story and at other places he said that certain witnesses supported the prosecution story. When he said this he did not mean to say that those witnesses should necessarily be believed—Lala, A.I.R. 1933 All. 941, 1933 A.L.J. 1446, 1933 Cr.C. 1561, 35 Cr.L.J. 668, 148 I.C. 339.

On a charge of murder, if the Judge with all his advantages, forms a definite and strong opinion that the evidence is not sufficient for a conviction, it is dangerous to leave the matter to the jury without a strong indication of the Judge's own opinion, so long as he makes it clear that in spite of that opinion they can, if they chose, disregard it and bring in a verdict of guilty—Sali Sheikh, 54 C.L.J. 244 (249), A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 752, 1931 Cr.C. 1016, 134 I.C. 1191.

In difficult and hard swearing cases in which there is undoubtedly common ground that there is strong enmity on either side on the part of the two factions in the village the Judge's duty may be said to be this: If he feels very strongly that the prosecution case is a true one, whilst maintaining his care and his vigilance in presenting all the facts before the jury, he ought to, as much as possible, conceal his feelings. It is no part of a Judge's duty to act as an Assistant Public Prosecutor. But if he feels that there is something extremely suspicious about the prosecution case, if he finds that the main witness for the prosecution is a person whose testimony should be regarded with the greatest caution, then he ought to show his hand to the jury. He is not a mere judicial automaton, that is worse than useless and waste of public time—Madan Tilakdas v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 767 (768), 169 I.C. 306, 9 R.C. 914, 41 C.W.N. 508, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 266.

When the Appellate Courts are called upon to say whether or not the Judge has done his duty in addressing the jury on the facts, it must look to his summing up as a whole and see that the case has been fairly laid before them. It is impossible for any Judge to state every item of evidence or to draw the attention of the jury to each and every fact which has been deposed to before them. He has of course to give summary of the leading points of the evidence and the considerations and inferences to be drawn from it on the one side and on the other—Mangal Singh, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 171, 8 O.W.N. 344, 1931 Cr.C. 443, 132 I.C. 232, 32 Cr.L.J. 858. See also Hossain, 35 Cr.L.J. 1487, 152 I.C. 40, 59 C.L.J. 396, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 757, 1934 Cr.C. 1165.

The Judge must be careful not to usurp the functions of the advocate, and should present the evidence of the case to the jury in a dispassionate and impartial manner without expressing any opinion on the reliability of the evidence on either side—Tanbullah, 25 C.W.N. 682, 23 Cr.L.J. 244. His charge to the jury must not be of the manner of a speech of the prosecuting counsel—Khajiruddin, 53 Cal. 372, 27 Cr.L.J. 265 (268), 24 C.L.J. 504, 92 I.C. 442, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 139.

In cases of very serious offences, and where the evidence is merely circumstantial, or where the trial has been a prolonged one, the evidence should be read over in extenso to the jury (and not merely summed up)—Fateh Chand, 5 B.H.C.R. 85; Fakira Ratanlal 850.

The law does not expressly require a Judge to formulate, at the conclusion of the delivery of his charge, specific questions for the jurors' reply. Such a practice is however helpful in deciding the legal effect of the Judge's finding, but the formulation of such questions requires great care, and the queries should be confined within the narrowest possible compass—Rupan Singh, 4 Pat. 626, 27 Cr.L.J. 49, 91 I.C. 225, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 797, 7 P.L.T. 239.

914. "Laying down the law":—In order to comply with the provisions of this section the Judge should concisely but lucidly explain to the jury the ingredients of the section under which the accused is being charged and should also explain the meanings of any terms in the section which are not likely to be immediately understood by a layman—A. M. Mathews v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 87, 41 Cr.L.J. 482 (483), 187 I.C. 456.

It is the duty of the Judge to give a direction upon the law to the jury so far as to make them understand the law as bearing upon the facts, and to enable them to decide the point at issue—Jhubboo, 8 Cal. 739. It is the duty of the Judge to tell the jury how to apply the law to the facts found by them. The Judge would be wanting in the proper discharge of his duty to the jury if he places the proper facts to the jury without telling them how they should decide the guilt or otherwise of the accused on the law—Jabanullah, 34 C.W.N. 365 (367), 57 Cal. 1162, 33 Cr.L.J. 111. Under sec. 297, Cr. P. C., it is the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury all the essential elements of the offences charged against the accused and to give directions on the law so as to make the law clear in relation to the facts of the case and the evidence adduced. Even the mere reading of the sections to the jury does not amount to an explanation of the law. Nor can the Judge rely on the fact that Advocates on both sides had explained the law to the jury. The Judge must lay down the law by which the jury is to be guided. This provision is imperative and it cannot be too emphatically stated that in cases tried with the help of a jury it is the clear duty of the Judge to explain what in law are the essential requisites of an offence and what must be proved to constitute that offence—Jhina Soma, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 457 (459), 41 Bom.L.R. 953, 41 Cr.L.J. 176, 183 I.C. 382, 11 L.R. 1939 Bom. 648. It is quite unnecessary to explain to the jury, or to lecture the jury upon abstract principles of law or abstract theories of proof. To start off in a charge with long disquisitions on abstract principles is sure to confuse the jury. Obviously though the Judge need not explain to the jury abstract principles of law, he must explain those particular sections of the Indian Penal Code which apply to the particular case which the jury are trying, and he ought to set out in the copy of the charge which is sent up with the record, his explanation in sufficient detail to enable the High Court to ascertain whether he has properly explained the law about the offences with which the accused are charged to the jury—Garibulla, 37 C.W.N. 1131, 34 Cr.L.J. 1231, 146 I.C. 237, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 722, 1933 Cr.C. 1272. Where the Judge says that he explained the sections to the jury, this is not sufficient. He must set down in his charge what, in fact, he said to the jury about the law to enable the Appellate Court to decide whether his statement of the law was correct or not—Kamiraddi, 37 C.W.N. 1102 (1104). It is absolutely necessary that the heads of charge should show clearly and distinctly what the exposition of law was—Madan Tilakdas v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 767 (768), 169 I.C. 306, 9 R.C. 914, 41 C.W.N. 508, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 266. See also Hafezali, 32 Cr.L.J. 236, 129 I.C. 109, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 712, 1930 Cr.C. 1112, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 125. But when none of the sections presented any particular difficulty and the Judge in his charge said that he explained the sections to the jury, the High Court held that the explanation was sufficient—Hanif, 34 Cr.L.J. 56, 140 I.C. 723, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 785, 1933 Cr.C. 829, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 29. Thus, where in a trial for murder, grave and sudden provocation causing loss of power of self-control is suggested for the defence, reducing the offence to culpable homicide, it is the duty of the Judge to explain the distinction between murder and culpable homicide, and the jury as judges of facts have to decide the issue as to sudden provocation—Dadubhai, Ratanlal 766 (768). In a charge of rioting, the jury must be told that a rioting can only take place when there is an unlawful assembly consisting of at least five men with one of the common objects mentioned in the I. P. C., and it is essentially necessary to mention what an unlawful assembly is. The jury are not experts in law—Abdul Sheikh, 17 Cr.L.J. 92 (Cal.). In a case of robbery, the Judge should explain to the jury that theft becomes robbery only when it is shown that in the course of committing theft and for the purpose of committing theft, violence has been used. In a charge of dacoity, the jury must be told that robbery becomes dacoity when it is committed by not less than five persons, and that if the jury convicts three or four persons, they must convict them of robbery and not of dacoity, and that if the jury convicts them of dacoity, they must be satisfied that other unknown persons not charged in the case must have joined in the act so as to make up the required number of five—Raman Koravan, 54 Mad. 588, 32 Cr.L.J. 1212, (1213, 1214), 134 I.C. 801, 1931 M.W.N. 652, 33 M.L.W. 411, 1931 Cr.C. 475, A.I.R. 1931 Mad 427, Ind. Rul 1931 Mad 849; Golam Aspha, 33 Cr.L.J. 477, 1932 Cr.C. 264, A.I.R. 1932 Cal 295, 137 I.C. 497, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 336; Duraisami Naicker, 60 M.L.J. 691, 32 Cr.L.J. 973. In cases of offences falling under sec. 395, I. P. C., the Judge in his charge to the jury ought to explain to the jurors what are the essential ingredients that go to constitute the offence of robbery as defined in sec. 390, I. P. C., and if he does not do so it is a real and not a mere technical defect. Section 537, Cr. P. C., cannot be made applicable to such a case so as to cure the illegality—Nawab Ali, 81 I.C. 953, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 411, 11 O.L.J. 315, 25 Cr.L.J. 1129; Jagan, 35 Cr.L.J. 507, 147 I.C. 976, 11 O.W.N. 200, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 175, 1935 Cr.C. 298, 1934 O.L.R. 202. In a case of cheating under sec. 420, I. P. C., it is clearly necessary to point out to the jury the difference between a promise which is not intended to be kept at the time it is made and a promise which is intended to be kept at the time it is made but is subsequently broken. In the latter case the offence would not necessarily be one coming under the legal definition of cheating—A. M. Mathews v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah 87 (88), 41 Cr.L.J. 482, 187 I.C. 456. Mere reference to the sections of the I. P. C., defining offences (Abbas, 25 Cal. 736) or mere reading out to the jury the sections of the I. P. C., does not amount to a sufficient explanation of the law—Sri prasad, 4 C.W.N. 193. See Arnuga, 1933 M.W.N. 320. Nor should the Judge merely give a copy of the Penal Code to the jury to read and interpret it for themselves, but he must explain the law to them and tell them in a kind of popular language of what offence they are to convict the accused—Jaspath, 14 Cal 164; Wilson, 30 C.W.N. 693, 27 Cr.L.J. 926. It is the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury the law applicable to the case, and it is the duty of the jury to accept the law as laid down by the Judge without any extraneous aid. If the jury is unable to understand the law fully and clearly, it is the duty of the Judge to explain it to them afresh, but in doing so he cannot place before them the Indian Penal Code or any legal treatise for the purpose of finding out the law. If he does so, he fails in his duty—Wilson, supra. It is necessary for a Judge to read the very words of the section itself to the jury, if he purports to give them what the provisions of law are, and then, if necessary, to explain what is the meaning of the section. In a case of murder it is not a proper direction to define murder in one sentence "murder is the intentional killing of another human being with malice or forethought." It is necessary to refer to the sections which relate to culpable homicide, and to direct the jury as to what is culpable homicide and in what circumstances culpable homicide amounts to murder—Durga Charan, 26 C.W.N. 1002, 23 Cr.L.J. 557. A Judge should adhere to the words of the particular section of the Penal Code he has to deal with, and not substitute a phraseology of his own—Nakul, 13 C.W.N. 754, 11 Cr.L.J. 9. Moreover, it is the duty of the Judge to call the attention of the jury to different elements constituting the offence and to deal with the evidence by which it is proposed to make the accused liable—Taju Pramanik, 25 Cal. 711; Kasimuddin, 47 Cal. 795, 21 Cr.L.J. 694; Mari Valayan, 30 Mad. 44. It is also the duty of the Judge to explain the law as regards abetment—Hemanta Kumar Pathak, 47 Cal. 46 (50), 21 Cr.L.J. 775. In complicated cases, the Judge should in his charge to the jury not only explain the law, but should draw their attention to the evidence in the case and explain how they shall apply the law to the particular facts of the case—Rupan Singh, 4 Pat. 626, 27 Cr.L.J. 49, 91 I.C. 225, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 797, 7 P.L.T. 239.

The Judge cannot omit to explain the law on the ground that it has been sufficiently explained by the pleaders on both sides in their addresses to the jury. The responsibility of laying down the law for the guidance of the jury rests entirely with the Judge, and the verdict given by the jury in the absence of any such direction on the law by which they should be guided cannot be accepted as a valid verdict in the case—Magan Das, 20 Cal. 379, Ramprosad, 26 Cr.L.J. 1090, 88 I.C. 178, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 53. The Judge's charge is not only for the purpose of stating the law and explaining it to the jury, but also of helping them to find facts. He has to advise the jury as to the logical bearing of the evidence admitted upon the matters to be found by them. He ought to do that to limit the chances of error of the jury—Afiruddi, 23 C.W.N. 833, 20 Cr.L.J. 661.

But in explaining the law upon a particular offence the Judge ought not to discourse in all branches and departments of the crime, especially in a case of complicated offence as murder or culpable homicide. To do so is to confuse the jury and possibly to direct their deliberations into channels that have nothing to do with the case. The duty of a Judge is to lay down the law only in so far as it has a bearing on the evidence adduced in the particular case, to simplify the issues fairly and properly before the Court, to direct the minds of the jurors to those issues alone, and not to perplex their minds with considerations that are outside the legitimate scope of the inquiry—Upendra Nath Das, A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 773, 30 I.C. 113, 21 C.L.J. 377, 19 C.W.N. 653, 16 Cr.L.J. 561 (566) (F.B.); Nagendra Nath, 34 C.W.N. 164 (169), 57 Cal. 740. It is not for the Judge to explain to the jury questions of law which do not arise on the facts or pleadings of the parties—Adam Ali, 31 C.W.N. 314, 28 Cr.L.J. 334, 100 I.C. 718, 45 C.L.J. 131, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 324, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 546. The law should be stated in the shortest and simplest terms, and without reference to the numbers of Acts and sections of which they have never heard. Fine language and lofty homilies, as well as long and abstruse dissertations upon law should be strictly avoided—Nagendra Nath, 34 C.W.N. 164 (169), 57 Cal. 740. No rulings or authorities or head notes of cases should be cited from Law Reports by the Judge in his charge

1. The first step in the process of the investigation is the identification of the problem. This involves a thorough review of the available information and a clear definition of the issue at hand.

2. Once the problem is identified, the next step is to gather relevant data. This can be done through various methods, including interviews, observations, and the review of documents.

3. The third step is to analyze the data collected. This involves looking for patterns, trends, and any other information that might be useful in understanding the problem.

4. After the data has been analyzed, the next step is to develop a plan of action. This plan should outline the steps that need to be taken to solve the problem.

5. The final step is to implement the plan. This involves putting the plan into action and monitoring the progress to ensure that the problem is being solved.

A.I.R. 1935 All. 103, 1935 Cr.C. 89 But the usual way of directing the jury is to tell them that they must start with a presumption of the innocence of the accused and that the prosecution must prove their case beyond reasonable doubt—Tazen Ali, 33 Cr.L.J. 196, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 796 (798), 135 I.C. 727, 1931 Cr.C. 1060, 58 Cal. 1095, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 135. The cardinal or basic rule of the administration of criminal justice, according to British notions, is that the prosecution must prove the guilt of the accused, and that the accused need not prove anything. He is entitled to stand on the innocence which the law imputes to him till it is displaced—Rex v. Krishnan, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 329 (335), 1939 M.W.N. 1213, 1939 M.Cr.C. 289. Every accused is entitled to be presumed to be innocent till there is evidence of his guilt; and the presumption ought not to be too easily displaced; and it may be right to have regard to the position in life of the accused in considering whether it is displaced. That is not to say that by reason of wealth, position or age any subject is to be deemed to be immune from the consequences of his actions if in fact they are criminal—Chandreshwar Prasad v. Arunendra Mohan, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 626, 17 P.L.T. 794. While the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner there is no such burden laid on the prisoner to prove his innocence and it is sufficient for him to raise a doubt as to his guilt; he is not bound to satisfy the jury of his innocence. Where a Judge, although he has rightly put the burden of proof of the guilt of the accused upon the prosecution, has wrongly put the proof of their innocence upon the accused, it amounts to an error of law. Section 106 of the Evidence Act is not a proviso to the rule that the burden of proving the guilt of the accused is upon the prosecution but on the contrary, the section is subject to that rule. The burden of proving a particular fact or a particular defence is a different matter. Even in a case to which section 105 of the Evidence Act applies an accused may rely upon an exception in his defence and fail to prove it and yet be entitled to an acquittal, for the prosecution may have failed to prove all the necessary elements in the offence of which the accused has been charged, or the accused may by his statement, read with the other evidence on record, have raised a reasonable doubt in the mind of the Court and so have entitled himself to an acquittal—Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (212, 213), 184 I.C. 474, 12 RS 107. See also Kanakasabai Pillai v. Emp., 50 M.L.W. 452, 1939 M.W.N. 883. It is an error on the part of the Judge to direct the jury that the "Prosecution's duty is to prove a prima facie case." The prosecution have to do more than that; they must prove the guilt of the accused; there is no principle in the English law whereby if the prosecution has proved a prima facie case, the accused must bring evidence in rebuttal or be convicted—Shewaram v. Emp., supra. In a criminal trial the presumption of innocence is always in favour of the accused till he is found guilty, and he is also entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt. Even if the defences taken up by the accused in the alternative were inconsistent, that would not necessarily prove that the evidence led on behalf of the prosecution, who must establish the guilt of the accused, should have been believed by the jury—Jhina Soma, A.I.R. 1939 Bom 457 (460), 41 Bom.L.R. 965, 41 Cr.L.J. 176, 185 I.C. 382. Even if the version put forward by the defence be wholly untrue, yet the prosecution must establish beyond all reasonable doubt that the case put forward by them is true—Rambrichh Singh v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 114 (120). If the case of the prosecution is false on the whole the accused is entitled to an acquittal whether his defence be true or false—Gouri Narayan Barua v. Tulbikram Chettri, 25 C.W.N. 838 (841). See also Attygalle, A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 169, 162 I.C. 450, 1936 Cr.C. 623, 1936 M.W.N. 653, 38 Bom.L.R. 700, 44 M.W.N. 86, 1936 A.L.J. 808, 38 P.L.R. 789, 71 M.L.J. 321, 1936 A.W.R. (P.C.) 750, 37 Cr.L.J. 628. For other cases of omission to explain the law, amounting to a misdirection, see Nagendra Bhakta, 37 C.W.N. 348; Mukammad Samiruddin, 35 Cr.L.J. 1216, 150 I.C. 1122, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 622, 1934 Cr.C. 907; Sasen Behari, 58 Cal. 1051, 35 C.W.N. 425, 32 Cr.L.J. 836, 1931 Cr.C. 248, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 184, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 529 (S.B.).

(2) Failure to call the attention of the jury to different elements constituting the offence is a misdirection—Taju Pramanik, 35 Cal. 711. Thus, where in a case of murder, the Judge simply asked the jury to find whether the prisoner inflicted the injuries on the deceased, it was held to be a misdirection; the jury ought to have been asked to find as to the intention of the accused to cause death or the knowledge that he was likely to cause death—Babya, 1 Bom.L.R. 784; Natabar, 35 Cal. 531. Similarly, where in a case under secs 474 and 475, I. P. C., the Judge told the jury that the only issue which they had to decide was whether the forged documents were in the possession of the accused, ignoring altogether the question of knowledge combined with intention which is so absolutely requisite to justify a conviction under sec. 474, I. P. C., it was held that the Judge had misdirected the jury—Abaji, 16 Bom. 165. Where in a case of retaining stolen property, the Judge directed the jury to decide whether the property was stolen and whether it was retained by the accused, without asking them to decide whether the accused knew or had reason to believe the property to be stolen, it was held that this amounted to a misdirection—Balya, 15 Bom. 369. So also, in a case of receiving property stolen in the commission of a dacoity (sec. 412, I. P. C.), the Judge directed the jury to the effect that if they found that the properties were properly identified as having been the properties stolen at the time of the dacoity, and were found in the accused's possession, they were bound to presume the accused's guilt, but the jury were not properly directed that it was their duty to weigh all the circumstances of the case and consider the accused's explanation and then decide whether or not they should make such a presumption; held that this was a serious misdirection—Satya Charan, 52 Cal. 223, 26 Cr.L.J. 1155, 88 I.C. 515, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 666.

(3) Failure to point out to the jury the relevancy or otherwise of a confession made under inducement, and merely telling the jury that if the confession was true it was enough to warrant the conviction of the accused, is a misdirection—Thandraya, 26 Mad. 38. See Notes under sec. 298.

(4) Omission to explain to the jury that a retracted confession should have practically no weight against a person other than the maker, and that the very fullest corroboration is necessary, far more than is required for the sworn testimony of an accomplice, is a serious misdirection—Hemanta Kumar Pathak, 47 Cal. 56 (52). Where the Sessions Judge directed the jury that the retracted confession of a co-accused is practically of no value against anybody but the confessor, but asked the jury to take into consideration the confession while considering the cases of the other two co-accused individually, held that this was a misdirection, as it was likely to prejudice the jury and lead them to give some weight to such statements when they should have disregarded them altogether—Ibrahim, 42 C.L.J. 496, 26 Cr.L.J. 1146 (1147), 88 I.C. 458, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 374.

If a confession is subsequently retracted and it is not corroborated by independent evidence, the Judge should point out to the jury that it is not safe to rely on the retracted confession unless it is corroborated by independent reliable evidence, and an omission to point this out to the jury amounts to a misdirection—Mahabir, 18 All. 78; Asimuddy, 31 C.W.N. 410, 28 Cr.L.J. 485, 110 I.C. 661, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 398, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 134; Cholakel, 2 Weir 507; Karreti Venkatasami, 2 Weir 509; Sokhan, 2 Weir 509; Kashim Ali, 36 Cr.L.J. 70, 152 I.C. 234, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 651, 38 C.W.N. 589, 1934 Cr.C. 933. It is not sufficient for the Judge to call the attention of the jury to the necessity of corroboration in material particulars; he must emphasize upon the necessity of corroboration by untainted and independent evidence, as distinct from the tainted evidence of an accomplice—Kashemali, 36 C.W.N. 874 (876), 140 I.C. 379, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 709. It is a rule of practice not to rely on a retracted confession unless it is corroborated by some evidence to show that the confession is true. As a matter of law it cannot be laid down that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence; and a prisoner may be convicted, on his own confession, without any corroborative evidence and even when a confession has been retracted, if the jury believe that the confession contains a true account of the prisoner's connection with the crime—Kutub Bux, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 633, 57 Cal. 488.

126 I.C. 547, 1930 Cr.C. 969; Ambica, 35 C.W.N. 1270. See also Biseswar, 26 C.W.N. 1010; Panchkari, 29 C.W.N. 300. But the Judge's direction to the effect that the accused might be convicted upon his own statements which had subsequently been retracted, without further corroboration, is not in accordance with the trend of judicial opinions on the point and amounts to a misdirection—Kashim Ali v. Emp., A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 651 (653), 38 C.W.N. 586, 1934 Cr.C. 933, 152 I.C. 234, 36 Cr.L.J. 70. The Madras High Court, however, is of opinion that this is not an absolute rule of law. The question to be put to the jury regarding such confessions is not whether they are corroborated by independent evidence but whether having regard to the circumstances under which they were made and retracted and all the circumstances connected with them, it is more probable that the original confessions are true or the statements retracting them are true. An omission on the part of the Judge to put this question to the jury amounts to a misdirection—Raman, 21 Mad. 83.

It is a misdirection for the Judge to tell the jury that while the confessional statement of the accused could not be acted safely against the maker, i.e., the accused who made the confessional statement, the corroboration was to be sought in the evidence of accomplice recorded in the Sessions Court in as much as it is against the elementary rule that where the first statement required corroboration from an independent source, such corroboration could not be sought in the evidence of an accomplice recorded in the Sessions Court—Ramani, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 146, 1933 Cr.C. 223, 143 I.C. 797, 34 Cr.L.J. 638. The confession of one accused cannot be corroborated by the confession of another accused—Krishna, 10 C.W.N. xvi.

See Note 515 and other Notes under sec. 164, Cr. P. Code.

(5) A Sessions Judge should caution the jury that although it is not illegal to convict the accused upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, still it is not the practice of the Court, nor safe or proper to convict on accomplice evidence, unless it is corroborated in material particulars. Omission to state this amounts to a misdirection—Rebati Mohan, 32 C.W.N. 945, 56 Cal. 150, 30 Cr.L.J. 435 (439); Surya Kanta, 24 C.W.N. 119, 31 Cr.L.J. 20 (FB); Armuga, 12 Mad. 196; Rattan Dhanuk, 8 Pat. 235, 30 Cr.L.J. 137 (138), 113 I.C. 329, 9 P.L.T. 672, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 630, Mohammad Anis, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh. 405 (407), 37 Cr.L.J. 955 (957), 164 I.C. 482, 1936 O.W.N. 691, 1936 O.L.R. 453; Mathuri, A.I.R. 1936 All. 337, 1936 A.W.R. (H.C.), 1, 1936 A.L.J. 518, 1936 Cr.C. 401, 163 I.C. 253, 1936 A.L.R. 539, 37 Cr.L.J. 794, 58 All. 695; Kartar Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 400, 1936 Cr.C. 355; Khairo v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 995 (997), 170 I.C. 922, 31 S.L.R. 470, 10 RS 77, A.I.R. 1937 Sind. 221. But another Calcutta case lays down that an uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law, although it has long been the practice for the Judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Therefore, it is not a misdirection to tell the jury that a conviction upon the evidence of the approver alone will not be illegal—Jamaldi, 51 Cal. 160 (163), following the judgment of Lord Reading, C.J., in R. v. Baskerville, [1916] 2 K.B. 658 (665). In a jury trial it is the duty of the Judge to point out to the jury the position in law affecting the evidence of an accomplice and tell them that they may convict, if they choose, on his evidence alone; but that owing to the circumstances in which the evidence is given, it is, generally speaking, very dangerous to act upon it, unless they find corroborative evidence which implicated the accused person. If such a warning has been given and nevertheless the jury choose to convict the accused in the absence of such corroborative evidence, the conviction will not generally be quashed. Where a Judge is sitting without a jury, he must apply the same rule by treating himself as a jury—Bhiddas, 35 Cr.L.J. 551 (553), 147 I.C. 1172, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 114, 37 C.W.N. 934, 1934 Cr.C. 165. A direction to the jury to rely upon the evidence of the approver only if after considering the other evidence on the record there is sufficient to corroborate his evidence and to satisfy them that they can rely upon his evidence as the basis of their verdict, is not misdirection—Khadim v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Sind 162 (166), 38 Cr.L.J. 808 (812), 169 I.C. 716, 31 S.L.R. 82.

The testimony of the approver ought to be corroborated in material particulars in the matter of circumstances of the crime and also in the matter of identifying the accused with the offence. The corroboration must be independent of the accomplice; and the evidence of one accomplice cannot corroborate the evidence of another: the evidence of either requires corroboration before it can be acted upon. The testimony of a person who may not be an accomplice in a strict sense of the term but a person who in any way helped the commission of the offence for which the accused are tried, or was cognisant of it, and omitted to disclose it for a time, is not a person whose testimony could justify a conviction, except where there is a corroboration—Hafjuddi, 35 Cr.L.J. 1357 (1359), 151 I.C. 486, 1934 Cr.C. 1045, 38 C.W.N. 777, A.I.R. 1934 Cal 678 (S.B.). See also Kashim Ali v. Emp., A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 651, 38 C.W.N. 586, 1934 Cr.C. 933, 152 I.C. 234, 36 Cr.L.J. 70. But see Nirmal Jiban, 39 C.W.N. 744 (749), 62 Cal. 238, 157 I.C. 387, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 513, 36 Cr.L.J. 1115, 1935 Cr.C. 889, where the same High Court did not assent to the proposition that in no circumstances can the evidence of an accomplice corroborate the evidence of another. It is for the Judge to determine whether there is any evidence that does corroborate the story of the approver so far as the complicity of the accused is concerned, and it is the duty of the Judge to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the evidence confirming or corroborating the accomplice's story which do or do not fulfil the requirements referred to above,—namely, the evidence corroborating the accomplice's story in material particulars implicating the accused—Rebati Mohan, 56 Cal. 150, 30 Cr.L.J. 435, 32 C.W.N. 945; Hachuni, 34 C.W.N. 390 (395); Golam Asphia, 33 Cr.L.J. 477, 137 I.C. 497, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 295, 1932 Cr.C. 264, Ind. Rul 1932 Cal. 336. Where there is no corroboration worth the name, it is the duty of the Judge to direct the jury accordingly and his omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Golam Asphia, supra. Corroboration ought to consist of some circumstance that affects the identity of the person accused—Ambica, 35 C.W.N. 1270 (1274); Khairo v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 995 (997), 170 I.C. 922, 31 S.L.R. 470, 10 R.S. 77, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 221. The case of each of the accused must be taken on its merits and independent corroboration must be sought for in every instance. It is not enough to find such corroboration as regards the presence and participation in the crime by several of the accused and then to conclude that the evidence of the accomplices must be true so far as it implicates the rest. The danger in these cases is that while an accomplice may be telling a story which is in the main true they may wickedly implicate persons who took no part in the joint crime, although the story as to the commission of a joint crime by a number of criminals acting in concert may be well established—Ngo Po Aung, 38 Cr.L.J. 948, 170 I.C. 645, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 264, 10 R.R. 101. The evidence of the approver, in the absence of independent evidence, cannot be corroborated by the confession of an accused—Latafat Hossain, 33 C.W.N. 58 (60); Faqir Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Lah 429 (431), 41 P.L.R. 333, 184 I.C. 219, 40 Cr.L.J. 897. But see Nirmal Jiban, 39 C.W.N. 744 (749), 62 Cal. 238, 157 I.C. 387, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 513, 36 Cr.L.J. 1115, 1935 Cr.C. 889.

An approver does not corroborate himself. A previous statement of an approver is no corroboration of a later statement by the same approver—Khairo v. Emp., supra.

It would amount to misdirection either to omit to give the jury a suitable warning or to tell the jury that an approver's evidence against a particular accused has received independent corroboration when this is not in fact the case—Raghunath, 34 Cr.L.J. 421 (424), 143 I.C. 809, 13 P.L.T. 802, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 96, 1933 Cr.C. 219, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pat. 176.

The evidence is not corroborated merely because the approver tells a probable story. Nor can it be said to be corroborated by mere evidence of motive—Talayan Thola Balya Maddi Subbanna, 40 Cr.L.J. 801, 183 I.C. 651, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 469, 1939 M.W.N. 316, 49 M.L.W. 520

The law on this subject has been comprehensively summarised in Aung Hla, 135 I.C. 849, A.I.R. 1931 Rang 235, 1931 Cr.C. 875, 33 Cr.L.J. 205, Ind. Rul 1932 Rang. 65, 9 Rang 404 (427) as follows: (1) an accused person can legally be convicted upon the uncorroborated evidence of an approver; (2) whether an accused should or should not be convicted upon such evidence is left to the prudence and good sense of the tribunal after considering all the circumstances of the case; (3) prima facie the evidence of an approver being tainted evidence, is unworthy of credit unless it is corroborated in some material particular tending to show that the accused committed the offences with which he is charged; (4) it is for the Court to determine in the particular circumstances of each case whether the 'matter' before it tending to corroborate the evidence of the approver (which may or may not be evidence strictly so called and as defined in the Evidence Act) is worthy of credence, and is sufficiently reliable to be treated as evidence against the accused, and acted upon; (5) the evidence of an approver may be corroborated by the evidence of another approver, or by the confession of a person who is being tried jointly with the accused for the same offence, implicating both himself and the accused; (6) it is the duty of the Court to scrutinize with care such corroboration as that mentioned in (5) but that whether it is to be treated as evidence against the accused or not is to be determined by the Court, having regard to the circumstances of the case. The Calcutta High Court adopted these propositions of law in Nirmal Jiban, 39 C.W.N 744 (749), 62 Cal 238, 157 I.C. 387, A.I.R. 1935 Cal 513, 36 Cr.L.J. 1115, 1935 Cr.C. 889. See also Maung Tha Ka Do, 37 Cr.L.J. 280 (283), 160 I.C. 292, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 491, 1935 Cr.C. 1266, Nga Nyein, 11 Rang. 4 and Rattan Dhanuk, 8 Pat 235. But these cases do not lay down anything more than this that it is not illegal to base a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. It is also not illegal to base a conviction upon such testimony if it is corroborated by other accomplice evidence. But that is not tantamount to saying that independent corroboration is not necessary, or that the corroboration of one tainted evidence by another tainted evidence is independent corroboration. (Per Ghosh, J.) Bimalkrishna, 62 Cal 819, 37 Cr.L.J. 840, 163 I.C. 556, 37 C.W.N 761. In this case Henderson, J., however, adhered to the view expressed in Nirmal Jiban 62 Cal. 238, 39 C.W.N 744, 157 I.C. 387, A.I.R. 1935 Cal 513, 36 Cr.L.J. 1115, 1935 Cr.C. 889 and followed the law as laid down in Aung Hla, supra. But recently Their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that it is well settled that the evidence of an accessory must be corroborated in some material particular not only bearing upon the facts of the crime but upon the accused's implication in it, and further that evidence of one accomplice is not available as corroboration of another—Mahadco v The King A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 242 (246), 163 I.C. 681, 9 R.P.C. 51, 44 M.L.W. 253, 1936 A.L.J. 869, 37 Cr.L.J. 914, 1936 M.W.N. 889, 1936 Cr.C. 757, 38 Bom.L.R. 1101, 40 C.W.N 1164 (P.C.); Nga Po Aung, 38 Cr.L.J. 948, 170 I.C. 645, A.I.R. 1937 Rang 264, 10 R.R. 101; Purnanda Das Gupta v Emp. A.I.R. 1939 Cal 65 (73), 68 C.L.J. 206, 179 I.C. 506, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal 1, 40 Cr.L.J. 199. In view of the decision of the Privy Council in Mahadco v The King it must now be taken as settled that the evidence of one accomplice cannot be used as independent evidence to corroborate the evidence of another accomplice. A plurality of accomplices might be useful in this way. They have to be considered independently and the Court must, while not losing sight of sec. 114 (b) of the Evidence Act, still be able to rely on the uncorroborated evidence

A direction to the jury to rely upon the evidence of the approver only if after considering the other evidence on the record there is sufficient to corroborate his evidence and to satisfy them that they can rely upon his evidence as the basis of their verdict, is not misdirection—Khadim v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Sind 162 (166), 38 Cr.L.J. 808 (812), 169 I.C. 716, 31 S.L.R. 82.

An approver does not corroborate himself. A previous statement of an approver is no corroboration of a later statement by the same approver—Khairo v. Emp., supra.

It would amount to misdirection either to omit to give the jury a suitable warning or to tell the jury that an approver's evidence against a particular accused has received independent corroboration when this is not in fact the case—Raghunath, 34 Cr.L.J. 421 (424), 143 I.C. 809, 13 P.L.T. 802, AIR 1933 Pat. 96, 1933 Cr.C. 249, Ind. The evidence is not corroborated merely because the approver tells a probable story. Nor can it be said to be corroborated by mere evidence of motive—Talayari Thota Balya Maddi Subbanna, 40 Cr.L.J. 801, 183 I.C. 654, AIR. 1939 Mad 469, 1939 M.W.N. 316, 49 M.L.W. 520.

The law on this subject has been comprehensively summarised in Aung Hla, 135 I.C. 849, AIR 1931 Rang 235, 1931 Cr.C. 875, 33 Cr.L.J. 205, Ind. Rul. 1932 Rang. 65, 9 Rang 404 (427) as follows. (1) an accused person can legally be convicted upon the uncorroborated evidence of an approver; (2) whether an accused should or should not be convicted upon such evidence is left to the prudence and good sense of the tribunal after considering all the circumstances of the case; (3) prima facie the evidence of an approver being tainted evidence, is unworthy of credit unless it is corroborated in some material particular tending to show that the accused committed the offences with which he is charged; (4) it is for the Court to determine in the particular circumstances of each case whether the 'matter' before it tending to corroborate the evidence of the approver (which may or may not be evidence strictly so called and as defined in the Evidence Act) is worthy of credence, and is sufficiently reliable to be treated as evidence against the accused, and acted upon; (5) the evidence of an approver may be corroborated by the evidence of another approver, or by the confession of a person who is being tried jointly with the accused for the same offence, implicating both himself and the accused; (6) it is the duty of the Court to scrutinize with care such corroboration as that mentioned in (5) but that whether it is to be treated as evidence against the accused or not is to be determined by the Court, having regard to the circumstances of the case. The Calcutta High Court adopted these propositions of law in Nirmal Jiban, 39 C.W.N. 744 (749), 62 Cal 238, 157 I.C. 387, AIR 1935 Cal. 513, 36 Cr.L.J. 1115, 1935 Cr.C. 889. See also Maung Tha Ka Do, 37 Cr.L.J. 280 (283), 160 I.C. 292, AIR 1935 Rang 491, 1935 Cr.C. 1266, Nga Nyein, 11 Rang. 4 and Rattan Dhanuk, 8 Pat 235. But these cases do not lay down anything more than this that it is not illegal to base a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. It is also not illegal to base a conviction upon such testimony if it is corroborated by other accomplice evidence. But that is not tantamount to saying that independent corroboration is not necessary, or that the corroboration of one tainted evidence by another tainted evidence is independent corroboration (Per Ghosh, J.) Bimalkrishna, 62 Cal 819, 37 Cr.L.J. 840, 163 I.C. 566, 37 C.W.N. 761. In this case Henderson, J., however, adhered to the view expressed in Nirmal Jiban 62 Cal 238, 29 C.W.N. 744, 157 I.C. 387, AIR 1935 Cal 513, 36 Cr.L.J. 1115, 1935 Cr.C. 889 and followed the law as laid down in Aung Hla, supra. But recently Their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that it is well settled that the evidence of an accessory must be corroborated in some material particular not only bearing upon the facts of the crime but upon the accused's implication in it, and further that evidence of one accomplice is not available as corroboration of another—Mahadeo v The King AIR 1935 P.C. 242 (246), 163 I.C. 681, 9 R.P.C. 51, 44 M.L.W. 253, 1935 A.L.J. 809, 37 Cr.L.J. 914, 1936 M.W.N. 889, 1936 Cr.C. 757, 38 Bom.L.R. 1101, 40 C.W.N. 1164 (P.C.); Nga Po Aung, 38 Cr.L.J. 948, 170 I.C. 645, AIR 1937 Rang 264, 10 R.R. 101; Purnanda Das Gupta v Emp. AIR 1939 Cal 65 (73), 68 C.L.J. 206, 179 I.C. 506, ILR (1939) 1 Cal 1, 40 Cr.L.J. 199. In view of the decision of the Privy Council in Mahadeo v The King it must now be taken as settled that the evidence of one accomplice cannot be used as independent evidence to corroborate the evidence of another accomplice. A plurality of accomplices might be useful in this way. They have to be considered independently and the Court might, while not losing sight of sec. 114 (b) of the Evidence Act, still be able to rely on the uncorroborated evidence of one or more out of a number either on the same or on different points—Surajpalsingh, 39 Cr.L.J. 818 (823), 176 I.C. 853, 1938 N.L.J. 185, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 328, 1 L.R. 1938 Nag. 516, 11 R.N. 81.

It would be wholly unsafe in any case to proceed solely upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Taking the two sections of the Evidence Act, namely, sec. 133 and sec. 114 together, it may be safely laid down that the Statute Law of India did not intend to introduce a different rule for the guidance of the Courts from that which may be now taken as the accepted rule of law in England, as explained by Lord Reading, C.J., in Rex v. Baskerville, (1916) 2 KB 658, 86 L.J.K.B. 28, 115 L.T. 453, 80 J.P. 446, 60 S.J. 696. The same rule is reaffirmed in Mahadeo v. The King, supra. These cases further lay down that the evidence of an accomplice must be corroborated in some material particulars, not only bearing upon the facts of the crime, but upon the accused's implication in it, and further, that evidence of one accomplice is not available as corroboration of another. These rules are equally applicable in India—Nitai Chandra v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 433 (444), 38 Cr.L.J. 852, 170 I.C. 201, 10 R.C. 98. See also Khadim v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 808, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 162, 169 I.C. 716, 31 S.L.R. 82 where it has also been laid down that the corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime and it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of the connexion with the crime.

Beyond reiterating the law on the subject, which is to the effect that the statement of the approver must be very thoroughly scrutinized and should not be accepted unless it is corroborated by other independent evidence in the case, no hard and fast rule can be enunciated which will govern all cases. There may be cases in which an approver has made positively false statements in respect of a particular point and yet the evidence produced in a case might go to prove beyond any doubt that in other respects the evidence of the approver was trustworthy and was fully corroborated by the very best evidence produced. It would be wrong in that case to suggest that because the approver has made a wrong statement on a particular point so his evidence should be rejected—Bhola Nath v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All 567 (571), 1939 A.L.J. 785, 40 Cr.L.J. 856, 184 I.C. 191.

Where the only substantive evidence against the accused is the statement of the approver before the committing Magistrate, which is not corroborated by him in his evidence before the Sessions Court, it is not a very strong basis for a conviction though undoubtedly legally it could be such—Faqir Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 429 (431), 41 P.L.R. 333, 40 Cr.L.J. 897, 184 I.C. 219.

The evidence of an accomplice, who has been convicted and sentenced and has nothing to gain or lose, deserves greater weight than that of an approver—Nga Po Aung v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 948 (949), 170 I.C. 645, A.I.R. 1937 Rang 264, 10 R.R. 101.

As to confessions made by the approvers, they are not substantive evidence, but may be used only for the purpose of contradicting or corroborating their depositions in Court—Nitai Chandra v. Emp., supra.

The mere fact that the witness did not reveal his knowledge of the intended crime to the proper authorities is not sufficient to make him an accessory or accomplice so as to vitiate his evidence—Nurul Amin v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 667, 182 I.C. 386, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 335, 1 L.R. (1939) 1 Cal 511. But in a case of theft it is a misdirection not to point out with sufficient force the unsafety of relying on the evidence of a witness who is undoubtedly a receiver of the stolen property and whose position is, therefore, very little different from that of an accomplice—Kalli Koravan, 39 Cr.L.J. 580, 175 I.C. 416, A.I.R. 1938 Mad 464, 1938 M.W.N. 96, 47 M.L.W. 158, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 234, 10 R.M. 774, 1938 M.Cr.C. 78.

(6) Where there are several accused persons, and the case as against all of them does not stand on the same footing, and their defences are different, omission by the Judge to ask the jury to consider the case as against each of the accused individually, is a serious misdirection—Khijruddin, 53 Cal. 372, 42 C.L.J. 504, 27 Cr.L.J. 266 (274). In his charge to the jury the Judge should deal with the evidence against each accused separately. Failure to do so is a serious defect—Nachappa Goundan v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 737; Shetaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (214), 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 184 I.C. 474. When there are more than one accused, it is in the first degree essential both that the jury should be asked for a separate finding regarding each of the accused and that the particulars of the evidence affecting each person should be placed in a manner which may enable the jury to distinguish the cases of accused as against whom the evidence is not of the same degree of cogency—Yusuf Mia v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 579 (583), 1938 P.W.N. 727, 5 B.R. 185, 20 P.L.T. 51, 178 I.C. 931, 40 Cr.L.J. 147.

In a case where there is a general charge of conspiracy against a number of accused to commit dacoity, at the same time, a charge against the accused for having committed a dacoity, it is most necessary that the Judge in summing up to the jury should distinguish between what is evidence against each of the accused on the charge of conspiracy, and what is evidence against each of the accused on the charge of having committed the dacoity. That is more than ever necessary where the main evidence against the accused or some of them is that of an approver. When the evidence is not so classified, the jury have been misdirected or, at any rate, not directed in the way that they are entitled to be directed on the question of the evidence as against each of the accused on the charge of dacoity. In such a case depending mainly on the evidence of an approver, it would not be safe or proper to allow the convictions against the accused for dacoity to stand, although a general warning as to the necessity of corroboration may have been given—Rezak Fakir v. Emp., 42 C.W.N. 870 (872).

See also Abkar Sheikh and Nabi Khan, cited in Note 913.

(7) When a charge to the jury placed prominently before them all the circumstances that went against the accused, but did not call their attention to any of those that were in favour of the accused, it was held that there was a misdirection sufficient to vitiate the trial—Rahamat Ali, 4 C.W.N. 196; Faktra, 40 Bom. 220; Sugaligadu, 2 Weir 500 (501); Mammat Ali, 44 C.L.J. 233, 28 Cr.L.J. 19, 99 I.C. 51. But the fact that every point in favour of the accused has not been put to the jury does not amount to a misdirection. The charge must be judged as a whole and one must see whether judging it as a whole the case for the two sides has been fairly put. It is not necessary for the Sessions Judge to repeat everything that has been said by the pleader for the defence in his speech. But he should draw the attention of the Jury to the more essential items and the strongest argument that has been advanced for the defence. A mere reference to the argument of the pleader is insufficient—Harcharan, 34 C.L.J. 512; Abdul Salim, 49 Cal. 573. The fact that the address of the defence counsel to the jury is a lengthy one does not excuse the Judge from pointing out important points of the defence argument to the jury—Peary, 20 C.W.N. 436, 20 Cr.L.J. 300 (F.B.). A verdict obtained from the jury without placing before them an important piece of evidence in favour of the defence, whatever may have been its real worth, cannot be sustained—Khijiruddin, 53 Cal. 372, 42 C.L.J. 504, 27 Cr.L.J. 266 (272).

(8) A Judge's direction to the jury to consider the proof of previous conviction as evidence giving rise to an inference regarding the character of the prisoner amounts to a misdirection—Roshun, 5 Cal. 768. See section 310. So also, the omission on the part of the Judge to warn the jury not to take the previous conviction into consideration when deciding on the guilt of the accused, amounts to a misdirection—Hari Charan, 27 Cr.L.J. 398, 93 I.C. 46, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 728.

(9) Omission to tell the jury that if they entertain any reasonable doubt about the guilt of the accused, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt and should be acquitted is a serious misdirection—Panchu Das, 34 Cal. 698; Sugaligadu, 2 Weir 500 (501); Mohammad Israil, 27 A.L.J. 1261, 31 Cr.L.J. 33, 120 I.C. 264, A.I.R. 1930 All. 24, 1930 Cr.C. 40. Where prima facie the evidence is more or less equally balanced on both sides, the Judge ought to give the usual direction to the jury that if they have any reasonable doubt in their minds as to guilt of the accused, they should give the accused the benefit of it. Omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Jagmohan, 52 All. 207, 30 Cr.L.J. 1146 (1147), 120 I.C. 114, Ind. Rul. 1930 All. 2, A.I.R.

1930 All. 28, 1930 A.L.J. 486. If, however, the evidence for the prosecution is overwhelming, the omission to give such direction is not a misdirection—Ibid. Where, however, the Judge thinks that the evidence is so weak that there are grave doubts as to the guilt of the accused the omission to direct the jury to give the accused benefit of doubt may be a misdirection which may be said to have prejudiced the accused—Kasimuddin, 62 Cal. 312, 36 Cr.L.J. 480 (481), 154 I.C. 110, 60 C.L.J. 45, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 31. See also Basil, 34 Cr.L.J. 886, 145 I.C. 209, A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 218, 1933 A.L.J. 1025, 38 M.L.W. 635, 1933 Cr.C. 1302 (P.C.). A direction about reasonable doubt should appear at the end of the charge or in appropriate places, as and when something occurs in the discussion of the evidence which gives rise to it and necessitates its application—Asanulla, 39 C.W.N. 924 (928), A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 534, 36 Cr.L.J. 1246, 157 I.C. 837, 1935 Cr.C. 910. But where it is clear that the Judge discussed the question of reasonable doubt when dealing with the law in the case and again at the close of the charge he warned the jury that they were themselves to weigh the evidence and to come to finding on facts on their own judgment, there was no misdirection—Harold, 37 Cr.L.J. 17, 158 I.C. 172, 8 R.L. 189.

(10) To enable the prosecution to draw the presumption under sec. 114, Illustration (a), of the Indian Evidence Act, the accused ought to be asked to account for his possession—Surendra Nath, 40 C.W.N. 1090 (1092). It is a misdirection to ask the jury to make a positive presumption of guilt against the accused from their possession of stolen property after the theft. Such a presumption may be made but it is a matter for the jury if they will make it or not—Arumuga Goundan, 1933 M.W.N. 320. Where in a case of theft, the evidence against the accused was the possession of stolen property 5 years after the occurrence, it was held that the Judge had misdirected the jury by saying: "On this evidence notwithstanding that it is nearly 5 years since the crime occurred, you will decide whether you are satisfied with the prisoner's explanation for his possession of the stolen property." The proper course would be to tell them to consider whether after 5 years it was reasonable to require the prisoner to prove how he came by the goods or whether his story, not being in itself improbable ought not to be accepted—Ruthonvithil, 2 Weir 489. Where the prisoner is charged with receiving recently stolen property, when the prosecution has proved the possession by the prisoner, and that the goods had been recently stolen, the jury should be told that they may, not that they must, in the absence of any reasonable explanation, find the prisoner guilty. But if an explanation is given which may be true, it is for the jury to say on the whole evidence whether the accused is guilty or not; that is to say, if the jury think that the explanation may reasonably be true, though, they are not convinced that it is true, the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal, because the Crown has not discharged the onus of proof imposed upon it of satisfying the jury beyond reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt. The onus never changes, it always rests on the prosecution (Per Lord Reading, C.J., in 11 Cr. App R. 45 (5))—Ishtahar Khondkar, A.I.R. 1936 Cal 796 (800), 39 C.W.N. 620, 62 Cal 956, 162 I.C. 927, 37 Cr.L.J. 701. Where the Judge said to the jury: "If you believe that those ornaments were really lost during the dacoity and were found in the possession of C as alleged at the time, then you can presume, if you do not believe the statement of C, that C is either a dacoit herself or that she received and retained possession of those ornaments with guilty knowledge that those properties were stolen during the commission of a dacoity,"—held that was a misdirection. The proper direction would have been that if they did not think that the account given by C of her possession of those things might reasonably be true, in that case only were they entitled to make the presumption under sec. 114 of the Evidence Act, because even if they were not inclined to believe the statement of C, but still thought that the statement might reasonably be true, they were not entitled to make the presumption against her—Surendra Nath, 40 C.W.N. 1090 (1092). See also Satya Charan, 52 Cal 223, 26 Cr.L.J. 1155, 88 I.C. 515, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 666. In the case of articles of ordinary kind, which are alleged to be stolen, the Judge must lay sufficient stress on the comparatively unidentifiable nature of the properties and warn the jury of the danger of accepting the evidence of identification. Failure to do so is a clear non-direction which vitiates the charge—Subba Valayan v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 552. The attention of the jury must be sufficiently drawn to the fact that there was an interval of some time between the commission of the robbery and the finding of stolen articles in his possession and to the implications arising therefrom—Thevar Servai, 39 Cr.L.J. 323, 173 I.C. 450, 1938 M.W.N. 215, 10 R.M. 587, A.I.R. 1938 Mad 477. When the accused has satisfactorily accounted for his possession, so that the question of the application of sec. 114 of the Evidence Act no longer arises, then it is necessary to show by evidence direct or circumstantial that there was some collusion between the thief and the receiver or that the receiver had real reason to believe that the property which he had purchased was stolen—Rajendra Nath Laha, 38 Cr.L.J. 129 (131), 166 I.C. 91, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 191, 18 P.L.T. 210, 3 B.R. 124, 9 R.P. 249.

See also paragraph (27) below.

(11) Omission to point out to the jury the discrepancies in the evidence of the principal witnesses for the prosecution constitutes a misdirection—Tenaram, 33 C.L.J. 180, 22 Cr.L.J. 475; Durga Charan, 26 C.W.N. 1002, 23 Cr.L.J. 567. Merely telling the jury that there are material discrepancies in the evidence, without pointing out to them what those discrepancies are, amounts to a misdirection—Enayet Husain, 49 All. 209, 28 Cr.L.J. 15, 99 I.C. 47, A.I.Cr.R. 282, A.I.R. 1926 All 752, 25 A.L.J. 33; Akbar Sheikh, 35 C.W.N. 404 (407). The Judge's duty would be to refer to any material discrepancy. But there is no failure of justice in the omission of the Judge to deal with minor discrepancies which exist in the evidence—Puttan Hassan, 37 Cr.L.J. 366 (368), 160 I.C. 1060, A.I.R. 1936 Bom 52, 38 Bom L.R. 19, 1936 Cr.C. 164 (F.B.). Omission to tell the jury that there was no corroboration of certain prosecution witnesses amounted to misdirection—Sita Ram, 8 O.W.N. 1215, 33 Cr.L.J. 167, 135 I.C. 392, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 23, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 40, 7 Luck. 390, 1935 Cr.C. 55.

(12) If upon the materials placed before the Court by the prosecution and the defence, there was no question of the right of defence of person and property which could possibly arise, it was not necessary for the Judge to explain the law on the subject to the jury to enable them to come to a conclusion on that question—Fajer Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 536, 147 I.C. 1043, A.I.R. 1934 Cal 142, 57 C.L.J. 583, 1934 Cr.C. 180. But see Gopaldi, 37 C.W.N. 261, 34 Cr.L.J. 1078, 145 I.C. 821, A.I.R. 1933 Cal 656, 1933 Cr.C. 1102. Failure on the part of the Court to put clearly before the jury the law relating to the right of private defence arising on the admitted and proved facts, and to direct their attention to find as to whether and how far the accused was justified in preventing injury to himself in attacking his opponent, is a serious misdirection—Aseruddin, 53 Cal 980, 28 Cr.L.J. 273, 100 I.C. 353, A.I.R. 1927 Cal 257, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 417. Where the accused raised the plea of private defence, and the case for the prosecution was that there was no right of private defence at all, the Judge should simply tell the jury that the question they had to decide was whether or not the right of private defence came into existence and not how far it extended or whether it was exceeded. Moreover, in dealing with the law as to the right of private defence, there are several important points the omission of which would amount to a serious misdirection. Thus, in a murder case, in which the right of private defence is set up, the Judge in explaining sec. 100, I.P.C., which contains a list of six heads of offences should point out those heads which would and those which would not apply to the case they were trying; otherwise the jury would naturally disregard those to which their attention was not specially directed. The Judge should also explain to the jury the provisions of sec. 101, I.P.C., in a case where there is a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder as well as the minor charge of causing grievous hurt. The omission on the part of the Judge to explain these points amounts to a misdirection—Muhammad Yunus, 50 Cal 318 (325, 326). On a charge under sec. 301, I.P.C., where the defence of the accused is that the deceased came into his house for robbery at midnight and that the accused inflicted wounds on him which proved fatal, the Judge should expound the law to the jury not only with reference to the right of private defence of person but also with reference to the right of defence of property, and should direct the jury to consider whether the accused had not used more force than was necessary for preventing the deceased from running away with the stolen property. Omission to so charge the jury amounts to a misdirection—Baseruddi, 28 C.W.N. 585, 39 C.L.J. 525.

It is not a correct proposition of law to lay down that a person who attempts to enforce a claim of property which he cannot substantiate, thereby creates the position that possession is with another. If the language used by the Judge is open to that construction, it is a misdirection. The direction to the jury should be that if the prosecution story as to the actual use of violence is correct, and if the accused are not in possession, the accused are not entitled to plead any right of defence of property in reply to the charges brought against them. Contra, if the jury find that the complainant's party attacked the others, the whole prosecution case fails, irrespective of who is in actual possession. If the jury find that the land is the property of neither party, the legal position is that neither party has any right to use force in defence of property—Saheb Ali, 34 Cr L.J. 668, 143 I.C. 899, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 242, 1933 Cr C. 321, Ind Rul. 1933 Cal. 490. See also Bagirath Mahto, 35 Cr L.J. 1367, 151 I.C. 662, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 610, 38 C.W.N. 854, 1934 Cr C. 908, 59 C.L.J. 482.

(13) The Judge is entitled to tell the jury that when a prisoner is charged with causing hurt to another, the burden of proving that it was done in the exercise of the right of private defence lies on the prisoner—Afruddi, 23 C.W.N. 833, 20 Cr L.J. 661. But when the accused has examined witnesses to prove the defence (e.g., the right of private defence) set up by him, it is no longer necessary for the Judge to refer to the law relating to burden of proof (because the accused has discharged that burden); the Judge should simply ask the jury to decide the question of fact on the evidence before them. If in such a case the Judge refers to the provisions of sec. 105 of the Evidence Act, it would mislead the jury and lead them to think that the defence set up by the accused would require a higher standard of proof. This is clearly a misdirection—Muhammad Yunus, 50 Cal. 318 (325).

(14) It is a misdirection to suggest to the jury that in capital cases stronger evidence of a higher degree of certainty is required than in other criminal cases—Lalit Mohan, 49 Cal. 167.

(15) Omission to caution the jury as regards the weight and efficacy to be given to a dying declaration amounts to a misdirection—Sashi Kanta, 34 C.W.N. 792, 32 Cr L.J. 324, 129 I.C. 364, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 754, Ind Rul. 1931 Cal. 172, 1930 Cr.C. 1154.

(16) Where one of the witnesses for the prosecution is himself suspected of being implicated in the offence, the jury should be directed not to accept his evidence without the most careful scrutiny. Omission to give such a direction amounts to a serious misdirection—Satya Charan, 52 Cal. 223, 26 Cr L.J. 1155, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 666, 88 I.C. 515. See also paragraph (5), supra.

(17) The question as to whether the accused was under 12 years of age and incapable of understanding the nature of his act is one for the jury to decide, notwithstanding the fact that no proof may have been adduced on the point; and when the Judge attempts to exclude the consideration of the question from the jury by saying that they should leave that question out of account altogether, it amounts to a misdirection—Ali Raza, 28 O.C. 69, 26 Cr L.J. 310, 84 I.C. 454, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 311.

(18) Where the witnesses who had made certain statements before the committing Magistrate retracted those statements at the trial the Sessions Judge ought to tell the jury that the witnesses should be looked upon with suspicion and that their evidence should be regarded with great caution, and the Judge ought to ask the jury to decide for themselves as to which of the two versions is correct. If, instead of doing so, the Judge expresses his opinion with a certain degree of assertion to the effect that the statements made before the committing Magistrate are true and that the depositions given before him are false, it amounts to a misdirection—Abdul Gani, 53 Cal. 181, 42

C.L.J. 205, 26 Cr.L.J. 1577. The Judge in his charge to the jury should emphasize the necessity for very great care and caution on the part of the jury before they decide to act upon a statement of such a character the truth of which is denied in the Sessions Court—Ram Gobinda Ghose v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 625, 175 I.C. 529, 10 R.C. 802, 42 C.W.N. 781, A.I.R. 1938 Cal 364.

The law may be thus stated— (a) If a witness had made a statement before the committing Magistrate and a different statement before the Sessions Judge, and the previous statement has been put in under sec. 288 so as to become evidence for all purposes, the jury may be directed to choose between the two statements, because both statements are evidence of the facts stated therein (b) But in case of other previous statements (e.g., statements made before the police), the jury cannot be so directed, because such statement is not evidence at all against the accused of the facts stated therein; the proper direction is that before relying on the evidence given by the witness at the trial the jury should take into consideration the fact that he made the previous statement, but that they must not treat the previous statement as being any evidence at all against the accused of the facts therein alleged—Profulla Kumar, 58 Cal 1404, 35 C.W.N. 731 (749), 32 Cr.L.J. 768, 53 C.L.J. 427, 131 I.C. 575, 1931 Cr.C. 497, A.I.R. 1931 Cal 401, Ind Rul. 1931 Cal. 463 (F.B.) See also Note 898.

It is not proper for the Judge to invite the jury to treat difference between the statements of a witness before the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge very lightly on the ground that not only investigating police officers but committing Magistrates are also concerned only with making inquiries leading up to the trial before the Sessions Court and are not concerned with making a detailed record of the statements of witnesses. Now it is true that a committing Magistrate is not holding a trial but only an inquiry leading up to a trial; but the fact remains that he is recording evidence just as much as a Sessions Judge himself, and it is his duty to record the evidence fully in order that the accused may have ample notice of the matter with which he is charged and of the evidence by which the prosecutor seeks to prove the case. In fact, if the prosecutor at the trial intends to lead any further evidence of substance beyond what has been adduced in the committing Magistrate's Court it is well recognized that the correct procedure is that he gives the accused notice of this new matter in his opening address at the trial—Yusuf Mia v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 579 (582), 1938 P.W.N. 727, 5 B.R. 185, 20 P.L.T. 51, 178 I.C. 934, 40 Cr.L.J. 147. Omissions are not necessarily contradictions. There are omissions and omissions. Some of them can be overlooked on the grounds approved by Courtney-Terrell, C.J., in Hari Lal v. Emp., 14 Pat. 225, 156 I.C. 921, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 263, 1935 Cr.C. 749, 36 Cr.L.J. 1026, 16 P.L.T. 380, 8 R.P. 43. But there may be omissions which it will be difficult to hold are due to either the Police or the Magistrate leaving them out because they were simply preparing records preliminary to a trial. The observations of the learned Chief Justice have, to a very large extent, been misunderstood and misapplied. If the defence relies upon certain omissions made by witnesses either before the Police or before the Magistrate, the best course is to draw the attention of the jury to those alleged omissions and then if, in the opinion of the Judge, the omissions are of no consequence and were possibly due to the circumstances approved by the learned Chief Justice, it will be quite open to him to place them before the jury and then leave them to decide whether those omissions considered in the light of the circumstances placed before them are of such consequence as to discredit the testimony of the witness in Court. General observations devoid of facts are likely on some occasions to create an impression in the mind of the jury that every omission in every case is of no consequence whatsoever—Bulat Gope v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 34, 178 I.C. 354, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 575, 5 B.R. 88, 1938 P.W.N. 693. See also Note 503 under the heading "Contradict."

(19) Where a Judge repeatedly tells the jury that if they are morally convinced of the guilt of the accused, their verdict should be that of guilty, it amounts to a misdirection. The jury has to return a verdict of guilty not upon their moral belief of a case but upon the legal proof of the facts constituting the offence—Enayet, 49 All 209, 28 Cr.L.J. 15, 99 I.C. 47, 6 A.L.Cr.R. 282, A.I.R. 1926 All 752, 25 A.L.J. 33. It is an error on the part of the Judge to direct the jury that the "Prosecution's duty is to prove a prima facie case". The prosecution have to do more than that; they must prove the guilt of the accused. There is no principle in the English law whereby if the prosecution has proved a prima facie case, the accused must bring in evidence in rebuttal or be convicted—Shedaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (214), 184 I.C. 474, 12 R.S. 107, 41 Cr.L.J. 28.

(20) It is a misdirection not to explain to the jury the difference between a crime and a civil wrong (e.g., the distinction between a civil and a criminal trespass)—Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 662, 15 Cr.L.J. 155.

(21) The omission on the part of the Judge to explain the main principles to be followed in criminal cases based on circumstantial evidence is a serious defect in the charge to the jury. Those principles are as follows :—(i) the circumstances from which an inference adverse to the accused is sought to be drawn, must be proved beyond all reasonable doubt and must be clearly connected with the fact sought to be inferred therefrom, and (ii) in order to justify an inference of guilt, the circumstances from which such an inference is sought to be drawn must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt—Jahura, 32 Cr.L.J. 418 (420), 129 I.C. 677, 52 Cr.L.J. 417, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 11, 35 C.W.N. 169, 1931 Cr.C. 43. In a case dependent upon circumstantial evidence it is the duty of the Judge to point out very clearly that in the case of circumstantial evidence a conviction is only right and proper, if from the proved circumstances the inference of guilt only can reasonably be drawn, and if from the proved circumstances two inferences can reasonably be drawn, the inference of innocence as well as the inference of guilt, the jury is bound to draw the inference of innocence—Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (215), 184 I.C. 474, 12 R.S. 107, 41 Cr.L.J. 28. See also Mendai, 14 Luck. 635, 1939 A.W.R. (C.C.) 102, 1939 A.Cr.C. 133, 1939 O.L.R. 498, 183 I.C. 307, 1939 O.A. 654, 12 R.O. 23, 40 Cr.L.J. 764, 1939 O.W.N. 700 and Kanakasabai Pillai v. Emp., 50 M.L.W. 452, 1939 M.W.N. 883.

(22) Where the charge is little more than a long rambling statement of the evidence as it came from the mouths of the several witnesses who were called and facts, relevant and irrelevant, important and unimportant, were all mixed up together without any attempt to sift one from the other or to weigh or value the facts deposed to or to discard from consideration those which were absolutely unimportant and irrelevant, the charge was defective and the trial was vitiated on that account—Jabed, 32 Cr.L.J. 1138, 134 I.C. 317, 53 C.L.J. 351, 35 C.W.N. 835, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 813.

(23) When the Judge told the jury "under the law, no evidence can be given before you by the prosecution as to what these witnesses told the Police, but the fact remains that the defence which is entitled to bring to your notice any contradiction between the statements then made and the statements made now, has not placed before you any contradictory statement as regards the account of the occurrence," there was a misdirection as the Judge acted in contravention of the provisions of law as contained in sec. 162, Cr. P. Code—Ram Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 135, 152 I.C. 681, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 717, 1934 Cr.C. 1102. In his charge the Judge told the jury what statements an important prosecution witness had made to the Police, as if all that was substantive evidence, and by reason of those discrepancies the Judge sought to discredit the witness in so far as he did not support the prosecution case. The alleged statements before the Police were not properly put in evidence under sec. 162, Cr. P. Code. Held that the Judge was not entitled to do so and that was a material misdirection, vitiating the trial—Rajjaddi, 32 Cr.L.J. 841, 132 I.C. 159, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 189, 35 C.W.N. 317, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 513, 58 Cal. 1009, 1931 Cr.C. 253.

(24) Where the Crown had by seeking to discredit their own witness said that he was not a witness on whom they relied and he was the only witness on whom the prosecution relied to ask the Court to convict the accused, it was the duty of the Judge to have directed the jury that there was no evidence and that they should return a verdict of not guilty—Makbul Khan, 32 C.W.N. 872, 56 Cal. 145. If a witness is declared to be a hostile witness, so that the party who has called him is allowed to cross-examine him, it shows that by asking for leave to cross-examine that witness, the party admits that he is not a witness of truth and is one whose evidence is not entitled to credit. In such a case the Judge should tell the jury that the evidence of such witness shall be rejected; his omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Punchanan Gogai, 57 Cal. 1266, 34 C.W.N. 526 (529), 31 Cr.L.J. 1207. This view was held to be incorrect by the Full Bench in Profulla Kumar, 32 Cr.L.J. 768, 131 I.C. 575, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 401, 53 C.L.J. 427, 1931 Cr.C. 497, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 463, 35 C.W.N. 731 (748), 58 Cal. 1404 (F.B.). It has been laid down that the fact that a witness is dealt with under sec. 154 of the Evidence Act, even when under that section he is "cross-examined" to credit, in no way warrants a direction to the jury that they are bound in law to place no reliance on his evidence, or that the party who called and cross-examined him can take no advantage from any part of his evidence. There is, moreover, no rule of law that if a jury thinks that a witness has been discredited on one point they may not give credit to him on another. The rule of law is that it is for the jury to say. If the previous statement is the deposition before the committing Magistrate and if it is put in under sec. 288, Cr. P. C., so as to become evidence for all purposes, the jury may in effect be directed to choose between the two statements because both statements are evidence of the facts stated therein. But in other cases, the proper direction to the jury is that before relying on the evidence given by the witness at the trial the jury should take into consideration the fact that he made the previous statement, but that they must not treat the previous statement as being any evidence at all against the prisoner of the facts therein alleged. See also Sohrai Sao, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 247 (251), 11 P.L.T. 148, 9 Pat. 474, 124 I.C. 836, 31 Cr.L.J. 721. When the Judge told the jury that a certain prosecution witness "had been declared hostile to the prosecution and that therefore his evidence should be altogether left out of account in your minds as he is not a witness of truth and is not entitled to credit, being prepared to make different statements at different times," this was clearly a misdirection—Wahid Ali, 33 Cr.L.J. 604, 138 I.C. 373, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 523, 36 C.W.N. 356, 1932 Cr.C. 498, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 454. The correct rule to apply in such cases is that part of the evidence of a witness, who has been guilty of untruth in some material particulars, may be accepted if such part is corroborated by probabilities and other reliable evidence which though insufficient by themselves to establish the guilt of a particular accused nevertheless points to the truth of the statement of the witness directly implicating him. Where the statement of a witness has been clearly proved to be untrue, there is no manner of doubt that the witness is prima facie unreliable, and if his evidence is not reinforced by something else, it is highly unsafe to accept it as the basis of conviction. Where, however, the Court considers one part of the evidence of a witness to be not free from doubt, it may well refuse to act upon it without destroying the value of the rest of it, as all that the Court implies in not acting upon one part of the evidence, is that it is not safe to accept it—Ashiq Ali, 37 Cr.L.J. 1104 (1106), 165 I.C. 193, A.I.R. 1936 All. 747, 1936 A.L.J. 855.

It is an elementary principle in the administration of criminal justice that want of interest in the prosecution does not by itself stamp the evidence of a witness with truth. The weight which is to be attached to the testimony of a witness depends, in a large measure, upon various considerations, some of which are: that on the face of it his evidence should be so much in consonance with probabilities and consistent with other evidence, and should generally so fit in with the material details of the case for the prosecution as to carry conviction of truth to a prudent mind. If these elements are wanting in the testimony of a witness, however, independent he may appear to be, his evidence should not be relied on in the decision of criminal cases where persuasion of guilt must amount to a moral certainty—Parwati, 37 Cr.L.J. 821 (824), 163 I.C. 319, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 88, 1936 Cr.C. 553.

(25) Where a number of persons who could have given important information were not examined as witnesses for the Crown, the Judge should point out this fact to the jury and direct them that an adverse inference should be drawn against the prosecution. His omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Mad. Yunus, 50 Cal. 318 (326); Tenaram, 25 C.W.N. 142, 22 Cr.L.J. 475; Nababali, 58 Cal. 580, 53 C.L.J. 54, 34 C.W.N. 1151 (1153); Dhunnoo, 8 Cal. 121; Tajali, 7 Pat. 50, 28 Cr.L.J. 843 (844), 104 I.C. 459, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 31, 9 P.L.T. 57; Sali Sheikh, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 752, 1931 Cr.C. 1016, 54 C.L.J. 244, 134 I.C. 1191. The Judge ought to caution the jury that it is prima facie the duty of the prosecution, and not of accused, to call all the witnesses available and necessary to prove the case and that if they are not called without sufficient reason being shown, it is proper to draw an inference adverse to the prosecution—Kameswar Lal, 34 Cr.L.J. 828, 144 I.C. 872, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 481, 1933 Cr.C. 1310. Where the Judge told the jury that, if they accepted the contention of the Public Prosecutor that the witnesses, who were named in the first information report, were not called because their evidence was valueless, then they ought not to draw the presumption mentioned in sec. 114 (g) of the Evidence Act, but if, on the other hand, they did not believe his explanation, they were at liberty to draw the presumption if they thought fit, held that that was a proper direction because the meaning of the evidence being valueless was that they did not know the facts, that is to say, they were not able to give evidence relevant to the trial—Girishchandra Namadas, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 118 (120), 35 C.W.N. 1151, 58 Cal. 1436, 1932 Cr.C. 105, 33 Cr.L.J. 269, 135 I.C. 140. Where a statement made by a person who has not been examined as a witness has been treated as evidence in the case for the prosecution and the Judge places it before the jury with the warning that they are entitled to draw the presumption that if such person were examined, his deposition would be against the prosecution, there is no misdirection—Enayet Ali, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 557, 38 C.W.N. 446. When the Judge told the jury "that the Public Prosecutor is not obliged to examine persons as prosecution witnesses if he has reason to believe that they would not support the prosecution case. Nor is the Court bound to examine any person as a Court witness unless the witness appeared to be essential to the just decision of the case". Held that it would be wholly inappropriate to take those remarks as laying down a general proposition with regard to the effect and the inference to be drawn or not to be drawn from the absence of relevant witnesses from the witness-box. That is a matter to be considered with reference to the circumstances of each particular case and the facts which the witness, if called, would be required to prove; and the jury should be asked to consider it in the light of those circumstances and those facts. He should not invite the jury to assume that the witnesses were gained over. When the prosecution have produced sufficient evidence and the best evidence it is not always incumbent on them to produce all possible evidence on the less important facts—Yusuf Mia v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 579, 1938 P.W.N. 727, 5 B.R. 185, 20 P.L.T. 51, 178 I.C. 934, 40 Cr.L.J. 147. See also Note 893.

(26) The Judge explained secs. 302 and 304 and eventually said this: "If, however, you find he had neither the intention nor the knowledge requisite under sec. 302, consider his liability under sec. 304, I. P. C." He then read and explained that section and continued ("If you hold that he intended to cause the deceased such bodily injury that death would be a possible but not the most probable result you will find him guilty under sec. 304, Part I. Or if you hold that he had no such intention but knew as a reasonable man that death would be a likely consequence of his act you will find him guilty under sec. 304, Part II." Held that the Judge's direction was wrong and that the direction would have been quite correct if he had not used the word "possible" but had adhered to the words of the section and had used the word "likely"—Natabar Haldar, 34 C.W.N. 223 (226), 31 Cr.L.J. 572, 123 I.C. 751, 50 C.L.J. 476, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 136, 1930 Cr.C. 136. Where the Judge referred to the two parts of sec. 304 and he proceeded to give the following explanation. "The first part relates to death which is caused without any intention of causing death or causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. The 2nd part relates to death which is caused without any intention to cause death or to cause bodily injury as is likely to cause death, but with the knowledge that such injury may lead to death." Held that the explanation is obviously wrong and that the first part applies where there is a guilty intention, and the second part applies where there is no such intention, but there is guilty knowledge—Ifatulla, 35 C.W.N. 456 (462), 58 Cal 1138, Ind. Rul 1931 Cal 404, 130 I.C. 884, 1931 Cr.C. 409, A.I.R. 1931 Cal 345, 32 Cr.L.J. 598.

In a case under sec. 302, I. P. C., the Judge stated in his charge to the jury "If you find that the accused was there and inflicted the stab wound, you ought to find him guilty of murder". It was argued that the question of what the intention of the accused was was a matter of fact, and that should have been left to the jury; and in directing the jury to find as a matter of law that if the stab wound was inflicted by the accused they must find him guilty of murder amounted to misdirection. Held that there being no evidence of any kind upon which a jury could reasonably have come to the conclusion that the accused had any intention other than the ordinary one deducible from his acts, the Judge in his summing up was under no duty to enter into an irrelevant explanation which may have the effect of misleading the jury—Nga E Pe, A.I.R. 1936 Rang 421, 1936 Cr.C. 836, 18 Rang. 716 (F.B.).

(27) Where the Judge told the jury "The law allows you to assume that if stolen property is found in a man's possession, he knows it to be stolen property until he proves the contrary," held that that was a serious misdirection. Under sec. 114 (a) of the Evidence Act, the Court may presume that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods, knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession. If he gives an account of his possession which may reasonably be true, though the jury are not convinced that it is true, and there is no other evidence of his guilty knowledge, the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal. There is no obligation to prove that the property is his. All that he is required to do is to give an account, and that if that account may reasonably be true, though nevertheless the jury may not be convinced that it is true, he must be acquitted, because the Crown have failed to satisfy the onus which always remains upon them to prove his guilty knowledge and never passes to the accused—Daud Shaikh, 40 C.W.N. 159 (160), 62 C.L.J. 257. See also Istahar Khondkar, 39 C.W.N. 620 (625), A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 796, 162 I.C. 927, 37 Cr.L.J. 701, 62 Cal 956; Surendra Nath, 40 C.W.N. 1090 and Armuga, 1933 M.W.N. 320. In this charge to the jury the Judge did not mention sec. 411, I. P. C., nor inform the jury that it was open to them either to find on the facts that the accused committed the house-breaking and theft or that they were guilty under sec. 411, I. P. C., or tell them that they might convict them in the alternative. He left them no choice between a conviction under secs. 457 and 380, I. P. C., and an acquittal. The offence under sec. 411, I. P. C., being punishable with a lesser sentence than offences under the two former sections, this was an omission which prejudiced the accused—Manuthala, 36 Cr.L.J. 633, 155 I.C. 74, 1934 M.W.N. 1140, 67 M.L.J. 693, A.I.R. 1934 Mad 721, 40 M.L.W. 873, 1934 Cr.C. 1400, 58 Mad. 86. See also paragraph (10) above.

(28) Where the Judge did not charge the jury with respect to the peculiar nature of the test identification, the non-direction must inevitably have misled the jury as to the value of the identification by the witness and consequently their verdict was vitiated—Kuldip Singh, 36 Cr.L.J. 28, 152 I.C. 126, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 537, 1934 Cr.C. 1192. See also Molla Khan, 37 C.W.N. 1061 (1064).

(29) In cases of rape it has been the practice for many years, for the Judge to warn the jury not to accept the evidence of the girl unless they find that it is corroborated in some material particular implicating the accused. But he ought to tell them that if, in spite of his warning, they come to the conclusion that they believe the girl and think the accused guilty, then they have the right to convict him on her uncorroborated evidence. In cases of this nature, before a jury are justified in accepting the testimony of the complainant they must be satisfied that she is a witness of and if they find that she is a person of bad or loose character obviously they will be reluctant to accept her evidence. Where the Judge failed to direct the jury on these material points the conviction and sentence must be set aside—Surendra, 35 Cr.L.J. 508, 147 I.C. 999, 62 Cal. 534, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 833, 1933 Cr.C. 1493, 38 C.W.N. 52; Nur Ahmed, 36 Cr.L.J. 795, 155 I.C. 584, A.I.R. 1934 Cal 7, 1934 Cr.C. 23, 38 C.W.N. 108, 62 Cal 527; Multani Ram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 836, 9 L.L.J. 111, 28 P.L.R. 235. The Judge should point out to the jury that they are entitled, if they please, to convict the accused upon the uncorroborated testimony of the girl, but that it is dangerous to do so in cases dealing with sexual offences such as rape, abduction and similar cases, and that only in exceptional cases should they convict upon the uncorroborated testimony of the girl. The Judge should direct them as to whether there is evidence corroborating her statement, of the kind required by law, that is to say, evidence independent of her own statements. Failure to give such directions amounts to a non-direction which vitiates the trial—Chamuddin Sardar, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 18, 37 Cr.L.J. 359, 160 I.C. 1028, 1936 Cr.C. 110. See also Abdul Aziz, 35 Cr.L.J. 957, 149 I.C. 447, A.I.R. 1934 Nag 94, 1934 Cr.C. 377 and Wahid Ali, 33 Cr.L.J. 604, 138 I.C. 373, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 523, 36 C.W.N. 356, 1932 Cr.C. 498, Ind Rul. 1932 Cal. 454; Sarat Chandra Chakravarty v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 931 (932), 170 I.C. 519, 65 C.L.J. 83, 10 R.C. 151, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 463; Sachinder Rai v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Pat 536 (538), 1939 P.W.N. 598, 41 Cr.L.J. 1, 184 I.C. 354, 18 Pat 698, 20 P.L.T. 898. It has been laid down by criminal Judges that charges brought against a man by one of the opposite sex accusing the male having committed a sexual offence should be very carefully presented to the jury and as it has been pointed out both in England and in India, a rule has grown up that Judges, when they charge juries in cases of this kind, ought never to omit delivering a serious caution to the jury with regard to accepting the uncorroborated evidence of a woman to support a sexual charge against an accused person. The way the rule has developed now is that the presiding Judge should tell the jury that they ought to scrutinize the uncorroborated evidence of a woman or girl with the greatest possible care, because it has been found by experience extending over many years that it is often dangerous that a man should be convicted on such uncorroborated testimony. At the same time, it is not for the Judge to substitute his own view of facts entirely and take away from the jury their privilege of being the judges of facts alone; so that now-a-days after giving the warning the Judge generally adds a rider to the effect that nevertheless if after proper scrutiny and considering the caution delivered by the Judge they are satisfied with the uncorroborated evidence, they may accept it—Sikandar Mian v. Emp., 41 C.W.N. 641 (642), A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 321, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 345; Amar Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 8, 36 Cr.L.J. 428, 153 I.C. 894, 1935 Cr.C. 7, 35 P.L.R. 638. See also Maung Ba Tin v. Emp., 98 I.C. 180, 5 Bur.L.J. 112, 27 Cr.L.J. 1284, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 67. See also Kalu Mia v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 622. In Taser Prantani v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 835 (837), A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 391, 41 Cr.L.J. 841, 190 I.C. 150, 71 C.L.J. 590, Lord-Williams, J., observed: "Time after time this Court has drawn the attention of Judges to the necessity of a careful direction with regard to this point. I need only refer to the cases of Surendra Nath Das v. Emp., 38 C.W.N. 52 and Nur Ahmed Gazi v. Emp., 38 C.W.N. 108. Both these decisions were founded upon the decision in the case of R. v. Baskerville which was a judgment by Lord Reading and other Judges and is reported in (1916) 2 K.B. 658. There are other cases referred to in the reports in the Calcutta Weekly Notes. No such direction as has been required by this Court from time after time was given by this Judge and it is quite obvious, therefore, that the convictions cannot be allowed to stand." The Calcutta High Court seems to have modified its view in Harendra Prosad v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 830, A.I.R. 1940 Cal 461, I.L.R. (1940) 2 Cal. 180, where Bartley, J., commenting on Surendra Nath Das v. Emp., supra, observes: "The proposition of law laid down was that the jury should be warned that it is unsafe to convict on the uncorroborated testimony of a prosecutrix, but that they might still do so, if satisfied that she was telling the truth. The case is not, in my opinion, an authority for the head-note which states that where no such warning is given, the conviction must be set aside. In this connexion, it may be pointed out that there is no presumption of law which differentiates the evidence of the complainant in a rape case from that of the complainant in the case of any other offence. There can be no assumption, in the absence of evidence, that she is an accomplice." In the same case Sen, J., observes: "In such a case warning to the jury of the kind referred to by the learned Judge would be necessary and I agree that the omission to give the jury such a warning on the facts of that case (re Surendra Nath Das v. Emp., supra) rendered the charge bad. But if the learned Judge was expressing the view that in every case of rape the Judge must direct the jury that they should not convict the accused on the testimony of the prosecution unless it was corroborated in material particulars to the same extent as is required in the case of an accomplice's evidence, then I would most respectfully and emphatically dissent from it. The laying down of such a rule would be tantamount to saying that every prosecutrix in a rape case should be treated as if she were an accomplice so far as her credibility is concerned. Reference was made to certain observations of Judges in England in regard to this matter. The manners, customs and mode of life of women in this country are very different from those of women in England. A rule or practice which appropriately may be of general application there would not necessarily have the same utility or application here. If this be the English rule or practice I do not think that it is desirable in cases of this description to import it without qualification here. The Indian Law of Evidence nowhere suggests such an inflexible rule and conditions here do not, in my opinion, warrant the engraving of such a rule on our system." See also 44 C.W.N. cxvi where the matter has been very lucidly discussed. In the latest case of Krishna Chandra v. Emp., 45 C.W.N. 27 (28), Bartley, J., however, observes "Nor it has been laid down in many cases in this Court that the Judge should direct the jury that it is unsafe in cases of this character to convict one of offences of the nature of kidnapping or abduction or sexual offences on this uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix but that he should tell the jury that in spite of the warning if they are satisfied that the girl is telling the truth, they are at liberty to convict him. In this case, however, all that the learned Judge does it to tell the jury that the girl is obviously lying and therefore her evidence is defective. This direction is clearly most inadequate."

In the case of rape, corroboration is required in fact, but not as a matter of law. In Archbold's Criminal Pleadings, 28th Edition, at p 1047, the rule is stated thus: Corroboration of the story of the prosecutrix is not essential, but it is the practice to warn the jury against the danger of acting upon her uncorroborated testimony, particularly where the issue is consent or no consent. See Russell on Crimes, 8th Edition, at p 2138. But where the absence of any caution, such as is usually given in sexual cases, could not have affected the verdict of the jury, it is not a ground on which the conviction should be set aside—Abdul Gafur Kotwal v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 101 (104), 178 I.C. 637, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 658, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal 636. The Rangoon High Court has held that corroboration is not essential even in a case of this nature. The Court is entitled to accept the uncorroborated evidence of a girl but it should be slow in its acceptance of it. It must scrutinize her evidence very carefully and unless her story convinces the Court so much that it does not possibly stand in the need of any corroborative evidence it should not accept her uncorroborated evidence—U Toe Sein v. The King, A.I.R. 1939 Rang 128 (130), 180 I.C. 935, 40 Cr.L.J. 525. It is for the jury to decide whether there is corroboration or not—Kalu Mia v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 622 (623). The Judge should explain to the jury that in order to satisfy themselves whether there is such corroboration they should see whether there is any evidence to prove a fact which would support the inference that the individual accused persons are guilty of some specific charge—Ali Hyder v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Cal 769 (771), 68 C.L.J. 238, 40 Cr.L.J. 280 (283), 179 I.C. 960.

What exactly amounts to corroboration of the main evidence in cases of this kind is always a difficult question. It need not be the direct oral evidence of another person. It may be only independent evidence of such a character that it connects the accused directly or indirectly with the crime that he was said to have committed—Sikandar Mian v. Emp., 41 C.W.N. 641 (643), A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 321 (322), I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 345, following Rex v. Baskerville, (1916) 2 K.B. 658, 86 L.J.K. 28, 115 L.T. 453, 80 J.P. 446, 25 Cox C.C. 524, 60 S.J. 696; Surendra, supra; U Toe Sin v. The King, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 128 (130), 180 I.C. 936, 40 Cr.L.J. 525. It is clear that the kind of corroboration required by the rule must be independent evidence, that is to say, the evidence of some witness other than the girl herself. If there were any doubt about this, it was made clear in the case of Job v. Whitehead, 21 Cr. App. Cas. 23, the headnote of which is that "the witness cannot be corroborated by himself. The Lord Chief Justice Lord Hewart in that case said that, "corroboration should come from another person altogether." Therefore, the evidence of statements made by the girl to others is not the kind of corroboration required by law—Nur Ahmed, supra; U Toe Sein v. The King, supra; Chamuddin Sardar, supra. A previous statement made by the prosecutrix, brought in under sec. 157 of the Evidence Act, cannot possibly be corroboration within the meaning of this rule—Sikandar Mian v. Emp., supra. For contra see Haid Ali, supra. The blood found upon the girl's cloth, and the complaint which she made to others, are not corroborative evidence such as is required by the rule because the girl cannot be allowed to corroborate herself. The corroborative evidence must be that of an independent witness—Surendra, supra; Maung Ba Tin v. Emp., supra. The fact that the prosecutrix subsequently identified the accused is no corroboration within the meaning of the rule—Bhola Nath v. Emp., 43 C.W.N. 1180. But in a case of rape the statement made by the complainant immediately after the occurrence to another woman is admissible, not as evidence of truth of the charge alleged but as corroborating the credibility of the complainant and as evidence of the consistency of her conduct—Nga Sun Pu, 19 Cr.L.J. 155, 43 I.C. 443 (L.B.).

Where in a case of rape the Judge said to the jury "This corroboration need not always come from the lips of a witness, but may also come from circumstances of the case, such as are seen by other witnesses who saw her after the occurrence, by the examination of the doctor, by blood mark in the cloth worn, etc.", held that general observations of this kind can never be of the slightest assistance to the jury. In the particular form in which these observations were embodied, the jury must have supposed that while corroboration was required as to the actual rape, no such corroboration was required as to the identity of the accused—Bhola Nath v. Emp., 43 C.W.N. 1180.

In a charge for rape the Judge directed the jury that because the plea of consent was not taken by the accused they need not determine whether the girl was below 14 or above 14 and they need not determine whether she consented or not. Held that the Judge was entirely mistaken in his position and that he ought to have told the jury that the burden was on the prosecution to prove in addition to the factum of sexual intercourse, that the girl was below 14 or else that the accused committed the act against her will or without her consent—Abdul Khaleque, 34 Cr.L.J. 1161, 145 I.C. 923, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 606, 37 C.W.N. 484, 1933 Cr.C. 970.

(30) In a charge for an offence under sec. 366, I. P. C., if the Judge tells the Jury that the fact of previous intimacy with the girl is wholly immaterial, it constitutes misdirection as the accused cannot be convicted of that offence unless it is proved that the girl was leading a life pure from unlawful sexual intercourse at the time when the kidnapping took place—Shakebali, 35 Cr.L.J. 307 (310), 147 I.C. 79, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 718, 1933 Cr.C. 1268. In a case under sec. 366, I. P. C., the Judge told the jury "However the girl being a minor can have no will of her own in law. In law her will is presumed to be the same as her guardian's will. So if her guardian is not privy to the marriage and it was done against her will, according to law, the girl would be considered to have been compelled to marry against her will." This is a clear misdirection in as much as the "will" referred to in the first part of sec. 366, I. P. C., means the will of the girl and certainly does not mean the will of her guardian—Fulchand, 33 Cr.L.J. 512, 137 I.C. 819, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 442, 36 C.W.N. 49, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 382. Upon the question as to the age of the girl, which is a material factor of the charge under sec. 373, I. P. C., the Judge told the jury that they might appeal to their own experience and apply that experience to the impression that they had formed on seeing the girl for three days, without any caution that such an impression, however, would never be a sure guide. Held that there has been a material misdirection vitiating the trial—Bhola Sardar, 35 C.W.N. 316. See also Forhad, 36 Cr.L.J. 364, 153 I.C. 493, A.I.R. 1934 Cal 766.

In a case under sec. 366, I. P. C., where an allegation is made that two persons have joined in taking or enticing another, the direction should be certainly that the prosecution must prove that the taking or enticing was by the accused persons or either of them. The necessity of examining carefully the evidence against each accused person jointly charged with the particular offences should not be ignored. To say that if the jury was not satisfied that the offence under sec. 366, I. P. C., was made out in the case of both the accused, the alternative was under sec. 366A, I. P. C., is undoubtedly inadequate and misleading. If the intention required by sec. 366, I. P. C., was not proved in the case, then it was the obvious duty of the Judge to say that the jury was bound to acquit them or one of them with regard to whom intention had not been made out. The exception to sec. 351, I. P. C., simply is that the section does not extend to the act of any person who in good faith believes himself or herself to be entitled to the lawful custody of the child. There is no question whatever of any authority to remove the girl from the control of her lawful guardian. Any direction to the contrary is wrong—Katiani Dasi v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 751, 176 I.C. 456, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 475, 11 R.C. 139.

In an abduction case when the opening words of the charge were "you have before you a simple case of abduction of a young married girl for immoral purposes," the Judge struck the right note in reminding the jury that the issue before them was a plain and simple one although evidence had been given for nearly three weeks and had wandered into by-paths of remotely connected facts and arguments had gone on for three days—Abdul Gafur Kotwal v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 101 (104), 178 I.C. 637, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 658, 11 R.C. (1938) 1 Cal 636.

In a case under sec. 366, I. P. C., where the father of the girl up to the time of lodging information at the Police Station did not suspect that his daughter had been taken away for the purpose of being forced to illicit intercourse, since she had already been working as a maid servant in the accused's house and the Judge told the jury to consider this explanation, held that there was no misdirection—Hari Mahto, 37 Cr.L.J. 320, 160 I.C. 675, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 46, 1936 Cr.C. 70.

In cases of sexual offences like abduction, the Judge should tell the jury that if the girl was immoral it made her story of abduction and deceit less probable and that of her abductor that she had a love affair with him more probable—Sachinder Rai v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 536 (539), 1939 P.W.N. 598, 18 Pat. 698, 184 I.C. 354, 6 B.R. 41, 20 P.L.T. 898, 41 Cr.L.J. 1.

(31) In a case of dacoity the prosecution alleged that the accused was recognised during the commission of the dacoity by some witnesses, who knew them for a long time, in the diffused light from electric torches in their hands. The Judge allowed the jurors to make an experiment with electric torches. Held that there was a great irregularity involved in the Judge's allowing the jury to make an experiment in the absence of the accused, by reason of which the jury ultimately brought in their verdict, a verdict which the jurors were not apparently in a position to deliver before the experiment mentioned in the Judge's charge to the jury was allowed to be made—Sarup Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 129, 152 I.C. 661, 38 C.W.N. 1154, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 744, 1934 Cr.C. 1153, 60 C.L.J. 191.

(32) Where the Judge did not draw the attention of the jurymen to the points that as the charge under sec. 333, I. P. C., stood, only those person who actually caused grievous hurt to the constable could be legally convicted of that offence and that unless the accused were charged under sec. 333, I. P. C., read with sec. 149, I. P. C., the conviction of those accused, who were not proved to have caused any grievous hurt to the constable, could not be legally sustained, the omission amounted to misdirection and justified the Appellate Court in setting aside the unanimous verdict of the jury and in ordering a fresh trial in respect of that charge—Lal Behari, 150 I.C. 509, 11 O.W.N. 831, 1934 Cr.C. 1049, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 354, 35 Cr.L.J. 1066 (1070).

(33) Where the Judge repeatedly drew the jury's attention to the fact that the accused had failed to give any explanation of facts adduced in evidence against them, held that bearing in mind that the onus in proof in criminal cases never shifts to the accused, and that they are under no obligation to prove their innocence or adduce evidence in their defence or to make any statement, the Judge's remarks amounted to misdirection—Benoyendra, 40 C.W.N. 432 (441), A.I.R. 1936 Cal 73, 161 I.C. 74, 37 Cr.L.J. 394, 1936 Cr.C. 145, 8 R.C. 472, 63 Cal 929, 64 C.L.J. 154.

(34) Where the prosecution case was that the Fouzdar had deliberately tampered with the statements of witnesses, being actuated by a desire to save an accused from any prosecution and, in furtherance of that desire, had not recorded correctly the statements made to him by the persons whom he examined, there was a serious misdirection on the part of the Judge to tell the jury in the most emphatic terms that the conduct of the Fouzdar had been rather surprising and antagonistic to the prosecution case and, therefore, it was not safe to place much reliance on the statements taken down by him, instead of leaving the question to the jury—Mahomed Adam Chohan, A.I.R. 1937 Bom 60 (62), 38 Bom L.R. 1186, 167 I.C. 43, 38 Cr.L.J. 327, 9 R.B. 274.

(35) In a case under sec. 304, I. P. C., the charge was in form and in fact nothing less than a judgment. The Judge had not made any attempt to explain any law to the jury except on the point of private defence, and he had given no explanation of what constituted an offence under sec. 304, I. P. C., or what constituted an offence under section 325, I. P. C. He had summed up the evidence in the manner of a judgment and throughout had given his conclusions and his opinion as definite facts. At the end of the charge he had rendered lip-service to the duties which had been enjoined on him by stating: "I may warn you that you are in no sense bound by my opinion which you may find expressed in summing up the case. You have to judge it yourself, and you must decide and come to your own conclusion" The defence evidence had been summed up in the phrase: "It is difficult to believe if they (i.e. the defence witnesses) at all help the defence" without leaving it to the jury to consider whether they should believe the defence evidence or not. Held that the whole charge was vitiated by a strong bias in favour of the prosecution and a strong bias against the defence—Fateh Muhammad v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 589, 168 I.C. 741, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 123, 9 R.N. 264, A.I.R. 1937 Nag 110.

(36) The suggestion of the Judge that if the jury do not believe the defence version, they must automatically accept the prosecution story as true, is not a proper direction. He should explain that both versions may be false, and if the jury are not satisfied that the defence version is true, they are by no means to regard this as helping the prosecution to establish the truth of their version—Madan Tulakdas v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 767 (769), 169 I.C. 306, 9 R.C. 914, 41 C.W.N. 508, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 266; Tazem Ali, 33 Cr.L.J. 196 (200), A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 796, 135 I.C. 727, 1931 Cr.C. 1060, 58 Cal. 1095, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 135. While dealing with a case in which the Sessions Judge addressed the jury at the end of his charge. "Nevertheless if you find that the defence case is a false one, it is certainly an element in favour of the prosecution and against the accused. The falsity of the defence case may have the effect of confirming you in your belief that the prosecution story is true", Cunniffe, J., observed: "I am not prepared to say those words or sentiments of that kind ought ever to be used to a jury. But it is to my mind of paramount necessity that if such language is employed, it should always be accompanied by the legal caution that the onus of proving explicit guilt is upon the prosecution and the prosecution alone"—Sarat Chandra Chakravarty v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 931 (933), 170 I.C. 519, 65 C.L.J. 83, 10 R.C. 151, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 463. See also Abdul Gafur Kotwal v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 101 (104), 178 I.C. 637, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 658, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 636.

(37) Where in a case under secs 302 and 201, I P. C., the Judge deals with the case chiefly from the point of view of the murder charges, puts before the jury various bits of circumstantial evidence and makes his comments upon them but does not put before the jury the case under sec 201, I. P. C., held that after dealing with the murder, the Judge ought to put before the jury the case under sec. 201, I P. C., and then indicate what evidence there is, if any, to establish the various elements in this particular charge—Abdul Gafur v. Emp., 41 C.W.N. 414.

(38) The Judge's exhortation to the jury: "The whole of Karachi is watching you, the whole commercial world is watching you," introduces into the case those extraneous considerations which the Judge should warn the jury to exclude from their minds, and, in view of the nature of the charge, seems to be a clear direction to the jury to convict. It can mean nothing else and it does not leave the jury to come to their own conclusions. The exhortations vitiate the charge—Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (216), 184 I.C. 474, 12 R.S. 107, 41 Cr.L.J. 28. Similarly, it was a misdirection on the part of the Judge when he addressed the jury: "Gentlemen, I have done This trial is a trial in one sense of the accused: But you must not forget that in another sense we all of us are not less on our trial. The witnesses, the Bar, you and I, we are also on our trial, a trial no less real in that it rests with ourselves to acquit or condemn ourselves"—Topandas v. Emp., A.I.R. 1925 Sind 116, 81 I.C. 249, 25 Cr.L.J. 761.

(39) Where in a case under sec. 477, I. P. C., the Judge told the jury that they were not concerned with the question, whether the document was a genuine document or a registered document, or if it actually created a legal right, held that this was clearly wrong. The offence with which the accused was charged was not that of destroying a document which purported to be a valuable security. The charge was that he did so fraudulently and dishonestly. In deciding whether the action of the accused was either fraudulent or dishonest, that is to say, whether he intended to commit fraud upon anybody or to cause wrongful loss to anybody, it was clearly essential for the jury to decide whether the document in question was a genuine document or a forged one. If it was a forgery, it was of no value to anybody, and no wrongful loss would be caused by its destruction. Similarly, if it was a forgery, no fraud could be committed upon anybody by doing away with it—Akbar Hossain v. Emp., 43 C.W.N. 222.

(40) Where to establish motive the prosecution has to give evidence which tends to show that the accused are of bad character, the Judge should caution the jury and tell them that they are not to draw an adverse inference against the accused from such evidence. Mere evidence that proceedings against the accused were pending under sec. 110, Cr P. C., is not evidence of bad character—Moseladdi v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal 497 (498), 40 Cr.L.J. 877, 184 I.C. 206.

(41) The omission to caution the jury that a witness, whose testimony before the committing Magistrate has been admitted at the trial before the Court of Session under sec. 33 of the Indian Evidence Act, had not been cross-examined, when the accused had an opportunity to cross-examine him before the committing Magistrate did not amount to misdirection—Nitai Koley v. Emp., (1939) 1 Cal. 337.

(42) The Crown which has considerable facilities at its disposal ought ordinarily, unless for very good reasons, be able to put alleged offenders on their trial within a reasonable time. It is not merely a question of enabling witnesses to have distinct recollection, though that is a very important one, because the greater the lapse of time, the fainter will be the recollection, at least of truthful witnesses who do not imagine or invent, but it becomes more difficult for the accused person to defend himself and all the more difficult if he happens to be an innocent man—Rex v. Krishnan, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 329 (335), 1939 M.W.N. 1213, 1939 M.Cr.C. 289, 190 I.C. 123.

(43) It is not fair for the prosecution to press a case against a man when the complainant is not a witness—Rex v. Krishnan, supra.

(44) The fact that the accused is a registered member of a criminal tribe under the Act is like a previous conviction, a matter from which bad character can be inferred and which may affect the sentence. It should be treated in the same way as the fact of a previous conviction by not being disclosed to the jury until after the verdict lest their minds be prejudiced. If in the first information the accused is referred to as "a member of the Criminal Tribes Act," that portion of the information should be excluded when reading it out to the jury—Moskhab Dome v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 833.

916. Effect of misdirection:—See Note 1151. A misdirection does not justify a reversal of the verdict of the jury unless the misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice—Shyam Sundar, 25 C.W.N. 558; Ramdas, 8 Pat. 344, 117 I.C. 173, 10 P.L.T. 409, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 313, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 381, 30 Cr.L.J. 721 (723); Arumuga, 1933 M.W.N. 320. Unless the misdirection is material, the conviction will not be disturbed in appeal—Mullimavandi, 45 M.L.J. 845; Waladar, 21 Cal. 955; Ebadi Khan v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 674 (676), 176 I.C. 104, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 460, 11 R.C. 36. The High Court will not set aside a verdict where it is not erroneous in spite of the misdirection—Nairaddi, 32 C.W.N. 572; Waladar, 21 Cal. 955. Before the Appellate Court can interfere it must be reasonably satisfied that not only the Judge misdirected the jury but that his misdirection has caused them to come to a conclusion which is in fact wrong—Saroj Kumar, 33 Cr.L.J. 854 (858), 139 I.C. 873, 1932 Cr.C. 464, 59 Cal. 1361, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 474, 55 C.L.J. 459, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 669; Aziz Khan, 36 Cr.L.J. 612, 154 I.C. 1019, 1935 Cr.C. 89, A.I.R. 1935 All. 103. See also Puttam Hassan, 37 Cr.L.J. 356, 160 I.C. 1060, 60 Bom. 599, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 52, 38 Bom.L.R. 19, 1936 Cr.C. 164 (F.B.). Sec. 297, Cr. P. C., must be read along with the provisions of sec. 537, Cr. P. C. It is necessary that the misdirection should be such as to occasion a failure of justice, such failure of justice as would vitiate the trial or proceedings. The misdirection causing failure of justice may at times arise in relation to the case for the prosecution; but in the majority of cases the effect of a misdirection to the jury comes up for consideration on the ground that it has prejudicially affected the accused. There is, however, no ground for broadly assuming that if even a mandatory provision of the Code is infringed, the result in all cases must be to vitiate the trial irrespective of whether it has or has not occasioned failure of justice—Jhina Sama, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 457 (459), 41 Bom.L.R. 965, 11 L.R. 1939 Bom. 648, 41 Cr.L.J. 176, 185 I.C. 382. In Obedali, 32 Cr.L.J. 421, 129 I.C. 680, 52 C.L.J. 423, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 65, 1931 Cr.C. 63, the Calcutta High Court set aside the conviction on account of the admission of inadmissible evidence in the charge which might have influenced the jury adversely to the accused.

The power of setting aside convictions and ordering a new trial for any error or defect in the Judge's charge to the jury will be exercised by the High Court only when the Court is satisfied that the accused has been prejudiced by the error or defect or that a failure of justice has been occasioned thereby—K. K. Ali, 15 Pat. 817 (836), 28 Cr.L.J. 673 (681), 169 I.C. 48, 18 P.L.T. 535, 9 R.P. 526, 3 B.R. 514, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 263. It is not for the Appellate Court to adjudicate on the merits of the verdict of the jury. Unless it can find a misdirection or a material non-direction which has vitiated the trial, the jury's verdict ought not to be disturbed—Ebadi Khan v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 674 (676), 176 I.C. 104, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 460, 11 R.C. 36.

But if the misdirection is of a serious character, e.g., where there is a grave omission on the part of the trial Judge to direct the jury on an important point, it will justify a reversal of the conviction; such a misdirection cannot be made good merely by counsel's calling attention to it at the termination of the summing up—Padam Prasad, 33 C.W.N. 1121 (1141), 50 C.L.J. 106, 30 Cr.L.J. 993 (S.B.).

See Notes 1151 and 1152.

917. Non-direction:—Mere non-direction is not necessarily misdirection; those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood—Eknath, 1

P.L.J. 317, 17 Cr.L.J. 353; Tbrath v. N. W. Ry Co., (1886) L.R. 11 A.C. 247; R v Stodder, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 712; Barendra, 38 C.L.J. 411, 81 I.C. 353, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 257, 25 Cr.L.J. 817, 28 C.W.N. 170 (199); Fateh Chand, 44 Cal. 477. Mere non-direction unless it amounts to misdirection is not fatal to the charge—Bapurao Maroti, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 221 (224), 1940 N.L.J. 264. In order to justify the Appellate Court to set aside the verdict of the jury the finding that there are certain omissions or non-direction is not enough. The Court of Appeal must be satisfied on a perusal of the charge and the material evidence in the case that the omissions are so important that it may be reasonably said that they have led to an erroneous verdict—Kasimuddin, 36 Cr.L.J. 480 (481), 154 I.C. 110, 60 C.L.J. 45, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 31.

But the omission by a Judge in his charge to the jury to lay down the law by which the jury are to be guided as required by sec. 297, Cr. P. C., is something more than a misdirection. It is a failure to comply with the express provision of the law, Section 537, Cr. P. C. cannot be made applicable to such a case to cure the illegality—Nawab Ali, 81 I.C. 953, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 411, 11 O.L.J. 315, 25 Cr.L.J. 1129; Jagan, 35 Cr.L.J. 507, 147 I.C. 976, 11 O.W.N. 200, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 175, 1935 Cr.C. 298, 1934 O.L.R. 202. A non-direction is not a misdirection unless the jury has been misled or unless the non-direction is of primary importance—Champa, 29 Cr.L.J. 325 (333), 108 I.C. 81, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 326, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 545. For all practical purposes an omission in a summing up is not an error of law or a 'misdirection' unless it be on a point of substantial importance, or, where the point has been fully dealt with by the defence counsel of prime importance—Imp v. Minhasaya, 4 I.C. 597, 11 Cr.L.J. 13 (15), 3 S.L.R. 102; Sita Ram, 33 Cr.L.J. 167 (169), 135 I.C. 392, 8 O.W.N. 1215, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 23, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 40, 7 Luck. 390, 1932 Cr.C. 55. It is only when the non-direction is such that there are grounds for thinking that the jury by reason of it may have been put on the wrong track and made to arrive at a wrong conclusion that such non-direction can amount to a misdirection—Bajit Mian, 6 Pat. 817, 29 Cr.L.J. 81 (85), 106 I.C. 673, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 120, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 221, 9 P.L.T. 191. In a charge of unlawful assembly, the omission to explain clearly to the jury the alleged common object of the unlawful assembly, is not a misdirection but a mere non-direction which will not justify the verdict being set aside, if the prisoner was not prejudiced thereby—Rahamat Ali, 4 C.W.N. 196; Abdul Shesk, 17 Cr.L.J. 92 (Cal.). Omission to call the attention of the jury to the evidence of defence witnesses whom the High Court considered to be untrustworthy is a mere non-direction and not a misdirection—Rochia, 7 Cal. 42.

In a case under sec. 366, I. P. C., the prosecution alleged that the girl was taken away for marriage and the consent of the parents was absolutely immaterial as the girl was found to be of age. But in the whole charge to the jury there was not a word by which the jury was asked to find whether the marriage which the accused intended to perform was going to be without the consent of the girl. This non-direction amounted to a serious misdirection and it occasioned miscarriage of justice—Rameshwar Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 919 (923), 170 I.C. 464, 16 Pat. 413, 1937 P.W.N. 596, 3 B.R. 734, 10 R.P. 128, 18 P.L.T. 607, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 440.

298. (1) In such cases it is the duty of the Judge—

- (a) to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial, and especially all questions as to the relevancy of facts which it is proposed to prove, and the admissibility of evidence or the propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties; and, in his discretion, to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties;

- (b) to decide upon the meaning and construction of all documents given in evidence at the trial;
- (c) to decide upon all matters of fact which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given;
- (d) to decide whether any question which arises is for himself or for the jury, and upon this point his decision shall bind the jurors.

(2) The Judge may, if he thinks proper, in the course of his summing up, express to the jury his opinion upon any question of fact, or upon any question of mixed law and fact, relevant to the proceeding.

Illustrations.

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement made by a person not being a witness in the case on the ground that circumstances are proved which render evidence of such statement admissible.

It is for the Judge, and not for the jury, to decide whether the existence of those circumstances has been proved.

(b) It is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed.

It is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed.

918. Question of law:—Under sec. 298, Cr. P. C., it is the duty of the Judge to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial. It is well-established that in every case there is a preliminary question which is one of law, namely, whether there is any evidence on which the jury could properly find the question for the party on whom the onus of proof lies. It is not enough to say that there is some evidence. A scintilla of evidence clearly would not justify the Judge in leaving the case to the jury. There must be some evidence on which they might reasonably and properly conclude the fact to be established. It is the duty of a Judge to make a case for the accused on which he thinks that a verdict of not guilty may be properly returned, though the case has not been suggested by or on behalf of the accused—Lebbai Kutti, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 190 (192), 1938 M.W.N. 582, 1938 M.Cr.C. 212, 40 Cr.L.J. 437, 180 I.C. 605, following Upendra Nath Das, A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 773, 30 I.C. 113, 16 Cr.L.J. 561, 21 C.L.J. 377, 19 C.W.N. 653 (F.B.). See also Note 902.

In a charge under sec. 376, I. P. C., the question whether, when the complainant had consented to the act, the offence within the meaning of sec. 375, I. P. C., has been committed, is one of law for the Judge to decide under this section and not a question for the jury—Madhav Rao, 19 Bom. 735.

What a Judge says to the jury on a point of law is a binding direction upon the jury—Nimchand, 20 W.R. 41. They are not entitled to resort to a commentary on the law during their consultation about the verdict. They should take the law from the Judge—Bhadmi, 6 Bom.L.R. 258. If the jury return a verdict according to the direction of the Judge, the High Court will not interfere with the verdict, unless it is manifestly erroneous—Jacquet, 11 Cal. 85.

A Judge is in error when he leaves a point of law to be decided by the jury—Hadi Husain, 35 Cr.L.J. 502, 147 I.C. 911, 11 O.W.N. 211. See also Ramjanan, 36 Cr.L.J. 856, 14 Pat. 717, 155 I.C. 866, 16 P.L.T. 348, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 357.

919. Admissibility of evidence:—The Judge has to advise the jury as to the logical bearing of the evidence admitted upon the matters to be found by them—

Afruddi, 23 C.W.N. 833. This section expressly lays down that one of the duties of a Judge in a trial held with the jury is to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties. If that is so, the fact that the accused puts forward some particular ground for holding that the evidence is inadmissible would not relieve the Judge of his duty to look into all the circumstances in order to judge whether it is admissible or not—Panchlauri, 52 Cal. 67, 29 C.W.N. 300, 26 Cr.L.J. 782. It is for the Judge to decide whether the evidence adduced before him is admissible or not; the credibility of the evidence is to be left to the jury—Abbasi, 25 Cal. 736; Amiruddin, 45 Cal. 557, 22 C.W.N. 213, 19 Cr.L.J. 305. Thus, the question as to which documents or evidence the jury are to receive is for the Judge to decide, and the question as to what they are to believe is for the jury—Lalshing, Ratanlal 452 (453). The Judge ought not to express any opinion upon the reliability of the evidence for the prosecution or for the defence. He is not entitled to say in a general manner that there is nothing in the evidence to support or even to lend a semblance of support to the contentions of the accused—Tanbulla, 25 C.W.N. 682.

It is the duty of the Judge to decide the question of admissibility of a document on the argument of the two sides and decide in the way he thinks best. But having admitted it, it is his duty to leave the matter entirely free to the jury as to what weight they would allow to the evidence. The Judge would not be wise in giving his reasons for admitting the document in evidence to the jury. He should merely state that he admits the document and lays it to the jury—Ebadi Khan v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 674, 176 I.C. 104, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 460, 11 R.C. 36.

In case of accomplice evidence, the Judge should caution the jury that it is not safe to convict an accused upon the approver's evidence unless it is corroborated. Omission to say so will amount to a misdirection—Arumuga, 12 Mad. 196; Surya Kanta, 24 C.W.N. 119. But see Jamaldi, 51 Cal. 160 and other cases cited under Note 915 (5), ante. The question as to what is or is not, what amounts or does not amount to corroborative evidence in law is a question of law to be decided by the Judge. It is the duty of the Judge to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the evidence confirming or corroborating the accomplice's story which do or do not fulfil the requirements of the rule of law that an approver's evidence must be corroborated in material particulars and must be such as to connect the accused with the crime. But the Judge must not tell the jury that such or such witness does in fact corroborate the accused. That is the function of the jury and depends upon whether they believe the witness or not—Rebati Mohan, 56 Cal. 150, 32 C.W.N. 945, 30 Cr.L.J. 435 (438, 439), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 57, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 338. Though an omission to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the evidence which amount to corroborative evidence in law would only be a non-direction, it is a misdirection if the Judge points out to the jury certain portions of the evidence as fulfilling the requirements above stated, when in fact they do not do so—Rebati Mohan, supra.

Where the counsel for the prosecution in his opening address referred to a complaint preferred against the accused on an earlier occasion, which had no bearing on the present case except to show that the accused was a man of immoral character, and it appeared that the complaint had not been formally proved in the earlier case, the Judge should caution the jury that the contents of the complaint are not relevant to the matters in issue before them and they should pay no attention to it. His omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Padam Prasad, 33 C.W.N. 1121 (1141), 119 I.C. 193, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 617, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 753, 50 Cr.L.J. 106, 30 Cr.L.J. 993 (S.B.).

Confessions :—It is for the Judge to decide whether the statements or confessions made to the Magistrate and how much of the confessions made to the police are admissible; leaving it to the jury to decide amounts to a misdirection—Amiruddin, 45 Cal. 557. Omission to mention to the jury that a confession made by the accused to the police-officer is inadmissible in evidence is a misdirection—Someshwar, 3 P.L.T. 101, 23 Cr.L.J. 91. The Judge must decide whether the confessions are voluntarily made or caused by inducement, threat or promise. It is not for the jury to decide. But once the

- (b) to decide upon the meaning and construction of all documents given in evidence at the trial;
- (c) to decide upon all matters of fact which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given;
- (d) to decide whether any question which arises is for himself or for the jury, and upon this point his decision shall bind the jurors.

(2) The Judge may, if he thinks proper, in the course of his summing up, express to the jury his opinion upon any question of fact, or upon any question of mixed law and fact, relevant to the proceeding.

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement made by a person not being a witness in the case on the ground that circumstances are proved which render evidence of such statement admissible.

It is for the Judge, and not for the jury, to decide whether the existence of those circumstances has been proved.

(b) It is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed.

It is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed.

918. Question of law:—Under sec. 298, Cr. P. C., it is the duty of the Judge to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial. It is well-established that in every case there is a preliminary question which is one of law, namely, whether there is any evidence on which the jury could properly find the question for the party on whom the onus of proof lies. See also Note 902.

In a charge under sec. 376, I. P. C., the question whether, when the complainant had consented to the act, the offence within the meaning of sec. 375, I. P. C., has been committed, is one of law for the Judge to decide under this section and not a question for the jury—Madhavrao, 19 Bom 735

What a Judge says to the jury on a point of law is a binding direction upon the jury—Nimchand, 20 W.R. 41. They are not entitled to resort to a commentary on the law during their consultation about the verdict. They should take the law from the Judge—Bhadmi, 6 Bom L.R. 258. If the jury return a verdict according to the direction of the Judge, the High Court will not interfere with the verdict, unless it is manifestly erroneous—Jacquet, 11 Cal 85

A Judge is in error when he leaves a point of law to be decided by the jury—Hadi Husain, 35 Cr.L.J. 502, 147 I.C. 911, 11 O.W.N. 211. See also Ramjanan, 36 Cr.L.J. 856, 14 Pat 717, 155 I.C. 866, 16 P.L.T. 348, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 357.

919. Admissibility of evidence:—The Judge has to advise the jury as to the logical bearing of the evidence admitted upon the matters to be found by them—

Afiruddi, 23 C.W.N. 833. This section expressly lays down that one of the duties of a Judge in a trial held with the jury is to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties. If that is so, the fact that the accused puts forward some particular ground for holding that the evidence is inadmissible would not relieve the Judge of his duty to look into all the circumstances in order to judge whether it is admissible or not—Panchkauri, 52 Cal 67, 29 C.W.N. 300, 25 Cr.L.J. 782. It is for the Judge to decide whether the evidence adduced before him is admissible or not; the credibility of the evidence is to be left to the jury—Abbas, 25 Cal. 736; Amiruddin, 45 Cal. 557, 22 C.W.N. 213, 19 Cr.L.J. 305. Thus, the question as to which documents or evidence the jury are to receive is for the Judge to decide, and the question as to what they are to believe is for the jury—Lalshing, Ratanlal 452 (453). The Judge ought not to express any opinion upon the reliability of the evidence for the prosecution or for the defence. He is not entitled to say in a general manner that there is nothing in the evidence to support or even to lend a semblance of support to the contentions of the accused—Tartulla, 25 C.W.N. 682.

It is the duty of the Judge to decide the question of admissibility of a document on the argument of the two sides and decide in the way he thinks best. But having admitted it, it is his duty to leave the matter entirely free to the jury as to what weight they would allow to the evidence. The Judge would not be wise in giving his reasons for admitting the document in evidence to the jury. He should merely state that he admits the document and lays it to the jury—Ebadi Khan v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 674, 176 IC 104, AIR. 1938 Cal 460, 11 R.C. 36.

In case of accomplice evidence, the Judge should caution the jury that it is not safe to convict an accused upon the approver's evidence unless it is corroborated. Omission to say so will amount to a misdirection—Arumuga, 12 Mad. 196; Surya Kanta, 24 C.W.N. 119. But see Jamaldi, 51 Cal 160 and other cases cited under Note 915 (5), ante. The question as to what is or is not, what amounts or does not amount to corroborative evidence in law is a question of law to be decided by the Judge. It is the duty of the Judge to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the evidence confirming or corroborating the accomplice's story which do or do not fulfil the requirements of the rule of law that an approver's evidence must be corroborated in material particulars and must be such as to connect the accused with the crime. But the Judge must not tell the jury that such or such witness does in fact corroborate the accused. That is the function of the jury and depends upon whether they believe the witness or not—Rebati Mohan, 56 Cal 150, 32 C.W.N. 945, 30 Cr.L.J. 435 (438, 439), A.I.R. 1929 Cal 57, Ind. Rul 1929 Cal 338. Though an omission to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the evidence which amount to corroborative evidence in law would only be a non-direction, it is a misdirection if the Judge points out to the jury certain portions of the evidence as fulfilling the requirements above stated, when in fact they do not do so—Rebati Mohan, supra.

Where the counsel for the prosecution in his opening address referred to a complaint preferred against the accused on an earlier occasion, which had no bearing on the present case except to show that the accused was a man of immoral character, and it appeared that the complaint had not been formally proved in the earlier case, the Judge should caution the jury that the contents of the complaint are not relevant to the matters in issue before them and they should pay no attention to it. His omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Padam Prasad, 33 C.W.N. 1121 (1141), 119 IC 193, A.I.R. 1929 Cal 617, Ind. Rul 1929 Cal 753, 50 Cr.L.J. 106, 30 Cr.L.J. 993 (S.B.).

Confessions—It is for the Judge to decide whether the statements or confessions made to the Magistrate and how much of the confessions made to the police are admissible; leaving it to the jury to decide amounts to a misdirection—Amiruddin, 45 Cal. 557. Omission to mention to the jury that a confession made by the accused to the police-officer is inadmissible in evidence is a misdirection—Someshwar, 3 P.L.T. 101, 23 Cr.L.J. 91. The Judge must decide whether the confessions are voluntarily made or caused by inducement, threat or promise. It is not for the jury to decide. But once the confessions are admitted in evidence it is for the jury to determine the weight to be attached to them and whether they are true or false—Khira Mandal, 33 C.W.N. 1112 (1113), 57 Cal. 649, 1929 Cr.C. 362; Kesari, 11 Bom.L.R. 332, 10 Cr.L.J. 65. But the Judge should charge the jury that the mere confessions of prisoners tried simultaneously with the accused for the same offence, which are in a very qualified manner made operative as evidence by sec. 30 of the Evidence Act, ought to be valued merely as accomplice's testimony, and to be treated as evidence of a peculiarly infirm and defective character requiring careful scrutiny before it can be safely relied on—Ramdoyal, 21 W.R. 47. Where a Judge admitted in evidence a confession made before a Police Officer and directed the jury that the confession could and should be used not merely against the maker but also against his co-accused, it was a misdirection—Amiruddin, 45 Cal. 557.

A Judge before deciding whether a confession is voluntary or not and whether it ought to be admitted should not tell the jury that the accused had made a confession. It is no good telling the jury first that the accused has made a confession and then sending them out of Court while the question is discussed whether the confession ought to be admitted or not. A great deal of damage may be done by the mere statement that the accused has confessed—Daud Shaikh, 62 C.L.J. 257 (258), 40 C.W.N. 159. It is for the Judge to decide for himself whether prima facie the confession appears to him to have been induced by threat or promise and for that reason to be inadmissible. It he comes to the conclusion that it is inadmissible he must exclude it from the consideration of the jury. It is not the province of the jury to decide the question of admissibility of evidence—Baldeo, 34 Cr.L.J. 369, 142 I.C. 639, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 187, 1933 Cr.C. 233, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal 310. A Judge cannot leave it to the jury to decide whether a confessional statement is voluntary or not. It is not open to the jury to reject the statement or accept the same in evidence. The Judge is required to decide the question of admissibility of the statement on a decision come to by him that it was voluntary or not; after the Judge's decision on the question of admissibility of the confessional statement depending on its voluntariness, has been given which is binding on the jury as a decision on a question of law, the Judge is required to ask the jury to say whether the confessional statement, if it was held to be voluntary, is true or not upon the materials before the Court, and so to give their verdict on the question of fact whether the statement was true or not. When these points were not placed before the jury, the jury received no proper direction from the Judge on a very vital question—Kashim Ali, 36 Cr.L.J. 70, 152 I.C. 234, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 651, 38 C.W.N. 589, 1934 Cr.C. 933. If the Judge has to decide the question of voluntariness in its bearing on admissibility, there is no reason why the jury should not consider the question of voluntariness in its bearing on the truth of the confession. To ask the jury to accept the voluntariness of a statement as decided and then to consider its truth quite apart from the question of its voluntariness is to ask them to attain a mental detachment which is unpractical and perhaps impossible. Moreover, such a process of reasoning would be faulty and prejudicial to the accused—Kasimuddin, 36 Cr.L.J. 485, 154 I.C. 273, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 853, 1934 Cr.C. 1368, 39 C.W.N. 27, 62 Cal. 312. Although the Judge has to decide the question of the voluntariness of a confession in its bearing upon admissibility, still after he has admitted it, the jury are entitled and must be allowed to consider for themselves the question of voluntariness in its bearing upon the truth of the confession. To tell the jury that in admitting the confession the Judge had decided that it was voluntary, and that the jury were to take that question as settled and on that basis decide whether the confession was true, and what value was to be attached to it, is a serious misdirection, in as much as it withdraws from the jury an issue of fact relating to the question of truth—Kishori Kishore, 36 Cr.L.J. 921 (922), 156 I.C. 396, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 308, 1935 Cr.C. 459, 39 C.W.N. 986. Whether confessions are voluntarily made or not, is a question of law, to be determined by the Court from the facts, as a condition precedent to their admission. Having been declared competent and admissible, they are before the jury for consideration. The jury have no authority to reject them as incompetent. But the jury are the sole Judges of the truth and weight to be given to confessions, as they are of any other fact. In weighing the confessions, the jury must take into consideration all the circumstances surrounding them and under which they were made, including those under which the Court declared as a matter of law, they were voluntary. In weighing confessions, the jury necessarily consider those facts upon which their admissibility, as having been voluntarily made, depends. While there is no power in the jury to reject the confessions as being incompetent, there is no power in the Court to control the jury in the weight to be given to facts. The jury may, therefore, in the exercise of their authority, and within their province determine that the confessions are untrue or not entitled to any weight upon the grounds that they were not voluntarily made. The Court passes upon (that is, considers) the facts merely for the purpose of determining their competency and admissibility. The jury pass upon (that is, considers) the same facts, and in connection with other facts, if there are other facts, in determining whether the confessions are true and entitled to any and how much weight. The Court and jury each has a well defined and separate province—Badan Ali, 37 Cr.L.J. 1084, 165 I.C. 127, 40 C.W.N. 794, 63 Cal 833, following the case of Burton v. State, 107 Ala 108. See also Bhakta Bhusan, 63 C.L.J. 142, 40 C.W.N. 668, 63 Cal 1089. When an objection is taken by the accused as to the relevancy or admissibility of his recorded confession on the ground that it was not voluntary, it is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the confession was voluntary or not. In view of the provisions of sec. 80, Evidence Act, a confession duly recorded by the Magistrate with the prescribed certificate appended to it may be presumed to be voluntary and as such admissible, but this admissibility is subject to the restrictions contained in sec. 24, Evidence Act. In order to justify the rejection of a confession, a lesser degree of probability would be necessary, inasmuch as instead of the word "proved," the Legislature has used the word "appear" in sec. 24. Before a Judge places the confession before the jury for their consideration as evidence in the case he should carefully consider all the circumstances disclosed in the evidence and come to a decision whether these circumstances do justify a well-founded conjecture which may be sufficient for excluding it from evidence—Nayeb Sahana, 35 Cr.L.J. 1479 (1483), 152 I.C. 44, 38 C.W.N. 659, 61 Cal 399, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 636, 1934 Cr.C. 929. Where in the Judge's charge to the jury his decision on the question whether the confession was voluntary or not, was not stated, nor did the Judge state to the jury that it was for them to determine whether it was true or not and it was left to the jury to determine whether the confession was or was not voluntarily made, or in other words, whether it was admissible, held that that was an error of law on the part of the Judge and the illegality in the charge in this behalf amounted to a serious misdirection resulting from an omission to give a proper direction according to law, calculated to mislead the jury in arriving at a proper verdict—Ram Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 135, 152 I.C. 681, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 717, 1934 Cr.C. 1102.

As regards retracted confessions, see Note 915, no (4) under sec. 297. See also Notes under sec. 164.

920. Inadmissible evidence:—It is the duty of the Judge to see that evidence which is not admissible in itself should not be allowed to go in to the prejudice of the accused—Abbas, 25 Cal 736; and to see that no improper use of the law is made against the accused and that no improper evidence is given to the jury—Padam Prasad, 33 C.W.N. 1121 (1141), 50 C.L.J. 106, 119 I.C. 193, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 617, Ind. Rul 1929 Cal 753 (S.B.); R v. Wakefield, (1799) 27 St. T. 679. Where a document, which is not per se admissible, is admitted by the Court, and the accused having sufficient opportunity at the trial omits to take any objection, he cannot afterwards in appeal impeach the verdict of the jury on the ground that the document had been admitted without formal proof. But it is competent to the High Court to consider whether, after excluding the evidence wrongly admitted, the rest of the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict—Ram Bhagwan, 19 Cr.L.J. 886 (Pat.); Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emp., 43 C.W.N. 473 (482), 40 Cr.L.J. 364, 180 I.C. 1, 1939 O.L.R. 131, 11 R.P.C. 166, 1939 A.L.J. 298, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 47, 1939 M.W.N. 185, 1939 O.W.N. 282, 20 P.L.T. 265, 49 M.L.W. 349 (P.C.). Where during the trial before a jury the Public Prosecutor read an alleged confession of the accused which not being recorded according to law was inadmissible in evidence, held that the irregularity of allowing it to be read might have influenced the minds of the jury, however carefully the Judge might have endeavoured to remove any impression caused thereby, and that the accused was entitled to a retrial—Damodar, 3 P.L.T. 52, 23 Cr.L.J. 141.

If inadmissible evidence has been admitted by the Judge, the High Court will consider whether the evidence improperly admitted is of such a nature that it possibly may have considerably influenced the mind of the jury, and whether it is reasonably certain that the jury would have acted on the unobjectionable evidence if the wrongly admitted evidence had not also been presented to them—Padam Prasad, 33 C.W.N. 1121 (1140), 50 C.L.J. 106, 30 Cr.L.J. 993, 119 I.C. 193, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 617, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 753 (S.B.). See also Obedali, 32 Cr.L.J. 421, 129 I.C. 680, 52 C.L.J. 423, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 65, 1931 Cr.C. 63. But where misreception of a piece of evidence could have had very little weight and no substantial injustice was done, the trial was not vitiated—Sohrai, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 247 (251), 11 P.L.T. 148, 9 Pat. 474, 124 I.C. 836, 31 Cr.L.J. 721. Where the case was rather near the line it would be unsafe to say that the effect of improperly letting in evidence, which in substance went to show that the statements of the accused before the jury were an after-thought, had no effect on the minds of the jury and the verdict of the jury must be set aside—Issuf Mahomed, 32 Cr.L.J. 1077, 133 I.C. 748, 33 Bom.L.R. 305, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 311, 55 Bom. 435, Ind. Rul. 1931 Bom. 396, 1931 Cr.C. 567.

Treating as First Information Report a document which in fact is not such a report and not treating as such a document which is really a First Information Report is a serious error and it is impossible to say that the Jury was not misled on account of such error—Momin Talukdar v. Emp., 30 Cr.L.J. 803, 117 I.C. 601, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 771, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 553.

921. Clause (c):—It is the Judge to decide upon all matters which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given. Thus, where the accused made one confession before the committing Magistrate, and another confession before the Court of Session, retracting the previous confession, and alleged that he was beaten by the Police and the previous confession was caused by inducement offered by the Police, it was held that in order to enable the first confession to be admitted in evidence, the Judge ought to decide whether the confession was induced by illegal promise and whether that inducement still existed or had been effectually dispelled when the Magistrate recorded the confession—Rupya, Ratanlal 245 (248).

922. Expression of opinion by Judge:—This section does not lay down any principles on the question of misdirection, but it does lay down what are the duties of the Judge trying a criminal case with the aid of a jury both in the course of the trial and the course of the summing up. A charge to a jury must be read as a whole. If there are salient propositions in law in it, these will, of course, be the subject of separate analysis. But in a protracted narrative of fact, the determination of which is ultimately left to the jury, it must needs be that the view of the Judge may not coincide with the views of others who look upon the whole proceedings in black type. It would, however, not be in accordance either with usual or with good practice to treat such cases as cases of misdirection, if, upon the general view taken, the case has been fairly left within the jury's province—Jagdish Dutt Shukla v. King-Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 545 (548), 188 I.C. 110, 1940 O.W.N. 481.

Though it is open to a Judge to express his opinion to the jury on any question of fact, still the Judge ought not to express any decided opinion, because the decision of the questions of fact is left entirely to the jury—Rahamat Ali, 4 C.W.N. 196. The Judge in his charge to the jury ought not to express his own opinion in terms too dogmatic and unqualified, even though he informs them that they are not bound by any opinion of his—Osif Molla, 18 C.W.N. 180, 15 Cr.L.J. 147; Tajali Mian, 7 Pat.

50, 28 Cr.L.J. 843 (844), 101 I.C. 459, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 31, 9 P.L.T. 57; Topandas, 25 Cr.L.J. 761, 81 I.C. 249, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 116. The Judge should not impress his own opinion indelibly on the mind of the jury and thus give them no option but to arrive at a decision which he himself arrived at—Khyruddin, 53 Cal 372, 92 I.C. 442, A.I.R. 1926 Cal 139, 42 C.L.J. 504, 27 Cr.L.J. 266 (269); Naibulla, 43 C.L.J. 488, 96 I.C. 990, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 996, 27 Cr.L.J. 1038; Fazaruddin, 42 C.L.J. 111, 90 I.C. 433, A.I.R. 1926 Cal 105, 26 Cr.L.J. 1553; Des Raj, 5 O.W.N. 497, 29 Cr.L.J. 721 (722), 110 I.C. 577, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 326. If he expresses any opinion, he should also add that it is his own opinion which is not binding on the jury and that the jury is at liberty to draw their own conclusions—Laxmana, 2 Weir 385 (386); Bepin, 10 Cal. 970; Topandas, supra; Panchu Das, 34 Cal. 698; Natabar, 35 Cal. 531. In a lengthy charge, the trial Judge cannot be expected to pause at every step to assure the jury that matters of fact are matters for them to decide. It is sufficient if the Judge has, not only in the opening portion of his charge, but also several times in the course of it, pointed out the liberty of the jury to draw their own conclusions on questions of fact. And a charge cannot be regarded as defective merely because in dealing with a particular matter at a particular stage, it was not in terms repeated that the jury were entitled to brush aside what might have been suggested as the opinion of the Judge—Panchu Sheikh, 34 C.W.N. 1154, 32 Cr.L.J. 190, A.I.R. 1931 Cal 178, 1931 Cr.C. 242, 128 I.C. 811 (F.B.).

In the course of his summing up, the Judge has a right to express his opinion, but it is not necessary that the Judge should, in expressing his opinion, qualify it by the most elaborate safeguards. If a Judge simply states his opinion which the law allows him to state, in such a manner that intelligent jurymen should see for themselves that it is only his opinion and nothing else, it is not necessary for him to add as a safeguard a remark that it is only opinion and that the jury are perfectly at liberty to form their own—Des Raj, 5 O.W.N. 497, 29 Cr.L.J. 721 (722), 110 I.C. 577, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 326. A trial Judge is entitled to express his opinion to a jury freely and emphatically when it seems to him to be necessary to do so provided that he warns the jury that his opinion is in no way binding upon them and that it is the jury's opinion on the facts of the case alone which matters—Ratnasabapathy v. Public Prosecutor, A.I.R. 1936 Mad 516 (519), 1936 M.W.N. 459, 59 Mad 904, 37 Cr.L.J. 909, 164 I.C. 243, 44 M.L.W. 155, 71 M.L.J. 231, 1936 Cr.C. 635; Subba Valayan v. Emp, 1937 M.W.N. 552; Madan Tilakdas v. Emp, 169 I.C. 306, 9 R.C. 914, 38 Cr.L.J. 767, 41 C.W.N. 508, A.I.R. 1937 Cal 266. The Judge should not refrain from expressing his opinion about the facts. Any anxious care on the part of the Judge to avoid suggesting even the faintest suspicion of his own opinion to the jury is, entirely misconceived. A Judge ought to tell a jury what his opinion is, so long as he makes it clear that they are at liberty to regard or disregard it as they please. A charge which avoids any expression of opinion would generally amount to a most colourless and unhelpful direction—Nagendra-nath, 34 C.W.N. 164 (169), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 742, 1929 Cr.C. 390, 124 I.C. 492, 57 Cal. 740, 31 Cr.L.J. 673; Bapurao Maroti, A.I.R. 1940 Nag 221 (224), 1940 N.L.J. 264, 190 I.C. 283.

A Judge in charging a jury, does not fulfil his duty if he merely reiterates the evidence given by the witnesses for the prosecution and the defence, and then leaves the jury to decide the case one way or another. It is proper and reasonable that a Judge, when charging a jury at the end of a criminal trial, should direct the jury as to the weight which, in his opinion, ought to be attached to the evidence called at the trial. But of course, charging the jury in connection with the facts of the case the Judge must leave the jury under no misapprehension as to their duty in the matter, namely, that the jury must consider the facts for themselves, and form their own opinion as to the value to be attached to the evidence of the several witnesses, and the proper inference that ought to be drawn from the evidence as a whole—Scott, 36 Cr.L.J. 1232, 157 I.C. 821, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 214, 13 Rang 141, 1935 Cr.C. 847. Where the Judge qualified his observations with the remark that they, the members of the jury, were the sole Judges of the facts and were not bound to any opinion expressed by him and emphasized this by adding that they were not only at liberty to differ from any opinion expressed by him but that it was their duty as jurymen to give their independent findings, held that there was no misdirection or that the summing up was not unfair although the Judge might have expressed his opinion about evidence in very pronounced terms—Satdeo, 37 Cr.L.J. 182 (183), A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 164, 159 I.C. 919, 1936 O.W.N. 28, 1936 O.L.R. 18. See also Hossain Ali Mir, 59 C.L.J. 395. The Judge is entitled in the course of his summing up to express his opinion to the jury on any question of fact. But he should not state his own view on important matters of facts in so positive a manner as to lead the jury to believe that it is not open to them to take any other view. If the Judge does so, he takes questions of fact out of the hands of the jury, and thus deprives the accused of the valuable right, given to him by law, to have the questions of fact considered by the jury. A summing up to the jury in which the Judge goes on dictating his own findings on questions of fact, which ought to be left for the decision of the jury, is no summing up at all and a verdict following upon such charge cannot be sustained. While stating the evidence for and against the accused the Judge is entitled to make his own comments as regards each piece of evidence, note discrepancies and inconsistencies in the evidence, and point out generally the way in which it is favourable or unfavourable to the accused. But it is not open to the Judge to tell the jury that any explanation offered by the accused of any fact appearing against him in evidence is incredible without telling the jury plainly, that it is merely his own opinion and that the jury are entitled to draw their own conclusions—Sumera, 35 Cr.L.J. 688, 148 I.C. 504, 1933 A.L.J. 1634. See also Eusuf Ali, 34 Cr.L.J. 430, 142 I.C. 653, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 190, 1933 Cr.C. 236, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 312; Hadi Husain, 35 Cr.L.J. 502, 147 I.C. 911, 11 O.W.N. 211; Lala, 35 Cr.L.J. 668, 148 I.C. 339, 1933 A.L.J. 1446, A.I.R. 1933 All. 941, 1933 Cr.C. 1561; Hari Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 1026, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 263, 156 I.C. 921, 14 Pat. 225, 16 P.L.T. 380, 1935 Cr.C. 749; Mangal Singh, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 171, 8 O.W.N. 344, 1931 Cr.C. 443, 132 I.C. 232, 32 Cr.L.J. 858; Hossain, 35 Cr.L.J. 1487, 152 I.C. 40, 59 C.L.J. 396, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 757, 1934 Cr.C. 1165. It is not necessary for the Judge on every occasion on which he expressed his opinion on a point of fact to tell the jury that they were sole Judges of questions of fact. If he makes that statement quite clearly to the jury at the end of his charge, that is sufficient—Shree Kishen, A.I.R. 1935 All. 928, 37 Cr.L.J. 173, 159 I.C. 900.

The essential test is whether, in his discussion of the evidence on each point, the Judge always leaves it to the jury and does not usurp the jury's functions. The Judge not only may but should let his opinion appear, provided that he leaves the decision fairly to the jury and does not take it out of their hands—Abdul Gafur Kotwal v. Emp. 40 Cr.L.J. 101 (103), 178 I.C. 637, 1.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 636, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 658

Duty of jury.

299. It is the duty of the jury—

- (a) to decide which view of the facts is true and then to return the verdict which under such view ought, according to the direction of the Judge, to be returned;
- (b) to determine the meaning of all technical terms (other than terms of law) and words used in an unusual sense which it may be necessary to determine, whether such words occur in documents or not;
- (c) to decide all questions which according to law are to be deemed questions of fact;
- (d) to decide whether general indefinite expressions do or do not apply to particular cases, unless such expressions refer to legal procedure or unless their meaning is ascertained by law, in either of which cases it is the duty of the Judge to decide their meaning.

Illustrations

(a) A is tried for the murder of B

It is the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury the distinction between murder and culpable homicide, and to tell them under what views of the facts A ought to be convicted of murder, or of culpable homicide, or to be acquitted.

It is the duty of the jury to decide which view of the facts is true and to return a verdict in accordance with the direction of the Judge, whether that direction is right or wrong, and whether they do or do not agree with it.

(b) The question is whether a person entertained a reasonable belief on a particular point—whether work was done with reasonable skill or due diligence.

Each of these is a question for the jury.

923. View of facts:—The jury must take into consideration all the facts alleged for or against the accused, and decide whether the view taken by the prosecution which leads to the conclusion of his guilt, or the view which is set up on his behalf and which would make him innocent, commends itself to their judgment—Humayun, 21 W.R. 72 (86).

924. Questions of fact:—It is the duty of the jury and not of the Judge to decide all questions of fact. Where in the summing up, the Judge left no question of fact for the jury to decide but decided all himself, and said expressly that in his opinion it was proved that the accused had committed murder, and the only thing he left to the jury was to say which of the exceptions to sec. 300, I. P. C., applied if the jury held that the offence did not amount to murder, it was held that such a summing up was not in accordance with law, and a new trial should be ordered—Shamsher, 9 W.R. 51. But although the jury are the sole judges of facts, still it is the duty of the Judge to help the jury to find facts. He has to advise the jury as to the logical bearing of the evidence admitted upon the matters to be found by them—Afiruddi, 23 C.W.N. 833, 20 Cr.L.J. 661.

The following are instances of questions of fact—(1) The question of intent in a case of kidnapping—Hughes, 14 All 25; (2) the question as to whether there was free consent, in a case under sec. 376, I. P. C.—Gopaul, 1 W.R. 21; (3) the question whether a fact was or was not proved, or what fact was proved—Sadhu Sheikh, 4 C.W.N. 576; (4) the question as to the identity of thumb impressions on two or more documents for the purpose of ascertaining whether the thumb impressions are of one and the same person—Panchu Mandal, 2 Cr.L.J. 311, 1 CLJ 385; or the question whether the signatures on certain documents are the signature of the accused—Lalsing, Ratanlal 452 (453); (5) the question whether a particular witness is to be believed or not—Kali Singh, 7 C.L.J. 246; (6) the question whether possession of the stolen property was recent enough to warrant a conviction for the substantive offence of dacoity—Guzzala Hanuman, 26 Mad. 467; (7) the question as to whether the accused was under 12 years of age and incapable of understanding the nature of his act—Ali Raza, 28 O.C. 69, 26 Cr.L.J. 310, 84 I.C. 454, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 311; (8) the question whether a confession is true or false is a question of fact to be decided by the jury, and the question whether the confession is voluntary (and therefore admissible) or not is for the Judge to determine. It is not open to the Judge to ask the jury to determine whether the confession is voluntary or not, even though it is a question of fact, for the result would be that the jury would have had put before them evidence which was inadmissible, and the difficulty of removing the effect of the inadmissible evidence from the jury's mind is obvious—Khira Mandal, 33 C.W.N. 1112 (1113), 1929 Cr.C. 362, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 726.

Illustration (a):—Although Illustration (a) lays down that in a charge of murder the Judge should explain to the jury the distinction between murder and culpable homicide, still where in a trial for murder, a verdict for culpable homicide not amounting to murder could not be properly come to under any aspect of the case before the Court, the Judge is not called upon to explain to the jury the distinction between murder, and culpable homicide—Nga Mya, 8 L.B.R. 306, 17 Cr.L.J. 49 (F.B.).

300. In cases tried by jury, after the Judge has finished his charge, the jury may retire to consider their verdict.
Retirement to consider.

Except with the leave of the Court, no person other than a juror shall speak to, or hold any communication with, any member of such jury.

925. After a charge is made to the jury, the jurors should not be allowed to disperse but should at once retire to consider the verdict. Where after the charge, they were allowed to go home and come back some hours later, and then they considered their verdict, held that the trial was vitiated—Sariman, 6 P.L.T. 552, 26 Cr.L.J. 861, 86 I.C. 717, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 595, 3 Pat.L.R. 160 (Cr.). This section requires that during the whole of the period between the time when the jury retire to consider their verdict and the time when their verdict is taken by the Judge, they should all be in their retiring room together. Where the nine jurors retired to consider their verdict, but at 4 P.M. five of them came out of the retiring room and sat in Court, and the remaining four stayed in the room till 4-30 P.M. and then came out and sat in Court, when the Judge proceeded to take the verdict of the jury, held that the accused had not the benefit of the joint consideration and consultation of all the jury before the verdict was returned, and the verdict must consequently be set aside—Kaseruddin, 31 Cr.L.J. 1090, 126 I.C. 753, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 446.

This section which is explicit in its terms, should be strictly observed and it is highly undesirable that a jury in any case should have any communication with anybody (even the Judge) who is not a juror upon the subject-matter of the trial. It is also highly undesirable that a police constable should be stationed anywhere or in any position in which he can hear the deliberations of the jurymen, or that anybody should be in a position where it is possible for him to know the form the deliberations of the jury took or what view any particular juror expressed about the matter—Banamali, 44 Cal. 723, 21 C.W.N. 167, 18 Cr.L.J. 311. Where it was proved that after the charge to the jury had been delivered, a person other than a juror spoke to or held communication with a member of the jury without the leave of the Court, it was held that that was sufficient to upset the verdict, and it was not necessary to consider whether the irregularity had in fact prejudiced the accused—Benimadhub, 46 Cal. 207, 22 C.W.N. 740, 17 Cr.L.J. 737. The jury are not entitled at any stage during the progress of the trial (whether before or after the charge has been delivered) to talk to or discuss the case with any person connected with the accused—Bhuban Chandra, 31 C.W.N. 828, 104 I.C. 111, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 628, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 319, 55 Cal. 279, 28 Cr.L.J. 783 (784). But where during an adjournment of the Court before the Judge's charge was finished, one of the jurors was seen conversing with strangers but it did not appear that the conversation was about the case, it was held that this was not a sufficient ground for interfering with the verdict of the jury—Pull Subba, 10 L.W. 379, 20 Cr.L.J. 790, 53 I.C. 694.

After the conclusion of the evidence and after the conclusion of the address of the Public Prosecutor, and before the defence had been heard in full and before the Sessions Judge had summed up the case to the jury, one of the jurors, in a room occupied by the clerk of the pleaders, in answer to some questions put to him, intimated that in his opinion the accused was guilty of the charge against him; and the Sessions Judge, although informed of the fact, proceeded with the trial, and took the verdict of the jury; held that the verdict must be set aside and there should be a fresh trial before a fresh jury—Nazir Ali, 25 C.W.N. 240. After the jury had retired to consider their verdict in a criminal case they saw the Judge in his chamber and asked him for a direction on a point of law. The Judge and the jury then went into the Court-room and the jury in the presence of the pleaders put certain questions to the Judge, and the answers thereto were recorded. Held that the mere fact that a question was put by the jury to the Judge, not in open Court but in chamber did not vitiate the trial, but was at best an irregularity—Bilashchandra, 27 C.W.N. 626 (628).

301. When the jury have considered their verdict, the foreman shall inform the Judge what is their verdict, or what is the verdict of a majority.

Delivery of verdict.

926. Verdict:—The verdict must be either of "guilty" or "not guilty." A verdict in the form "we give the accused person the benefit of doubt" is not known to law, though jurors sometimes express a verdict of not guilty in that way. The proper verdict in such a case would be a verdict of "not guilty," because this verdict covers every degree of mental condition from mere hesitating doubt as to the guilt of the accused to a complete belief in his innocence—Panchanan Sarkar, 37 C.W.N. 341 (343), 1933 Cr.C. 582, 34 Cr.L.J. 608, 143 I.C. 600, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 404, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 448.

Where the jury brought in a verdict that they agreed with whatever opinion the Judge had formed and, being sent back, came back within 9 minutes and delivered their verdict, held that it was clear from the time occupied by the jury in their second deliberation that they did not properly consider the case and did not bring in a genuine verdict and that the case should be re-tried—Abdul Barik, 30 Cr.L.J. 54, 113 I.C. 70, 48 C.L.J. 477, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 827, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 81.

If the accused is charged with a graver offence, the jury may return a verdict of a lesser offence, even though the accused was not charged with the lesser offence—Pattikadan, 26 Mad 243. See sec. 238. Thus, on a charge of murder, it is open to the jury to bring in a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Devji Govinji, 20 Bom. 215. In a charge of dacoity, the jury can acquit the accused of dacoity and return a verdict of guilty as regards the charge of theft involved in that of dacoity—Chandra, 10 Bom.L.R. 632 (633), 8 Cr.L.J. 143. The jury can return a verdict for abetment or attempt, though the prisoner was charged with the substantive offence only—S. P. Ghosh, 8 Bur.L.T. 247, 16 Cr.L.J. 676; Subrati, 13 O.C. 295, 11 Cr.L.J. 630. Where the charge against the accused was under section 149 with section 325. I. P. C., (i.e., being members of an unlawful assembly, and causing grievous hurt by implication) a verdict of guilty of the offence under sec. 325 alone, although it did not form the subject of a separate charge, was legally sustainable—Mahaddi, 5 Cal. 871. When a person is charged with several offences arising out of a single act or series of acts, the word 'verdict' means the entire verdict on all the charges and is not confined to a verdict on a particular charge—Krishna Dhan, 22 Cal. 377. Where there are several accused, the jury have to give their verdict on the acts against each man severally, and even when several prisoners are jointly tried, the jury can convict one and acquit the others—Famiruddi Biswas, 16 C.W.N. 909, 13 Cr.L.J. 715.

By 'verdict' should be understood the collective opinion of the jury as a body, arrived at after mutual consultation and ascertained and announced by the foreman. In case of disagreement among the jury, the individual opinions of the members are intended to be disclosed—Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585. If a Judge records the individual opinions of the jurors by name, the procedure is opposed to the f principle of the scheme of trial by jury—Jagannath, 12 O.L.J. 643, 2 O.W.N. 534, 26 Cr.L.J. 1346, 89 I.C. 386, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 746. It is a dangerous thing for a Court to rely upon anything except the verdict of the jury, or to listen to the deliberation of the jury, or to the statements of individual jurymen made to this or that person after they had performed their duty and delivered their verdict—Banamali, 44 Cal. 723, 21 C.W.N. 167. Where it was alleged that the verdict of the jury was arrived at by casting lots, whereupon the Judge held an inquiry and examined the individual jurors, held that the statements of the jurors as to what happened in the jury-room and as to the mode in which the verdict was arrived at were inadmissible—Harkumar, 40 Cal. 693, 17 C.W.N. 787, 14 Cr.L.J. 392.

The statute law in this country has not laid down any particular form in which the jury are to deliver their verdict. Consequently, there is no legal bar in the way of the jury to return their verdict in any way they think fit provided it is complete and exhaustive as to facts in issue which go to make up the charges—Kasimuddin, 36 Cr.L.J. 480 (481), 154 I.C. 110, 60 C.L.J. 45, A.I.R. 1935 Cal 31. Where after the delivery of the verdict the jury want to say something more, it is undesirable to stop the jury at such stage of the proceedings, for it may happen that before the verdict is recorded the foreman may make some observations in respect of that verdict which may show the Judge that the jury have not properly understood the case. It would then be the duty of the Judge not to record the verdict, but to re-charge the jury so as to lay the case properly before them—Narayan, 30 Cal 485. Where the jury were apparently not able to follow the summing up of the Judge as regards the law bearing on the charges, it is the duty of the Judge, when the foreman told him of it, to explain it to them again—Palavesa Tevan, 1911 M.W.N. 190, 12 Cr.L.J. 140.

302. If the jury are not unanimous, the Judge may require them to retire for further consideration. Procedure where jury differ. After such a period as the Judge considers reasonable, the jury may deliver their verdict, although they are not unanimous.

927. Application of section:—Under this section the Sessions Judge can ask the jury, if they are not unanimous, to retire for further consideration, before the delivery of verdict, but cannot do so after its actual delivery—Kya Nyun, 7 L.B.R. 140, 15 Cr.L.J. 678; Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585. The Judge may act under this section when he has merely ascertained from the jury in what proportion they are divided in opinion; but when the nature of the actual finding has been disclosed, the Court is debarred from sending the jury back for re-consideration—Kya Nyun, supra.

928. "If the jury are not unanimous":—A jury may be required to retire for further consideration, only when their verdict is not unanimous. A unanimous verdict of the jury, unless it is contrary to law, must be received by the Judge—Mahaddi, 5 Cal 871; Hla Gyi, 3 L.B.R. 75. If the Sessions Judge disagrees with the unanimous verdict of the jury, the only course open to him is to act under sec. 307—Kondiba, 28 Bom. 412.

When the jury are not unanimous, it is open to the Judge to require them to retire for further consideration, giving at the same time further directions on matters of law—Bhadmia, 6 Bom L.R. 258. But the Judge is not bound to summon a fresh jury—Gopaul, 1 W.R. 41.

303. (1) Unless otherwise ordered by the Court, the jury shall return a verdict on all the charges on which the accused is tried, and the Judge may ask them such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is.

Verdict to be given on each charge.
Judge may question jury.

Questions and answers to be recorded.

(2) Such questions and the answers to them shall be recorded.

929. Verdict on all the charges:—The Judge ought to call upon the jury to return a verdict on each one of the heads of the charges. If the trial is for murder of two persons and the jury return a verdict of guilty, the Sessions Judge should ascertain, whether the verdict relates to the killing of one or other or both—Berkia, Ratanlal 746; Krishna Dhan, 22 Cal. 377.

In a case where an accused person is charged with both kidnapping and abduction, it is essential to take a separate verdict on each charge. If this is not done, it may become a mere matter of speculation what the decision of the jury really was—Nanda Ghosh v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 649 (651), 182 I.C. 322, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 321. But where in taking the verdict of the jury the Judge insisted that they should come to a finding whether each of the accused was guilty, under sec. 366, I. P. C., of the offences both of abduction and of kidnapping with the intent specified in the section, it is perfectly clear that there cannot be any such verdict under sec. 366, I. P. C.. It is a complete misunderstanding of the section to ask for a verdict under both heads of kidnapping and of abduction—Krishna Chandra v. Emp., 45 C.W.N. 27.

Where there are more than one accused as well as several charges, it would be a convenient course if the Judge were to take a verdict of the jury upon each charge separately. Thus, in the case the accused were charged under secs. 147, 148, 304, 325 and 326, I. P. C., the Sessions Judge asked the jury the comprehensive question: "I shall want you to give me a verdict in respect of the offences under secs. 147, 148, 304, 325 and 326, I. P. C., for each of the accused" and the jury returned an incomplete verdict, i.e., they gave a verdict only as regards secs. 147 and 148 and expressed no opinion as regards the other charges; and the Sessions Judge had to question the jury again on the other charges. The High Court held the procedure to be faulty, and directed that in such a case the Judge should at first put the question to the jury: "What is your verdict with regard to each of the accused as regards the charge under sec. 147, I. P. C.?" He would then get a clear answer upon this charge. Then he would ask, "What is your verdict with regard to each of the accused as regards the charge under sec. 148?" He would then get a definite answer to that question. Then he would proceed in the same way and ask: "What is your verdict with regard to each of the accused as regards the charge under sec. 304?" and so on. If this procedure is adopted, there would be no difficulty in getting a complete verdict from the jury—Eran Khan, 50 Cal. 658 (663), 24 Cr.L.J. 838.

If a Judge charges the jury and takes a verdict as regards some only of the accused, and afterwards hears arguments and takes verdict as regards the remaining accused, he acts contrary to the provisions of this Code—Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585.

930. Questioning the jury:—This section provides a suitable procedure where the verdict of the jury is so vague and uncertain that in order to ascertain whether the jury intended to bring in a verdict of guilty or not guilty, it is necessary to ask the supplementary questions—Darajatulla, 34 C.W.N. 283 (284), 31 Cr.L.J. 1150, 127 I.C. 79, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 443. The Judge is entitled to question the jury as to their verdict only where it is ambiguous or incomplete so that it is necessary to ascertain what the verdict really is—Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad. 585; Abdul Hamid, 32 Cal. 759; Dada, 15 Bom. 452; Wafadar, 21 Cal. 955; Devji, 20 Bom. 215. If the verdict of the jury is incomplete or is not free from ambiguity, the Judge is wrong in accepting such verdict without questioning the jury as to what their verdict really is. Thus, where the jury returned a verdict of 'guilty but not voluntarily' under a charge of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, and the Judge accepted the verdict to be one of guilty, and convicted the accused, it was held that the verdict was really one of not guilty, and the Judge was wrong, without further questioning the jury, in treating it as a verdict of 'guilty'—Khudiram, 12 C.W.N. 530, 7 Cr.L.J. 362; see also Chidghan, 7 C.W.N. 135; Satdeo, 37 Cr.L.J. 182, A.I.R. 1936

Oudh 164, 159 I.C. 919, 1936 O.W.N. 28, 1936 O.L.R. 18. So also, where in a case there were several accused, and several charges under secs. 147, 148, 304, 325 and 226, I. P. C., and the jury returned a verdict of guilty under sec. 147 against some of the accused and under sec. 148 against the rest, but gave no verdict on the other charges, held that the verdict of the jury was incomplete and it was necessary for the Sessions Judge to put further questions to the jury to ascertain what their verdict was as regards the charges under secs. 304, 325 and 326, I. P. C.—Eran Khan, 50 Cal. 658, 24 Cr.L.J. 838; Ram Prasad, 26 Cr.L.J. 1090, 88 I.C. 178, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 53. If the verdict of the jury is confused and unintelligible, it is the duty of the Judge to obtain from them a proper and correct verdict before accepting the verdict given—Wilson, 30 C.W.N. 693, 27 Cr.L.J. 926, 96 I.C. 270, 43 C.L.J. 537, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 895. Thus, at the conclusion of a trial, the jury returned a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The Judge questioned them as to which part of sec. 304, I. P. C., their verdict came under. Their answers revealed the fact that they did not at all understand the meaning of the section, whereupon the Judge again explained the law. The jury again retired, considered their verdict and brought in a unanimous verdict of murder. Held that the first verdict being incomplete and the result of a misunderstanding of the meaning of murder and culpable homicide, the Judge was right in explaining the law to them; the second verdict was the legal verdict and one acceptable by the Judge—Nga Tin Gyi, 4 Rang. 488, 28 Cr.L.J. 213, 99 I.C. 1013, 5 Bur.L.J. 209, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 68, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 394.

If upon a verdict under sec. 304, I. P. C., being brought in, a Judge thinks that the verdict is not correct but that it should be under sec. 302, I. P. C., and questions the jury to find out whether the question of intention has been duly considered, such questioning would not be warranted either by sec. 303, Cr. P. C., or by Rule 74 (b), Rules and Circular Orders of the High Court, Vol. I (Criminal), page 28. If he disagrees with the verdict under sec. 304, I. P. C., being of opinion that it should be under sec. 302, I. P. C., his proper course would be to make a reference to the High Court under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., and for that purpose it would be open to him to question the jury in order to find out their reasons for the verdict that they brought in. If while trying to get a special verdict as regards the particular part of sec. 304, I. P. C., under which the jury desired to find the prisoner guilty, a Judge comes to be of opinion that the jury have not properly understood the law as to the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, he would be justified in explaining that law to them again and indeed it would be his duty to do so. But such summing up will have to be confined to that offence only and the questions to be put to the jury should be carefully framed to elicit from them their special verdict only. General questions, the effect of which may be to travel outside sec. 304, I. P. C., should be avoided—Sadek Mondal, 38 C.W.N. 251 (257), 35 Cr.L.J. 496, 147 I.C. 860, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 173, 61 Cal. 256, distinguishing Nga Tin Gyi, supra, on the ground that in that case it was held that the questions that were put were such as could be properly asked. After the jury have considered the verdict and the foreman has informed the Judge what is their verdict or what is the verdict of a majority, the Judge has no jurisdiction to charge the jury afresh. The law contemplates only one charge by the Court and that after the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply are concluded (vide sec. 297, Cr. P. C.), and there is no provision in law entitling the Judge either to re-charge the jury or to argue out the matter with the jurors after the verdict has been delivered. If the party after retiring to consider their verdict inform the Judge that they did not understand the law as explained to them by the Judge, it is no doubt open to the Judge to explain the law again to the jury, but there is no provision in law which authorizes a Judge, in the event of his disagreeing with the verdict of the jury, to charge the jury afresh. Where the verdict of the jury is vague and uncertain, sec. 303, Cr. P. C., authorizes the Judge to put necessary question with a view to ascertain whether they intended to bring in a verdict of guilty or not guilty but, beyond putting questions with a view to ascertain what the verdict of the jury is, the Judge has no jurisdiction to enter into a discussion of the facts of the case with the jury. If the verdict is general and complete and free from ambiguity, the Judge is not competent to put questions to the jury, nor can he ask the jury to reconsider their verdict. If the Judge disagrees with the verdict he can proceed under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., but he cannot again proceed to charge the jury and ask them to re-consider their verdict—Dari, 36 Cr.L.J. 1377 (1379), A.I.R. 1935 All. 1020, 1935 A.W.R. 1137, 158 I.C. 438, 1935 Cr.C. 1254, 1935 A.L.J. 1142.

In a case of rioting, if the verdict of the jury leaves it uncertain what the common object of the assembly is, the Judge ought to ask the jury questions under this section to ascertain the common object. If he does not do so, the verdict is bad in law—Wafadar, 21 Cal. 955 (973). Where in a case under sec. 408, I. P. C., the jury returned a verdict of guilty but were not definite as to the amount embezzled, but gave some approximate amount which was a fraction of the amount charged, and where the Judge was inclined to think that a much larger amount than that mentioned by the jury had been misappropriated, held that in a case like this, the Judge was entitled to ask the jury such questions as were necessary to ascertain what their verdict was—Khirode, 29 C.W.N. 54, 40 C.L.J. 555, 26 Cr.L.J. 532. Where the verdict is general and complete and free from ambiguity, the Judge is not competent to put questions to the jury, but must accept it without question—Dhunum, 9 Cal. 53; Asfar Sheikh, 15 C.W.N. 198, 11 Cr.L.J. 557; Dada, 15 Bom. 452; Kondiba, 28 Bom. 412; Chirkua, 2 A.L.J. 475; Ram Naicker, 22 M.L.J. 355; Bilas Chandra, 27 C.W.N. 626 (628). Where the verdict was clear and precise, but for some reason or other the Judge took upon himself to examine the jurors to ascertain whether their verdict was based upon the evidence of one or other of two important witnesses called for the Crown, held that the Judge was not permitted by law to ask such questions—Derajatulla, 34 C.W.N. 283 (284).

When the jury have delivered a verdict, the Judge cannot ask them to reconsider their verdict. The Judge is only entitled to question the jury to ascertain what their verdict really is—Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad 585; Lyme, 4 Lah. 382; Kya Nyun, 7 L.B.R. 140, 15 Cr.L.J. 678. If he disagrees with their verdict, he should proceed under sec. 307, but he cannot ask them to reconsider their verdict—Kya Nyun, supra. But the Judge is not obliged to accept an absurd verdict either as a verdict of guilty or as a verdict of not guilty. In such a case he is quite entitled to tell the jury to consider the matter over again. He is not bound to accept and interpret for himself a verdict of an unintelligible character, but he can, if he likes, put questions to the jury, or re-charge the jury on certain specific points and ask them to go and get their heads clear on the subject and give a proper verdict. But it is not a proper procedure for the Judge to cross-examine the jury—Hamid Ali, 57 Cal. 61, 1930 Cr.C. 401, 125 I.C. 97, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 320, 31 Cr.L.J. 761, Ind. Rul. 1930 Cal. 481; Rafat Sheikh, 34 Cr.L.J. 1084, 145 I.C. 861, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 640, 60 Cal. 729, 1933 Cr.C. 1053. Where a verdict is not clear and definite, it is not wrong in sending the case back to the jurors for a clear verdict according to law. The recommendation made by the jurors in their verdict is not a part of the verdict and should not be treated as such—Vidya Sagar, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 34, 10 O.W.N. 1270, 1934 Cr.C. 88, 147 I.C. 689, 1934 O.L.R. 149.

Asking reasons for verdict—This section enables the Judge to ask only such questions as are necessary to ascertain what the verdict is. The Judge can put questions to the jury only if the verdict is ambiguous and there is a doubt in the mind of the Judge as to what the jury mean by the verdict they have given. This section does not mean that the Judge can question the Jury about the reasons why they have given a particular verdict—Karim Dai, 35 C.W.N. 407 (408), 1931 Cr.C. 836, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 636, 134 I.C. 1133; Kondiba, 28 Bom. 412; Bhadma, 6 Bom.L.R. 258; Derajatulla, 34 C.W.N. 283 (284), 31 Cr.L.J. 1150, 127 I.C. 79, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 443; Subia Thevan, 43 Mad 744; Ali Hyder, 4 P.L.T. 425, 26 Cr.L.J. 856, 86 I.C. 712, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 474; Ram Jag, 7 Pat. 55, 29 Cr.L.J. 465 (468), 109 I.C. 114, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 203, 9 P.L.T. 567.

But a reference under sec. 307 does not become invalid by reason of the Sessions Judge having asked the jury questions as to the reason of their verdict—Subia Thevan, in his opinion the accused is innocent, this opinion would not properly be excluded. When a Judge is entitled under the law to make a decision, it is competent to him to give reasons—Premchand, 36 Cr.L.J. 1359 (1362), 158 I.C. 365, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 189, 1935 Cr.C. 952.

For the purposes of this section, the Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court sitting in Session is a High Court (see sec. 266) and not a Court of Session; consequently, he has no power to disagree with the unanimous verdict of the jury and to refer the case to the High Court under sec. 307—Mithoo, 25 Cr.L.J. 428, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 34, 77 I.C. 604.

306. (1) When in a case tried before the Court of Session

Verdict in Court of the Judge does not think it necessary to Session when to prevail. express disagreement with the verdict of the jurors or of a majority of the jurors, he shall give judgment accordingly.

(2) If the accused is acquitted, the Judge shall record judgment of acquittal. If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of section 562, pass sentence on him according to law.

The italicised words have been added by sec. 80 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The amendment is merely verbal, and is the same as that made in secs 245 (2) and 258 (2).

932. When the verdict of the jury has been delivered, the Sessions Judge is bound to say and record whether he agrees with the verdict or not—Chand Bagdee, 7 W.R. 6; Bahar Ali, 15 W.R. 46. It is not competent to a Sessions Judge, after the jury has returned their verdict and gone away, and in the absence of the accused, to examine some witnesses and then to act on the evidence in determining whether or not he should differ from the jury—Nangappa, 7 Bom.L.R. 979, 3 Cr.L.J. 42. If he agrees with and accepts the verdict of the jury (or of the majority) he is bound to deliver judgment according to the verdict; once he agrees with the verdict, he cannot afterwards reconsider it or disagree with it and refer the matter to the High Court—Mojahur, 4 C.W.N. 683. It may not infrequently happen that a Judge trying a case with the jury considers that the appreciation of evidence by the jury is incorrect, and that their verdict is wrong, but at the same time it is not so perverse a verdict as to justify a reference to the High Court—Mhasku, 37 Cr.L.J. 26 (27), 158 I.C. 1090, A.I.R. 1935 Bom 165, 37 Bom.L.R. 109, 1931 Cr.C. 325. Where the Sessions Judge wrote in his judgment: "There is room for doubt as to whether the accused is guilty; however, I see no reason to differ from the unanimous verdict of the jury on what are questions of fact. Not agreeing with but accepting the verdict of the jury I convict the accused." Held, that this method of expression was not desirable. A Sessions Judge is under no obligation whatsoever to have or express his individual opinion upon really disputable questions of fact which are for the jury. If a Judge agrees or disagrees, it is a matter prima facie for himself, but if he disagrees with the verdict and is of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, he is bound to do so (sec. 307). If he is not clearly of opinion that the conviction is wrong so as to make it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, then it may be said that "the Judge does not think it necessary to express disagreement" (sec. 306), and his opinion being on that view irrelevant, he will be well advised to keep it to himself. The conviction, however, was not illegal—Ebrahim Molla, 56 Cal. 473, 33 C.W.N. 371 (373), 70 Cr.L.J. 1020, 1929 Cr.C. 28. The Judge may disagree, and yet not think it necessary to express disagreement, and in such a case sec. 306, Cr. P. C., requires that he shall accept the verdict. The word "disagrees" in sec. 307, Cr. P. C., must, therefore, mean that the Judge thinks it necessary to express disagreement; otherwise, under sec. 306,

Cr. P. C., he shall be bound to give judgment according to the verdict. As to whether he does or does not think it necessary to express disagreement, must obviously be a matter for the Judge himself. It may be that a Judge may think that the jury's appreciation of evidence is wrong and still hold that it is not perverse or unreasonable in that view, though disagreeing in fact, he may not think it necessary to express disagreement. In so refraining from expressing disagreement, he may well be influenced by the consideration that even if he were to make a reference, the High Court was not likely to interfere unless the verdict was shown to be not merely erroneous, but perverse or unreasonable. It would be wrong to say that in so doing the Judge would be acting illegally, as he would be clearly within the terms of sec 306, Cr. P. C.—Afsar Shaikh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 1075 (1076), 171 I.C. 320, 10 R.C. 263, 41 CWN 1020, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 540, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 694.

Where the verdict of the jury is not only inconsistent in itself in view of the evidence but is also clearly against the trend of the Judge's charge, the Judge owes a duty not only to the Appellate Court but also to his own judicial conscience to state some reason or other for accepting the verdict. His failure to give reasons makes it impossible for the appellate Court to regard such acceptance as a judicial act—Nachappa Goundan v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 737.

Sentence :—If the Judge accepts the verdict of the jury and convicts the accused, he must pass an adequate sentence for the offence; the fact that he personally entertains some doubt as to the propriety of the verdict should not be a ground for mitigating the sentence. Having accepted the verdict, he is bound to award punishment as if he has agreed with the verdict—Ramdas, 8 Pat. 314, 30 Cr.L.J. 721 (724), 117 I.C. 173, 10 P.L.T. 409, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 313, Ind. 307. (1) If in any such case the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jurors, or of a majority of the jurors, on all or any of the charges on which any accused person has been tried, and is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case in respect of such accused person to the High Court, he shall submit the case accordingly, recording the grounds of his opinion, and, when the verdict is one of acquittal, stating the offence which he considers to have been committed, and in such case, if the accused is further charged under the provisions of section 310, shall proceed to try him on such charge as if such verdict had been one of conviction.

(2) Whenever the Judge submits a case under this section, he shall not record judgment of acquittal or of conviction on any of the charges on which such accused has been tried, but he may either remand such accused to custody or admit him to bail.

(3) In dealing with the case so submitted the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal, and subject thereto it shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict such accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it; and, if it convicts him, may in his opinion the accused is innocent, this opinion would not properly be excluded. When a Judge is entitled under the law to make a decision, it is competent to him to give reasons—Premchand, 36 Cr.L.J. 1359 (1362), 158 I.C. 365, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 189, 1935 Cr.C. 952.

For the purposes of this section, the Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court sitting in Session is a High Court (see sec. 266) and not a Court of Session; consequently, he has no power to disagree with the unanimous verdict of the jury and to refer the case to the High Court under sec. 307—Mithoo, 25 Cr.L.J. 428, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 34, 77 I.C. 604.

306. (1) When in a case tried before the Court of Session the Judge does not think it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict of the jurors or of a majority of the jurors, he shall give judgment accordingly.

(2) If the accused is acquitted, the Judge shall record judgment of acquittal. If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of section 562, pass sentence on him according to law.

The italicised words have been added by sec. 80 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The amendment is merely verbal, and is the same as that made in secs. 245 (2) and 258 (2).

932. When the verdict of the jury has been delivered, the Sessions Judge is bound to say and record whether he agrees with the verdict or not—Chand Bagdee, 7 W.R. 6; Bahar Ali, 15 W.R. 46. It is not competent to a Sessions Judge, after the jury has returned their verdict and gone away, and in the absence of the accused, to examine some witnesses and then to act on the evidence in determining whether or not he should differ from the jury—Nangappa, 7 Bom.L.R. 979, 3 Cr.L.J. 42. If he agrees with and accepts the verdict of the jury (or of the majority) he is bound to deliver judgment according to the verdict; once he agrees with the verdict, he cannot afterwards reconsider it or disagree with it and refer the matter to the High Court—Mojahur, 4 C.W.N. 683. It may not infrequently happen that a Judge trying a case with the jury considers that the appreciation of evidence by the jury is incorrect, and that their verdict is wrong, but at the same time it is not so perverse a verdict as to justify a reference to the High Court—Mhasku, 37 Cr.L.J. 26 (27), 158 I.C. 1090, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 165, 37 Bom.L.R. 109, 1934 Cr.C. 325. Where the Sessions Judge wrote in his judgment: "There is room for doubt as to whether the accused is guilty; however, I see no reason to differ from the unanimous verdict of the jury on what are questions of fact. Not agreeing with but accepting the verdict of the jury I convict the accused." Held, that this method of expression was not desirable. A Sessions Judge is under no obligation whatsoever to have or express his individual opinion upon really disputable questions of fact which are for the jury. If a Judge agrees or disagrees, it is a matter prima facie for himself, but if he disagrees with the verdict and is of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, he is bound to do so (sec. 307). If he is not clearly of opinion that the conviction is wrong so as to make it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, then it may be said that "the Judge does not think it necessary to express disagreement" (sec. 306), and his opinion being on that view irrelevant, he will be well advised to keep it to himself. The conviction, however, was not illegal—Ebrahim Molla, 56 Cal. 473, 33 C.W.N. 371 (373), 30 Cr.L.J. 1000, 1929 Cr.C. 28. The Judge may disagree, and yet not think it necessary to express disagreement, and in such a case sec. 306, Cr. P. C., requires that he shall accept the verdict. The word "disagrees" in sec. 307, Cr. P. C., must, therefore, mean that the Judge thinks it necessary to express disagreement; otherwise, under sec. 306,

Cr. P. C., he shall be bound to give judgment according to the verdict. As to whether he does or does not think it necessary to express disagreement, must obviously be a matter for the Judge himself. It may be that a Judge may think that the jury's appreciation of evidence is wrong and still hold that it is not perverse or unreasonable. In that view, though disagreeing in fact, he may not think it necessary to express disagreement. In so refraining from expressing disagreement, he may well be influenced by the consideration that even if he were to make a reference, the High Court was not likely to interfere unless the verdict was shown to be not merely erroneous, but perverse or unreasonable. It would be wrong to say that in so doing the Judge would be acting illegally, as he would be clearly within the terms of sec. 306, Cr. P. C.—Afsar Shaikh v. Emp., 38 Cr L J. 1075 (1076), 171 I.C. 320, 10 R.C. 263, 41 C.W.N. 1020, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 540, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal 694.

Where the verdict of the jury is not only inconsistent in itself in view of the evidence but is also clearly against the trend of the Judge's charge, the Judge owes a duty not only to the Appellate Court but also to his own judicial conscience to state some reason or other for accepting the verdict. His failure to give reasons makes it impossible for the appellate Court to regard such acceptance as a judicial act—Nachappa Goundan v. Emp., 1937 M W N. 737 verdict of the jurors, or of a majority of the jurors, on all or any of the charges on which any accused person has been tried, and is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case in respect of such accused person to the High Court, he shall submit the case accordingly, recording the grounds of his opinion, and, when the verdict is one of acquittal, stating the offence which he considers to have been committed, and in such case, if the accused is further charged under the provisions of section 310, shall proceed to try him on such charge as if such verdict had been one of conviction.

(2) Whenever the Judge submits a case under this section, he shall not record judgment of acquittal or of conviction on any of the charges on which such accused has been tried, but he may either remand such accused to custody or admit him to bail.

(3) In dealing with the case so submitted the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal, and subject thereto it shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict such accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it; and, if it convicts him, may pass such sentence as might have been passed by the Court of Session.

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 81 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The main changes are the following:—First, in sub-section (1) the words "any accused person" and "in respect of such accused person" have been added. "This amendment prescribes that when a Judge accepts the verdict of the jury in respect of some of the accused, but not of others, he need only refer the case of the latter to the High Court"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

Secondly, the italicised words at the end of sub-section (1) have been added "to provide for the case of a person who is also charged with a previous conviction under sec. 310. It seems obvious that if the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jury on the principal charge, and submits the case to the High Court, it is desirable that the record should be complete. We propose, therefore, to insert at the end of sec. 307 (1) a provision for the trial of the further charge under sec. 307"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916 Under the old law, it was held that if a case was referred to the High Court under sec. 307, there was no conviction or acquittal in the Court of Session. It was the High Court which could convict or acquit the accused, and it was only after such conviction by the High Court that the accused could be asked under sec. 310 to plead to a previous conviction—Kandaswamy, 30 Mad. 134 Under the present amendment, provision is made for the trial of the charge of previous conviction in the Sessions Court itself.

932A. Object of the section:—The section was passed doubtless to provide a safeguard in jury trials, because the Legislature was not satisfied that a jury could always be relied upon to do their duty—Bhondar, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 601 (603), 1931 Cr.C. 753, 35 C.W.N. 1212, 54 C.L.J. 499, 134 I.C. 1053, 33 Cr.L.J. 11. This section places a powerful weapon in the hands of the Judge in Mufassil, and it is not available to a Judge of the High Court sitting in Sessions to prevent miscarriage of justice on account of a wrong verdict on the part of the jury—Ilu, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 817 (819), 36 Cr.L.J. 358, 1931 Cr.C. 1364, 153 I.C. 451; Enayet Karim, 62 Cal. 337 (340).

The power of making references on the part of Judges engaged in criminal work in the districts is one that should be used very sparingly. It is an artificial power which is the creature of statute only. It is most often utilised by Judges, zealous indeed to perform their duties but usually somewhat inexperienced in the principles of criminal procedure. As long as it is the policy of Government of this country to rely on the verdicts of juries in the district, a policy which is supported by both the profession and the public and a policy which is cherished by the accused persons who are brought up for trial, so long must reliance be placed upon the decisions of juries and they must not be disturbed unless it can be shown beyond a peradventure that a perverse verdict has been arrived at, which can be demonstrated clearly from a perusal of the proceedings of the Court—Abdul Hossain Siddar, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 451, 1936 Cr.C. 685, 38 Cr.L.J. 174, 166 I.C. 286, 9 R.C. 490, 66 C.L.J. 560.

933. Scope of section:—Assessor-case tried with jury:—Where the accused was charged with offences some of which were triable by jury and others with the aid of assessors, and the Sessions Judge tried the accused with jury for the offences triable by jury, and with the same jurors as assessors for the offences triable with assessors, and differing from them in their verdict and opinion referred both matters to the High Court, it was held that as to the matter triable with assessors, the Judge should not have included it in the reference but should have disposed of it according to law, and should have referred only the jury-case to the High Court—Kalidas, 8 Bom.L.R. 599, 4 Cr.L.J. 192; Vankatsingh, 9 Bom.L.R. 1057, 7 Cr.L.J. 235; Devu, Ratanlal 600; Kambala Narayan, 35 M.L.J. 452. The proper procedure for the Sessions Judge is at first to dispose of the charges which are triable with the aid of assessors, under sec. 309, and then to consider whether a reference should be made under sec. 307 in respect of the other charges—Packaimuthu, 53 Mad. 715, 35 M.L.W. 671, 62 M.L.J. 571, 33 Cr.L.J.

This section is part of a group of sections dealing with trials by jury and when sub-sec. (2) refers to acquittal or conviction on any of the charges on which such accused has been tried, it means any of the charges on which the accused has been tried by jury. It does not include those charges which were not triable by the jury at all, but were triable by the Judge with the aid of the assessors—Ganga Ram, supra. However cases tried by Assistant Sessions Judge in which the part tried with the aid of assessors is appealable to the Courts of Session should, if possible, be referred to the High Court in their entirety if an impossible position is to be avoided in dealing with references under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., for the High Court, if it is to exercise its functions properly in a reference, cannot approach the transaction as a whole with its hands tied as to one or more aspects—Hana Dhobi, 39 Cr.L.J. 156 (159), 172 I.C. 780, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 662, 18 P.L.T. 857, 10 R.P. 316, 4 B.R. 165, 1937 P.W.N. 868. See Note 875 under sec. 269. But if the Judge tries the assessor-case with the aid of the jurors as jurors and not as assessors, and disagrees with their verdict (not opinion), he can refer the case to the High Court—Jeyiam, 23 Bom 696; Surya, 25 Cal 555; Bhagwat, 36 Cr.L.J. 1502, 158 I.C. 1131, A.I.R. 1935 Pat 433, 16 P.L.T. 603, 1935 Cr.C. 1104. If in the case of a joint trial of a jury-case and an assessor-case, it appears that only one offence was committed, i.e., an offence triable with assessors, and the Judge tried the case with the jury and disagrees with their verdict, he cannot refer the case under sec. 307 but should pass judgment under sec. 309, because he must consider the case as one triable with assessors, and treat the jurors as assessors—Anga Valayan, 22 Mad 15.

When several persons are tried together in one trial, the Judge cannot refer to the High Court under this section the case of anybody in regard to whom he is in agreement with the verdict of the jury—Bojji Reddi, supra.

High Court—Since the 'High Court' in this section does not include a Judicial Commissioner's Court (see sec. 266), a Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind sitting in Sessions has no power to refer a case under this section to the J. C. Court in its High Court jurisdiction—Mithoo, 25 Cr.L.J. 428, A.I.R. 1025 Sind 34, 77 I.C. 604; Jhand, 22 S.L.R. 349, 29 Cr.L.J. 945, 111 I.C. 865, A.I.R. 1928 Sind 149 (F.B.).

934. Disagreement:—The Judge can refer the case to the High Court if he disagrees with the verdict of the jury. If he once accepts the verdict he cannot subsequently reconsider it, and disagreeing with the verdict refer the case to the High Court—Mojahur, 4 C.W.N. 683. The disagreement may be on question of law as well as of fact. That is, the Sessions Judge may submit to the High Court a case in which he disagrees with the jury on their finding of facts as well as a case in which he considers that the jury have not followed his directions as to the law—Konjo, 20 W.R. 1.

The first condition required by sec. 307, Cr. P. C., for reference is that the Judge should disagree with the verdict, and the second is that he must be clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to refer the case—Afsar Shaikh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 1075 (1076), 171 I.C. 320, 10 R.C. 263, 41 C.W.N. 1020, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 540, 11 L.R. (1937) 2 Cal 694.

The mere fact that the Judge entertains some doubts about the correctness of the verdict of the jury does not make it obligatory on him to refer the case under sec. 307; see Saroda Charan, 41 C.L.J. 320, 87 I.C. 606, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 795, 26 Cr.L.J. 1006; Bajji Mian, 6 Pat 817, 29 Cr.L.J. 81 (82), 106 I.C. 673, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 120, 9 A.I.C.R. 221, 9 P.L.T. 191. So also, the fact that the Judge takes a more lenient view of the facts the jury took and is disposed to give the accused the benefit of doubt is not a ground on which a reference can be properly based—Jogi Kar, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 15, 129 I.C. 798, 32 Cr.L.J. 452, 57 Cal. 1183, 1931 Cr.C. 47 (49). It is not in every case of doubt nor in every case in which the Judge entertains a view different from that of the jury, that a reference can be made under this section, but the verdict of the jury must be manifestly wrong before such references can be made—Swarnmoyee, 41 Cal. 621, 11 Cr.L.J. 660, 21 I.C. 900, A.I.R. 1914 Cal. 65; Ramdas, 8 Pat. 344, 30 Cr.L.J. 721 (722); 117 I.C. 173, 10 P.L.T. 409, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 313, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 381. And in this regard there is no difference between a case where the jury acquits the accused and a case where the jury convicts, and the Judge disagrees with the verdict—Ramdas, supra. Where the jury misunderstands the law as explained by the Judge and delivers a wrong verdict, the Judge should refer the case to the High Court under this section, and not ask the jury to reconsider their verdict—Kondiba, 28 Bom. 412; Sundaram Ayyar, 61 M.L.J. 915, 32 Cr.L.J. 1276 (1278), 134 I.C. 986, 34 M.L.W. 380, 1931 M.W.N. 857, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 775, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 874, 1931 Cr.C. 1031.

A reference should not be made where the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is merely on a technical point of law. Thus, where the Judge considered the offence to be one under sec. 366, I. P. C., but left to the jury to decide whether the offence fell under sec. 363, or sec. 366, I. P. C., and the jury found that the offence was under sec. 363, I. P. C., held that there was only a technical difference between the two sections, and the Judge should, in view of his own summing up, have accepted the verdict of the jury, and should not have made a reference to the High Court—Ali Raza, 84 I.C. 454, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 311, 28 O.C. 69, 26 Cr.L.J. 310. Where the jury returned a verdict of guilty under sec. 326, I. P. C., but the Judge thought that the accused committed an offence under sec. 304, Part I, I. P. C., the question whether the accused ought to be convicted under sec. 326 or sec. 304, I. P. C., is in the nature of an academic one, and hardly worth a reference under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., inasmuch as the Court has power under sec. 326, I. P. C., to impose a sentence of transportation for life or rigorous imprisonment for ten years—Mahomed Adam Chohan, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 60 (61), 38 Bom.L.R. 1186, 167 I.C. 43, 38 Cr.L.J. 327, 9 R.B. 274. A Sessions Judge wrote in his judgment: "There is room for no doubt as to whether the accused is really guilty. Not agreeing with but accepting the unanimous verdict of the jury, I convict the accused." Held that this method of expression was improper. If the Judge really disagrees with the verdict, i.e., has a settled and considered opinion that the crime has not been proved against the accused, it seems to be clear that it is necessary for the ends of justice to refer the case, and he ought to refer the case. If he does not think this necessary, his "disagreement" cannot be a reality at all, and the less his inconclusive state of mind is exposed, the better—Ebrahim Molla, 56 Cal. 473, 33 C.W.N. 371 (373), 30 Cr.L.J. 1036, 119 I.C. 290, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 415, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 770. See this case cited under sec. 306.

A reference can be made to the High Court only on the ground of disagreement between the Judge and the jury and on no other grounds. Where the jury returned a verdict of not guilty, the mere fact that in a similar case upon similar evidence the High Court had convicted some other persons, is no ground for referring the case to the High Court—Iraya Doddappa, 6 Bom.L.R. 599, 1 Cr.L.J. 743. A disagreement within the meaning of this section is one of the conditions precedent to a reference. It is very much doubtful whether a Judge is justified in referring a case to the High Court where his quarrel with the jury's verdict is not that the persons who were found guilty should in fact have been found not guilty, but that logically the persons who have been found not guilty should have been found guilty as well—Makhan Lal, 31 Cr.L.J. 965 (967), 115 I.C. 365, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 472, 37 C.W.N. 591, 1933 Cr.C. 752.

In order to determine whether a Judge would refer a case to the High Court under this section he can refer to the Police diaries after the verdict of the jury, under the provisions of sec. 172, Cr. P. C.—Rubati Mohan, 32 C.W.N. 915 (917), 56 Cal. 150, 30 Cr.L.J. 435, 115 I.C. 258, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 57, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 728.

935. "Necessary for the ends of justice":—A case should not be referred to the High Court unless the Judge disagrees so completely with the jury that he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case. Where such complete dissent is not recorded the verdict of the jury must stand—Rafuddin, Ind. Rul 1932 Pat. 259, 11 Pat. 669, 13 P.L.T. 918, 1932 Cr.C. 643 (644), 139 I.C. 885, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 246, 33 Cr.L.J. 877; Bhawani Panduji, 2 Bom. 525; Devji Govindji, 20 Bom. 215 (218); Irya Doddappa, 6 Bom.L.R. 599, 1 Cr.L.J. 743. This seems to indicate that something more must be in the Judge's mind than a mere disagreement with the jury or a mere feeling that he would himself have come to a different conclusion. That is, he must be of opinion that the verdict was one which reasonable men could not have arrived at on the evidence before them—Vecrappa, 51 Mad. 956, 30 Cr.L.J. 317 (321), 114 I.C. 353, 28 M.L.W. 575, 55 M.L.J. 591, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1186, 1929 M.W.N. 185, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 273 (F.B.). The necessity of submitting a case for the ends of justice depends upon the gravity of the offence and its prevalence and other considerations of a similar nature—Panchanan Sarkar, 37 C.W.N. 341 (343), 34 Cr.L.J. 608, 143 I.C. 600, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 404, 1933 Cr.C. 582, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 448. This section leaves the referring of a case to the High Court entirely to the discretion of the Judge, for it is only where he disagrees with the verdict of the jury so completely that he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, that he should do so. This discretion should, however, always be exercised when the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by evidence. It is the only way in which the miscarriage of justice by a perverse verdict of a jury can be remedied by the High Court—Guruvadu, 13 Mad. 343; Saroda Charan, 41 C.L.J. 320, 26 Cr.L.J. 1006, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 795, 87 I.C. 606. Where the Judge not only disagrees with the verdict of the jury convicting the accused, but on a consideration of all the evidence finds that the prisoner has not been proved to have committed the offence, the Judge has no option but to refer the case under sec. 307, because the Judge cannot in consonance with the ends of justice convict the prisoner in such a case—Barwick, 13 Lah. 573, 1932 Cr.C. 426 (429), 33 Cr.L.J. 220, 33 P.L.R. 443, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 345, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 181, 136 I.C. 5. When the Judge points out to the jury the weak links in the prosecution but they do not consider them, it is proper for the Judge to refer the case to the High Court, because such a reference is really necessary for the ends of justice—Abdul Rahaman, 9 C.L.J. 432, 10 Cr.L.J. 57.

When the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is such a complete dissent that the Judge is obviously unable to do justice to the accused by accepting the verdict, there is no option left to him but to refer the case to the High Court, for it is clearly necessary for the ends of justice to do so—Saroda Charan, supra; Barwick, supra. The mere fact that the Sessions Judge does not agree with the unanimous verdict of the jury does not make it obligatory on him to make a reference. Section 307 clearly gives him a discretion in the matter, and it is only when he is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court that he shall so submit it. If he is not clearly of that opinion, his failure to submit the case is not a subject for interference by the High Court—Eran Khan, 50 Cal. 658, 24 Cr.L.J. 838; Bajit Mian, 6 Pat. 817, 29 Cr.L.J. 81, 106 I.C. 673, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 120, 9 P.L.T. 191. If the Judge does not agree with the verdict of the jury, but still he considers it as a reasonable verdict and accepts it without hesitation, it cannot be said that he has exercised his discretion erroneously in not making a reference to the High Court—Ramdas, 117 I.C. 173, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 313, 1929 Cr.C. 99, 10 P.L.T. 409, 8 Pat. 344, 30 Cr.L.J. 721 (722). It depends entirely upon the opinion of the Sessions Judge whether he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to refer the case to the High Court; and his opinion is final on that point. The High Court cannot direct the Sessions Judge to be of opinion that such reference is necessary for the ends of justice, and to refer the case accordingly or cannot act as though he has, in fact, submitted the case—Bepin Chandra, 32 C.W.N. 673 (676), 29 Cr.L.J. 819, 111 I.C. 323, 47 C.L.J. 483, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 444, 10 A.I.C.R. 501, not following Saroda Charan, infra; Rameshwar Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 919

the jury took and is disposed to give the accused the benefit of doubt is not a ground on which a reference can be properly based—Jogi Kar, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 15, 129 I.C. 798, 32 Cr.L.J. 452, 57 Cal. 1183, 1931 Cr.C. 47 (49). It is not in every case of doubt nor in every case in which the Judge entertains a view different from that of the jury, that a reference can be made under this section, but the verdict of the jury must be manifestly wrong before such references can be made—Suarnomoyee, 41 Cal. 621, 14 Cr.L.J. 660, 21 I.C. 900, A.I.R. 1911 Cal. 65; Ramdas, 8 Pat. 311, 30 Cr.L.J. 721 (722); 117 I.C. 173, 10 P.L.T. 409, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 313, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 381. And in this regard there is no difference between a case where the jury acquits the accused and a case where the jury convicts, and the Judge disagrees with the verdict—Ramdas, supra. Where the jury misunderstands the law as explained by the Judge and delivers a wrong verdict, the Judge should refer the case to the High Court under this section, and not ask the jury to reconsider their verdict—Kondiba, 28 Bom. 412; Sundaram Ayyar, 61 M.L.J. 915, 32 Cr.L.J. 1276 (1278), 131 I.C. 986, 34 M.L.W. 380, 1931 M.W.N. 837, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 775, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 874, 1931 Cr.C. 1031.

A reference should not be made where the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is merely on a technical point of law. Thus, where the Judge considered the offence to be one under sec. 366, I. P. C., but left to the jury to decide whether the offence fell under sec. 363, or sec. 356, I. P. C., and the jury found that the offence was under sec. 363, I. P. Where the jury returned a verdict of guilty under sec. 326, I. P. C., but the Judge thought that the accused committed an offence under sec. 304, Part I, I. P. A Sessions Judge wrote in his judgment: "There is room for no doubt as to whether the accused is really guilty. Not agreeing with but accepting the unanimous verdict of the jury, I convict the accused." Held that this method of expression was improper. If the Judge really disagrees with the verdict, i.e., has a settled and considered opinion that the crime has not been proved against the accused, it seems to be clear that it is necessary for the ends of justice to refer the case, and he ought to refer the case. If he does not think this necessary, his "disagreement" cannot be a reality at all, and the less his inconclusive state of mind is exposed, the better—Ebrahim Molla, 56 Cal. 473, 33 C.W.N. 371 (373), 30 Cr.L.J. 1036, 119 I.C. 290, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 415, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 770. See this case cited under sec. 306.

A reference can be made to the High Court only on the ground of disagreement between the Judge and the jury and on no other grounds. Where the jury returned a verdict of not guilty, the mere fact that in a similar case upon similar evidence the High Court had convicted some other persons, is no ground for referring the case to the High Court—Iraya Doddappa, 6 Bom.L.R. 599, 1 Cr.L.J. 743. A disagreement within the meaning of this section is one of the conditions precedent to a reference. It is very much doubtful whether a Judge is justified in referring a case to the High Court where his quarrel with the jury's verdict is not that the persons who were found guilty should in fact have been found not guilty, but that logically the persons who have been found not guilty should have been found guilty as well—Makhan Lal, 34 Cr.L.J. 965 (967), 145 I.C. 365, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 472, 37 C.W.N. 591, 1933 Cr.C. 752.

In order to determine whether a Judge would refer a case to the High Court under this section he can refer to the Police diaries after the verdict of the jury, under the provisions of sec. 172, Cr. P. C.—Rebati Mohan, 32 C.W.N. 945 (947), 56 Cal. 150, 30 Cr.L.J. 435, 115 I.C. 258, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 57, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 338.

935. "Necessary for the ends of justice":—A case should not be referred to the High Court unless the Judge disagrees so completely with the jury that he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case. Where such complete dissent is not recorded the verdict of the jury must stand—Rafuiddin, Ind. This seems to indicate that something more must be in the Judge's mind than a mere disagreement with the jury or a mere feeling that he would himself have come to a different conclusion. That is, he must be of opinion that the verdict was one which reasonable men could not have arrived at on the evidence before them—Veerappa, 51 Mad 956, 30 Cr.L.J. 317 (321), 114 I.C. 353, 28 M.L.W. 575, 55 M.L.J. 591, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1186, 1929 M.W.N. 185, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 273 (F.B.). The necessity of submitting a case for the ends of justice depends upon the gravity of the offence and its prevalence and other considerations of a similar nature—Panchanan Sarkar, 37 C.W.N. 341 (343), 34 Cr.L.J. 608, 143 I.C. 600, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 404, 1933 Cr.C. 582, Ind. Rul 1933 Cal. 448. This section leaves the referring of a case to the High Court entirely to the discretion of the Judge, for it is only where he disagrees with the verdict of the jury so completely that he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, that he should do so. This discretion should, however, always be exercised when the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by evidence. It is the only way in which the miscarriage of justice by a perverse verdict of a jury can be remedied by the High Court—Guruvadu, 13 Mad. 343, Saroda Charan, 41 C.L.J. 320, 26 Cr.L.J. 1006, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 795, 87 I.C. 606. Where the Judge not only disagrees with the verdict of the jury convicting the accused, but on a consideration of all the evidence finds that the prisoner has not been proved to have committed the offence, the Judge has no option but to refer the case under sec. 307, because the Judge cannot in consonance with the ends of justice convict the prisoner in such a case—Barwick, 13 Lah 573, 1932 Cr.C. 426 (429), 33 Cr.L.J. 220, 33 P.L.R. 443, A.I.R. 1932 Lah 345, Ind. Rul 1932 Lah. 181, 136 I.C. 5. When the Judge points out to the jury the weak links in the prosecution but they do not consider them, it is proper for the Judge to refer the case to the High Court, because such a reference is really necessary for the ends of justice—Abdul Rahaman, 9 C.L.J. 432, 10 Cr.L.J. 57.

When the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is such a complete dissent that the Judge is obviously unable to do justice to the accused by accepting the verdict, there is no option left to him but to refer the case to the High Court, for it is clearly necessary for the ends of justice to do so—Saroda Charan, supra; Barwick, supra. The mere fact that the Sessions Judge does not agree with the unanimous verdict of the jury does not make it obligatory on him to make a reference. Section 307 clearly gives him a discretion in the matter, and it is only when he is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court that he shall so submit it. If he is not clearly of that opinion, his failure to submit the case is not a subject for interference by the High Court—Eran Khan, 50 Cal 658, 24 Cr.L.J. 838; Bajit Mian, 6 Pat. 817, 29 Cr.L.J. 81, 106 I.C. 673, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 120, 9 P.L.T. 191. If the Judge does not agree with the verdict of the jury, but still he considers it as a reasonable verdict and accepts it without hesitation, it cannot be said that he has exercised his discretion erroneously in not making a reference to the High Court—Ramdas, 117 I.C. 173, A.I.R. 1929 Pat 313, 1929 Cr.C. 99, 10 P.L.T. 409, 8 Pat. 344, 30 Cr.L.J. 721 (722). It depends entirely upon the opinion of the Sessions Judge whether he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to refer the case to the High Court; and his opinion is final on that point. The High Court cannot direct the Sessions Judge to be of opinion that such reference is necessary for the ends of justice, and to refer the case accordingly or cannot act as though he has, in fact, submitted the case—Bepin Chandra, 32 C.W.N. 673 (676), 29 Cr.L.J. 819, 111 I.C. 323, 47 C.L.J. 483, A.I.R. 1928 Cal 444, 10 A.I.C.R. 501, not following Saroda Charan, infra; Rameshwar Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 919

(921), 170 I.C. 461, 16 Pat. 413, 1937 P.W.N. 593, 3 B.R. 731, 10 R.P. 123, 18 P.L.T. 607, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 440; Afsar Shaikh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 1075, 171 I.C. 320, 10 R.C. 263, 41 C.W.N. 1020, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 510, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 691. But in Manjia v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 465, 167 I.C. 802, 9 R.A. 578, 1936 A.W.R. 1281, 1937 A.Cr.C. 11, 1937 A.L.J. 43, I.L.R. 1937 All. 419, 1937 A.L.R. 250, A.I.R. 1937 All. 195 the Allahabad High Court, in exercise of powers under sec. 561A, Cr. P. C., set aside the convictions of the accused and the sentences passed on them and sent the case back to the Court of Additional Sessions Judge to re-admit the case to its original number on the file, and after hearing the arguments consider whether he would express disagreement with the verdict or not, and, if so, make a reference under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., to the High Court or uphold the verdict and convict the accused and pass suitable sentence.

It is no longer the law that before making a reference the Judge must be satisfied that the verdict is perverse. It is sufficient that he should be clearly of opinion that a reference is necessary for the ends of justice—Ismail, 23 C.W.N. 747, 19 Cr.L.J. 830, A.I.R. 1919 Cal. 536, 46 I.C. 816; Saroda Charan, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 795, 87 I.C. 606, 41 C.L.J. 320, 26 Cr.L.J. 1066; Sakhawat v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 50 (52), 38 Cr.L.J. 330, 167 I.C. 61, 19 N.L.J. 320, I.L.R. 1931 Nag. 277. It is necessary that the trial Judge should for himself appreciate the evidence and form his own opinion on the case so as to see whether it is necessary for the ends of justice to make a reference against the verdict—Ilu, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 847 (849), 36 Cr.L.J. 358, 1934 Cr.C. 1361, 153 I.C. 451.

Though on the one hand reference should not be made in every case in which the Judge finds himself in disagreement with the jury, on the other, the power of reference is not confined to those cases only in which in the opinion of the Judge the verdict of the jury is entirely perverse. No hard and fast rule can be laid down. The Judge must apply his mind and decide whether the ends of justice demand a reference. No doubt, when a Judge finds himself in disagreement with the jury and has to decide whether a reference should be made, there is a heavy responsibility upon him as is the responsibility of the Magistrate in a case triable by a Court of Session to decide whether the case should or should not be committed. But because the responsibility is great, there is no reason why it should not be undertaken—Rameshwar Singh v. Emp., supra.

All that secs. 306 and 307, Cr. P. C., provide is that the Judge should disagree with the verdict of the jury, that is to say, if the jury's verdict is that the accused is guilty or not guilty and the Judge is of a contrary opinion, he can refer the case to the High Court unless he does not think it necessary to express his disagreement. Where a Judge is doubtful and is distinctly of the opinion that the benefit of the doubt should be given to the accused, then certainly he is of the opinion that the verdict of the jury should be that he is not guilty. If, therefore, the jury returns a verdict of guilty, he is disagreeing with the verdict of the jury even though he may not be certain in his own mind of the absolute innocence of the accused and the complete falsity of the complaint. Where the Judge takes an erroneous view of these sections and feels that he has no power to refer the case to the High Court, the accused are prejudiced—Manjia v. Emp., supra.

It is not the duty of the Judge to refer to the High Court a case where the jury have found a man guilty on admissible evidence and evidence which in the eyes of the law is sufficient to justify a conviction—Haris Chandra, 34 Cr.L.J. 432, 142 I.C. 896, 1932 A.L.J. 1089, A.I.R. 1933 All. 94, 1933 Cr.C. 120, Ind. Rul. 1933 All. 144.

936. Submit the case:—Whether whole case should be referred:—When the Sessions Judge is not prepared to accept the verdict of the jury in its entirety but is prepared to accept it as regards some of the accused, it is not intended that the whole case is to be referred to the High Court. Where the Judge agrees with the jury in respect of a particular accused, the Judge ought to convict or acquit him as the case may be; and it is only with reference to those accused in respect of whom he declines to accept the verdict of the jury that he should make the reference—Babur Ali, 42 Cal.

789, 19 C.W.N. 584, 16 Cr.L.J. 321. This is now expressly made clear by the present amendment.

But where the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is as to some of the charges, it is necessary that the whole case (in respect of all the charges) should be referred. It would be illegal for the Sessions Judge to record a judgment in respect of some of the charges in accordance with the verdict which he accepts, and to refer the case in respect of the other charges on which he disagrees with the verdict. See sub-sec. (2). When the accused was tried on several charges, and the Sessions Judge accepted the verdict of the jury and pronounced judgment as to some of the charges and disagreed as to the other charges, and referred the case to the High Court only as to these latter charges, it was held that the reference was illegal, as by this limited form of reference the High Court was precluded from considering the entire evidence on the record, and that the Sessions Judge should have referred the whole case leaving it to the High Court to consider the whole of the evidence that was placed before the jury—Ananda Charan, 21 C.W.N. 435, 39 I.C. 695, 18 Cr.L.J. 551; Nawal Bhari, 52 All. 881, 32 Cr.L.J. 81, 128 I.C. 2, A.I.R. 1930 All. 489, 1930 A.L.J. 1168, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 2, 1930 Cr.C. 733; Hazan Lal, 11 Pat. 395, 1932 Cr.C. 273 (274), A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 156, 13 P.L.T. 93, 137 I.C. 190, 33 Cr.L.J. 505, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 148; Ramjanam, 36 Cr.L.J. 856, 155 I.C. 866, 16 P.L.T. 348, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 357, 14 Pat. 717; Bishnu Chandra, 37 C.W.N. 1180 (1182), 34 Cr.L.J. 918, 145 I.C. 236, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 665, 1933 Cr.C. 1104.

Recording the grounds of his opinion :—The letter of reference should ordinarily state the case and the verdict of the jury and concisely the ground upon which the Judge differs from that verdict and considers it necessary in the interests of justice to submit the case. A mere criticism of the evidence, and a statement by the Judge that the accused should have been given the benefit of doubt, and that he disagrees with the verdict of the jury because their appreciation of the evidence does not seem to be proper, is not sufficient. These are hardly grounds of reference—Jogi Kar, 57 Cal. 1183, 1931 Cr.C. 47 (48), A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 15, 129 I.C. 798, 32 Cr.L.J. 452. In referring the case under this section, the Sessions Judge should state what material portions of the evidence he believes to be true, and his reasons for arriving at his conclusions so as to enable the High Court to appreciate them and to give due weight to them—Punit, 3 P.L.T. 413, 23 Cr.L.J. 421, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 348; Dyamanaih, 6 Bom.L.R. 519. Where the Judge merely said that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and expressed no other opinion in his reference, it was held that he ought to have set out on what portions of the evidence or on what facts the accused should have been convicted—Bhut Nath, 7 C.W.N. 345 (347). So also, where the Sessions Judge merely stated in his reference that the verdict of the jury was erroneous and inconsistent and could not be accepted and that if the evidence had been believed all the accused should have been found guilty, held that the reference was not a proper reference, as it did not state the grounds of his opinion. The reference should be so complete and self-contained that it ought not to be necessary to refer to the order sheet—Taribulla, 25 C.W.N. 682, 23 Cr.L.J. 244. The order of reference under sec. 307 must be in the nature of a judgment giving a proper summary of the evidence and the reasons for the opinion of the Judge. In making the reference he should in effect show the reasons for his opinion in as clear a manner as he would have done if the case had not been a jury case and he had to write a judgment—Sheo Din, 50 All. 540, 29 Cr.L.J. 342, 108 I.C. 159, 9 A.I.R. 146, A.I.R. 1928 All. 622, 26 A.L.J. 296. He should state with some fulness his view of the evidence and the credibility of the more important witnesses, because the High Court has to attach more or less weight to the opinion of the Judge who saw and heard the witnesses—Chander Krishna, 10 Bom.L.R. 173.

Reflections on jurors :—The reference of the Sessions Judge should not contain any extra-judicial observations, e.g., any reflections on the conduct of the jurors which are not supported by any material on the record. The 'opinion' of the Sessions Judge is his opinion on the merits of the case and does not include his speculations as to the conduct of jurors. Such an imputation is not fair to the jurors—Dhananjay, 51 Cal.

(921), 170 I.C. 461, 16 Pat. 413, 1937 P.W.N. 596, 3 B.R. 734, 10 R.P. 128, 18 P.L.T. 607, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 440; Afsar Shaikh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 1075, 171 I.C. 320, 10 R.C. 253, 41 C.W.N. 1020, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 540, 1 L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 694. But in Manjia v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 465, 167 I.C. 802, 9 R.A. 578, 1936 A.W.R. 1284, 1937 A.Cr.C. 11, 1937 A.L.J. 43, 1 L.R. 1937 All. 419, 1937 A.L.R. 250, A.I.R. 1937 All. 195 the Allahabad High Court, in exercise of powers under sec. 561A, Cr. P. C., set aside the convictions of the accused and the sentences passed on them and sent the case back to the Court of Additional Sessions Judge to re-admit the case to its original number on the file, and after hearing the arguments consider whether he would express disagreement with the verdict or not, and, if so, make a reference under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., to the High Court or uphold the verdict and convict the accused and pass suitable sentence.

It is no longer the law that before making a reference the Judge must be satisfied that the verdict is perverse. It is sufficient that he should be clearly of opinion that a reference is necessary for the ends of justice—Ismail, 23 C.W.N. 747, 19 Cr.L.J. 830, A.I.R. 1919 Cal. 536, 46 I.C. 846; Saroda Charan, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 795, 87 I.C. 606, 41 C.L.J. 320, 26 Cr.L.J. 1066; Sakhawat v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 50 (52), 38 Cr.L.J. 330, 167 I.C. 61, 19 N.L.J. 320, 1 L.R. 1931 Nag. 277. It is necessary that the trial Judge should for himself appreciate the evidence and form his own opinion on the case so as to see whether it is necessary for the ends of justice to make a reference against the verdict—Ilu, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 847 (849), 36 Cr.L.J. 358, 1934 Cr.C. 1364, 153 I.C. 454.

Though on the one hand reference should not be made in every case in which the Judge finds himself in disagreement with the jury, on the other, the power of reference is not confined to those cases only in which in the opinion of the Judge the verdict of the jury is entirely perverse. No hard and fast rule can be laid down. The Judge must apply his mind and decide whether the ends of justice demand a reference. No doubt, when a Judge finds himself in disagreement with the jury and has to decide whether a reference should be made, there is a heavy responsibility upon him as is the responsibility of the Magistrate in a case triable by a Court of Session to decide whether the case should or should not be committed. But because the responsibility is great, there is no reason why it should not be undertaken—Rameshwar Singh v. Emp., supra.

All that secs. 306 and 307, Cr. P. C., provide is that the Judge should disagree with the verdict of the jury, that is to say, if the jury's verdict is that the accused is guilty or not guilty and the Judge is of a contrary opinion, he can refer the case to the High Court unless he does not think it necessary to express his disagreement. Where a Judge is doubtful and is distinctly of the opinion that the benefit of the doubt should be given to the accused, then certainly he is of the opinion that the verdict of the jury should be that he is not guilty. If, therefore, the jury returns a verdict of guilty, he is disagreeing with the verdict of the jury even though he may not be certain in his own mind of the absolute innocence of the accused and the complete falsity of the complaint. Where the Judge takes an erroneous view of these sections and feels that he has no power to refer the case to the High Court, the accused are prejudiced—Manjia v. Emp., supra.

It is not the duty of the Judge to refer to the High Court a case where the jury have found a man guilty on admissible evidence and evidence which in the eyes of the law is sufficient to justify a conviction—Haris Chandra, 34 Cr.L.J. 432, 142 I.C. 896, 1932 A.L.J. 1089, A.I.R. 1933 All. 94, 1933 Cr.C. 120, Ind. Rul. 1933 All. 144.

936. Submit the case:—Whether whole case should be referred:—When the Sessions Judge is not prepared to accept the verdict of the jury in its entirety but is prepared to accept it as regards some of the accused, it is not intended that the whole case is to be referred to the High Court. Where the Judge agrees with the jury in respect of a particular accused, the Judge ought to convict or acquit him as the case may be; and it is only with reference to those accused in respect of whom he declines to accept the verdict of the jury that he should make the reference—Babur Ali, 42 Cal.

789, 19 C.W.N. 584, 16 Cr.L.J. 321. This is now expressly made clear by the present amendment.

But where the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is as to some of the charges, it is necessary that the whole case (in respect of all the charges) should be referred. It would be illegal for the Sessions Judge to record a judgment in respect of some of the charges in accordance with the verdict which he accepts, and to refer the case in respect of the other charges on which he disagrees with the verdict. See sub-sec. (2). When the accused was tried on several charges, and the Sessions Judge accepted the verdict of the jury and pronounced judgment as to some of the charges and disagreed as to the other charges, and referred the case to the High Court only as to these latter charges, it was held that the reference was illegal, as by this limited form of reference the High Court was precluded from considering the entire evidence on the record, and that the Sessions Judge should have referred the whole case leaving it to the High Court to consider the whole of the evidence that was placed before the jury—Ananda Charan, 21 C.W.N. 435, 39 I.C. 695, 18 Cr.L.J. 551; Nawal Bhari, 52 All. 881, 32 Cr.L.J. 81, 128 I.C. 2, A.I.R. 1930 All. 489, 1930 A.L.J. 1168, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 2, 1930 Cr.C. 733; Hazari Lal, 11 Pat. 395, 1932 Cr.C. 273 (274), A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 156, 13 P.L.T. 93, 137 I.C. 190, 33 Cr.L.J. 505, Ind. Recording the grounds of his opinion :—The letter of reference should ordinarily state the case and the verdict of the jury and concisely the ground upon which the Judge differs from that verdict and considers it necessary in the interests of justice to submit the case. A mere criticism of the evidence, and a statement by the Judge that the accused should have been given the benefit of doubt, and that he disagrees with the verdict of the jury because their appreciation of the evidence does not seem to be proper, is not sufficient. These are hardly grounds of reference—Jogi Kar, 57 Cal. 1183, 1931 Cr.C. 47 (48), A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 15, 129 I.C. 798, 32 Cr.L.J. 452. In referring the case under this section, the Sessions Judge should state what material portions of the evidence he believes to be true, and his reasons for arriving at his conclusions so as to enable the High Court to appreciate them and to give due weight to them—Punit, 3 P.L.T. 413, 23 Cr.L.J. 421, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 348; Dyamanaiik, 6 Bom.L.R. 519. Where the Judge merely said that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and expressed no other opinion in his reference, it was held that he ought to have set out on what portions of the evidence or on what facts the accused should have been convicted—Bhut Nath, 7 C.W.N. 345 (347). So also, where the Sessions Judge merely stated in his reference that the verdict of the jury was erroneous and inconsistent and could not be accepted and that if the evidence had been believed all the accused should have been found guilty, held that the reference was not a proper reference, as it did not state the grounds of his opinion. The reference should be so complete and self-contained that it ought not to be necessary to refer to the order sheet—Taribulla, 25 C.W.N. 682, 23 Cr.L.J. 244. The order of reference under sec. 307 must be in the nature of a judgment giving a proper summary of the evidence and the reasons for the opinion of the Judge. In making the reference he should in effect show the reasons for his opinion in as clear a manner as he would have done if the case had not been a jury case and he had to write a judgment—Sheo Din, 50 All. 540, 29 Cr.L.J. 342, 108 I.C. 159, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 146, A.I.R. 1928 All. 622, 26 A.L.J. 296. He should state with some fulness his view of the evidence and the credibility of the more important witnesses, because the High Court has to attach more or less weight to the opinion of the Judge who saw and heard the witnesses—Chander Krishna, 10 Bom.L.R. 173.

Reflections on jurors :—The reference of the Sessions Judge should not contain any extra-judicial observations, e.g., any reflections on the conduct of the jurors which are not supported by any material on the record. The 'opinion' of the Sessions Judge is his opinion on the merits of the case and does not include his speculations as to the conduct of jurors. Such an imputation is not fair to the jurors—Dhananjoy, 51 Cal.

247 (350, 351), 38 C.L.J. 384; Mamfru, 51 Cal. 418 (430), 38 C.L.J. 397. It would be most unfortunate if persons of responsibility called upon to discharge the responsible duty of jurors were exposed to the risk of aspersions upon their conduct. If the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jury, it is open to him to do so and to refer the case to the High Court, but this does not require that he should make reflections upon the conduct of the jurors which are not supported by evidence on the record. Such an imputation is unfair to the jurors, unfair to the Judge himself, unfair to the accused and unfair to the High Court also—Mamfru, 51 Cal. 418 (429, 431), 38 C.L.J. 397.

Recording evidence :—The Judge should state in his reference the evidence for the prosecution and for the defence, the facts which in his opinion are proved upon the evidence recorded in the case, and the conclusions to which these facts led him—Irya, 6 Bom.L.R. 599, 1 Cr.L.J. 743.

'Stating the offence' :—In case of an acquittal by the jury the Sessions Judge should state in his reference what offence the accused has in his opinion committed, and on what grounds he differs from the jury—Chander Krishna, 10 Bom.L.R. 173; Sahal Roy, 3 Cal. 623; Taribulla, 25 C.W.N. 682, 23 Cr.L.J. 244. But a reference will not be rejected because of omission to state the offence, if the Judge's opinion as to the offence committed appears sufficiently from the body of the letter of reference—Panchanan Sarkar, 37 C.W.N. 341 (344), 1933 Cr.C. 582, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 404, 34 Cr.L.J. 608, 143 I.C. 600, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 448.

937. "Opinion of the jury" :—The 'opinion of the jury' in sub-section (3) means nothing more than the verdict of the jury; it does not mean the reasons on which the verdict is founded—Annada, 36 Cal. 629; Tarapada, 18 C.W.N. 615; Dhananjoy, 51 Cal. 347 (352), 38 C.L.J. 384; Ali Hyder, 4 P.L.T. 425, 26 Cr.L.J. 856 (859), 86 I.C. 712, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 474; Ramjag, 7 Pat. 55, 109 I.C. 114, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 203, 9 P.L.T. 567, 29 Cr.L.J. 466 (468), Punit, 3 P.L.T. 413, 23 Cr.L.J. 421, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 348; Chellan, 29 Mad. 91. But the word 'opinions' in sec. 307 (3), Cr. P. C., is wider than the word 'verdict' in sec. 423 (2), Cr. P. C., and it includes not only the final decision of the majority [the sense in which it is used in sec. 423 (2)] but also the opinions of the minority, and where reasons are disclosed, the reasons given whether by an individual jurymen, or by a part of the jury, or by the whole—Dattatraya Sadashiv v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 17 (36), 41 Cr.L.J. 289, 186 I.C. 402. What the Judge has to record in his reference is the conclusion (i.e., verdict) of the jury and not the reasons on which that conclusion is based. And the circumstance that no such reason has been ascertained does not warrant the High Court to decline to go into the evidence and arrive at its own judgment as to the guilt or innocence of the accused—Chellan, 29 Mad. 91. But the Judge should do well to take the reasons of the jury for the view taken by them, and to record the reasons, especially where there is some inconsistency in their verdict—Annada Charan Thakur, 36 Cal. 629, 13 C.W.N. 757, 9 C.L.J. 638, 10 C.L.J. 32, 2 I.C. 497; Bhulotan, 6 P.L.J. 264, 23 Cr.L.J. 11. Even where the jury are unanimous in their verdict, the Judge should ask for specific findings on the particular facts on which he himself relies. This would enable the High Court to understand the particular grounds on which the jury proceeded, and it will then only be necessary to consider the propriety of those grounds—Pamanna, 2 Weir 388 (389); Kankaya, 22 N.L.R. 42, 27 Cr.L.J. 773, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 308, 95 I.C. 309; Balram, 34 Cr.L.J. 411, 142 I.C. 785, 15 N.L.J. 116, Ind. Rul. 1933 Nag. 145. Where in a trial by jury the case depends entirely on circumstantial evidence, and the jurors are divided in opinion, the Judge should, if he intends to make a reference to the High Court, ascertain from the jurors the reasons for their opinion—Zohra, 1 P.L.T. 657, 55 I.C. 294; Punit, 3 P.L.T. 413, 23 Cr.L.J. 421, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 348.

Where the jury found the accused not guilty, and on being asked by the Judge to give reasons for their verdict they said that they gave the benefit of doubt and could give no other reasons; held that by reason of the fact that the jury were unable to give reasons, it could not be said that the jury had no adequate reasons for returning a verdict of not guilty or that the verdict was wrong; even trained intellects often find it difficult to formulate and put before the Court the reasons for an opinion which they hold or which they wish to propound. The High Court refused to interfere—Nishi Kanta, 41 C.L.J. 35, 26 Cr.L.J. 805, 85 I.C. 453, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 525.

The High Court is not bound to put the opinion of the jury on a higher plane than the opinion of the Judge. Both should be given due weight and as a general rule the opinion of the Sessions Judge, who has weighed and appreciated the evidence and has given reasons for his opinion, should carry more weight than the opinion of the jury, who are laymen unaccustomed to weigh and appreciate the evidence and who give no reasons for their opinion—Ram Chandra, 55 Cal. 879, 111 I.C. 327, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 732, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 456, 29 Cr.L.J. 823 (825); Ramcharan, 81 I.C. 305, 11 O.L.J. 210, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 314, 27 O.C. 29, 25 Cr.L.J. 785; Tukaram, 30 Cr.L.J. 310 (Nag.). The High Court is to consider the whole of the evidence and to give due weight to the opinion of the Judge and also to the opinion of the jury—Suar Gola, 36 Cr.L.J. 262, 152 I.C. 1021, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 533, 1934 Cr.C. 1189. But where the verdict depends entirely upon the question whether the witnesses are to be believed or not, weight should ordinarily be attached to the verdict of the jury whose function it is to decide such questions of facts, especially when there is no reason for supposing that the verdict is perverse—Sitalu, 34 Cr.L.J. 731, 144 I.C. 246, 14 P.L.T. 217, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 273, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pat. 227, 1933 Cr.C. 755; Bhagwat, 36 Cr.L.J. 1502, 158 I.C. 1131, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 433, 16 P.L.T. 603, 1935 Cr.C. 1104; Mhaska, 37 Cr.L.J. 26, 158 I.C. 1090, 1935 Cr.C. 325, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 165, 37 Bom.L.R. 109. If persons are put on their trial before juries, on questions of fact the decisions of the jury should always be accepted, unless it is possible to demonstrate that the acquittals have been arrived at perversely—Sherah, 63 C.L.J. 140. It cannot be said that simply because there is no reason to be found in the record for disbelieving the evidence of certain witnesses the jury's verdict must be regarded as perverse or unreasonable. The jury are entitled to form and express their own opinion as regards the reliability of witnesses, and one cannot exclude the possibility that they may form an adverse opinion on account of the demeanour of the witnesses or some other cause which does not find any mention in the record. The mere fact that the opinion is one with which the trial Judge does not agree, does not make the Jury's opinion a perverse or unreasonable one—Boya Lingadu, 41 Cr.L.J. 581, 188 I.C. 381, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 509, 1940 M.W.N. 239, 51 M.L.W. 321, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 428, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 509, 1940 M.Cr.C. 79.

938. When High Court will or will not interfere:—The High Court is generally reluctant to interfere with the unanimous verdict of the jury unless it is manifestly wrong and unless it is necessary to do so in the interests of justice—Jogi Kar, 57 Cal. 1183, 1931 Cr.C. 47 (48). Where the unanimous verdict of the jury is absolutely against the weight of evidence on the record and is manifestly perverse, it cannot be sustained—Abdul Rahim, 35 Cr.L.J. 1130 (1131), 150 I.C. 845, 11 O.W.N. 905, 1934 Cr.C. 1324, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 399. The High Court will exercise its discretionary powers with great caution and care. The mere fact that upon a consideration of all the evidence before the Sessions Court, the High Court would have arrived at a conclusion different from that arrived at by the jury, would not justify the High Court in interfering with their unanimous verdict—Chirkua, 2 A.L.J. 475, 2 Cr.L.J. 357; Nritya Gopal, 38 C.L.J. 1, 24 Cr.L.J. 897; Panna Lal, A.I.R. 1924 All. 411, 81 I.C. 86 I.C. 712, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 474, 26 Cr.L.J. 856; Syed Zahir, 7 P.L.T. 367, 27 Cr.L.J. 1011, 97 I.C. 17, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 566. The High Court upon a reference under this section is reluctant to interfere with the unanimous verdict of a jury; and if that verdict is honest and not unreasonable and can upon the evidence be supported, the High Court will accept the verdict even though it may not wholly agree therewith—Pramathanath, 30 C.L.J. 503, 21 Cr.L.J. 256, 55 I.C. 282; Hara Mohan, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 848, 105 I.C. 231, 28 Cr.L.J. 903, 54 Cal. 708, 28 Cr.L.J. 903;

Premnanda, 52 Cal. 987, 29 C.W.N. 738, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 876, 88 I.C. 1000, 26 Cr.L.J. 1256, 42 C.L.J. 247; Panna Lal, 46 All. 265 (268); Chiranji Lal, 5 Luck. 720, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 334, 1930 Cr.C. 524, 124 I.C. 661, 7 O.W.N. 376, 31 Cr.L.J. 719; Asghar Husain, 35 Cr.L.J. 33, 146 I.C. 303, 10 O.W.N. 883. Where the case is undoubtedly not free from difficulties, and a great deal could be said on both sides, but it cannot be said that the jury's view was a bad view or an impossible view, the Court is not justified in reversing their verdict—Chupai, 35 Cr.L.J. 285, 147 I.C. 53, 10 O.W.N. 971. In a reference it is not sufficient to show that another jury might have formed a different opinion. What the prosecution should show is that no reasonable body of men would have returned the verdict complained of—Syed Zahir, 7 P.L.T. 367, 27 Cr.L.J. 1041, 97 I.C. 17, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 566; Khudhay, 48 C.L.J. 541, 30 Cr.L.J. 125. The verdict of a jury has more weight than the opinion of assessors, and should not be set aside unless no sensible man could have arrived at that verdict particularly in the case of a verdict of acquittal—Vidyasagar, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 497, 112 I.C. 363, 9 P.L.T. 683, 8 Pat. 74, 29 Cr.L.J. 1035 (1039). The jurors are entitled to their own view of the case, and the rule of law is not to disturb their verdict unless it be for special reasons and under special circumstances—Bajit Mian, 6 Pat. 817, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 120, 106 I.C. 673, 9 P.L.T. 191, 29 Cr.L.J. 81 (83). Human opinion honestly held may differ on all questions. But the test to be applied to the honesty of such opinion is whether any reasonable man on the materials before him can hold it. The test, therefore, to be applied in estimating the weight of the verdict of the jury is whether the opinion is such as could on the particular facts and evidence of the case have been held by reasonable men, however much the Judge may differ from that view—Hara Mohan, 54 Cal. 708, 28 Cr.L.J. 903; Gulam Kader, 28 C.W.N. 876, 82 I.C. 356, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 956, 25 Cr.L.J. 1284; Nritya Gopal, 38 C.L.J. 1, 24 Cr.L.J. 897. The jury is clearly made primarily the tribunal to find the facts, and when they have found them in one direction or other, it is not for the High Court to interfere unless the verdict is unreasonable—Veerappa, 51 Mad. 956, 30 Cr.L.J. 317 (321), 114 I.C. 353, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1186, 28 M.L.W. 575, 55 M.L.J. 591, 1929 M.W.N. 485 (F.B.); Venkatachala Goundan, 33 Cr.L.J. 215, 136 I.C. 33, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 21, 1932 Cr.C. 1; Madan Gopal, 32 Cr.L.J. 1028, 133 I.C. 475, 1931 A.L.J. 695, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 683. The High Court which has not the opportunity to see the witnesses must act with great caution on a reference under this section, and, therefore, it will not ordinarily interfere with the unanimous verdict of the jury, which has been accepted by the Judge with regard to some of the accused—Akbar, 51 Cal. 271 (277). If the High Court is to interfere in every case of doubt, or in every case in which the evidence would have warranted a different verdict, then the real trial by jury would be at an end and the verdict of the jury would have no more weight than the opinions of assessors—Sham Bagdi, 20 W.R. 73.

It is not the practice of the High Court to interfere with a jury-verdict, if it is in any way a reasonable verdict. But if the verdict is unreasonable and perverse, the High Court has not the slightest hesitation in setting it aside—Muhammad Hadi Husain, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 277, 112 I.C. 103, 5 O.W.N. 281, 3 Luck. 494, 29 Cr.L.J. 983 (985). The High Court will not exercise its vast discretionary powers vested under this section in setting aside the unanimous verdict of a jury, unless it is perverse or patently wrong or may have been induced by an error of the Judge—Dhunum, 9 Cal. 53; Panna Lal, 46 All. 265 (267), 22 A.L.J. 162; McCarthy, 9 All. 420; Mania Dayal, 10 Bom. 497; Dada, 15 Bom. 452 (461); Devji Govindji, 20 Bom. 215 (218); Walker, 26 Bom.L.R. 610, A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 450, 83 I.C. 995, 26 Cr.L.J. 211; Nritya Gopal, 38 C.L.J. 1; Jacquet, 11 Cal. 85; Asgar, 22 C.W.N. 811; Sagermal, 28 C.W.N. 947, 40 C.L.J. 135; Hara Mohan, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 848, 105 I.C. 231, 28 Cr.L.J. 903, 54 Cal. 708. In disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jury the High Court has to consider whether the jurors were entirely unreasonable in the conclusion arrived at by them or whether it was impossible for the jurors to say that the guilt of the accused had been proved. The High Court does not exercise the power vested under this section in setting aside the verdict of the jury, unless it is perverse or patently wrong, and is convinced that in giving effect to the same it would not meet the ends of justice—Nibharesh Mandal Mohar Mandal, 39 Cr.L.J. 479 (480), 174 I.C. 803, A.I.R. 1938 Cal 295, 66 C.L.J. 351, 10 R.C. 726. A High Court will not interfere under this section upon any mere preponderance of evidence, but will only do so when it is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the verdict of the jurors or the majority of the jury is so distinctly against the weight of evidence on the record that it may be unhesitatingly described as a perverse verdict or unless it is clearly established that the jurors were wholly led astray in their conclusions upon the case. In a reference under this section the High Court has to form and act upon its view of what the evidence in its opinion proves, but in doing so it will no doubt give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge no less than to the verdict of the jury—Chheda, 34 Cr.L.J. 795 (796), 144 I.C. 582, 10 O.W.N. 234, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 181, 1933 Cr.C. 384, 8 Luck. 439, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 270. The High Court has to give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and to the opinion (verdict) of the jury. The measures of the relative weight to be attached to these two factors cannot be crystallised into an inflexible formula. The answer must depend upon the circumstances of each case. But the trend of judicial opinion has been in favour of preference of the unanimous verdict of the jury. If the verdict is not unanimous, the weight to be attached to it is necessarily diminished; but if the verdict is unanimous, the High Court should not interfere with it unless it is clearly wrong or perverse or unreasonable, that is, the High Court must come to the conclusion, before it interferes, not merely that it would have come to a different decision from that of the jury, but that no reasonable man could have arrived at that decision—Dhananjay, 38 C.L.J. 384, 25 Cr.L.J. 758, 81 I.C. 246, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 321, 51 Cal. 347 (353); Jamaldi, 51 Cal. 160 (165), 28 C.W.N. 536, Kankaya, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 308, 95 I.C. 309, 22 N.L.R. 42, 27 Cr.L.J. 733; Ramadhan Brahmin v. Emp., A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 36, 29 Cr.L.J. 963 (964), 112 I.C. 51; Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 662; Nashai Sardar, 56 C.L.J. 19, 1932 Cr.C. 648 (650), Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 439, 33 Cr.L.J. 593, 138 I.C. 278, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 656; Bas Lali, 34 Bom.L.R. 896, 33 Cr.L.J. 745, 139 I.C. 272, Ind. Rul. 1932 Bom. 490; Jhina Soma, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 457 (460), 41 Bom.L.R. 965; Ram Dass, 137 I.C. 346, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 233, 9 O.W.N. 301, 33 Cr.L.J. 465; Panna Lal, 46 All. 265 (267), 22 A.L.J. 162, 25 Cr.L.J. 931; Nagar Ali, 56 Cal. 132, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 287, 116 I.C. 171, 30 Cr.L.J. 584 (585), 32 C.W.N. 952. There are, no doubt, a number of cases in which it has been held that as a matter of practice the High Court will not set aside the unanimous verdict of a jury unless it is perverse or patently wrong. But the trend of more recent cases is to stress the fact that the discretionary powers of the High Court are really untrammelled under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., and that it can exercise all the powers of an Appellate Court and the whole case is open to it—Dattu Deoman v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 33 (35), 38 Cr.L.J. 355, 167 I.C. 241, 9 R.N. 170. The High Court will not interfere on a reference under this section unless that Court is of opinion that the verdict of the jury could not be supported by the evidence on the record—Govind Singh, 5 Pat. 573, 98 I.C. 252, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 525, 8 P.L.T. 133, 27 Cr.L.J. 1308. The High Court will not interfere upon any mere preponderance of evidence, unless it is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the verdict is so distinctly against the evidence that it may be termed a perverse verdict—Pamanna, 2 Weir 388 (389); Asgar, 22 C.W.N. 811, 20 Cr.L.J. 20; Mofizel, 29 C.W.N. 842, 89 I.C. 242, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 909, 26 Cr.L.J. 1298; Shanoo, 22 C.W.N. 1028, 20 Cr.L.J. 223; Chheda, 10 O.W.N. 234, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 181, 144 I.C. 582, 34 Cr.L.J. 795, 8 Luck. 439, 1933 Cr.C. 384. It is not the practice of the High Court to interfere in case of acquittal by jury, unless the acquittal stands out as patently bad. If the verdict is patently bad and amazingly perverse, in as much as the jury have overlooked the overwhelming evidence for the prosecution and accepted the slight evidence adduced by the defence, the High Court will interfere—Maharaj Behari, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 86, 108 I.C. 900, 5 O.W.N. 216, 3 Luck. 456, 29 Cr.L.J. 452 (453); Jukhan, 27 A.L.J. 509, 119 I.C. 443, A.I.R. 1929 All. 338, Ind. Rul. 1929 All. 1019, 30 Cr.L.J. 1078.

(1079). See also Monibala Dassi, 41 C.W.N. 610. If persons are put on their trial before juries, on questions of fact the decisions of the jury should always be accepted, unless it is possible to demonstrate that the acquittals have been arrived at perversely. The Court will be unsympathetic to this type of reference unless it is shown unmistakably that the jury failed to do their duty in considering the evidence brought before them properly—Sherali Badyakar, 38 Cr.L.J. 758, 169 IC 342, 63 C.L.J. 140. In cases where there has been a verdict of not guilty it is the practice of the High Court not to reverse the verdict of a jury unless it is perverse or manifestly wrong. On the other hand, where the jury has returned the verdict of guilty, the matter stands on a different footing. It is true that the jury are judges of fact; it is open to them to believe or to disbelieve witnesses. No doubt the verdict of a jury, especially when it is unanimous, should not be lightly displaced. But having regard to the language of sec 307, Cr. P. C., and having regard to the duty which is enjoined upon the High Court and the powers which are conferred upon it thereunder, it cannot be said that, so long as the verdict is not perverse or palpably erroneous, the High Court must act against its own judgment and in the teeth, as it were, of its own appreciation of the evidence must convict a person in respect to whose guilt it entertains grave doubts. It is unreasonable to suppose that after being enjoined with the duty of "considering the entire evidence and giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury" the High Court should be thus fettered to the prejudice of the accused. It is the clear duty of the High Court in the interests of justice to reverse the verdict of a jury when it considers that the prosecution has failed to establish the charge and that the verdict of the jury is not sustainable upon the evidence—Bansi, 39 Cr.L.J. 559 (561), 1938 A.L.J. 282, I.L.R. 1938 All. 483, 175 IC 130, 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 217, 1938 A.Cr.C. 20, 10 R.A. 645, 1938 A.L.R. 281, A.I.R. 1938 All. 227. Section 307 (3), Cr. P. C., imposes upon the High Court in the clearest terms the duty of considering the entire evidence and of giving due weight to opinions of both the Judge and the jury—Maja Khan, 66 C.L.J. 500 (510). The High Court has undoubted jurisdiction to disregard the verdict of the jury and to convict the accused if it is of opinion that the verdict of the jury was perverse—Sri Kishan, A.I.R. 1935 All. 970, 1935 A.L.J. 1019, 37 Cr.L.J. 135, 159 IC 621, 1935 Cr.C. 1193. On a reference to the High Court to set aside a unanimous verdict of conviction, the High Court will interfere where the prosecution has not adequately proved its case and where the facts are suspicious, and will give the benefit of doubt to the accused—Yakub, 30 C.W.N. 859, 98 IC 413, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1034, 27 Cr.L.J. 1341. In dealing with a unanimous verdict of acquittal, the High Court will have to consider whether the jury were entirely unreasonable in giving the benefit of doubt to the accused, and whether it was impossible for the jury to arrive at any other reasonable conclusion than that the guilt of the accused had not been brought home to them—Golam Kadir, 28 C.W.N. 876, 82 IC 356, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 956, 25 Cr.L.J. 1284. In references under this section where acquittals are concerned, there is a much greater onus upon the Sessions Judge to convince an appellate Court with extreme particularity than there is when he makes a reference with regard to a conviction. The Judge has absolutely no right to put up to the High Court a report which is intended to substitute his judgment on a pure question of fact, rather than the judgment and opinion of the jury, who was sitting with him—Gosha Sardar, 37 Cr.L.J. 1149, 165 IC 438, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 407, 1936 Cr.C. 670, 9 R.C. 400.

In Barwick, 13 Lah. 573, 1932 Cr.C. 426 (430), Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 181, 136 IC 5, 33 Cr.L.J. 220, 33 P.L.R. 443, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 345, the Lahore High Court holds that the High Court cannot refuse to interfere merely because it is not shown that the verdict was perverse or wrong or unreasonable. The same view was taken in the earlier Calcutta decisions of Lyall, 29 Cal 128, and Annada Charan Thakur, 36 Cal 629. The Patna High Court also takes the same view in Rafi Mian, 11 Pat 669, 1932 Cr.C. 643 (644), 33 Cr.L.J. 877, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 246, 13 P.L.T. 418, 139 IC 885, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 269.

939. Power of High Court:—Section 307, Cr P C, makes no distinction between cases of acquittal and conviction. But in dealing with the weight and volume of evidence the two cases differ, because of the presumption of innocence. Where a jury have convicted the High Court has to see not merely that there is evidence of guilt, but that the evidence is strong enough to preclude any reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury as to the guilt of the accused—Dagadu, 34 Cr.L.J. 660, 143 I.C. 495, 35 Bom.L.R. 193, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 144, 1933 Cr.C. 331, Ind. Rul. 1933 Bom. 276. In case of a reference under this section the High Court is to give weight not only to the opinion of the jury but to that of the Judge as well—Ncamatulla, 17 C.W.N. 1077; Bhullotan; 23 Cr.L.J. 11, 6 P.L.J. 264; Mamundra, 41 Cal. 754; Lyall, 29 Cal. 128 (133); Iswari, 15 Cal. 259. But although the High Court is bound in dealing with a reference under this section to give due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury, still it is not bound in any way by these opinions, and the question whether the decision in the case is to be for acquittal or for conviction is entirely open to the High Court and left open to it to decide after consideration of the evidence and the opinions of the Judge and the jury—Nanni Kudumban, 45 M.L.J. 406, 76 I.C. 289, 18 M.L.W. 482, 1923 M.W.N. 695, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 232, 25 Cr.L.J. 145; Dada, 15 Bom. 452; Annada Charam Thakur, 36 Cal. 629; Abdul Rahaman, 9 C.L.J. 432, 10 Cr.L.J. 57; Barwick, 13 Lah. 573, 1932 Cr.C. 426 (429). When once a reference is made to the High Court, the language of the Code does not justify any undue preference being given to the opinion of the jury over that of the Judge. The High Court has to weigh both the opinions and consider the entire evidence on the record just as it would consider in any criminal matter coming before it for decision—Ramcharan, 27 O.C. 29, 11 O.L.J. 210, 81 I.C. 305, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 314, 25 Cr.L.J. 785; Ramchandra, 55 Cal. 879, 29 Cr.L.J. 823 (825), 111 I.C. 327, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 732.

The Bombay High Court has held that the whole case is open to the High Court when hearing a reference, and in dealing with the reference the High Court exercises all the powers which it exercises on appeal—Shankar Balkrishna, 47 Bom. 31 (32), 24 Bom.L.R. 484, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 368, 76 I.C. 1035, 25 Cr.L.J. 315. This is also the view of the Nagpur High Court—Dattu Deomon v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 33 (35), 38 Cr.L.J. 355, 167 I.C. 241, 9 R.N. 170; Sakhawat v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 330 (332), A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 50, 167 I.C. 61, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 277; Dattatraya Sadashiv v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 17 (28), 186 I.C. 402, 41 Cr.L.J. 289, I.L.R. 1940 Nag. 394 (F.B.). The Calcutta High Court is also of this opinion, and therefore where the Judge agreed with the jury on a verdict of not guilty in respect of one of the charges, and disagreed with the jury on a verdict of not guilty in respect of the other charge, and made a reference under section 307 in respect of the latter charge, held that the whole case was open to the High Court for consideration and that it could find the accused guilty in respect of the charge on which the Judge had agreed with the jury in the verdict of acquittal—Dwarika Nath, 60 Cal. 427, 37 C.W.N. 91 (93), 34 Cr.L.J. 164, 141 I.C. 578, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 47, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 138, 1933 Cr.C. 61 (distinguishing Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 662 and Profulla, 50 Cal. 41). But a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has laid down that on a reference under sec. 307, the whole matter is not re-opened and the High Court cannot try the case as if there had been no trial; but the High Court should only confine itself to the question whether the Judge's view of the verdict is justified by the evidence, and if it is not, to confirm the verdict—Veerappa, 51 Mad. 956, 30 Cr.L.J. 317 (321), 114 I.C. 353, 28 M.L.W. 575, 55 M.L.J. 591, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1185, 1929 M.W.N. 185, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 273 (F.B.), overruling Ranni Kadumban, 45 M.L.J. 406, 76 I.C. 289, 18 M.L.W. 482, 1923 M.W.N. 695, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 232, 25 Cr.L.J. 145. See also Venkatachala Goundan, 33 Cr.L.J. 215, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 21, 1932 Cr.C. 1, 136 I.C. 33.

The High Court can exercise all the powers of an Appellate Court, and consequently can convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. See Dwarika Nath, supra; and sec. 423 (1) (a).

The words "subject thereto" in sub-section (3) do not mean that the powers of the High Court are subject to the limitations and provisions contained in sec. 423 (2). Therefore it is open to the High Court, on a reference under sec. 307, to reverse the verdict of the jury, even though there has not been any misdirection by the Judge or any misunderstanding by the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge. This section gives the High Court a power to reconsider the entire evidence, and to arrive at an independent conclusion of its own on the question of fact as well as of law in the interests of justice. The High Court, when acting under sec. 307, is clothed with the powers as regards procedure, of a Court of Appeal, if for good reasons it desires to exercise any of them, e.g., a power to release the accused on bail under sec. 426, or to take additional evidence or direct it to be taken under sec. 428—Shera, 50 All. 625, 26 A.L.J. 321, 29 Cr.L.J. 353 (356, 357), A.I.R. 1928 All. 207, 108 I.C. 225; Bansi, 39 Cr.L.J. 559 (561), 1938 A.L.J. 282, I.L.R. 1938 All. 483, 175 I.C. 130, 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 217, 1938 A.Cr.C. 20, 10 R.A. 645, 1938 A.L.R. 381, A.I.R. 1938 All. 227. The High Court is entitled to go into the evidence irrespective of whether there is any misdirection or misunderstanding of the law or not—Dullu Kuer, A.I.R. 1910 Pat. 513 (514), 6 B.R. 465, 187 I.C. 387, 41 Cr.L.J. 457, 1940 P.W.N. 466. In cases coming under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., the Judge who hears the evidence is in the first instance of the opinion that the verdict is wrong, and if the Appellate Court is also of the same opinion, it is empowered to set aside the verdict. But when the case comes by way of an appeal under sec. 418, Cr. P. C., where the Judge himself has not differed, the Legislature has provided that there should be no interference by the Appellate Court with the verdict of the jury, unless there has been either a misdirection or misunderstanding mentioned therein—Manjia v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 465 (467), 167 I.C. 802, 9 R.A. 578, 1936 A.W.R. 1284, 1937 A.Cr.C. 11, 1937 A.L.J. 43, I.L.R. 1937 All. 419, 1937 A.L.R. 250, A.I.R. 1937 All. 195. The duty of the High Court is to consider the whole of the evidence, and the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, and thereupon to exercise all the powers of a Court of Appeal. The duty of an Appellate Court, where an appeal is allowed on questions of fact, is to throw upon those, who seek to disturb the verdict of the jury or other first tribunal of fact, the onus of showing that the verdict is wrong. But if the party so seeking succeeds in demonstrating that the verdict is wrong, the Court has full power to reverse the verdict—Rafi Mian, 11 Pat. 669, 1932 Cr.C. 643 (647), 33 Cr.L.J. 877, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 246.

In a reference under this section three possible courses can be taken: the High Court may, having considered the evidence and the opinions and having supplemented this material in any way open to it, (1) agree with the jury's opinion, (2) disagree with the jury's opinion but consider that that opinion is not manifestly perverse, (3) conclude that the jury's opinion is perverse. In the first case put, the High Court will dispose of the case in accordance with the jury's opinion. In the second case put, the High Court will direct a new trial or acquit. In the third case put, the High Court will dispose of the case by acquitting or convicting as the case may be. If the High Court is not absolutely certain that the jury's opinion is wrong but is of opinion that it is wrong the proper course is to accept that opinion, or possibly in certain circumstances to order a new trial. If the High Court inclines to an opinion that the jury is wrong but has no decided opinion one way or the other the right course is to accept the jury's opinion (Per Stone C.J. and Grille J.). The majority view is (1) that the High Court can interfere when the verdict of the jury is perverse and (2), that it ought not to do so unless it is perverse. This is placed as a matter of practice and not as one of law. The High Court has, however, power to interfere when the verdict is perverse and that this power is expressly conferred upon it by sec. 307 read with secs. 418 and 423, Cr. P. C., and secondly, that not only ought it not to do so when the verdict, whether of guilty or not guilty is not perverse, but that it has no power to do so under the law. This result follows from the same set of sections—Dattatraya Sadashiv v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 17 (29, 30), 41 Cr.L.J. 289, 186 I.C. 402 (F.B.).

The High Court cannot consider any question on which the Judge and the jury are agreed—Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 662, 15 Cr.L.J. 155. So also, the High Court cannot consider any question on which the Judge had accepted the verdict of the jury, although he did not agree with them—Prafulla Kumar Majumdar, 51 Cal. 41. Although the High Court can consider the entire evidence, still it should not ignore the verdict of the jury on a question of fact. Unless there is an astounding reason for it, the verdict of the jury on a question of fact will not be set aside. The mere fact that another view of the evidence might be taken is not enough—Punit Cham, 3 P.L.T. 413, 23 Cr.L.J. 421, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 348.

Retrial:—Under sub-sec. (3), sec. 307, the High Court has ample power in a case, in which there has been no proper or adequate trial, to make an order that the accused persons should be re-tried—Rafiqueuddin, 36 Cr.L.J. 808 (813), 155 I.C. 687, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 184, 39 C.W.N. 368, 1935 Cr.C. 241, 62 Cal. 572, 7 R.C. 606 (F.B.); Mahomed Adam Chohan, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 60 (62), 38 Bom.L.R. 1186, 38 Cr.L.J. 327, 167 I.C. 43, 9 R.B. 274..

Power to convict for offence not charged:—Ordinarily the High Court cannot convict the accused for any offence with which he was not charged—Madan Mandal, 41 Cal. 662. But the combined effect of this section read with sec. 238 is that the High Court may, in dealing with a case coming before it under this section, convict an accused for a minor offence, although he was not charged with such offence—Sitanath, 22 Cal. 1006. And a Sessions Judge accepting the jury's finding on the grave charges can make a reference to High Court with the object of having some of the accused convicted on minor charges—Hari, 37 C.L.J. 34, 24 Cr.L.J. 674, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 108. But where in a case of offence under sec. 147, I. P. C., the common object assigned in the charge as framed to support the case has not been sustained, the High Court on a reference under sec. 307 of this Code cannot invent another common object in order to support the conviction—Akbar, 51 Cal. 271 (275), 25 Cr.L.J. 773, 81 I.C. 261, 38 C.L.J. 379, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 449.

Jurors acting on private knowledge:—Where jurors were influenced by their private knowledge based on what they had heard outside Court and there were also indications in the course of the trial that they were biased in favour of the prosecution, the verdict could not be sustained—Dharanidhar, 35 Cr.L.J. 1311, 151 I.C. 365, 59 C.L.J. 15, 1934 Cr.C. 669, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 432.

939A. No appeal from High Court:—A High Court in dealing with a reference under this section is not acting in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction but only as a Court of reference in a criminal matter—Horace Lyall, 29 Cal. 286; and therefore no appeal lies from its judgment passed under this section—Adveppa, Ratanlal 691.

939B. Custody of the accused:—It is quite wrong to release persons accused of an offence under sec. 302, I. P. C., on bail even during the pendency of the trial or during the course of the trial, and it is therefore still more wrong that they should be released on bail after they had been convicted of such a serious offence by the unanimous verdict of the jury even though the Sessions Judge disagreed with the verdict of the jury and made up his mind to refer the matter to the High Court. In such circumstances it is desirable that the convicted persons should be held in custody pending the final decision of the High Court—Benet Pramanick, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 407 (412), 36 Cr.L.J. 944, 156 I.C. 481, 39 C.W.N. 954, 1935 Cr.C. 630, 62 Cal. 900.

G.—Re-trial of Accused after Discharge of Jury.

308. Whenever the jury is discharged, the accused shall be detained in custody or on bail (as the case may be), and shall be tried by another jury, unless the Judge considers that he should not be re-tried, in case the Judge shall make an entry to that effect on the charge, and such entry shall operate as an acquittal.

940. If a jury is discharged in the course of a trial for misconduct, the Judge should hold a fresh trial before another jury newly empanelled—Rahim Sheikh, 50 Cal. 827, 37 C.L.J. 595, 24 Cr.L.J. 677, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 724 (cited under sec. 282).

Where a jury has returned a verdict of not guilty and the Judge disagrees with the jury and discharges them, and then passes an order under sec. 308 making an entry to the effect that no retrial is necessary and that the accused be acquitted, it is not open to the Judge, in making the order under sec. 308, to pass remarks, implying the guilt of the accused (who is a police officer) and suggesting for the consideration of the Police Department that severe departmental action should be taken against him. The accused, being acquitted, is entitled to the benefit of the order of acquittal and all the consequences which it implies—Ahmad Shah, 23 S.L.R. 397, 30 Cr.L.J. 877 (878), 118 I.C. 195, Ind. Rul. 1929 Sind 163, A.I.R. 1929 Sind 145.

* This section does not affect the construction of sec. 403. An accused who is re-tried under this section is not 'tried again' within the meaning of sec. 403 but is being tried on the original indictment and on his original plea of not guilty. Section 403, therefore, does not bar the retrial held under this section—Nirmal Kanta, 41 Cal. 1072.

H.—Conclusion of Trial in Cases tried with Assessors.

309. (1) When, in a case tried with the aid of assessors, ^{Delivery of opinions of assessors} the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court may sum up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and shall then require each of the assessors to state his opinion orally on all the charges on which the accused has been tried, and shall record such opinion, and for that purpose may ask the assessors such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their opinions are. All such questions and the answers to them shall be recorded.

(2) The Judge shall then give judgment, but in doing so ^{Judgment.} shall not be bound to conform to the opinions of the assessors.

(3) If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of section 562, pass sentence on him according to law.

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 82 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "This amendment assimilates the procedure by which assessors give their opinion to that adopted for ascertaining the verdict of the jury, namely, by question and answer"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

941. Summing up:—The object of summing up the evidence is to enable the Sessions Judge, in long and intricate cases, to place the evidence in an intelligible form, so as to assist the assessors in arriving at a reasonable conclusion, and not to give the Judge an opportunity of expressing his opinion in emphatic terms on every single matter put in evidence—Sadulla Hawladar, 9 Cal. 875. In summing up the evidence to the assessors the Judge should not, as he may do in charging the jury, express any opinion upon any question of facts arising in the case—Tirumal, 24 Mad. 523 (536); Dewan Singh, 22 Cal. 805. He should not obtrude on the assessors his own opinion on the worthlessness or otherwise of the evidence, because the assessors might become embarrassed in coming to an independent opinion of their own in the face of the very decided opinion expressed by him—Shadulla, 9 Cal. 875. But a discussion and statement of points by a Judge with the assessors with the object of getting the best assistance for the proper adjudication of the case are not improper, as the real object of appointing assessors is to assist the Court—Ameeruddeen, 15 W.R. 25. In a case of rioting, where the dispute arises over the possession of a piece of land and the Crown admits the possession of the accused, and the accused themselves urge the plea of private defence, it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to explain to the assessors the legal aspect of the plea put forward by the accused, and to direct their attention to it by putting specific questions to them on the point—Sunder Baksh, 3 P.L.J. 653, 19 Cr.L.J. 983.

Record of summing up :—The Sessions Judge should not ask the public prosecutor to record the substance of his summing up to the assessors. If the Judge himself is incapable of recording it, he should avail himself of the services of some Court Officer or some independent person—Shadulla, 9 Cal. 875.

942. Opinions of assessors :—A trial is altogether bad if the assessors are not asked and are apparently not allowed to give their opinions in the case—Nazimuddi, 40 Cal. 163, 13 Cr.L.J. 497. See also Bhikkari, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 561, 15 P.L.T. 523, 1934 Cr.C. 1215, 13 Pat. 729, 152 I.C. 282, 36 Cr.L.J. 17. If a Sessions Judge decides a case without inviting the opinions of the assessors, he virtually holds the trial without the aid of assessors, and his finding or sentence will be without jurisdiction—Tinmal, 24 Mad. 523 (535). Even if he considers the evidence untrustworthy or unsatisfactory or inconsistent, he is bound to consult the opinions of the assessors; otherwise he acts without jurisdiction—Kassa Mal v. Munna Lal, 10 All. 414. Where in a Sessions trial the accused first pleaded not guilty, but in the course of her examination after the completion of the prosecution evidence, she pleaded guilty, and thereupon the Judge without taking the opinion of the assessors found her guilty and sentenced her, held that it was the duty of the Judge to proceed with the trial as provided for by this section and hear the defence and take the opinions of the assessors—Bai Nani, 7 Bom.L.R. 731, 2 Cr.L.J. 609.

"The opinions of the assessors should be recorded separately. It is not, in the Court's opinion, sufficient that this record should contain a mere verdict of guilty or not guilty, or proven or not proven; what the Court requires is not only the result arrived at by each assessor sitting on a Sessions trial, but if possible, the reasons by which each assessor arrived at the result—that is, the grounds of his opinion. While avoiding prolixity, a Sessions Judge should be careful to be intelligible and precise in recording such opinions"—Cal G R & C. O., p. 26.

Each of the Assessors :—The opinions of all the assessors should be taken. Where the Judge took the opinions of two only of the assessors, the trial was illegal and not merely irregular—Rama Krishna, 26 Mad. 598. The opinion of each assessor is to be recorded in his own words—Fatu Santal, 6 P.L.J. 147, 22 Cr.L.J. 417. Each assessor should be required to state his opinion individually. The Judge should not receive the joint opinion of all the assessors, delivered through one of them—Hassan Khan, 41 P.R. 1887. See also Khewna, 30 Cr.L.J. 378, 115 I.C. 66, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 37, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 322, and Ditta, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 23, 28 S.L.R. 295, 1935 Cr.C. 118, 154 I.C. 138, 36 Cr.L.J. 504.

The assessors are to give their opinions orally, and not in writing, or in the form of a judgment—Lalit, 39 Cal. 119 (122), 13 Cr.L.J. 433; Shadulla, 9 Cal. 875.

On all the Charges :—This section makes it obligatory on the Sessions Judge to require each of the Assessors to state his opinion orally on all the charges on which the accused has been tried and to record such opinion. The words "on all the charges" have been interpreted to mean that distinct opinion on each charge must be taken and recorded—Shevanti, 29 Cr.L.J. 561 (565), 109 I.C. 497, A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 257, following Queen v. Matam Mal, 22 W.R. 34 (Cr.). The accused are entitled to have the opinion of the Assessors recorded on all the charges framed against them, and the failure of the Sessions Judge to comply with the imperative provisions of this section in not having recorded the opinion of the assessors as regards one of the charges, prejudices the accused in their defence on the merits—Lal Behari, 150 I.C. 509, 11 O.W.N. 831, 1934 Cr.C. 1049, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 354, 35 Cr.L.J. 1066 (1070). See also Notes in para 944.

Consultation between assessors :—There is no provision in this Code authorizing a Judge to allow or forbidding him to allow consultation between the assessors. The Judge may allow one assessor to consult his co-assessors before giving his opinion; but a refusal to allow such a course does not amount to any irregularity, because the Judge is entitled to have before him each assessor's individual and independent opinion—Sennimalai, 2 L.W. 933, 16 Cr.L.J. 717, 30 I.C. 1005.

Grounds of opinion :—It is very desirable that the assessors should be invited and encouraged by Judges to state briefly the grounds of their opinions as well as the result—Mahadu, 2 Bom.L.R. 322; Fakira, 2 Bom.L.R. 323. When the opinion formed by the Judge differs from the opinions formed by the assessors, he should always ascertain the grounds of the assessor's opinions—Minnat, 3 W.R. 6; Bushmo, 3 W.R. 21; Guranditta, 1905 P.R. 48, 3 Cr.L.J. 132. According to the Madras High Court, the Judge is not justified in asking an assessor the reasons of his opinion—Kunnammal Krishnan, 1931 M.W.N. 1139.

When opinion may be dispensed with :—When there is absolutely no evidence to show that the offence has been committed by the accused, the Judge can abstain from taking the opinions of the assessors—Anonymous, 2 Weir 388 (391). See sec. 289. But the Judge cannot do so, simply because he considers the evidence unsatisfactory or untrustworthy—Kassa Mal v. Munna Lal, 10 All. 414. When the case is withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor with the consent of the Court, an acquittal should be recorded without taking the opinions of the assessors, or whatever may be their opinions—Chenbasapa, Ratanlal 307.

Reconsidering opinion :—After once summing up the case to the assessors and after taking their opinions, the Judge has no power to re-open the matter and press upon the attention of the assessors a part of the accused's confession, in order to induce them to change their opinions—Tika Ram, 1886 A.W.N. 22.

Taking fresh evidence after opinion :—When the opinions of the assessors have been taken, the trial is at an end, except for the purpose of giving judgment. The Judge has no legal authority to reopen a trial or recall witnesses, and cause fresh evidence to be summoned, and take a second and third opinion from the assessors—Hasan, 1888 P.R. 29; Ram Lal, 15 All. 136; Santa Singh, 35 Cr.L.J. 1002 (1005), 149 I.C. 442, 35 P.L.R. 390, where the adoption of such a procedure was regarded as a mere irregularity not affecting the case as the accused were not prejudiced in any way. Where, after the assessors had given their opinions and had been discharged, the Judge sitting alone took some further evidence in the case before writing judgment, the trial was held to be illegal and was set aside—Jaisukh, 43 All. 25, 22 Cr.L.J. 127. It is the Judge together with the assessors, that constitutes the Court, and not the Judge sitting alone; and all evidence must be recorded by the Judge in the presence of the assessors—Ibid. In a trial for murder in which the soundness of the accused's mind was at issue, the Judge, after taking the opinion of the assessors, reserved judgment and had a private interview with the Civil Surgeon as to the state of mind of the accused. It was held that the procedure was extremely illegal. Instead of discussing with the Civil Surgeon out of Court, the Judge ought to have examined him as a witness in the presence of the assessors—Jai Lal, 1889 A.W.N. 181.

943. Questions to assessors :—Prior to the present amendment, this section did not expressly authorise the Judge to put any question to the assessors, but it was laid down in some cases that if there was anything obscure in their opinions it was open to the Judge to put them such questions as were necessary to elucidate or supplement their opinions—Nasimuddi, 40 Cal. 163; Ramesh Chandra, 41 Cal. 350, 18 C.W.N. 496.

This is now expressly provided for by the present section as amended. But the questions can be asked only after the delivery of the opinion and not before, and for no other purpose except to clear up any obscurity in the verdict. The Judge cannot put questions to the assessors by way of cross-examination—Nazimuddi, supra; Ramesh Chandra, supra.

944. Judgment:—In a trial with assessors it is the duty of the presiding Judge to ascertain the opinion of the assessors after summing-up the evidence to them if he thinks it necessary, and then to deliver a judgment. That judgment must conform to the provisions of sec. 367, Cr. P. C., and must accordingly contain the reasons for the Judge's decision. The section is not complied with if the Judge merely states that he agrees with the opinion of the assessors—Nirmal Kumar Bhowmik v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 835 (836), 177 I.C. 29, 11 R.C. 209, 42 C.W.N. 896, A.I.R. 1938 Cal 551. Where the assessors were unanimously of opinion that the accused were not guilty but the Judge took the remarkable course of convicting the accused on his own view of the facts without giving any reason whatsoever and the evidence was not such that a finding of guilty was the only reasonable or proper finding, the High Court refused to accept the opinion of the Judge as opposed to the unanimous opinion of the jury sitting also as assessors, when no reasons for that opinion were assigned at all—Jogneswar Ghosh, 38 Cr.L.J. 212, 166 I.C. 418, A.I.R. 1936 Cal 527, 40 C.W.N. 1186, 1936 Cr.C. 737, I.L.R. (1937) 1 Cal 306, 65 C.L.J. 351, 9 R.C. 529.

In passing judgment the Judge is not bound to conform to the opinions of the assessors. Although the assessors no doubt assist the Judge and regard must be paid to their opinions—Tirumal, 24 Mad 523, still it is the Judge who is to decide the case on the facts as well as the law, and he is not bound by the assessor's opinions—Shanker, 14 Bom LR 710, 13 Cr.L.J. 677. But the Judge cannot convict the accused for an offence in respect of which the opinions of the assessors were not taken. Thus, the accused was charged with and tried for abetment of murder. The opinion of the assessors was that he was not guilty of the offence charged. The Sessions Judge accepted the opinion, but convicted the accused of causing evidence of murder to disappear under sec. 201, I. P. C. Held that it was imperative on the Judge to have taken the opinions of the assessors on the charge relating to sec. 201, I. P. C. The conviction and sentence must be set aside—Appaya, 25 Bom.L.R. 1318 (1320), 26 Cr.L.J. 394, 84 I.C. 938, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 246. But in the recent case of Ismail, 52 Bom 385, 29 Cr.L.J. 403 (405), Fawcett, J., has expressed the opinion that the case of Appaya, supra, must be regarded as overruled by the Privy Council decision in Begu, 6 Lah 226, 88 I.C. 3, 48 M.L.J. 643, 2 O.W.N. 447, 41 C.L.J. 437, 3 Pat L.R. 95 (Cr.), A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 130, 23 A.L.J. 636, 1925 M.W.N. 418, 7 Lah L.J. 324, 52 I.A. 191, 30 C.W.N. 581, 26 Cr.L.J. 1059 (P.C.), where their Lordships upheld the action of the Sessions Judge in convicting the accused of an offence under sec. 201, I. P. Code, although he was charged with murder. See also Note 942.

It is acting in an unfair manner towards an accused person when he is once acquitted by a jury properly charged by a Judge, that he then should have to be further loaded with a judgment opposed to the verdict of the jury delivered by the Judge who has been unsuccessful in persuading the jury and a judgment in which the jury in their capacity as assessors also refused to agree with him. It may be legal according to the Criminal Procedure Code but it is not an equitable form of process and it is desirable that the prosecuting authorities in the district would not be encouraged to pursue this form of double prosecution to make things more difficult for the ends of justice—Cheru Sheikh, 40 C.W.N. 1374 (1376). See also Jogneswar Ghosh, supra.

The omission of the Sessions Judge to make any reference to the opinion of the assessors is certainly contrary to the usual practice. It does not, however, vitiate the trial but is merely an omission in the judgment which can be cured by the application of the provisions of sec. 537, Cr. P. C., unless it has occasioned a failure of justice—Anup Singh, 35 Cr.L.J. 168, 146 I.C. 677, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 910, 1933 Cr.C. 1297.

Sentence:—Under sec. 309, Cr. P. C., the Judge is bound to pass a sentence on each of the charges of which the accused is found by him to be guilty and his refusal to prescribe the punishments in respect of all the charges is, therefore, illegal—Gul Mahmud Shah v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 686, 182 I.C. 572, A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 23, following Diwan Singh, 22 Cal. 805 (809).

Cancellation of trial:—The accused were committed to the Sessions on a certain charge. At the commencement of the trial, two more charges were added. The trial then proceeded up to the point where the assessors' opinions were taken. The Judge reserved judgment but in writing it, he was of opinion that one of the charges was improperly added, and he therefore cancelled that trial and held a fresh trial. It was held that the second trial was invalid, because the trial Judge had no authority to cancel or set aside the trial which had been originally held; and the assessors' opinions having been recorded, he had no option but to give his judgment in accordance with this section—Nathu, 17 Bom.L.R. 1074, 16 Cr.L.J. 824.

I.—Procedure in Case of Previous Conviction.

310. In the case of a trial by a jury or with the aid of assessors, when the accused is charged with an offence and further charged that he is by reason of a previous conviction liable to enhanced punishment or to punishment of a different kind for such subsequent offence, the procedure prescribed by the foregoing provisions of this Chapter shall be modified as follows, namely:—

- (a) Such further charge shall not be read out in Court and the accused shall not be asked to plead thereto, nor shall the same be referred to by the prosecution, or any evidence adduced thereon unless and until,
 - (i) he has been convicted of the subsequent offence,
 - or*
 - (ii) the jury have delivered their verdict, or the opinions of the assessors have been recorded, on the charge of the subsequent offence.
- (b) In the case of a trial held with the aid of assessors, the Court may, in its discretion, proceed or refrain from proceeding with the trial of the accused on the charge of the previous conviction.

Change:—This section has been redrafted by sec. 83 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The old section stood as follows:—

"310. In the case of trial by jury or with the aid of assessors, where the accused is charged with an offence committed after previous conviction for any offence, the procedure laid down in sections 271, 286, 305, 306 and 309 shall be modified as follows:—

- (a) The part of the charge stating the previous conviction shall not be read out in Court, nor shall the accused be asked whether he had been previously convicted as alleged in the charge, unless and until he has either pleaded guilty to, or been convicted of, the subsequent offence;
- (b) If he pleads guilty to, or is convicted of, the subsequent offence, he shall then be asked whether he has been previously convicted as alleged in the charge;
- (c) If he answers that he has been so previously convicted, the Judge may proceed to pass sentence on him accordingly; but, if he denies that he has been so previously convicted, or refuses to, or does not, answer such question, the jury or the Court and the assessors (as the case may be) shall then hear evidence concerning such previous conviction, and in such case (where the trial is by jury), it shall not be necessary to swear the jurors again."

It should be noted that clause (b) of the present section is entirely new. This clause has been added in order to avoid the inconvenience which may at present arise in cases tried by assessors whose opinion is not binding on the Judge. Under the amendment, in any trial held with the aid of assessors, the Court is given a discretion to proceed or refrain from proceeding with the trial of the accused on the charge of the previous conviction—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

945. Scope and object of section:—This section applies to trial before a Court of Session and not to trials before a Magistrate—Delhi Sonar, 50 Cal 367. The law as to the taking of evidence of previous conviction in a trial before a Magistrate has been enacted in the new section 255A.

In a case where it is intended to prove previous convictions for the purpose of enhanced punishment, the trial is in effect divided into two parts, firstly, the trial for the subsequent offence and the opinion of the assessors thereon, and secondly, if the accused be convicted of that subsequent offence, there is, what amounts to a trial on the charge of previous convictions on account of which the accused is liable to receive enhanced punishment. The second part of the trial, of course, may be very short, but it is nevertheless to be kept as something apart and separate from the first part of the trial in the sense that it shall not be allowed to influence the assessors or jurors in their opinion as to the guilt of the accused for the subsequent offence for which the accused is at first to be tried. Where the statement of the accused in the lower Court relating to the previous convictions and the subsequent offence is treated as a whole and read out at one time to the accused, the procedure is clearly contrary to the provisions of sec. 310, Cr. P. C., and though it is true that under sec. 221 (7), Cr. P. C., the charge must contain details of the previous convictions which it is intended to prove for the purpose of enhanced punishment, that section must be read subject to sec. 310, Cr. P. C., and the accused must not be prejudiced in his trial for the subsequent offence by a recital of his previous convictions. Furthermore, it is necessary that as an accused in order to be convicted of the subsequent offence must also be convicted upon evidence which is legally admissible and which must justify his committal to the Sessions Court, so on a charge of previous convictions, there must be evidence in the Committing Magistrate's Court which must justify the charge based on previous convictions on which the accused is also to be committed to the Court of Session. Before an accused can be questioned about previous convictions, there must be evidence legally admissible upon the record which shows that he has committed these previous offences about which he is examined by the Court; and legally admissible evidence as to previous convictions must fall either within sec. 511, Cr. P. C., or sec. 51, Evidence Act—Ghous Baksh Muhammad Amin v. Emp., 40 Cr. L. J. 770, 183 I.C. 219, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 203, following Bhurasing v. Emp., 29 S.L.R. 121 (157), 158 I.C. 282, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 115, 36 Cr. L. J. 1310 and Yasin, infra.

The object of this section in prohibiting the proof of previous conviction to be put in until the accused is convicted is to prevent the accused from being prejudiced at the trial—Maung E Gyi, 1 Rang 520. Therefore, where in the course of a trial a witness was allowed to say that he had heard that the accused was an old offender, the verdict was set aside, because the improper statement of the witness might have influenced the verdict of the jury—Jhinguri, 1890 A.W.N. 12. The provisions of this section are imperative and must be strictly complied with. Where the charge in regard to the previous convictions and the portion of the statement of the accused before the committing Magistrate admitting such previous convictions were read to the assessors before the conclusion of the trial for the present offence, the trial was vitiated—Teka Ahir, 22 Cr. L. J. 719, 5 P.L.J. 706; Raju, 28 Cr. L. J. 667 (668), 103 I.C. 203, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 774; Ghous Baksh Muhammad Amin v. Emp., supra. A Judge's direction to the jury to consider proof of previous conviction as evidence regarding the character of prisoner amounts to a misdirection—Roshun, 5 Cal 768. It is contrary to the elementary principles of British Criminal Jurisprudence that any evidence of a previous conviction should be allowed to be adduced in the course of a trial, save in a few well-defined and exceptional circumstances—Parbati, 58 C.L.J. 1 (7).

946. Previous conviction:—The previous conviction referred to in this section must be a conviction within British India. A conviction outside British India (e.g., in Berar) does not fall within the purview of this section, and cannot be taken into account for the purpose of affecting the punishment on a second conviction in British India. But it is not absolutely improper, however, to take such conviction into consideration—Lalsingh, 7 C.P.L.R. 24.

The charge alleging the previous conviction need not show the amount of the former punishment—Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App. 11.

If the accused admits that he had been previously convicted, the Judge is justified under this section in passing sentence upon such admission—Yasin, 28 Cal. 689; Subramanian, 1916 M.W.N. 327, 17 Cr.L.J. 288; especially when the Magistrate passes a sentence which is legal even without proof of the previous conviction—Subramanian, supra. But if he does not plead to the charge of previous conviction, it can be proved by the procedure laid down in sec. 311.

946A. Registered member of criminal tribe:—The fact that an accused is a registered member of a criminal tribe under the Act is like a previous conviction, a matter from which bad character can be inferred and which may affect the sentence. It should be treated in the same way as the fact of a previous conviction by not being disclosed to the jury until after the verdict lest their minds should be prejudiced—Mosakeb Dome v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 14 (15), 40 Cr.L.J. 833, 183 I.C. 660, 1939 P.W.N. 627.

311. Notwithstanding anything in the last foregoing section, evidence of the previous conviction may be given at the trial for the subsequent offence, if the fact of the previous conviction is relevant under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

946B. In a trial of offences under secs 395 and 402, I. P. C., the evidence of previous conviction is not permissible under sec. 54 of the Evidence Act, no evidence having been previously offered of the accused's good character. Nor does sec. 6 or 14 of the Evidence Act justify the admission of such evidence—Teka Akir, 5 P.L.J. 706, 22 Cr.L.J. 719.

J.—List of Jurors for High Court, and summoning Jurors for that Court.

312. The High Court may prescribe the number of persons whose names shall be entered at any one time in the special jurors' list:

Provided that no definite number of Europeans or of Americans or of Indians shall be so prescribed.

This section has been redrafted by sec. 18 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. "The High Court special jury list should, in our opinion, be revised and it should no longer be limited to 200 Europeans and 200 non-Europeans. It should include all who are qualified, to whatever nationality they may belong. This revision will probably increase the proportion of non-Europeans in the list. This proposal involves the amendment of sec. 312 of the Code"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, para. 25

313. (1) The Clerk of the Crown shall, before the first day of April in each year, and subject to such rules as the High Court from time to time prescribes, prepare—

Lists of common and special jurors

(a) a list of all persons liable to serve as common jurors; and

(b) a list of persons liable to serve as special jurors only.

(2) Regard shall be had, in the preparation of the latter list, to the property, character and education of the persons whose names are entered therein.

(3) No person shall be entitled to have his name entered in the special jurors' list merely because he may have been entered in the special jurors' list for a previous year.

(4) The Provincial Government may exempt any salaried servant of the Crown from serving as a juror.

(5) The Clerk of the Crown shall, subject to such rules as Discretion of officer aforesaid, have full discretion to prepare preparing lists. the said list as seems to him to be proper, and there shall be no appeal from or review of his decision.

Amendment:—Sub-section (4) of this section has been substituted by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, in place of old sub-section (4) which ran as follows:—"The Governor-General in Council or the Local Government in the case of the High Court at Fort William in Bengal, and in the case of other High Courts the Local Government, may exempt any salaried officer of Government from serving as a juror."

The drawing up of the list of special jurors is entirely in the discretion of the Clerk of the Crown and the High Court will not interfere—Sham Chand, 1 Ind Jur. (N.S.) 106.

314. (1) Preliminary lists of persons liable to serve as common jurors and as special jurors, respectively, signed by the Clerk of the Crown, shall be published once in the Official Gazette before the fifteenth day of April next after their preparation.

Publication of lists, preliminary and revised.

(2) Revised lists of persons liable to serve as common jurors and special jurors, respectively, signed as aforesaid, shall be published once in the Official Gazette before the first day of May next after their preparation.

(3) Copies of the said lists shall be affixed to some conspicuous part of the Court-house.

Amendment:—The words "Official Gazette" have been substituted for "local official Gazette" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937,

315. (1) Out of the persons named in the revised lists aforesaid, there shall be summoned for each session in the town which is the usual place of sitting of each High Court, as many of those who are liable to serve on special or common juries, respectively, as the Clerk of the Crown considers necessary.

(2) No person shall be summoned more than once in six months unless the number cannot be made up without him.

(3) If, during the continuance of any sessions, it appears that the number of persons so summoned is not sufficient, such number as may be necessary of other persons liable to serve as aforesaid shall be summoned for such sessions.

The words "in the town ... High Court" have been substituted for the words "in each Presidency town." A similar amendment has been made in sec 316 and in the third proviso to section 276.

Neither sec. 315 nor sec. 326 nor sec. 327, Cr. P. C., contemplates the summoning of jurors for a particular case—Shewram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (219), 184 I.C. 474, 41 Cr.L.J. 28.

316. Whenever a High Court has given notice of its intention to hold sitting at any place outside the town which is the usual place of sitting of such High Court for the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, the Court of Session at such place shall, subject to any direction which may be given by the High Court, summon a sufficient number of jurors from its own list, in the manner hereinafter prescribed for summoning jurors to the Court of Session.

317. (1) In addition to the persons so summoned as jurors, the said Court of Session shall, if it thinks needful, after communication with the Commanding Officer, cause to be summoned such number of commissioned and non-commissioned officers in Her Majesty's Army or Air Force resident within ten miles of its place of sitting as the Court considers to be necessary to make up the juries required for the trial of persons charged with offences before the High Court as aforesaid.

(2) All officers so summoned shall be liable to serve on such juries notwithstanding anything contained in this Code; but no such officer shall be summoned whom his Commanding Officer desires to have excused on the ground of urgent official duty, or for any other special official reason.

318. Any person summoned under section 315, section 316 or section 317, who, without lawful excuse, fails to attend as required by the summons, or who, having attended, departs without having obtained the permission of the Judge, or fails to attend after an adjournment of the Court after being ordered to attend, shall be deemed guilty of a contempt and be liable, by order of the Judge, to such fine as he thinks fit; and, in default of payment of such fine, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months in the civil jail until the fine is paid:

Provided that the Court may in its discretion remit any fine or imprisonment so imposed.

K.—List of Jurors and Assessors for Court of Session, and summoning Jurors and Assessors for that Court.

319. All male persons between the ages of twenty-one and sixty shall, except as next hereinafter mentioned, be liable to serve as jurors or assessors at any trial held within the district in which they reside, or, if the Local Government, on consideration of local circumstances, has fixed any smaller area in this behalf, within the area so fixed.

946C. Residence in two districts:—A man may obviously reside during the year in more than one district, and a person who in this way possesses more than one place of residence would be ordinarily liable to serve as a juror in each of the districts in which he has his residence. But he would be so liable so long as he was residing in that district. A prolonged absence of an assessor from a district exempts him from being an assessor in that district under this section, even though his name appears in the list of assessors in that district—Mohammad Ejaz, 12 P.L.T. 209, 32 Cr.L.J. 740 (741), 131 I.C. 540, 1931 Cr.C. 400, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 160

320. The following persons are exempt from liability to serve as jurors or assessors, namely:—

Exemptions.

- (a) officers in civil employ superior in rank to a District Magistrate;
- (aa) members of any Legislature in British India;
- (b) salaried Judges;
- (c) Commissioners and Collectors of Revenue or Customs;
- (d) police-officer and persons engaged in the Preventive Service in the Customs Department;
- (e) persons engaged in the collection of the revenue whom the Collector thinks fit to exempt on the ground of official duty;
- (f) persons actually officiating as priests or ministers of their respective religions;
- (g) persons in Her Majesty's Army, Navy or Air Force, except when, by any law in force for the time being, they are specially made liable to serve as jurors or assessors;
- (h) surgeons and others who openly and constantly practise the medical profession;

- (i) legal practitioners (as defined by the Legal Practitioners' Act, 1879), in actual practice;
- (j) persons employed in the Post-Office and Telegraph Departments;
- (k) persons exempted from personal appearance in Court under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, sections 640 and 641.*
- (l) other persons exempted by the Provincial Government from liability to serve as jurors or assessors.

Change:—Clause (aa) has been added by the Legislative Members Exemption Act XXIII of 1925, on the recommendation of the Reforms Inquiry Committee (contained in para 91 of their Report) that members of the Legislature in India should be exempt from sitting as jurors or assessors in criminal trials—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925, Part V, p. 180).

Clause (aa) has been substituted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, in place of old clause (aa) which ran as follows—"Members of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature and members of a Legislative Council constituted under the Government of India Act."

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in clause (l) of this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

321. (1) The Sessions Judge, and the Collector of the district or such other officer as the Provincial Government appoints in this behalf, shall prepare and make out in alphabetical order a list of persons liable to serve as jurors or assessors and qualified in the judgment of the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid to serve as such, and not likely to be successfully objected to under section 278, clauses (b) to (h), both inclusive.

(2) The list shall contain the name, place of abode and quality of business of every such person; and, if the person is an European or an American, the list shall mention the race to which he belongs.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

In selecting jurors and assessors, the Sessions Judge should choose persons of an independent condition in life, men of judgment and experience. They ought not to be pleaders nor young men fresh from the College and devoid of experience—Q. v. Ram Dutt, 23 W.R. 35. But persons of high social position, e.g., a hereditary Raja, should not be placed on the list, or if put upon the list, ought not to be summoned to serve as juror or assessor unless it were known that he would be willing to act as such—In re Bhupinder Bahadur, 1897 A.W.N. 167.

322. Copies of such list shall be stuck up in the office of the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, and in the court-houses of the District Magistrate and of the District Court, and extracts therefrom in some conspicuous place in the town or towns in or near which the persons named in the extract reside.

323. To every such copy or extract shall be subjoined a notice stating that objections to the list will be heard and determined by the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid, at the sessions court-house, and at a time to be mentioned in the notice.

324. (1) For the hearing of such objections the Sessions Judge shall sit with the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, and shall, at the time and place mentioned in the notice, revise the list and hear the objections (if any) of persons interested in the amendment thereof, and shall strike out the name of any person not suitable in their judgment to serve as a juror, or as an assessor, or who may establish his right to any exemption from service given by section 320 and insert the name of any person omitted from the list whom they deem qualified for such service.

(2) In the event of a difference of opinion between the Sessions Judge and the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, the name of the proposed juror or assessor shall be omitted from the list.

(3) A copy of the revised list shall be signed by the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid and sent to the Court of Session.

(4) Any order of the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid in preparing and revising the list shall be final.

(5) Any exemption not claimed under this section shall be deemed to be waived until the list is next revised.

(6) The list so prepared and revised shall be again revised once in every year.

(7) The list so revised shall be deemed a new list and shall be subject to all the rules hereinbefore contained as to the list originally prepared.

An order restoring the names of certain persons in the jury list from which they were struck off is not a judicial order and cannot be interfered with by the High Court—Nagendra v. Benamali, 36 Cr.L.J. 68, 152 I.C. 210, 38 C.W.N. 363, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 487, 1934 Cr C. 695

325. In the case of any district for which the Provincial Government has declared that the trial of certain offences shall, if the Judge so direct, be by special jury, the Sessions Judge and the Collector of such district or other officer as aforesaid shall prepare, in addition to the revised list hereinbefore prescribed, a special list containing the names of such jurors as are borne on the revised list and are, in the opinion of such Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid, by reason of their possessing superior qualifications in respect of property, character or education, fit persons to serve as special jurors: Provided always that the inclusion of the name of any person in such special list shall not involve the removal of his name from the revised list nor relieve him of his liability to serve as an ordinary juror in cases not tried by special jury.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

326. (1) The Sessions Judge shall ordinarily, seven days at least before the day which he may from time to time fix for holding the sessions, send a letter to the District Magistrate requesting him to summon as many persons named in the said revised list or the said special list as seem to the Sessions Judge to be needed for trials by jury and trials with the aid of assessors at the said sessions, the number to be summoned not being less than double the number required for any such trial, and including, where any accused person is an European or an American, as many Europeans or Americans as may be required for the purpose of choosing jurors or assessors for the trial.

(2) The names of the persons to be summoned shall be drawn by lot in open Court, excluding those who have served within six months unless the number cannot be made up without them; and the names so drawn shall be specified in the said letter.

(3) Where the accused requires and is entitled to be tried under the provisions of section 275, there shall be chosen by lot, in the manner prescribed by or under section 276, from the whole number of persons returned the jurors who are to constitute the jury until a jury containing the proper number of Europeans or Europeans and Americans or of Indians, as the case may be, has been obtained:

Provided that, in any case in which the proper number of Europeans or Americans cannot otherwise be obtained, the Court may, in its discretion for the purpose of constituting the jury, summon any person excluded from the list on the ground of his being exempted under section 320.

(4) Where under the proviso to sub-section (3), the Court proposes to summon as a juror any person in His Majesty's Army, the provisions of section 317 shall apply in like manner as they apply for the purpose of the summoning of military jurors for a trial under section 316.

Amendment:—The italicised words have been added by sec. 19 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923

947. Sections 326 and 327 contemplate as the ordinary or normal procedure that all assessors should be summoned on the first day on which a criminal Session commences, however many trials it may be proposed to hold in the course of that Session—Chutta, 17 Cr L.J. 17 (All) Neither sec. 315 nor sec. 326 nor sec. 327, Cr. P. C., contemplates the summoning of jurors for a particular case—Shewaram v Emp, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (219), 184 I.C. 474, 41 Cr L.J. 28

The duty of issuing a precept to the District Magistrate to summon jurors and assessors is imposed upon the Sessions Judge himself; it cannot be performed by a Subordinate Judge in temporary charge of the current duties of the Court of Session—Anonymous, Ratanlal 148.

Where owing to the fact that only three jurors attended the Court, the Judge summoned jurors from among the residents of the town on the day fixed for the trial, held that the jury as constituted was not a proper jury; the Judge ought to have summoned the jurors after drawing their names by lot from the list of persons to serve on the jury, in accordance with sub-section (2); but instead of doing so, he chose persons specially selected (a thing which the Legislature has taken special pains to render impossible); this was a serious irregularity which could not be cured by sec. 537—Brojendra, 7 C.W.N. 183.

'Double the number required':—See 55 Cal. 794, 33 C.W.N. 1053 and other cases cited in Note 881A under sec. 274.

See also Notes under secs. 276 and 284, Cr. P. C.

327. The Court of Session may direct jurors or assessors to be summoned at other periods than the period specified in section 326, when the number of trials before the Court renders the attendance of one set of jurors or assessors for a whole session oppressive or whenever for other reasons such direction is found to be necessary.

328. Every summons to a juror or assessor shall be in writing, and shall require his attendance as a juror or assessor, as the case may be, at a time and place to be therein specified.

329. When any person summoned to serve as a juror or assessor is in the service of Crown or of a Railway Company, the Court in which he is so summoned to serve may excuse his attendance if it appears on the representation of the head of the office in which he is employed that he cannot serve as a juror or assessor, as the case may be, without inconvenience to the public.

Amendment:—The word "Crown" has been substituted for "Government" in this section by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

330. (1) The Court of Session may for reasonable cause excuse any juror or assessor from attendance at any particular session.

(2) The Court of Session may, if it shall think fit, at the conclusion of any trial by special jury, direct that the jurors who have served on such jury shall not be summoned to serve again as jurors for a period of twelve months.

Court may relieve special jurors from liability to serve again as jurors for twelve months.

331. (1) At each session the said Court shall cause to be made a list of the names of those who have attended as jurors and assessors at such session.

(2) Such list shall be kept with the list of the jurors and assessors as revised under section 324.

(3) A reference shall be made in the margin of the said revised list to each of the names which are mentioned in the list prepared under this section.

332. (1) Any person summoned to attend as a juror or as an assessor who, without lawful excuse,

Penalty for non-attendance of juror or assessor.

fails to attend as required by the summons, or who, having attended, departs without having obtained the permission of the Court, or fails to attend after an adjournment of the Court, after being ordered to attend, shall be liable by order of the Court of Session to a fine not exceeding one hundred rupees.

(2) Such fine shall be levied by the District Magistrate by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to such juror or assessor within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court making the order.

(3) For good cause shown, the Court may remit or reduce any fine so imposed.

(4) In default of recovery of the fine by attachment and sale, such juror or assessor may, by order of the Court of Session, be imprisoned in the civil jail for the term of fifteen days, unless such fine is paid before the end of the said term.

948. Gentlemen on the jury list are under no obligation to notify their change of address to the Court before leaving their usual place of residence, or to make any arrangement for the acceptance of notice and for the giving of information to the Court that he would be unable to attend. Therefore, where summons was served by affixing the duplicate on the door of the dwelling house of a juror, who at the time was living away from home, and had no knowledge of such service, held that he was not liable to fine for non-attendance—Moni Lal, 6 C.W.N. 887. If an assessor has been absent for a long time from district A, and has gone to reside in district B, so that he may be said to have almost ceased to be a resident of district A, he is not liable to serve as an assessor in that district under sec. 319. Consequently, he cannot be fined under sec. 332 for non-attendance as an assessor in obedience to a summons served in district A of which he had no notice—Mohammad Ejaz, 12 P.L.T. 209, 32 Cr.L.J. 740 (741), 131 I.C. 540, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 160, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 220, 1931 Cr.C. 400.

The summons to a juror or assessor must be served in the manner provided by sec. 69. The issue of summons to a juror or assessor by a registered letter is illegal, and no fine can be imposed for the non-attendance of the juror or assessor in such a case—Sarat Chandra, 1 C.W.N. cxvi.

The order of a Sessions Judge under this section fining an assessor is not appealable—Bisseshur, 8 W.R. 83.

L.—Special Provisions for High Courts.

333. At any stage of any trial before a High Court under this Code, before the return of the verdict, the Advocate-General may, if he thinks fit, inform the Court on behalf of Her Majesty that he will not further prosecute the defendant upon the charge; and thereupon all proceedings on such charge against the defendant shall be stayed, and he shall be discharged of and from the same. But such discharge shall not amount to an acquittal unless the presiding Judge otherwise directs.

Power of Advocate-General to stay prosecution.

949. Nolle prosequi:—A nolle prosequi is usually granted where any improper and vexatious attempts are made to oppress the defendant, as by repeatedly preferring defective indictments for the same supposed offence, or if it is clear that an indictment is not sustainable against the defendant. See Archbold's Criminal Pleadings, 28th Edn., p 127.

After the trial had commenced and the evidence partly gone into, the Judge retired from the case under sec. 556 as he was a share-holder of the prosecution Bank, and the case was adjourned without the jury being discharged. The Chief Justice purporting to act under Cl 13 of the Charter Act appointed another Judge to preside at the trial of the accused. In answer to a question by the Judge, the Standing Counsel intimated that he intended proceeding with the trial from the point where it had been left, whereupon it was contended on behalf of the accused that the presiding Judge could not proceed with the trial as the previous Judge and the jury empanelled before him had still the seisin of the case. The Advocate-General thereupon, in order to get rid of the many difficulties arising out of the case, entered a nolle prosequi, and the accused was discharged—Khagendra, 2 C.W.N. 481. In a trial before the High Court Sessions, the jury were divided in the proportion of six to three. But the Judge, without ascertaining what the verdict of the majority was, discharged the jury and ordered a retrial. The retrial came before another Judge and another jury, and it was contended on behalf of the accused that as the previous Judge had discharged the jury without ascertaining what their verdict was and whether he agreed or disagreed with the verdict of the majority, the discharge of the jury was illegal and the previous Judge had still the seisin of the case, and no other Judge could try it. As the question was of some difficulty, the Advocate-General entered a nolle prosequi, and the Judge discharged the accused—Jatindra, 8 C.W.N. xlviii. In another Calcutta case the jury in the first trial returned a unanimous verdict of not guilty on the main charge of murder, and were divided in the proportions of 5 to 4 on other counts. In the second trial on the remaining counts (ordered under sec. 308, Cr. P. C.) the jury returned a verdict of not guilty by a majority of seven to two. The Judge disagreed with the verdict. The accused was brought up again before the learned Judge "to be dealt with according to law." The Advocate-General thereupon appeared and entered a nolle prosequi—Nirmal Kanta Roy, 41 Cal. 1072. After the close of the case for the prosecution and just as the counsel for the defence was going to call his witnesses, the foreman of the jury suddenly informed the Court that they had come to a unanimous verdict as to the guilt of the

(2) The Court of Session may, if it shall think fit, at the conclusion of any trial by special jury, direct that the jurors who have served on such jury shall not be summoned to serve again as jurors for a period of twelve months.

Court may relieve special jurors from liability to serve again as jurors for twelve months.

331. (1) At each session the said Court shall cause to be made a list of the names of those who have attended as jurors and assessors at such session.

List of jurors and assessors attending.

(2) Such list shall be kept with the list of the jurors and assessors as revised under section 324.

(3) A reference shall be made in the margin of the said revised list to each of the names which are mentioned in the list prepared under this section.

332. (1) Any person summoned to attend as a juror or as an assessor who, without lawful excuse, fails to attend as required by the summons, or who, having attended, departs without having obtained the permission of the Court, or fails to attend after an adjournment of the Court, after being ordered to attend, shall be liable by order of the Court of Session to a fine not exceeding one hundred rupees.

Penalty for non-attendance of juror or assessor.

(2) Such fine shall be levied by the District Magistrate by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to such juror or assessor within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court making the order.

(3) For good cause shown, the Court may remit or reduce any fine so imposed.

(4) In default of recovery of the fine by attachment and sale, such juror or assessor may, by order of the Court of Session, be imprisoned in the civil jail for the term of fifteen days, unless such fine is paid before the end of the said term.

948. Gentlemen on the jury list are under no obligation to notify their change of address to the Court before leaving their usual place of residence, or to make any arrangement for the acceptance of notice and for the giving of information to the Court that he would be unable to attend. Therefore, where summons was served by affixing the duplicate on the door of the dwelling house of a juror, who at the time was living away from home, and had no knowledge of such service, held that he was not liable to fine for non-attendance—Moni Lal, 6 C.W.N. 887. If an assessor has been absent for a long time from district A, and has gone to reside in district B, so that he may be said to have almost ceased to be a resident of district A, he is not liable to serve as an assessor in that district under sec. 319. Consequently, he cannot be fined under sec. 332 for non-attendance as an assessor in obedience to a summons served in district A of which he had no notice—Mohammad Ejaz, 12 P.L.T. 209, 32 Cr L.J. 740 (741), 131 I.C. 510, A.I.R. 1931 Pat 160, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 220, 1931 Cr C. 400.

The summons to a juror or assessor must be served in the manner provided by sec. 69. The issue of summons to a juror or assessor by a registered letter is illegal, and no fine can be imposed for the non-attendance of the juror or assessor in such a case—Sarat Chandra, 1 C.W.N. cxvi.

The order of a Sessions Judge under this section fining an assessor is not appealable—Bisschur, 8 W.R. 83.

L.—Special Provisions for High Courts.

333. At any stage of any trial before a High Court under this Code, before the return of the verdict, the Advocate-General may, if he thinks fit, inform the Court on behalf of Her Majesty that he will not further prosecute the defendant upon the charge; and thereupon all proceedings on such charge against the defendant shall be stayed, and he shall be discharged of and from the same. But such discharge shall not amount to an acquittal unless the presiding Judge otherwise directs.

Power of Advocate-General to stay prosecution.

949. Nolle prosequi:—A nolle prosequi is usually granted where any improper and vexatious attempts are made to oppress the defendant, as by repeatedly preferring defective indictments for the same supposed offence, or if it is clear that an indictment is not sustainable against the defendant. See Archbold's Criminal Pleadings, 28th Edn., p 127.

After the trial had commenced and the evidence partly gone into, the Judge retired from the case under sec 556 as he was a share-holder of the prosecution Bank, and the case was adjourned without the jury being discharged. The Chief Justice purporting to act under Cl. 13 of the Charter Act appointed another Judge to preside at the trial of the accused. In answer to a question by the Judge, the Standing Counsel intimated that he intended proceeding with the trial from the point where it had been left, whereupon it was contended on behalf of the accused that the presiding Judge could not proceed with the trial as the previous Judge and the jury empanelled before him had still the seisin of the case. The Advocate-General thereupon, in order to get rid of the many difficulties arising out of the case, entered a nolle prosequi, and the accused was discharged—Khagendra, 2 C.W.N. 481. In a trial before the High Court Sessions, the jury were divided in the proportion of six to three. But the Judge, without ascertaining what the verdict of the majority was, discharged the jury and ordered a retrial. The retrial came before another Judge and another jury, and it was contended on behalf of the accused that as the previous Judge had discharged the jury without ascertaining what their verdict was and whether he agreed or disagreed with the verdict of the majority, the discharge of the jury was illegal and the previous Judge had still the seisin of the case, and no other Judge could try it. As the question was of some difficulty, the Advocate-General entered a nolle prosequi, and the Judge discharged the accused—Jatindra, 8 C.W.N. xlviii. In another Calcutta case the jury in the first trial returned a unanimous verdict of not guilty on the main charge of murder, and were divided in the proportions of 5 to 4 on other counts. In the second trial on the remaining counts (ordered under sec. 308, Cr. P. C.) the jury returned a verdict of not guilty by a majority of seven to two. The Judge disagreed with the verdict. The accused was brought up again before the learned Judge "to be dealt with according to law." The Advocate-General thereupon appeared and entered a nolle prosequi—Nirmal Kanta Roy, 41 Cal 1072. After the close of the case for the prosecution and just as the counsel for the defence was going to call his witnesses, the foreman of the jury suddenly informed the Court that they had come to a unanimous verdict as to the guilt of the accused and did not desire to hear anything more. Upon this, the Counsel for the accused said that it was a misbehaviour on the part of the jury to give a verdict without hearing the evidence for the defence; he, therefore, asked the Court to discharge the jury and to empanel a fresh jury. But the Advocate-General entered a nolle prosequi—Olu Muhammad, 7 C.W.N. xxxi.

Discharge—Acquittal:—In Jatindra, 8 C.W.N. xlviii, the Judge ordered that the discharge amounted to an acquittal, but in Nirmal Kanta, 41 Cal. 1072 and Olu Muhammad, 7 C.W.N. xxxi, the Judge simply discharged the accused but did not acquit him.

An order of discharge under this section is no bar to fresh proceedings being taken before a competent Magistrate upon complaint or upon a Police report or under sec. 190 (c). In spite of an order of discharge passed under sec. 333, the accused may be sent up for trial upon the same charges, and the order of discharge does not require to be set aside for initiation of fresh proceedings on the same charges—Sheikh Idoo, 40 Cal. 71. But in a recent case the same High Court has been of opinion that an order of discharge passed on a nolle prosequi entered under this section puts an end to the indictment on which the prisoner is brought before the Court, and he cannot be subsequently proceeded against on the same charge—Jitendra Nath, 52 Cal. 590, 89 I.C. 709, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 902, 26 Cr.L.J. 1397. It is curious that no reference was made in this case to the earlier case of 40 Cal. 71.

Sections 333 and 494, Cr. P. C.:—Neither sec. 215 nor sec. 333 can be resorted to for construing sec. 494. They are not pari materia. The power which an Advocate-General entering a nolle prosequi in a trial before a High Court, exercises under sec. 333, does not depend on the consent of the Court, which a Public Prosecutor has to obtain when acting under sec. 494, and are indeed rights and privileges of a very different character which the Advocate-General owns by virtue of his appointment—Giribala v. Mader, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 699 (703), 36 C.W.N. 928, 1932 Cr.C. 654, 56 C.L.J. 79, 60 Cal. 233.

334. For the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction every High Court shall hold sittings on such days and at such convenient intervals as the Chief Justice of such Court from time to time appoints.

335. (1) The High Court shall hold its sittings at the place at which it now holds them or at such other place (if any) as the Provincial Government may direct.

(2) But it may, from time to time, * * * * * with the consent of the Provincial Government, hold sittings at such other places within the local limits of its appellate jurisdiction as the High Court appoints.

(3) Such officer as the Chief Justice directs shall give notice beforehand in the Official Gazette of all sittings intended to be held for the exercise of the original criminal jurisdiction of the High Court.

Amendment:—In sub-section (1) the words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Governor-General in Council in the case of the High Court at Fort William, or the Local Government in the case of other High Courts" and in sub-section (2) the words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" and the words "in the case of the High Court at Fort William with the consent of the Governor-General in Council and in all other cases" have been omitted, and in sub-section (3) the words "Official Gazette" have been substituted for "local official Gazette", by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

336. (Repealed.)

This section which dealt with the place of trial of European British subjects has been repealed by sec. 20 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923.

CHAPTER XXIV.

GENERAL PROVISIONS AS TO INQUIRIES AND TRIALS.

337. (1) In the case of any offence triable exclusively by the High Court or Court of Session, or any offence punishable with imprisonment which may extend to ten years, or any offence punishable under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment which may extend to seven years, or any offence under any of the following sections of the Indian Penal Code, namely, sections 216A, 369, 401, 435 and 477A, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate, a Subdivisional Magistrate or any Magistrate of the first class may, at any stage of the investigation or inquiry into, or the trial of the offence, with a view to obtaining the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to the offence, tender a pardon to such person on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof:

Provided that, where the offence is under inquiry or trial, no Magistrate of the first class other than the District Magistrate shall exercise the power hereby conferred unless he is the Magistrate making the inquiry or holding the trial, and, where the offence is under investigation, no such Magistrate shall exercise the said power unless he is a Magistrate having jurisdiction in a place where the offence might be inquired into or tried and the sanction of the District Magistrate has been obtained to the exercise thereof.

(1A) Every Magistrate * * who tenders a pardon under sub-section (1) shall record his reasons for so doing, and shall, on application made by the accused, furnish him with a copy of such record:

Provided that the accused shall pay for the same unless the Magistrate for some special reason thinks fit to furnish it free of cost.

(2) Every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any.

(2A) In every case where a person has accepted a tender of pardon and has been examined under sub-section (2), the Magistrate before whom the proceedings are pending shall, if he is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty of an offence, commit him for trial to the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be.

(3) Such person unless he is already on bail shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial. * *

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 86 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923). The principal changes are :—

(a) The old section was restricted to offences triable by the High Court or the Court of Session; the new section includes several other offences.

(b) A change has been made as regards the Magistrates who can tender pardon.

(c) The power to tender a pardon should be exercisable during an investigation as well as after a magisterial inquiry has begun.

950. Scope—Offences:—Where several offences are being inquired together the fact that some of the offences do not fall under this section will not debar the Magistrate from granting pardon in respect of the offences which fall under it. All that this section requires is that the offence in respect of which pardon is tendered must be an offence described herein—Harumal, 16 Cr.L.J. 632 (633), 9 S.L.R. 43; Balmokund, 1915 P.R. 17, 16 Cr.L.J. 354; Ismail, 26 Cr.L.J. 1045, 87 I.C. 965, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 409.

The words "triable exclusively by the Court of Session" mean an offence shown in the second schedule as so triable. A charge under sec. 395, I. P. C., does not cease to be an offence triable exclusively by a Court of Session, merely because the charge is triable by, and in fact has been tried by, a District Magistrate under sec. 30 of the Code—Bhallu, 1897 P.R. 3. So also, a valid pardon, once having been validly given, is not affected by the fact that after the pardon, the Sessions Judge at the trial altered the charges from those framed by the Magistrate to some other offences—Kouromal, 23 Cr.L.J. 1057, 19 S.L.R. 183, 81 I.C. 881, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 105.

All that the officer who can grant pardon under the provisions of this section has to see is whether on the information at his disposal there is a prima facie case against the person to whom the pardon is going to be tendered for an offence which is exclusively triable by a Court of Session. If that is so, he is competent to grant a pardon. It is no part of the duty of the Magistrate to take upon himself the task of making a thorough and searching inquiry in order to find out whether the offence which has been committed by the person is one which will be triable by the Court of Session or by a Magistrate. There may be cases in which at the time such a person is produced before a Magistrate there may be, according to the information of the Magistrate, a good case which is exclusively triable by the Court of Session. It may eventually, however, turn out after the case has been tried in the Court of Session that on the proved facts the offence committed was not one which was exclusively triable by a Court of Session but could have been triable by a Magistrate. As soon as the Magistrate is informed that the offence is one which according to the investigating authority is exclusively triable by the Court of Session, then his duty is to record the statement after granting pardon to the person put before him—Bhola Nath v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 856 (861), 184 I.C. 191, A.I.R. 1939 All. 567, 1939 A.L.J. 785, 1 I.R. 1939 All. 736.

Accomplice:—An accomplice is a person who is a guilty associate in crime or who sustains such a relation to the criminal act that he could be jointly charged with the defendant (principal)—Ramaswami Goundan, 27 Mad 271, 14 M.L.J. 226, 2 Weir 803; Govinda Balaji, A.I.R. 1936 Nag 245, 1936 Cr.C. 1039. Where a witness is not concerned with the commission of the crime for which the accused is charged, he cannot be said to be an accomplice in the crime; as it is well-settled that all accessories before the fact, if they participate in the preparation for the crime are accomplices, but if their preparation is limited to the knowledge that crime is to be committed, they are not accomplices. Whether a person is or is not an accomplice depends upon the fact in each particular case considered in connection with the nature of the crime; and persons to be accomplices must participate in the commission of the same crime as the accused persons in a trial are charged. All persons coming technically within the category of accomplices cannot also be treated on precisely the same footing—Narain Chandra Biswas, 63 C.L.J. 191 (195). A person who assists in the concealment of the evidence of the crime (e.g., assists in the removal of blood-stains of the murdered man from the ground) under compulsion and not with the intention of assisting in the concealment of the crime or prompting it, is not to be regarded as an accomplice; consequently, the evidence of such person can be accepted like the evidence of any other witness—Ghulam Hussain, 33 P.L.R. 269, 33 Cr.L.J. 567 (569), 138 I.C. 223. See Note 956.

Accomplice and spy distinguished:—This section speaks of an "accomplice," or "approver" which means a person who participated in the crime with the accused, but after the commission of the crime, out of fear or repentance sides with the prosecution in order to obtain immunity from punishment. But a person who allies himself with the prosecution before the commission of the offence and before he associates with the accused in the preparation of the offence cannot be called an accomplice, the object in such case being not the perpetration of the offence but the detection of it. Where, therefore, certain persons associated with the accused without any criminal intention, with the sole object of entrapping the accused, in order to detect an offence, they cannot be regarded as participants in the crime but as mere spies or detectives. As such, their evidence is legally admissible without corroboration. At the same time some degree of disfavour attaches to persons playing the role of spy or informer. Their evidence must be carefully scrutinized and the weight to be attached to it must depend upon the character of each individual person—Bhuneshwari Pershad, 8 O.W.N. 503, 32 Cr.L.J. 860 (864), 132 I.C. 231, 14 O.L.J. 438, 1931 Cr.C. 444, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 172; see also Chaturbhuj Saha, 38 Cal 96, 8 I.C. 119, 11 Cr.L.J. 560, 15 C.W.N. 171; Pulin Behari Das, 16 C.W.N. 1105, 13 Cr.L.J. 609 (663, 664). The act of a detective in supplying marked money for detection of a crime cannot be treated as that of an accomplice—Q-E v. Javecharam, 19 Bom 363; Govinda Balaji Sonar, supra.

950A. Secs. 337 and 494:—Sec. 337 does not suggest the idea that the only method of obtaining the evidence of a co-accused against another is by tendering him a pardon; another way of obtaining his evidence is to withdraw the prosecution against him under sec. 494. Sec. 337 does not govern sec. 494 nor abridges in any way the wide words of sec. 494. Sec. 337 appears in another connection and deals only with granting pardon to an under-trial prisoner in some serious cases. If he satisfies the conditions of pardon, he gets acquitted; if not, he may be tried for the offence. But if a case is withdrawn under sec. 494, he may, if he is discharged, be tried for the offence which he admits in his examination as a witness to have committed; and if he is acquitted, he cannot be retried, even though he refuses to give his evidence for the prosecution—G. V. Raman, 56 Cal 1023, 33 C.W.N. 468 (473). Sec. 337, Cr. P. C., which only applies to the offences of a more serious character therein specified, provides safeguards in the interests both of the Crown and the accused. In cases where sec. 337 is available, it is better that the accused should be dealt with under that section. It is, however, far from saying that even where sec. 337 can be applied, it is contrary to law to discharge the approver under sec. 494 (a). It must be remembered that the approver dealt with under sec. 337 gives his testimony with a contingent charge hanging over his head; also that the evidence of an accomplice whether dealt with under sec. 337 or discharged under sec. 494 (a), or acquitted under sec. 494 (b), is the evidence of an approver, and as such, open to suspicion—Harihar Sinha, 37 Cr.L.J. 758 (762), 163 I.C. 9, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 356, 40 C.W.N. 876, 1936 Cr.C. 583, 63 C.L.J. 307 (F.B.).

See Faqir Singh v. Emp., in Note 957.

951. Pardon:—When can be tendered :—Under the old section, a pardon could be tendered only in an inquiry (see the words 'offence under inquiry') but not during an investigation—Motilal Hiralal, 46 Bom. 61, 22 Cr.L.J. 728. But the Lahore High Court held that the word 'inquiry' in this section included everything done by the Magistrate whether the case was challanned or not, and therefore pardon could be tendered where the offence was only under investigation by the police—Sher Muhammad, 3 Lah. 431. This was also the view in Sind—Andal, 5 S.L.R. 174, 13 Cr.L.J. 33. This conflict of opinion has now been removed by the present amendment and under the present section it can be tendered at any stage of the investigation as well.

All this section requires is that there should be investigation in progress regarding the offence. If at the date of the pardon, proceedings were going on against the accused for an offence mentioned in this section, the pardon is perfectly legal, and the approver is a competent witness against the accused—Ismail Panju, 26 Cr.L.J. 1115, 88 I.C. 283, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 337. A pardon may be tendered to a person even after a charge has been framed against him—Mangu, 22 Cr.L.J. 255 (Lah.). A pardon can be tendered to an approver during the course of an inquiry even though the principal offender has absconded and the trial cannot, therefore, proceed. In such a case the approver's statement will be recorded under section 512—Dagdu, 46 Bom. 120, 22 Cr.L.J. 620. This section does not require that a trial or an inquiry should be in progress at the time pardon is tendered. Therefore, a pardon is not illegal by reason of the fact that at the time when the Magistrate had granted pardon he had adjourned the case under section 526 (8). Although the Magistrate had postponed the investigation or inquiry, he did not become functus officio; he had not ceased to be the Magistrate who would be or was investigating or inquiring into the offence. The Magistrate was the only Magistrate who at that time had jurisdiction to inquire into the case—Bal Chand, 49 All. 181, 27 Cr.L.J. 1369, 24 A.L.J. 1050.

Who can grant pardon :—See Notes under "Change" above. Where the offence is under investigation, the Magistrate (other than the District Magistrate) tendering pardon must have jurisdiction over the offence. A Magistrate of one district cannot tender pardon to a person implicated in an offence committed in another district and inquired into in the latter district. The pardon so tendered is illegal and cannot be validated by the operation of sec. 529—Chidda, 20 All. 40.

Where the offence is under investigation, the Magistrate can grant pardon only with the sanction of the District Magistrate. This sanction should be written sanction; but an oral sanction, though irregular, would be valid—Sultan Khan, 5 A.L.J. 691, 8 Cr.L.J. 445 (450).

A Deputy Commissioner trying a case triable exclusively by the Sessions Court, under the powers conferred by sec. 30 can offer a conditional pardon to an accused under this section—Paban Singh, 10 C.W.N. 847, 4 Cr.L.J. 44.

When the Legislature used the words 'the District Magistrate' in sec. 337 (1), Cr. P. C., it did not intend to exclude an Additional District Magistrate upon whom the ordinary powers of a District Magistrate had been conferred under sub-sec. (2) of sec. 10, Cr. P. C. By the use of the definite article before "District Magistrate" in sec. 337, Cr. P. C., the Legislature never intended to specify the District Magistrate appointed as such and not the Additional District Magistrate empowered as such. The Additional District Magistrate is not in any way affected by the Proviso to sec. 337 (1), Cr. P. C., and he is in his own right empowered under the law to tender a pardon to the accused—Amar Singh, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 796 (798), 40 Cr.L.J. 543, 181 I.C. 509, 40 P.L.R. 758, 1 I.L.R. 1939 Lah. 38.

Power of Local Government :—The Local Government has no power to offer a conditional pardon to an accused for the purpose of giving evidence against the other accused, under this section—Paban Singh, 10 C.W.N. 847, 4 Cr.L.J. 44; Banu Singh, 33 Cal. 1353, 10 C.W.N. 962 (A new provision regarding conditional pardon has been inserted in sec. 401, sub-sec. 5A.) But the Local Government as an executive authority, has power to refrain from prosecution independently of this section—Har Prosad, 45 All. 226 (229), 21 A.L.J. 42. See also Faqir Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 515 (517), 162 I.C. 180, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 353, 16 Lah. 591, 37 P.L.R. 715, 1936 Cr.C. 294. This section is addressed to certain Courts of Justice, and has nothing to do with the powers of the Local Government in the matter of instituting or refraining from instituting any prosecution. The Local Government can grant pardon even though the case is not triable exclusively by the Court of Session or High Court. It can examine an accomplice as a witness even though no formal tender of pardon has been granted to him. Thus, where the Government of C. P., having before it the case of a Subordinate Judge who was suspected of receiving bribes, issued a notification to the effect that no prosecution would be instituted by the Government against any person who would come forward with evidence that he had paid or offered bribe to the accused (Sub-Judge), and in consequence of the notification two men came forward and gave evidence against the Sub-Judge, held that their evidence was admissible on the principle of sub-sec. (2) of this section, although no pardon was formally tendered to them under sec. 337 and although the offence (sec. 161, I. P. C.) was not triable exclusively by a Court of Session or High Court—Har Prosad, supra.

To whom pardon can be tendered :—Pardon can be tendered to any person who is supposed to be directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to, the offence. The word "supposed" must be taken as intended to exclude merely the case of a man who has actually been convicted of the crime, and not the case of a man who though admitted to be a party to the crime is unconvicted; therefore, where pardon was tendered to a person who pleaded guilty but was not convicted, it was held that the pardon was properly granted and that his evidence was admissible—Kallu, 7 All. 160; Ghagya, Ratanlal 750 (762).

It is not necessary that the person to whom a pardon is tendered should himself be charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session; it is not even necessary that he should be an accused in the case; all that is required by this section is that he should be supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to such an offence with which another person is charged—Kashim, 24 Cr.L.J. 566 (Nag.).

Pardon cannot be tendered to a person whose complicity in the crime is not admitted by himself; such a person cannot be considered to be an approver, and his evidence cannot be taken as that of an approver—Sant Ram, 24 Cr.L.J. 799.

Condition of pardon :—The only condition on which pardon can be tendered to an accomplice is the only one specified in this section. A tender of pardon on condition that the approver should profess to have been present at the scene of the offence and to have personal knowledge of the circumstances under which the offence was committed (which was not true) is illegal. The accomplice should not be bound over to any particular narration, and in a tender of pardon there should be no temptation offered to deviate from the truth—Yakub, Ratanlal 612 (614), following Winsor, L.R. 1 Q.B. 312.

Disclosure :—This section requires that the disclosure shall be reduced into writing. If it is made orally, the verbal testimony of the Magistrate to whom it has been made will be sufficient to prove the statement. But, as a rule of caution, the approver's statement should be always reduced to writing, so that no dispute may subsequently arise as to what the exact terms of the statement were—Ram Nath, 29 P.L.R. 165, 29 Cr.L.J. 413 (415), 108 I.C. 514, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 320, 10 A.I. Cr.R. 76, 9 Lah. 608.

The wording of the section leaves no room for doubt that the tender of pardon is to precede the making of full and true disclosure and not to follow it; that is, the true and full disclosure is expected to be made by the approver when he is examined as a witness in the enquiry or trial. This section, itself does not contemplate and authorize the recording of any statement by the accused as a preliminary to the tender of pardon. Although this section does not contemplate recording of any statement by a Magistrate in the course of the investigation it is quite conceivable that after an accused is granted pardon he ceases to be an accused person and he can be examined as a witness: see Harumal Parmanand v. Emp., 16 Cr.L.J. 632, 30 I.C. 456, 9 S.L.R. 43 and Faqir Singh v. Crown, 16 Lah. 594, 162 I.C. 180, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 353, 37 P.L.R. 715, 1936 Cr.C. 294, 37 Cr.L.J. 515, 8 R.L. 867. When he ceases to be an accused person he may well be examined under sec. 164, Cr. P. C., after administering him oath, as was done in cases reported in Crown v. Parma Nand, 14 Lah. 507, 142 I.C. 776, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 303, 34 Cr.L.J. 469, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 321, 34 P.L.R. 421, 1933 Cr.C. 564, Ram Nath v. Crown, 9 Lah. 608, 108 I.C. 514, 29 P.L.R. 165, 29 Cr.L.J. 413, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 320, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 76 and Anup Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 910, 146 I.C. 677, 1933 Cr.C. 1297, 6 R.L. 265, 35 Cr.L.J. 168.—Horlal v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 433 (435, 436), 187 I.C. 203, 1940 N.L.J. 286.

952. Effect of pardon:—A person who has been granted pardon under this section and who has fulfilled the conditions of pardon must be released, and cannot be re-arrested in respect of the same offence or for any offence inseparably connected with it. Thus, in a dacoity case, an accused was tendered pardon under this section. He made a full statement implicating himself and others, pointed out the place where he had a carbine and ammunition concealed, gave them up to the Police and in all respects complied with the conditions of the pardon. At the close of the case he was released. He was then re-arrested and tried under sec. 20 of the Arms Act in respect of the possession of the carbine and ammunition which he had given up to the Police. Held that the possession of carbine and ammunition being an offence in connection with the matter of the dacoity, and inseparable from his guilt as a dacoit, his prosecution for such an offence, after he had fulfilled the conditions of pardon in the dacoity case, was improper and must be set aside—Shiam Sundar, 19 A.L.J. 717, 22 Cr.L.J. 699, 63 I.C. 827.

A pardon tendered to a person in respect of one offence is no bar to his trial and conviction for an entirely different offence—Sardara, 46 All. 236 (240), 22 A.L.J. 85, 25 Cr. L.J. 956. But it will bar his trial and conviction in respect of offences which are so closely connected with the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered that they may be said to be covered by the terms of the pardon—Ganga Charan, 11 All. 79. Thus, where the approver who was granted pardon in connection with a case of forgery, made a full and true disclosure of the circumstances of the crime, and in so doing he also related the details of some other earlier offences (e.g., money order fraud) committed by himself and the other accused, which were not relevant to the inquiry, but he made those disclosures under the belief that those earlier offences also fell within the scope of the inquiry, and he was not warned by the Magistrate against making those irrelevant statements, held that the approver should be given the benefit of doubt there might be as to his understanding of the pardon, and that the pardon granted in the forgery case should excuse him from prosecution for the earlier offences (e.g., money order fraud)—Nilmadhab, 5 Pat. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 957 (961), 96 I.C. 509, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 279. "If the prisoner having been admitted as an accomplice to one felony, be thereby induced to suppose that he has freed himself from the consequences of another felony, the Judge will recommend the indictment for such other felony to be abandoned"—Russell on Crimes (4th Edn.), Vol. 3, p. 597.

Once the approver has accepted a tender of pardon he stands on the same footing as any other witness with the exception that he is liable to forfeit his tender of pardon if he does not comply with the conditions on which the tender was made. There is no legal bar to the examination of any other witness under sec. 164, Cr. P. C., and there is no reason why the examination of the approver under that section should be open to any objection—Hussaina, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 868, 1933 Cr.C. 1113, 35 Cr.L.J. 111, 146 I.C. 461.

953. Sub-section (1A)—Recording reasons:—Although sub-section (1A) requires the Magistrate, who tenders pardon, to record his reasons for so doing, still the recording of the reasons is not a condition precedent to the tender of pardon and its acceptance by the approver, and the pardon cannot be set aside merely because the reasons are not recorded. Such irregularity does not prejudice the approver—Shama Charan, 13 Cr.L.J. 588 (590) (All.); Sultan Khan, 5 A.L.J. 691, 8 Cr.L.J. 445 (451). When the facts which led up to the tender of pardon appear on the record, the omission to state the reasons is not an illegality which vitiates the proceedings, but a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537, unless it has occasioned a failure of justice—Dukhu, 1929 A.L.J. 227, 30 Cr.L.J. 1157 (1158), 120 I.C. 126, A.I.R. 1929 All. 321, Ind. Rul. 1930 All. 14; Ananda, 36 Cal. 629; Waryam, 5 Lah.L.J. 408, 25 Cr.L.J. 174, 76 I.C. 398, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 90; Faqir Singh v. Emp., infra, in Note 957; nor even can it be a ground for excluding the approver's evidence as inadmissible—Banu Singh, 5 CLJ. 224.

Where a Magistrate tendering pardon states in his order that in order to connect the accused with the offence of murder it is essential to make an approver in the case and that he therefore tenders pardon under sec. 337, Cr. P. C., to the person concerned, it amounts to sufficient compliance with the provisions of sec. 337 (1-A), Cr. P. C., as no clearer reason for tendering pardon can be imagined and the only thing required by law to be done has been amply done—Amar Singh, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 796 (798), 40 Cr.L.J. 513, 181 I.C. 509, 40 P.L.R. 758, 11 L.R. 1939 Lah. 38.

954. Sub-section(2):—Approver as witness:—It is nowhere laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code that the acceptance of pardon should be in writing or that it should be expressed in any other manner; it is to be gathered from the circumstances—Amar Singh, supra. When an accused person tendered pardon and he accepts it, he ceases to be an accused person, and he can be examined as a witness. It is quite unnecessary in such a case that the prosecution should be formally withdrawn against him under sec. 494—Harumal, 9 S.L.R. 43, 16 Cr.L.J. 632 (633). An accused person to whom a pardon is tendered under this section ceases to be an accused from the moment the pardon is accepted and is to be treated as a witness thereafter—Faqir Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 515 (517), 162 I.C. 180, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 353, 16 Lah. 594, 37 P.L.R. 715, 1935 Cr.C. 294, following Khairati Ram, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 476, 132 I.C. 519, 12 Lah. 635, 1931 Cr.C. 700, 32 Cr.L.J. 913, 32 P.L.R. 493, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 615.

According to clause (2) the approver shall be examined as a witness in the case. The expression "in the case" (see the old section) includes the preliminary inquiry, and does not refer to the trial alone—Ramaswami, 24 Mad. 321; Mallu, 11 N.L.R. 59, 16 Cr.L.J. 417. This is now made clear by the present amendment of this sub-section.

The amendment of this clause also makes it clear that the approver must be examined both in the Court of the committing Magistrate and in the subsequent trial, and not in the former Court alone. But if the approver when examined before the committing Magistrate resiles from his previous disclosures and says that they were made under police pressure and he is not examined at the subsequent trial, the fact that he was not examined before the Sessions Judge does not bar his trial for the offence in respect of which the pardon had been granted—Ram Nath, 29 P.L.R. 165, 29 Cr.L.J. 413 (416), 108 I.C. 514, 9 Lah. 608, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 320. Whether non-compliance with the provisions of sub-sec. (2) of this section renders trials of the persons against whom the approver's evidence is to be tendered illegal, is a question which was left undecided in this case. The same High Court has decided the question in Mahla v. Emp. 31 Cr.L.J. 111, 120 I.C. 489, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 95, 1930 Cr.C. 111, 120 I.C. 489, 11 Lah. 230, 31 P.L.R. 495 and has held that any person who has accepted a tender of pardon under the provisions of this section must be examined as a witness in the Court of the Committing Magistrate and at the subsequent trial of every person tried for the same offence, provided, of course, that it is physically possible for the Crown to produce the approver. The fact that an approver appears to the Court to be an untrustworthy witness does not absolve the Court from complying with the statutory provisions. The failure to comply with the provisions of sub-sec. (2) of this section is an illegality and not a mere irregularity in procedure and the trial is void as are the proceedings before the Committing Magistrate.

Once a pardon has been tendered and accepted cl (2) of this section renders it obligatory for the prosecution to examine the approver both in the committing Magistrate's Court and in the Sessions Court, should the case be committed. The Legislature has required that the approver, whatever statements he has made in the Court of the committing Magistrate should be examined as a witness in the Sessions trial. The purpose of the direction in sec. 337 (2), Cr. P. C., is the larger purpose of the interests of justice. With the exception of evidence admitted under sec. 288, Cr. P. C., it is upon evidence led in the Sessions Court that the guilt or innocence of the accused is determined, and it is in the Sessions Court that the approver has his main duty to perform—Shahdino Dhaniparto, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 114 (116), 41 Cr.L.J. 747, 189 I.C. 452, not following Nayeb, infra. But if a pardon tendered to an accused person on his undertaking to make a full disclosure is withdrawn by the committing Magistrate on the ground of non-fulfilment of the undertaking, it is not obligatory on the prosecution to examine him before the Sessions Court—Nayeb, 38 C.W.N. 659 (662), 35 Cr.L.J. 1479 (1482), 61 Cal. 399, 1934 Cr.C. 929, A.I.R. 1934 Cal 636. See also Andal, 5 S.L.R. 174, 13 Cr.L.J. 33.

Where an approver when examined in the preliminary inquiry keeps back material evidence within his knowledge, the Magistrate can withdraw the pardon, and the prosecution is not bound to put him forward as a witness in the sessions trial—Ramaswami, 24 Mad 321. A person who has not satisfied the condition of pardon at the commitment, need not be examined at the trial in the Sessions Court; the evidence given by him before the committing Magistrate can be used as evidence in proceedings taken against him—Nga Po, 7 Cr.L.J. 245 (Bur.); Suba, 1905 P.R. 41. It is not necessary to examine the approver in the Sessions Court if he has shown by his evidence in the Magistrate's Court that he is an untrustworthy witness—Sashi, 42 Cal. 856, 19 C.W.N. 295, 16 Cr.L.J. 65. But the Lahore High Court is of opinion that even the fact that the pardon has been withdrawn before the trial in the Sessions Court does not absolve the prosecution from its duty of producing the approver before the Sessions Judge—Chet Singh, 31 P.L.R. 1010, 32 Cr.L.J. 1126, 1931 Cr.C. 166, A.I.R. 1931 Lah 102, 134 I.C. 193.

The approver must be examined as a witness at the subsequent trial of every person tried for the same offence; if there are several accused persons and they are tried at different times separately, the approver must be examined as a witness in every one of these trials. It is incorrect to say that the approver's obligation as a witness is concluded as soon as he is examined as a witness at the trial of one such person, and that he need not appear at any subsequent trial of other persons charged with the same offence—Mahla, supra.

An approver cannot be examined as a witness unless and until he has been discharged by a written order; a mere promise of immunity from prosecution given by the Local Government does not amount to an order of discharge. Unless he is formally discharged, he does not cease to be an accused person and cannot be examined as a witness; and he does not cease to be an accused person by reason of the mere fact that the police did not send him for trial—Mahandu, 1 Lah. 102 (dissenting from Sardar, 1904 P.R. 21).

A pardon was tendered to and accepted by an accused in the committing Magistrate's Court, but by some mistake his name was still in the category of the accused when the case came before the Sessions Court, and he was placed on the dock along with the other accused. The mistake was soon found out, and the Sessions Judge then removed him from the dock, and he gave evidence in the trial. Held that the approver's evidence was admissible—Ayub Mandal, 54 Cal 539, 28 Cr.L.J. 689, 103 I.C. 545, A.I.R. 1927 Cal 680, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 309.

Although sub-sec. (2) of sec. 337, Cr. P. C., contemplates that every person accepting a tender shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any, other Magistrates are also empowered to record the statement of a person to whom pardon has been tendered—

955. Effect of illegal pardon:—It is illegal for a Magistrate to convert an accused into a witness (approver) except when a pardon has been lawfully granted under sec. 337—Hanmanta, 1 Bom. 610. Therefore, where a Magistrate tenders pardon to one of the accused persons in a case not exclusively triable by the Court of Session, and examines him as a witness, the statement made by that accused is irrelevant and inadmissible even as a confession of a co-accused—Ashgar, 2 All. 260. Contra—Subramania Ayyar, 25 Mad. 61 (68), in which it was held that although the tender of pardon was illegal, he was competent to give evidence as a witness.

It has been pointed out in this Madras case (25 Mad. 61, at pp. 68-69) that the question as to whether an approver, who has been illegally pardoned, can be competent witness, depends upon the further question whether the approver had pleaded guilty or not. If he had not pleaded guilty, and had neither been acquitted nor discharged nor convicted, he cannot be examined as a witness against the other accused. This was the ratio decidendi in Hanmanta, 1 Bom. 610 and Ashgar, 2 All. 260. But when the approver had pleaded guilty (as in 25 Mad. 61), no issue remained to be tried as between him and the Crown; he could not be said to be tried jointly with the other accused; he was not in charge of the jury; his incompetency to give evidence had been removed, and oath could be lawfully administered to him.

956. Conviction based on approver's evidence:—Though a conviction is not illegal because it proceeds on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver (sec. 133, Evidence Act), yet it has now become the universal practice not to convict on the testimony of an accomplice, unless it is corroborated in material particulars—Kallu, 7 All. 160, Ramaswami, 27 Mad. 271; Krishnabhat, 10 Bom. 319; Srinivas, 7 Bom.L.R. 959, 3 Cr.L.J. 33; Maganlal, 14 Bom. 115; Yasin, 28 Cal. 689; Shabrah, 1919 P.R. 20, 20 Cr.L.J. 191, 49 I.C. 607; Madan, 4 P.L.T. 381, 24 Cr.L.J. 723. The evidence of an approver does not differ from the evidence of any other witness save in one particular respect, namely, that the evidence of an accomplice is regarded ab initio as open to grave suspicion. Accordingly, if the suspicion which attaches to the evidence of an accomplice be not removed, that evidence should not be acted upon unless corroborated in some material particular; but if the suspicion attaching to the accomplice's evidence be removed, then that evidence may be acted upon even though uncorroborated, and the guilt of the accused may be established upon that evidence alone—Rattan Dhanuk, 8 Pat. 235, 30 Cr.L.J. 137 (138), 113 I.C. 329, 9 P.L.T. 672, AIR. 1928 Pat. 630. The Judge in his charge to the jury should take care to point out that although a conviction based on the uncorroborated testimony of the approver is not illegal, yet it is not the practice of the Court so to convict, and should state also that the evidence of the approver was given on conditional pardon—Jamir-uddi, 29 Cal. 782; Surya Kanta, 24 C.W.N. 119, 31 C.L.J. 20 (F.B.). If this warning is omitted, a conviction based on such uncorroborated evidence must be set aside—Rattan Dhanuk, supra. See Jamaldi, 51 Cal. 160, and other cases cited in Note 915 (5) under sec. 297.

The testimony of the approver ought to be corroborated in material particulars in the matter of circumstances of the crime and also in the matter of identifying the accused with the offence. The corroboration must be independent of the accomplice; and the evidence of one accomplice cannot corroborate the evidence of another; the evidence of either requires corroboration before it can be acted upon. So far as the statutory provisions are concerned, there is nothing in law to justify the proposition that evidence of a witness who happens to be cognisant of a crime, or who made no attempt to prevent it, or who did not disclose its commission, should only be relied on to the same extent as that of an accomplice. The real question in such a case is the degree of credit to be attached to the testimony of such a witness; and that depends on all the facts and circumstances of the particular case. It may not be possible to place much reliance on the evidence coming from persons falling within the description given above, but they are not accomplices, and it leads to confusion of thought to treat them as "practically accomplices" and then apply the rule as to their credibility instead of judging their credibility by a careful consideration of all the particular facts of the case affecting the evidence—Hafizuddin, 35 Cr.L.J. 1357 (1359), 151 I.C. 486, 38 C.W.N. 777, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 678 (S.B.). See also Narain Chandra Biswas, 63 C.L.J. 191 (195).

Where the witness says that she helped the accused to dispose of the body only because he threatened to kill if she did not, she would not be accomplice, but whether she was an accomplice or not, it would certainly be unsafe to rely on her evidence unless it is corroborated in some particular as against the accused—Nanhu, 37 Cr.L.J. 846, 163 I.C. 460, 18 N.L.J. 327; Brijpal Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 1065 (1067), 165 I.C. 138, 1936 O.W.N. 892. Where a woman was cognizant of the fact that her paramour intended to kill her husband and in spite of this she did not disclose the fact to her husband, she must be regarded as an accomplice. In any case, her testimony cannot carry any higher value than the testimony of an accomplice—Phulla, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 731, 37 Cr.L.J. 978, 164 I.C. 700, 38 P.L.R. 226, 1936 Cr.C. 766.

See Note 950 "Accomplice".

957. Sub-section (2A):—Magistrate cannot try the case :—Sub-section (2A) lays down that the Magistrate tendering the pardon must commit the case to the Sessions; this means that he is not competent to proceed with the trial himself—Peru, 2 O.W.N. 464, 26 Cr.L.J. 1216, 88 I.C. 736, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 472, 12 O.L.J. 542. See also Public Prosecutor v. Muquarrab, 34 Cr.L.J. 212, 141 I.C. 881, A.I.R. 1933 Pesh 3, 1933 Cr.C. 145, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pesh. 1. The illegality is not one which can be cured by sec. 537—Jimun, 26 Cr.L.J. 549, 85 I.C. 645, A.I.R. 1925 Lah 378. Thus, where in a case of robbery, the Magistrate grants a conditional pardon to an approver and is satisfied that there is a prima facie case, he has no jurisdiction to dispose of the case himself but is bound under this provision of this clause to commit the case to the Sessions—Nga Kin, 4 Bur.L.J. 11, 86 I.C. 477, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 207, 26 Cr.L.J. 829. The Magistrate before whom the suspected person is brought face to face, and who attempts to induce him by promise of pardon to make a full and true disclosure, assumes to a certain extent the function of a police-officer and identifies himself with the prosecution, and it is doubtless on that reason that it is considered proper to disqualify him from trying the case—Batera, 1898 P.R. 3.

Where offences charged were within sec. 337, Cr. P. C., and the tender of pardon was made by a Magistrate within the terms of the section expressly on condition of the person to whom it was addressed making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the facts (or circumstances) within his knowledge and the persons who accepted the tenders of pardon from the Magistrates, were severally examined before the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence, the requirements of sub-sec. (2A) of sec. 337, Cr. P. C., then automatically came in force, which are that the accused, if there are reasonable grounds for believing that he is guilty of the offence is to be committed to the Court of Session or High Court. It is merely an irregularity on the part of the Magistrate if he has not recorded his reasons as required by sub-sec. (1A) of sec. 337, Cr. P. C. The right of the accused or the approver cannot be affected because the Magistrate has failed to comply with a requirement imposed for the benefit of the accused. Nor is it material that the Magistrate tendering the pardon did so after consulting the Local Government and with its authority. That is an internal matter of administration, which cannot affect the position of the accused or the approver. The essential fact is that the pardon was tendered to the approver by the Magistrate. It is obvious that the proceedings so taken under sec. 337, Cr. P. C., were different in character from the course which would have been taken under sec. 494, Cr. P. C. This latter section belongs to a different chapter of the Code. Sec. 337 falls under Chap. 24, which deals with general provisions as to inquiries and trials. Sec. 494 falls under Chap. 38, which is headed "of the Public Prosecutor," that is to say, the former section deals with the action of a judicial, the latter with that of an executive officer. Sec. 494 says nothing about pardons at all. It gives a general executive discretion to withdraw from the prosecution subject to the consent of the Court, which may be determined on many possible grounds, one of which no doubt is that the person in respect of whom the charge is withdrawn may be willing to give evidence. But the whole procedure and the various consequences under sec. 494 differ from those under sec. 337. Where at a later stage in the proceeds, the prosecution seeks to bring themselves under sec. 494, by purporting to take action under it, but it is then too late to change the position either as against the accused or against the approvers. The Local Government may not intend to act under sec. 337, but if their overt acts are such as to be only capable of being referred to that section, their intention not to act under it cannot matter—Faqir Singh v. Emp., AIR. 1938 P.C. 266 (269), 40 Bom.L.R. 1254, 68 C.L.J. 328, 42 C.W.N. 1252, 1938 OLR 405, 1938 A.Cr.C. 69, 19 P.L.T. 717, 176 I.C. 898, 1938 M.W.N. 969, 48 M.L.W. 537, 40 P.L.R. 876, 40 Cr.L.J. 360, I.L.R. 1938 Lah. 628, 11 R.P.C. 81, 1938 A.L.R. 753, 4 B.R. 850, 1938 O.W.N. 809, 1938 P.W.N. 698, 1938 O.A. 672, 1938 A.W.R. (P.C.) 170, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 780 (P.C.), overruling Faqir Singh v. Emp., 37 Cr.L.J. 515, 162 I.C. 180, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 353, 16 Lah. 594, 37 P.L.R. 715, 1936 Cr.C. 294, 9 R.L. 867, infra

A Deputy Commissioner trying a case under the special powers conferred by sec. 30, does so as a Magistrate, and if he tenders pardon to one of the accused, he cannot try the case himself—Paban Singh, 10 C.W.N. 847, 3 Cr.L.J. 44; Kishore, 25 Cr.L.J. 1341, 82 I.C. 573, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 119. On consequence, perhaps the most important, is that when a Magistrate has tendered the pardon, the trial must not be by another Magistrate even though he is vested under sec. 30, Cr. P. C., to try such an offence, but by the High Court or Sessions Court—Faqir Singh v. Emp., supra.

This sub-section debars only the Magistrate tendering the pardon from trying the case; but a District Magistrate sanctioning the tender of pardon to an approver is not precluded from trying the case—Akbar, 1919 P.R. 30, 21 Cr.L.J. 306, 55 I.C. 466.

Where two of the accused were produced before the District Magistrate and were told, under the direction of His Excellency the Governor, that no proceedings would be taken against them provided they made a true statement of facts relating to the case within their knowledge and, after they had accepted the terms, the case against them were withdrawn under sec. 494, Cr. P. C., in the Court of the Special Magistrate and with his permission and they were examined as witnesses on behalf of the prosecution, held that, in the circumstances, the case did not fall within the purview of sec. 337, Cr. P. C., and that the accused were not entitled to have it tried by the Court of Session in accordance with the provisions of this sub-section—Faqir Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 515, 162 I.C. 180, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 353, 16 Lah. 594, 37 P.L.R. 715, 1936 Cr.C. 294. This decision was overruled by the Privy Council in Faqir Singh v. Emp., supra.

A Special Magistrate under the Ordinance (II of 1932), tendering pardon to the accomplice, can proceed with the trial of the case himself as the Ordinance is inconsistent with sub sec. (2A) and prevails—Abdul Majid, 34 Cr.L.J. 1023, 145 I.C. 656, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 537, 60 Cal. 652, 1933 Cr.C. 893. Such is also the case with a Special Magistrate under the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act (XII of 1932 B.C.). He can tender pardon to an accused and try the co-accused himself—Mohammad Saleuddin, 36 Cr.L.J. 884, 156 I.C. 238, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 281, 1935 Cr.C. 391, 39 C.W.N. 698; Harihar Sinha, 63 C.L.J. 307, 40 C.W.N. 876, 163 I.C. 9, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 356, 1936 Cr.C. 583 (F.B.).

Approver cannot be committed :—Under sub-sec. (2A) it is clear that when pardon has been granted to an accused, the case of the other accused alone should be committed to the Sessions. The approver cannot be committed to the Sessions, for since he has been granted a pardon he cannot be tried. If the Magistrate commits the approver along with the other accused (which Magistrate frequently do under a mistaken view of the law), the Sessions Judge ought to make a reference to the High Court for getting the commitment of the approver quashed. If, however, the Sessions Judge does not make any such reference, treating the commitment of the approver as if there had been no commitment, the procedure is not illegal but a mere irregularity—Bhagwandin, 6 O.W.N. 218, 30 Cr.L.J. 567 (569), 116 I.C. 193, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 190, Ind. Rul. 1929 Oudh 305, 4 Luck. 679. The approver cannot be committed to the Sessions, but must be detained in custody until the termination of the trial. If he is committed, the commitment will be quashed by the High Court—Raja Ram, 1932 A.L.J. 754, 1932 Cr.C. 699 (700), 33 Cr.L.J. 802, 139 I.C. 408, A.I.R. 1932 All 581; Nana Amrita, 36 Cr.L.J. 499, 154 I.C. 327, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 70, 36 Bom.L.R. 1211, 1935 Cr.C. 132; Peru, 2 O.W.N. 464, 12 O.L.J. 542, 26 Cr.L.J. 1216.

958. Sub-section (3):—The approver shall be, unless he is on bail, detained until the termination of the trial—Mg. Po, 8 L.B.R. 357, 17 Cr.L.J. 391; and nothing can be done against an approver who has not complied with the conditions of pardon, until after the case in the Court of Session has been finished; then his trial should be commenced de novo—Bhan, 23 Bom. 493. See Note 962 under sec. 339.

The meaning of this sub-section is that the approver shall not be set at large until the judicial proceedings pending against the accused person are finished. It is immaterial for the purpose of this sub-section whether the proceedings are finished by a Magisterial order of discharge (under sec. 209) before trial, or by a Judge's order of acquittal after trial. In the case of the Magisterial discharge, the sub-section will be satisfied if the approver is detained in custody or is let on bail until the order of discharge is made—Intya, 37 Bom. 146, 13 Cr.L.J. 842, 17 I.C. 174. This sub-section clearly provides that so far as the trial Court is concerned, the detention in custody of the approver must end with the trial. The Sessions Judge has no authority to order the detention of the approver, in anticipation of any possible orders from the Court of Appeal, until the period fixed by the law of appeal expires or the appeal is heard and determined by the appellate Court—Sultan Ahmad, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 545, 39 C.W.N. 233, 62 Cal. 430, 36 Cr.L.J. 1308, 157 I.C. 1059, 1935 Cr.C. 937. See also Note 962.

The words "detained in custody" mean detention in jail and not detention in police custody. Even in the case of an accused person, detention in police custody is confined within the narrowest limits and hedged in by stringent conditions; see secs. 61 and 167. An approver does not stand in the same category as an accused, but is treated as a witness, and there is no provision of law for detaining a witness in police-custody. A witness, even though he is an approver, should not be placed in a worse position than the accused person—In re Khawati, 132 I.C. 519, 1931 Cr.C. 700, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 476, 12 Lah. 635, 32 P.L.R. 493, 32 Cr.L.J. 913 (915); Kundan Lal, 12 Lah. 604, 32 P.L.R. 423, 32 Cr.L.J. 785 (789, 791), 131 I.C. 625, 1931 Cr.C. 625, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 353; Ranbir Singh, 32 P.L.R. 728, 1931 Cr.C. 704, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 480, 33 Cr.L.J. 162.

This section, which is a special section dealing with approvers, controls sec. 498 (per Percival, J.C. Contra Rupchand, A.J.C.) Mahomed Abdul Majid, 28 Cr.L.J. 439, 101 I.C. 471, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 173. The provisions of this sub-section apply from the time that the person having accepted a tender under this section has accepted the position of an approver and has become a witness in the case. If he is not on bail the Magistrate is bound by the provision of this sub-section to retain him in custody until the termination of the trial. He has no jurisdiction to release him on bail—Ali Mahomed, 33 Cr.L.J. 906, 140 I.C. 153, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 40, Ind. Rul. 1932 Sind 174.

338. At any time after commitment, but before judgment

Power to direct tender is passed, the Court to which the commitment is made may, with the view of obtaining on the trial the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to, any such offence, tender or order the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender, a pardon on the same condition to such person.

959. Who can tender pardon :—After the commitment of the case to the Sessions, either the Court of Session can itself tender pardon, or it can direct the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender pardon. The Local Government cannot tender a pardon under this or the previous section, but it can withdraw the prosecution under sec. 494—Banu Singh, 33 Cal 1353; Paban Singh, 10 C.W.N. 847, 4 Cr L.J. 44.

The Sessions Court can direct only the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender pardon, but it cannot direct a Police Officer to do so—Fakir Mahomed, 6 W.R. (Cr. Lct.) 5.

To whom pardon can be tendered :—A pardon can be tendered to an accused provided he is not yet convicted. The words "supposed offence" in this section exclude those who have been actually convicted; but a tender of pardon to a person who has pleaded guilty but has not been convicted is not prohibited by this section; and the evidence of such person examined as a witness is admissible—Kallu, 7 All. 160; Bhagya, Ratanlal 750 (752).

When pardon may be tendered .—Pardon can be tendered at any time 'after commitment and before judgment is pronounced'; but it is extremely improper, though not illegal, to grant pardon at a late stage of the trial after the close of the prosecution and the defence, and after the opinion of the assessors has been given, though judgment has not yet been pronounced—Hulla, 1884 A.W.N. 147

339. (1) Where a pardon has been tendered under section 337 or section 338, and the Public Prosecutor certifies that in his opinion any person who has accepted such tender has, either by wil-

Commitment of person to whom pardon has been tendered.

fully concealing anything essential or by giving false evidence, not complied with the condition on which the tender was made, such person may be tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon was so tendered, or for any other offence of which he appears to have been guilty in connection with the same matter:

Provided that such person shall not be tried jointly with any of the other accused, and that he shall be entitled to plead at such trial that he has complied with the conditions upon which such tender was made; in which case it shall be for the prosecution to prove that such conditions have not been complied with.

(2) The statement made by a person who has accepted a tender of pardon may be given in evidence against him at such trial.

(3) No prosecution for the offence of giving false evidence in respect of such statement shall be entertained without the sanction of the High Court.

Change:—The italicised words and the proviso have been added by sec. 87 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act (XIII of 1923).

960. Certificate of Public Prosecutor:—"We would make a certificate by the Public Prosecutor as the basis of the prosecution of a person who has accepted a tender of pardon"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922). Under the old law, it was the trying Court which had the authority to determine whether the pardon had been forfeited so as to necessitate the trial of the approver—Mariama, 1889 P.R. 6; Dil Bahadur, 25 Cr L.J. 121, 76 I.C. 185; Kadu, 1904 P.R. 31; Sashi, 42 Cal. 856; Kackri, 7 N.L.R. 65, 10 I.C. 622, 12 Cr L.J. 326. Under the present law, no such determination by the trying Court is necessary, but the certificate of the Public Prosecutor is sufficient.

962. Trial of the approver:—Commitment or trial along with other accused, illegal—Sub-section (3) of sec. 337 lays down that the approver shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial of the other accused persons by the Court of Session. The effect of that section read with this section is that action can be taken against an approver, who has forfeited his pardon, after the trial of the other accused in the Court of Session is finished, and then his trial should be commenced de novo. If he has forfeited his pardon during the preliminary inquiry, he cannot be committed to the Sessions along with the other accused—Bhan, 23 Bom. 493 (494); Revappa, 4 Bom L.R. 826; Ramaswami, 24 Mad. 321; Aruna Chellum, 31 Mad. 272; Ramatevan, 15 Mad. 352; Mohan, 5 N.L.R. 134, 10 Cr.L.J. 418; Ramachandrayya v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 879. Such committal along with other co-accused to the Court of Sessions is a serious illegality vitiating the whole trial—Ram Lotan, 128 I.C. 209, 7 O.W.N. 972, 32 Cr.L.J. 91, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 113, 6 Luck. 386; Chauhan, 35 Cr.L.J. 889 (891), 148 I.C. 1192, 11 O.W.N. 765. But see contra—Sashi, 42 Cal. 856; Brij Naram, 20 All. 529; Budhan, 29 All. 24; Bala, 25 Bom. 675; in these cases it is held that the commitment of the approver along with the other accused is not illegal, though he cannot be tried with the other accused.

If the accused has forfeited his pardon during the trial, he cannot be tried at once along with the other accused, since he has not been regularly committed to the Sessions but has been sent up as a witness—Sudra, 14 All. 336; Mulua, 14 All. 502; Sashi, 42 Cal. 856, 19 C.W.N. 295, 26 I.C. 657, 16 Cr.L.J. 65; Kushya, Ratanlal 119; Chanan, 1 Lah. 218, 21 Cr.L.J. 518. This is now expressly provided for by the proviso newly added. The contrary view taken in Sultan, 5 A.L.J. 691, 8 Cr.L.J. 445 (450) that the trial of the approver along with the other accused is not illegal, is no longer correct. Before the approver can be tried by a Sessions Judge, the Sessions Judge should send him to a competent Magistrate for a regular commitment—Rama Tevan, 15 Mad. 352; Sudra, 14 All. 336; Jagat Chandra, 22 Cal. 50; Rama Varma, 3 Mad. 351.

Where one of the accused at first promised to make a clean breast of all the circumstances and was tendered a pardon conditional on his doing so, but before he was treated as an approver and put into the box he made a statement to the Court that he did not want the pardon and that he wished to be tried and that the pardon might be cancelled, whereupon he was tried along with the other accused, held that as the pardon though accepted for a time was rejected by the accused himself (and not forfeited) before it actually took effect, the case did not fall under this section and the so-called pardon was not a bar to the trial of the accused along with the others. The pardon referred to in this section is an accepted pardon; the acceptance must continue in force till the person pardoned actually gives evidence and then if he forfeits his pardon by not making a full and true disclosure, he should be separately tried—Basireddi Narappa, 45 M.L.J. 613, 25 Cr.L.J. 210, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 391, 76 I.C. 642, 1923 M.W.N. 697, 18 M.L.W. 606, 33 M.L.T. 77 and 156, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 391.

Where the Judge sends up the approver to a Magistrate for commitment, the committing Magistrate must in his commitment order give reasons for holding that the approver has forfeited his pardon—Po Ket, 10 Bur.L.T. 46, 8 L.B.R. 447, 17 Cr.L.J. 337.

Detention in custody :—The Sessions Court is not justified, after the close of the trial of the offence with respect to which pardon has been tendered to an approver, in sending the approver in custody to the Magistrate with a view to taking action against him for breach of the conditions of pardon. The approver is entitled to be discharged as soon as the trial closes, and action can be taken against him only by way of re-arrest—Kothia, 30 Bom. 611; Po Ket, 10 Bur.L.T. 46, 17 Cr.L.J. 337. It is improper to keep the accused in further custody after the termination of the original trial—Mullu, 11 N.L.R. 59, 16 Cr.L.J. 417; Abani Bhushan, 37 Cal. 845. See also Note 958.

963. Plea of pardon:—See the proviso. The approver is entitled to plead, both before the committing Magistrate and before the Sessions Judge, in bar to his trial, that he has fulfilled the condition on which pardon was tendered to him—Kothia, 30 Bom. 611; Gangua, 37 All. 331; Chanan, 1 Lah. 218, 21 Cr.L.J. 518; Po Ket, 10 Bur.L.T.

46, 17 Cr.L.J. 337. The plea should be taken at the commencement of the proceedings before the Magistrate, and it would then be necessary for the Magistrate to consider whether the pardon has been forfeited—Sashi, 42 Cal. 856. But the approver is entitled to plead the bar of pardon before the Sessions Judge although he had not done so before the committing Magistrate—Gangua, 37 All. 331; Sashi, 42 Cal. 856, 19 C.W.N. 295, 16 Cr.L.J. 65, 26 I.C. 657. Even though the committing Magistrate has decided against the approver, it is open to him to plead his pardon again at the trial before the Sessions Judge—Sashi, 19 C.W.N. 295, 26 I.C. 657, 16 Cr.L.J. 65, 42 Cal. 856; Khal, 39 All. 305; Po Ket, 8 L.B.R. 447, 17 Cr.L.J. 337.

The onus is on the prosecution to prove that the approver has forfeited his pardon—Sashi, 42 Cal. 856, 19 C.W.N. 295, 26 I.C. 657, 16 Cr.L.J. 65; Bala, 25 Bom. 675; Kothia, 30 Bom. 611; Kullen, 32 Mad. 173; Khal, 39 All. 305. When a conditional pardon has been tendered and accepted, there must be good faith on both sides and it is for the Crown to prove that the pardon was forfeited by showing that the accused was guilty of deliberate bad faith. If this question is answered in the negative, no other question arises—Dip Chand v. Emp., 37 Cr.L.J. 79, 159 I.C. 412, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 799, 37 P.L.R. 336, 1935 Cr.C. 1067, 8 R.L. 391, following Sohyan v. Emp., 1930 M.W.N. 773. See the proviso.

963A. Sub-section (2):—This sub-section lays down that the statement (i.e., the disclosure made by the approver upon which the pardon was granted) is admissible in evidence against him. It is not made under the provisions of sec. 164, Cr. P. C., and that section in no way governs such a statement. This statement is not excluded from evidence by the provisions of sec. 24, Evidence Act. In fact, this clause is an exception of the rule of evidence enacted in sec. 24, Evidence Act, so far as that section excludes a confession made as the result of inducement or promise, because an approver's disclosure is in its very nature always the result of an inducement or promise, i.e., the inducement to confess upon a promise of pardon. But a disclosure extorted by threat or violence or pressure would be ruled out of evidence—Ram Nath, 29 P.L.R. 165, 29 Cr.L.J. 413 (415), 9 Lah. 608, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 320, 108 I.C. 514, following Sultan Khan, 5 A.L.J. 691, 8 Cr.L.J. 445 (451). Where the accused himself originally stated that he confessed because he was afraid he might be beaten and got confused and thought that the murder was bound to come out and subsequently the police talked to him about the tender of pardon and he accepted the offer, without any pressure being exerted upon him, held that the statement was admissible under this sub-section—Anu Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 910, 35 Cr.L.J. 168, 146 I.C. 677, 1933 Cr.C. 1297.

Any statement made by an accused person before he receives pardon under sec. 337, Cr. P. C., must, if it is of a confessional nature, be recorded strictly in accordance with the procedure prescribed for the record of confession by secs 164 and 364, Cr. P. C., or the statement of the accused after he has been pardoned may be recorded in his character of a witness under sec 164, Cr. P. C., or his statement may be one which is recorded formally as that of a witness examined in the course of an enquiry or trial. The word "statement" contemplated in sub-sec. (2) of sec. 339, Cr. P. C., appears primarily to refer to a statement made by him as a witness as contemplated in sub-sec. (2) of sec 337, Cr. P. C., in the course of an enquiry or trial. This was the view taken in The Local Government v. Mullu, 11 N.L.R. 59, 28 I.C. 993, 16 Cr.L.J. 417. It may also include a statement recorded under sec. 164, Cr. P. C., after the tender of pardon but it can in no case include a confessional statement made by an accused person before the tender of pardon unless it was recorded in accordance with the strict procedure provided for recording confessions. Any confessional statement, therefore, recorded before pardon, would be governed by sec. 164, Cr. P. C., and would be admissible in evidence only if the essential provisions of that section had been followed. In recording a statement after an acceptance of pardon, the Magistrate has the power of administration of oath or solemn affirmation under sec. 164, Cr. P. C. The proper procedure then to be followed by a Magistrate is to record the statement of the approver immediately after, and not before, tendering pardon. A statement so recorded is clearly admissible in evidence under sec. 339 (2), Cr. P. C.—Horulal v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 433 (436, 437), 187 I.C. 203, 1940 N.L.J. 286, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 218.

Although under this sub-section the statement of the approver may be admitted in evidence, yet it requires corroboration by existing evidence. It is in the nature of a confession, and when it is withdrawn, it should be regarded in the light of a retracted confession and must be corroborated in material particulars. Before the approver can be convicted, his guilt must be proved with that degree of certainty which the law requires—Ram Nath, supra; Faqir Shah, 35 Cr.L.J. 1242, 151 I.C. 110, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 46, 1934 Cr.C. 882. Where the approver's statement in its general aspect is abundantly corroborated and there can be no doubt of the truth of the story told in it, it alone is sufficient evidence for his conviction when he is placed on trial after forfeiture of his pardon—Aziz Begum v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 16, 171 I.C. 954, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 689, 39 P.L.R. 394, 10 R.L. 254.

But in Puran v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 135, 30 P.L.R. 930, 173 I.C. 484, 39 Cr.L.J. 335, it has been held that when the accused is given a pardon as an approver and he resiles from his statement in the committing Magistrate's Court when he is in the Sessions Court, his own statement in the committing Magistrate's Court must be treated as a confession and on the confession alone conviction might follow.

964. Sub-section (3):—Prosecution for perjury:—When a pardon has been legally tendered to an accomplice and he breaks the condition of his pardon by making a retracted statement at the trial, proper sanction is necessary for the prosecution on each branch of the alternative charge—Dala, 10 Bom. 190. Want of sanction is not a more irregularity but an illegality which vitiates the proceedings—Sharina, 1884 P.R. 42; Natu, 27 Cal. 137.

Sanction to prosecute should not be given merely on the ground that the approver contradicted himself before the committing Magistrate. A witness who is in any way induced to make a false statement in connection with a capital charge should be allowed every possible locus penitentiz—Bodha, 11 A.L.J. 964, 15 Cr.L.J. 76. But the granting of locus penitentiz is a matter for judicial discretion, according to the circumstances of each particular case—Dukhu, 1929 A.L.J. 227, 30 Cr.L.J. 1157 (1158), 120 I.C. 126, A.I.R. 1929 All. 321, Ind. Rul. 1930 All. 14.

It is obvious that if an approver resiles from a previous statement made by him incriminating himself and certain other persons in the Court of the committing Magistrate and makes a statement, in the Court of Sessions, directly contradictory to the one previously made by him, one of his two statements must be false, and as such, he must necessarily be guilty of giving false evidence. But the fact, that the Legislature has prohibited the prosecution of an approver for the offence of giving false evidence without the sanction of the High Court, demonstrates that the mere fact that the two statements are contradictory cannot in every case be a warrant for directing the prosecution of the approver. The cardinal question for consideration is whether the confession and the incriminating statement made by the approver were or were not true. If the circumstances point to the conclusion that the confession and the incriminating statement were not true, the irresistible inference must be, that those statements were put into the mouth of the approver by some one by inducement or by threat and, in such case, it would be opposed to the public policy to prosecute and to punish an approver for the offence of giving false evidence when, as a matter of fact, he did not voluntarily make the incriminating statement. On the other hand, if it appears that the confession and the incriminating statement represented the true statement of facts, and the approver in collusion with the accused resiled from the statement previously made by him, his subsequent statement must be false and in such a case it is not only desirable but expedient to order his prosecution for giving false evidence—Mathura, 35 Cr.L.J. 444, 147 I.C. 653, 1933 A.L.J. 1389, A.I.R. 1934 All. 43; Prabhu, 38 Cr.L.J. 1079, 171 I.C. 368, 39 P.L.R. 13, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 551, 10 R.L. 192. Where contradictory statements have been made on different occasions sanction cannot be refused unless there be something to show that the approver made the statement alleged to be false under undue influence—Waryam, 5 Lah L J 408, 25 Cr.L J 174, 76 I.C. 398, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 90; Hussaina, A.I.R. 1933 Lah 868, 1933 Cr.C 1113, 146 I.C. 461, 35 Cr.L.J. 111. If an approver has made contradictory statements but in the latter statement he has reverted to truth, then it is undesirable that he should be prosecuted for perjury by making contradictory statements. When he is being prosecuted for the original offence it is unfair to prosecute him for perjury—Jairman, 33 Cr.L.J. 485, 137 I.C. 784, 33 P.L.R. 321, A.I.R. 1932 Lah 307, Ind. Rul 1932 Lah. 350, 1932 Cr.C. 421.

It is not necessary that an approver should be punished for perjury if he can be punished sufficiently for that and the original crime, on a conviction for that original crime. Sanction, therefore, ought to be refused, unless it appears that a conviction for the original crime is unlikely or a prosecution for it is undesirable for any other reason, or that on a conviction for the original crime the sentence that could be passed would be too light to cover both offences. Before sanction can be granted, therefore, it must be shown that there is no intention of prosecuting the approver for the original crime, or that he has already been prosecuted for it and has either been acquitted or has received or is likely to receive a light sentence not sufficient to cover his further crime of perjury—Gambhir, 23 N.L.R. 35, 28 Cr.L.J. 645 (646), 103 I.C. 101, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 189.

An approver was granted conditional pardon under sec. 337; and then instead of being examined under sub-section (2) of sec. 337, he was sent by the D S P. to the committing Magistrate to have his statement recorded. The Magistrate recorded his statement on oath in a miscellaneous proceeding, and the approver then made a statement implicating himself and others in a dacoity. He was then examined as a witness in the committal proceedings of the accused persons, and there he denied all knowledge of the dacoity. The District Magistrate thereupon applied to the High Court for sanction to prosecute him for perjury. Held that the preliminary examination on oath was an illegal and unnecessary procedure which could not provide the material for a prosecution for perjury, in case the approver should subsequently refile from his statement. No sanction can be granted on such material. The proper course would have been to proceed with the trial of the approver for dacoity after obtaining the certificate of the Public Prosecutor—Nga Bo Gye, 3 Rang 224, 26 Cr.L.J. 1396, 89 I.C. 708, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 286.

The sanction must be given by the High Court. The object is that the propriety of the prosecution of the approver should be considered and determined independently; such an independent consideration cannot be expected from the Sessions Judge—Sharina, 1884 P.R. 42.

An application to the High Court for sanction for prosecution of an approver should be made by motion in open Court and not by a letter of reference—Manik Chandra, 24 Cal 492; Madiga Nallavadu, 32 Mad 47; Bulaka, 1904 P.R. 10, 1 Cr.L.J. 793; Raja, 1912 P.L.R. 175, 13 Cr.L.J. 451.

339A. (1) The Court trying under section 339 a person

Procedure in trial of who has accepted a tender of pardon person under sec 339. shall—

- (a) if the Court is a High Court or Court of Session, before the charge is read out and explained to the accused under section 271, sub-section (1), and
- (b) if the Court is the Court of a Magistrate, before the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution is taken,

ask the accused whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions on which the tender of the pardon was made.

(2) If the accused does so plead, the Court shall record the plea and proceed with the trial, and the jury, or the Court with the aid of the assessors, or the Magistrate, as the case may be, shall, before judgment is passed in the case, find whether or not the accused has complied with the conditions of the pardon, and, if it is found that he has so complied, the Court shall, notwithstanding anything contained in this Code, pass judgment of acquittal.

965. This section has been newly added by sec. 88 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

"We consider that it is desirable to lay down some procedure with regard to the plea contemplated by the proviso to sub-section (1) of sec. 339. The Bill contains no indication as to when this plea is to be raised and what is to be the effect of it, and difficulties of procedure may obviously arise with reference to secs 225, 271 (2) and 272. We, therefore, propose a new section to be added after sec. 339"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

Sections 339A and 340, 341 and 342, Cr. P. C., contain further provisions for the protection of the pardoned person on or in respect of his trial for giving false evidence—Harthar Sinha v. Emp., A.I.R. 1936 Cal 356 (361), 40 C.W.N. 876, 163 I.C. 9, 1936 Cr.C. 583, 37 Cr.L.J. 758, 63 C.L.J. 307 (F.B.).

This section does not apply at all to the case of an approver who has stated that his statement as an approver was completely false. In the very nature of the things it cannot so apply. Where the approver's case is that the statement which he made on a tender of pardon was entirely false, it is impossible to decide whether he is now telling the truth without deciding the whole case and deciding that he was actually an offender. In other words, it would be begging the question. This section clearly applies to a case in which the approver's case is still that he was one of the persons who had committed the offence but that the Public Prosecutor was in error in considering that he had in any way failed to comply with any of the conditions upon which the tender of pardon was made—Gurdit Singh v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 614, 181 I.C. 924, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 66, 41 P.L.R. 290, I.L.R. 1939 Lah. 216. This section provides that a person by whom a tender of pardon has been accepted, when tried under sec. 339, Cr. P. C., is to be asked whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions of the pardon, and if it is found that he has, he shall be acquitted—Faqir Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 266 (268), 40 Bom.L.R. 1254, 68 C.L.J. 328, 42 C.W.N. 1252, 1938 O.L.R. 405, 1938 A.Cr.C. 69, 19 P.L.T. 717, 176 I.C. 898, 1938 M.W.N. 969, 48 M.L.W. 537, 40 P.L.R. 876, 40 Cr.L.J. 360, 11 R.P.C. 81, 1938 A.L.R. 753, 4 B.R. 850, 1938 O.W.N. 809, 1938 P.W.N. 698, 1938 O.A. 672, 1938 A.W.R. (P.C.) 170, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 780 (P.C.).

When the approver is put on his trial, the question whether the approver has forfeited his pardon has to be first decided, before his original offence can be tried—Kothia, 30 Bom. 611; Kullan, 32 Mad. 173; Sashi, 42 Cal. 856, 19 C.W.N. 295, 26 I.C. 657, 16 Cr.L.J. 65; Kanwar, 1902 P.R. 34; Mullu, 11 N.L.R. 59, 16 Cr.L.J. 417; To Gale, 7 L.B.R. 1, 14 Cr.L.J. 401; Po Ket, 10 Bur.L.T. 46, 17 Cr.L.J. 337. The question whether the pardon has been forfeited is a question of fact for the jury—Sashi, supra.

If the approver is tried before a Sessions Judge, it is duty of the Sessions Judge to ask the approver whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions of the pardon. Where the committing Magistrate asked him whether he pleaded that he had complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon had been made, but this question was not repeated in the Sessions Court, and no plea was recorded, held that there was a contravention of the imperative provisions of this section, and the trial of the approver must be set aside and a retrial held—Itwari, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 256, 6 O.W.N. 372, 116 I.C. 64, 30 Cr.L.J. 559, following Ali v. Emp., infra. See also Anup

Singh, 35 Cr.L.J. 168, 146 I.C. 677, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 910, 1933 Cr.C. 1297. The Lahore High Court has, however, taken a different view in Gurdit Singh v. Emp., supra. It has been laid down that where the charge has been read out to the accused and he has been made to plead to it before and not after he has been asked to plead whether or not he has complied with the terms of the pardon, it is an irregularity curable under sec. 537, Cr. P. C.

The view expressed in Itwari, supra, has been accepted by the Nagpur High Court. It has been laid down that under sec. 339A which was newly added by sec. 88 of the Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act XVIII of 1923, it is imperative on the Court of Session to ask the accused, before the charge is read out and explained to him under sec. 271 (1), Cr. P. C., whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions on which the tender of the pardon was made and to record his plea and proceed with the trial, and the assessors should before judgment is passed be called upon to express their opinion on the question whether or not the accused has complied with the conditions of his pardon. If the Court with the aid of the assessors finds that the accused has complied with the conditions of the pardon, it is incumbent on the Court to pass a judgment of acquittal. The failure to perform that duty vitiates the trial. Under the proviso to sub-sec. (1) of sec. 339, Cr. P. C., the accused is entitled to plead, before he is tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered, that he has complied with the conditions of his pardon, in which case the onus lies on the prosecution to prove that such conditions have not been complied with. It is clear that the trial for the offence in respect of which the pardon was granted can not begin until the requirements of sec. 339A, Cr. P. C., are carried out in limine, and the judgment of conviction cannot be delivered unless the Court with the aid of assessors finds that the accused has failed to comply with the conditions of the pardon—Horilal v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 956, A.I.R. 1940 Nag 77, 1939 N.L.J. 497, 184 I.C. 351.

If the approver pleads that he had complied with the conditions of pardon, the Court should come to a clear finding as to whether the accused has or has not complied with the conditions of the pardon, and this finding should be recorded, before he can be properly tried and convicted—Itwari, supra; Jagannath, 3 O.W.N. 474, 27 Cr.L.J. 768. The approver should be asked not simply whether he has complied with the conditions on which the pardon was granted, but he should be asked whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made; and the record should show that he was so asked. The terms of this section should be clearly explained to him, and it should be made clear to him that he can plead the pardon as a bar to his trial—Ali, 5 Lah 379 (381), 26 Cr.L.J. 237, 84 I.C. 61.

340. (1) Any person accused of an offence before a Criminal Court, or against whom proceedings are instituted under this Code in any such Court, may of right be defended by a pleader.

Right of person against whom proceedings are instituted to be defended, and his competency to be a witness.

(2) Any person against whom proceedings are instituted in any such Court under section 107, or under Chapter X, Chapter XI, Chapter XII or Chapter XXXVI or under section 552, may offer himself as a witness in such proceedings.

Change:—This section has been re-drafted by sec. 89 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

"The expression person accused in the old section may be read as referring only to persons accused of any offence; it is proposed to make it clear that any person against whom proceedings are instituted under this Code is entitled to be defended by a pleader. It is also laid down that persons against whom proceedings under Chapters X, XI, XII, XXXVI, or under sec. 552 of the Code are pending do not labour under the ordinary disability of an accused person to be sworn, and that they may be examined as witnesses in such proceedings"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

966. Scope:—It has been stated in some cases that persons against whom proceedings are instituted under Chapters VIII and X are in the position of "accused" persons within the meaning of this section and are entitled to be defended by a pleader—Jhoja Singh, 23 Cal. 493; Ida, 1900 P.R. 15; Grand, 25 All. 375; Abinash, 4 C.W.N. 797; Nakhi Lal, 27 Cal. 656 (658). The Legislature has now added the words "person against whom proceedings are instituted" which would expressly include persons proceeded against under Chapters VIII and X, and it will no longer be necessary to enter into the much vexed question as to whether such persons are in the position of 'accused' persons. Under the amended section, a person against whom proceedings have been instituted under sec. 110 is entitled as a matter of right to have a reasonable opportunity afforded him of defending himself—Jatoi, 20 S.L.R. 122, 27 Cr.L.J. 935, 96 I.C. 391, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 288. Where an inquiry under sec. 476 is started against any person, the Court should hear the pleader appearing on behalf of such person—Ram Nihore, 8 A.L.J. 237, 12 Cr.L.J. 231.

But a person against whom no process has been issued is neither an 'accused' person nor a 'person against whom any proceedings have been instituted'; such a person has no right to attend, much less to be represented by a pleader, during a preliminary inquiry held under sec. 202 before issue of process. If he chooses to attend, he may do so like any other member of the public; but he has no locus standi as a party—Shakh Chand v. Mahomed Hanif, 4 N.L.R. 81, 8 Cr.L.J. 20; Golap Jan v. Bholanth, 38 Cal. 880. See also Note.

Section 340 gives the accused person a right to be defended by a pleader, and this right begins from the moment that "any person is accused of an offence before a Criminal Court or proceedings are instituted under this Code in any such Court." An application by the Police for remand under sec. 167 can be held to be a "proceeding" instituted under this Code in a Criminal Court. He is an accused, and appears as such before the Magistrate. Therefore, at least from the moment after the 24 hours of arrest that he appears before the Court, this right begins. His legal advisers can appear, oppose the remand, offer bail, or make any other legal application on his behalf—Llewellyn Evans, 50 Bom. 741, 28 Bom. L.R. 1043, 27 Cr.L.J. 1169 (1172). This section gives the accused person a right to be defended by a pleader, and this right necessarily implies a right to previous consultation and advice. Therefore, an accused should have access to legal advice even when he is under police custody under sec. 167 during the course of an investigation. But this right must be subject to legitimate restrictions. Thus, an interview with a legal adviser must be allowed in the presence of a police-officer, though not within his hearing—Sundar Singh, 12 Lah. 16, 31 P.L.R. 780, 32 Cr.L.J. 339 (341); see also Amolak, 12 Lah. 211, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 13, 32 Cr.L.J. 1022 (1023); Balkrishna, 12 Lah. 435, 33 Cr.L.J. 180 (181), 135 I.C. 602, 32 P.L.R. 1, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 99, 1931 Cr.C. 163, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 138; Sudha Sindhu, 39 C.W.N. 259, 62 Cal. 384, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 101. These rules cannot be evaded by removing the accused person to a place so that nobody knows where he is and his relations and friends cannot communicate with him and legal assistance cannot be availed of. Nor is it compliance with these rulings that applications made to the Superintendent of Police or to the District Magistrate should be kept pending or delayed until the confession has been secured. The matter is really reduced to a farce if interviews are allowed only after a confession has been recorded—Jahangir Lal, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 230 (244), 150 I.C. 1056, 35 Cr.L.J. 1180. Refusal by the police to allow the prisoner to be interviewed by his legal adviser is not justifiable, but this cannot by itself be a ground for considering the custody to be improper or for setting the accused at liberty—Sundar Singh, supra.

The Court has jurisdiction to enquire into a complaint by an under-trial prisoner in connection with his treatment in jail. If it is found on enquiry that the action taken by the jail authorities is in conformity with the law, the Court will have no power to interfere. But, if it is found that the action is not warranted by the Prisons Act or the rules thereunder the Court has powers to pass an appropriate direction in the matter—Sukh Dev Raj, 32 Cr.L.J. 988, 132 I.C. 597, 32 P.L.R. 586, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 731, 1931 Cr.C. 850.

967. Right of accused to be defended by pleader:—The accused has a right to choose his own pleader, and the Court is not entitled to tell him to appoint another pleader, because the pleader already engaged does not know how to behave in Court—James Fitzgerald, Ratanlal 861 (863). The Court has no power to forbid a duly qualified pleader to appear for the accused—Dajee, Ratanlal 25. The accused has a right that the pleader engaged by him must be heard. It is not a question of indulgence but of right. It is an elementary principle of law that no order ought to be made to a man's prejudice without hearing him, and his counsel must be heard before a final opinion is formed by the Court. The Court has no discretion to refuse to hear the counsel—Iboov, 1 Cr.L.J. 760, 6 Bom.L.R. 665. If the Court refuses to hear the pleader for the accused, it is not a mere irregularity but an illegality vitiating the trial, and the conviction must be set aside and a retrial held—Muthukaruppa, 55 M.L.J. 626, 112 I.C. 586, 28 M.L.W. 656, A.I.R. 1928 Mad 1234, 29 Cr.L.J. 1082. The Court has power to disallow improper questions put by him; if the pleader persists in asking irrelevant questions and wasting the time of the Court, in spite of warning, the Court can take action for contempt; but it cannot ask the pleader to sit down in the middle of cross-examination, and ask the accused to engage another pleader—James Fitzgerald, Ratanlal 861 (863). It is the duty of the Magistrate to afford the accused and his friend every opportunity of making his defence and he should not personally interpose in any way between them. It is, therefore, improper for a Magistrate to refuse to allow the pleader engaged by the wife of an accused for his defence to have an interview with him or to appear and sit in Court—Uksudev, 1 Bom.L.R. 856. An accused should be given a reasonable opportunity of defending himself. When after the commencement of the trial, an application is made asking time to engage a pleader, the reasonable course for the Magistrate to adopt would be to proceed with the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses and then to allow a reasonable time to the accused to appoint a pleader—Pita, 47 All. 147, 26 Cr.L.J. 575, 85 I.C. 719, A.I.R. 1925 All. 285. If the accused's pleader is not heard, the conviction will be set aside—Munirama, 5 M.L.T. 290, 9 Cr.L.J. 305.

But a pleader not otherwise authorised to practise in a Court (e.g., a second grade Advocate) has no right to be heard by the Court. But the Magistrate has a discretion to permit him to appear for an accused person. This permission should be given sparingly and only in those cases in which the Magistrate considers that it is for the interests of the accused that it should be given—W. Calogredy, 10 Bur.L.T. 117, 18 Cr.L.J. 345.

The District Magistrate directed the Prosecuting Inspector, who was not a member of the Bar, to defend two Government Officials and the trying Magistrate allowed him to appear for the defence. Held that he could appear and defend them and that there was no reason for holding that he was not a person appointed by the accused with the permission of the Court to defend them, though it was desirable that they had made such appointment—Chotekhan, A.I.R. 1930 Nag 130, 26 N.L.R. 172, 31 Cr.L.J. 419, 122 I.C. 442, 1930 Cr.C. 506.

Pleader appointed by Court —Those whose duty it is to select lawyers to defend prisoners, who are too poor to instruct lawyers on their own account, at the expenses of the Crown should not treat the selection as a matter of patronage for the benefit of the lawyer so appointed. The selection should be from among young men of marked ability. Frequently persons actually appointed do their work very badly and conspicuous opportunities for cross-examination, and obvious arguments are entirely ignored. In such circumstances also the trial Judge should remember that he has the duty not only to prosecution but to the defence. He has the police diary in front of him and should use his greater experience to cross-examine the witnesses when he sees that the defence lawyer is incompetent—Darpan Potdarin v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 384 (389), 173 I.C. 833, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 153, 10 R.P. 456, 4 B.R. 342.

The position of a pleader appointed by the Court to defend a prisoner is not the same as that of a pleader whom the accused has authorised to act for him. Any admission made by the former is not binding on the accused—Sangaya, 2 Bom L.R. 751. When the Sessions Judge or the Magistrate engages a counsel for the defence of an accused he does so with the express or implied consent of the latter and that no Court has any authority to force upon a prisoner the services of a counsel, if he is unwilling to accept them—Sukh Dev, A I R. 1929 Lah. 705 (707), 1929 Cr.C. 351. Where this is done and the accused raises his objection at the earliest opportunity and the result is a trial in which the accused is not free to cross-examine the witnesses or to plead for himself, the whole trial is illegal—Murid Hussain v. Emp., 39 P.L.R. 311.

Private Pleader—Under section 4 (r), an accused person cannot claim as of right to be represented by a private person, but he may be represented by such person with the permission of the Court. But in permitting or disallowing the appearance of private persons as pleaders, a Magistrate should exercise a discretion in each case—Anonymous, 2 Weir 400; and a general order that no person will be allowed to practise as a private pleader is illegal—Krishnamachariar, 12 M.L.J. 354, 2 Weir 401; Nagasami, 31 M.L.T. 458, 1922 M.W.N. 809. But an order excluding any particular individual in any particular case would be within the discretion of the Magistrate and therefore legal—Krishnamachariar, supra.

The Advocates on the Appellate Side are not entitled to appear on the Crown Side of the High Court—N. Gobinho, A I R. 1934 Bom. 70, 58 Bom. 456, 148 I.C. 664, 1934 Cr.C. 302, 36 Bom L.R. 1.

968. Mukhtars:—Under sec 4 (r), before it was amended in 1923, a Mukhtar could appear only with the permission of the Court—Anant Ram, 30 All. 66. But still it was held to be improper for a Magistrate to shut up the defence of the accused merely because he was represented by a Mukhtar; and a general order prohibiting Mukhtars to appear in Sessions Courts was held to be illegal—Ishan Chandra, 38 Cal 488. "Magistrates should not, by the indiscriminate exclusion of persons who are invested by law a distinct professional status in criminal trials, deprive parties of legal aid which they can frequently obtain at a moderate cost"—Cal. G. R. & O., p 29; Ishan Chandra, supra.

Under sec. 4, cl. (r) as now amended by Act XXXV of 1923, Mukhtars have now been placed on the same footing as pleaders, and are entitled as of right to appear in all Criminal Courts without requiring any special permission.

969. Sub-section (2):—A person against whom proceedings are instituted under sec 488 may give evidence on his own behalf, as such person is not an "accused" person and the proceedings are not criminal proceedings—Nur Mahomed v. Bismella, 16 Cal. 781; Bachai v. Jamuna, 25 Cr.L.J. 1091, 81 I.C. 915, A I R. 1925 Cal. 339. A person against whom proceedings are started under Chapter X may be examined on oath as a witness—Hirananda, 9 C.W.N. 983.

Memorandum of argument:—The Court should not receive the memorandum of arguments on behalf of the prosecution, especially without the knowledge of the accused. When this was done, the High Court set aside the conviction solely on this ground—Mannen Venkaiyya, 29 Cr.L.J. 929, 111 I.C. 849, 28 M.L.W. 511, 1928 M.W.N. 788, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1130, 55 M.L.J. 712. See also Note 842A.

Vakalatnama:—There is no provision either in the Cr P. C. or in the rules of the Patna High Court requiring an Advocate or Vakal of the High Court to file a duly stamped appointment in writing in criminal cases—Subda, 27 Cr.L.J. 666, 94 I.C. 714, 7 P.L.T. 524, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 296. Vide also letter No. 5593, dated 12th July 1932, written by the Offg. Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Judicial Department, to the Commissioner of the Presidency Division, in which the position with regard to filing of Vakalatnamas has been stated to be as follows:—

- (1) a pleader or a muktear appearing for an accused person present in Court is not required to file any power;
- (2) a Magistrate may refuse to hear a pleader or a muktear wishing to appear on behalf of an absent accused person, unless he has a power authorising him to appear;

- (3) a pleader or a mukhtar has no right to appear for a complainant without the permission of the Magistrate; such permission may be refused if a power is not executed.

341. If the accused, though not insane, cannot be made to understand the proceedings, the Court may proceed with the inquiry or trial; and, in the case of a Court other than a High Court, if such inquiry results in a commitment or if such a trial results in a conviction, the proceedings shall be forwarded to the High Court with a report of the circumstances of the case, and the High Court shall pass thereon such order as it thinks fit.

Procedure where accused does not understand proceedings.

970. Scope of section:—This section is intended to provide for cases where accused is unable to understand the proceedings through deafness, or dumbness, or through ignorance of the language of the country and the want of an interpreter. In such cases the High Court will order the detention of the prisoner during His Majesty's pleasure—Husen, 5 Bom. 262; Hussein, Ratanlal 151.

This section is inapplicable where the inability to understand the proceeding arises from unsoundness of mind. In such cases the procedure prescribed by Chapter XXXIV should be followed—Husen, 5 Bom. 262; Kasima, Ratanlal 832. But if after inquiry under that Chapter, it appears that the prisoner is not a lunatic, the Magistrate should proceed under this section—Adala, 11 M.L.T. 24, 14 Cr.L.J. 24.

A reference can be made under this section if the accused cannot be made to understand the proceedings. If, however, the deaf mute is intelligent and able to understand the proceedings, e.g., by means of signs, the provisions of this section do not apply and the case should be dealt with as in the ordinary way—Gunga, 28 Cr.L.J. 656, 103 I.C. 112, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 799; Alla Dia, 10 Lah. 566, 29 Cr.L.J. 1104, 112 I.C. 688; Dubi Halwai, 19 W.R. 37; Doda Mahadu, 3 Bom.L.R. 271; Nga San, 4 Bur.L.T. 150, 11 I.C. 250, 12 Cr.L.J. 386. In modern practice, want of speech and hearing does not imply want of capacity either in the understanding or in memory, but only a difficulty in the means of communicating knowledge. The law in India certainly does not expressly provide for a sane deaf mute being exempted from punishment. If his mind is sound his inability to hear and speak will not excuse him—Nga San, supra. If it be shown that the deaf and dumb person had sufficient intelligence to understand the character of his criminal act, he is liable to punishment—Deaf and Dumb Accused, 40 Bom. 598, 18 Cr.L.J. 143; Russel on Crimes, Vol. 1, p. 62.

This section clearly applies only to the case of an accused who is deaf and dumb. The proceedings to be forwarded to the High Court are only those relating to an accused person who cannot be made to understand the proceedings though not insane. This section cannot be construed to mean that in a case where there are two accused and one of them though not insane is not able to understand the proceedings, the Magistrate should refer the proceedings of both to the High Court, and the High Court under the provisions of this section would have no jurisdiction to pass any order with regard to the accused who is able to understand the proceedings—Trimbak Damodar Heilekar, 39 Cr.L.J. 866, 177 I.C. 444, 11 R.B. 81, 40 Bom.L.R. 495, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 352.

971. Duty of Magistrate:—Where the accused is deaf and dumb, some means of communication with him should be adopted. The Magistrate should try and get into communication with him with the assistance of his relations; the Magistrate should make enquiry as to whether he has any friends or relatives who were accustomed to communicate with him and the manner in which he is communicated with in the ordinary affairs of his life—Deaf and Dumb Man, 8 Bom L.R. 849, 4 Cr.L.J. 444; Nga San, 4 Bur L.T. 150, 12 Cr.L.J. 386; Samuel, Ratanlal 696; Anonymous, 2 Weir 402. Where the Magistrate omitted to attempt to communicate with the deaf and dumb accused, the conviction was set aside as the accused was certainly prejudiced by such omission—Anonymous, 2 Weir 403.

In making a reference under this section the Magistrate should state his view of the conduct of the accused and must take some evidence regarding the previous history and habits of the accused—Samuel, Ratanlal 696. The Magistrate should, when making a reference record a finding as to whether the accused is capable of realising the criminal character of the act done by him, or can understand the purpose or nature of the judicial proceedings that have been taken against him—Gunga, 30 P.L.R. 597, 30 Cr.L.J. 948, 118 I.C. 642, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 64, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 802.

Magistrate cannot pass sentence :—The Magistrate can convict the accused, and upon conviction can refer the case to the High Court, but cannot pass sentence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 403; Gahna, 1889 P.R. 37. If the Magistrate passes sentence upon the accused, the High Court will set aside the sentence and pass such order as it thinks proper—Gahna, 1889 P.R. 37.

Summary Trial—Where the accused is a deaf-mute, it is highly inconvenient to conduct the trial summarily even though the offence is summarily triable—Deaf and Dumb Man, 8 Bom.L.R. 849, 4 Cr.L.J. 444.

972. Reference to High Court:—Reference can be made under this section to the High Court, if the inquiry or trial results in a committal or conviction—Trikam, Ratanlal 180. The Judge should proceed to the end of the trial and then refer the case if a conviction follows—Anonymous, 2 Weir 403, and should not refer the case in the midst of the trial before any conviction or committal takes place—Deaf and Dumb Man, 4 Bom L.R. 825. Where, during the course of a trial, it appeared that the accused was a deaf and dumb person, and the Magistrate therefore referred the case to the High Court, expressing his opinion that the prisoner was guilty, it was held that the Magistrate ought to have proceeded to the end of the trial convicting the accused, and the mere expression of opinion that the accused was guilty did not amount to a conviction. The High Court returned the case to the Magistrate and directed him to proceed with the trial, and if the same resulted in a conviction to forward the proceedings again to the High Court—Dumb Man, Ratanlal 879; Dumb Man, Ratanlal 836.

Orders which High Court may pass :—The High Court may treat the proceedings before the Lower Court as amounting to a sufficient trial and pass sentence upon the accused according to the facts established in the case, or may give him a further opportunity of being heard in the matter of the charge—Bowka, 22 W.R. 35; or may direct a re-trial if the Magistrate's trial was defective—Deaf and Dumb Man, 8 Bom L.R. 849, 4 Cr.L.J. 444; or may, upon a consideration of the tender age of the accused, direct him to be made over to his father to be looked after by him—Ganga, 7 N.W.P. 131; or may, in a proper case, discharge the accused with an admonition—Bowka, 22 W.R. 35; Monya, 4 Bom.L.R. 296. The High Court may, if it is of opinion that the accused was by reason of unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing that what he did was contrary to law, and that no benefit will be likely to result to the accused by his being tried by the Court of Session, direct him to be kept in jail pending the order of the Local Government—Somir, 27 Cal 368. In two Punjab cases it has been held that if a deaf and dumb person who is unable to understand the proceedings of the trial, is found guilty, the proper course to be taken is to treat him as a lunatic and to report the case under sec. 471 for the orders of the Local Government—Gahna, 1889 P.R. 37, followed in Dost Muhammad, 1911 P.R. 13, 12 Cr.L.J. 613, 12 I.C. 989. The Oudh Chief Court followed the same procedure in Ram Mahonhar, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 414, 36 Cr.L.J. 880, 156 I.C. 85, 1935 O.L.R. 403, 1935 O.W.N. 826.

In serious cases, it is the practice of the High Court to refer the matter to the Local Government. In the case of a minor offence the High Court itself can pass an appropriate sentence or discharge the accused—Rahman, 1 Lah. 260, 21 Cr.L.J. 621. Where a deaf and dumb accused was found guilty of attempt to commit suicide, and at the trial he made certain signs indicating his guilt, the High Court affirmed his conviction and sentenced the accused to one day's simple imprisonment—Kashaba, 25 Bom L.R. 43, A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 194, 25 Cr.L.J. 660, 81 I.C. 148.

342. (1) For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court may, at any stage of any inquiry or trial without previously warning the accused, put such questions to him as the Court considers necessary, and shall, for the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence.

(2) The accused shall not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer such questions, or by giving false answers to them; but the Court and the jury (if any) may draw such inference from such refusal or answers as it thinks just.

(3) The answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration in such inquiry or trial, and put in evidence for or against him in any other inquiry into, or trial for, any other offence which such answers may tend to show he has committed.

(4) No oath shall be administered to the accused.

This section makes a departure from the English law, under which it is not permissible for the Court to ask the accused any question except questions incidental to the conduct of the trial, e.g., whether the accused wishes to cross-examine a witness or to give evidence, etc. It is a principle of English law that the whole burden of proving the offence is on the prosecution; the accused can stand by and do nothing; and he is protected from all judicial questioning at the trial. Indian law, however, allows the Court to put questions to the accused, and the answers thereto may be "taken into consideration," whatever that phrase may mean. It was for this reason that Sir James Fitzjames Stephen characterised this section as embarrassing, illogical and hypothetical.

This section is mandatory, but it is not exhaustive—Shyama Charan, 35 Cr.L.J. 1322 (1325), 151 I.C. 393, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 330, 1934 Cr.C. 722.

973. Scope:—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether this section applies to trials of summons cases. According to the Bombay, Calcutta, Allahabad, Patna and Lahore High Courts, and the Sind and Nagpur J. C. Courts, the Magistrate is bound in a summons case to examine the accused under this section—Fernandez, 45 Bom. 672, A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 374, 59 I.C. 129, 22 Bom L.R. 1040, 22 Cr.L.J. 17; Gulabjan, 46 Bom 441 (445), 23 Bom L.R. 1203, 23 Cr.L.J. 45; Beechu Lal, 54 Cal. 286, 28 Cr.L.J. 297, 100 I.C. 377, 45 C.L.J. 8, A.I.R. 1927 Cal 250; Gulzari, 49 Cal. 1075; Khacho Mal, 27 Cr.L.J. 405, 93 I.C. 69, A.I.R. 1926 All 358; Ghulam Rasul, 6 P.L.J. 174, 2 P.L.T. 390, A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 11, 61 I.C. 715, 22 Cr.L.J. 427; Raghu, 1 P.L.T. 241, 21 Cr.L.J. 705; Parameshwar, 3 P.L.T. 347, 23 Cr.L.J. 440; Muhammad Baksh, 4 Lah L.J. 230, 23 Cr.L.J. 154; Nabu, 20 S.L.R. 34, 26 Cr.L.J. 1554 (1555), 90 I.C. 434, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 1 (F.B.); Bhagwan, 22 N.L.R. 65; Paris, 19 S.L.R. 121. This section applies to summons and warrant cases—Sia Ram, 36 Cr.L.J. 1290, 158 I.C. 129, A.I.R. 1935 All 217, 1935 A.L.J. 257, 1935 Cr.C. 260. See also Anand Parkash, 36 Cr.L.J. 401, 153 I.C. 446, 35 P.L.R. 525, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 631, 1934 Cr.C. 966; Onkar Singh, 11 O.W.N. 1206, 151 I.C. 810, 35 Cr.L.J. 1417, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 457, 1934 Cr.C. 1308; Kandhai v. Municipal Board, Rae Bareilly, 39 Cr.L.J. 841, 177 I.C. 56,

The use of the expression "before the accused is called on for his defence" in sec. 342 itself as well as in sec. 256 relating to trials in warrant cases and in sec. 289 relating to trials in Sessions cases, and the absence of such expression in the sections relating to trials in summons cases under Chapter XX of the Code, show that the provisions of sec. 342 are not intended to apply to summons cases—Ponnusamy v. Ramasamy, 46 Mad 758, 45 M.L.J. 224, 24 Cr.L.J. 833 (F.B.). The Madras view has been recently followed by the Rangoon High Court—Nga La Gyi, 9 Rang. 506, 32 Cr.L.J. 1190, 134 I.C. 500, 1931 Cr.C. 884, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 244 (F.B.).

This section applies to summary trials of warrant cases and the accused must be examined in such trials—Mahomed Husain, 41 Cal 743, A.I.R. 1914 Cal. 663, 22 I.C. 766, 15 Cr.L.J. 190, 18 C.W.N. 1247; Parsotin, 6 Pat. 504, 28 Cr.L.J. 1037; Balkeshwar, 3 P.L.T. 322, 23 Cr.L.J. 114; Parameshwar Lal, 3 P.L.T. 347, 23 Cr.L.J. 440. According to the Calcutta, Allahabad, Lahore, Nagpur and Bombay High Courts and the Oudh and Sind Courts, this section applies to summary trials of summons cases also, and the examination of the accused in such a trial is imperative—Moyzuddin, 33 C.W.N. 947; Bhagwan, 22 N.L.R. 65, 27 Cr.L.J. 632; Nabu, 20 S.L.R. 34, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 1, 90 I.C. 434, 26 Cr.L.J. 1554; Sia Ram, 57 All. 666, 36 Cr.L.J. 1290, 158 I.C. 129, A.I.R. 1935 All. 217, 1935 A.L.J. 257, 1935 Cr.C. 260; Karam Din, 35 Cr.L.J. 1394, 151 I.C. 748, 35 P.L.R. 295, 15 Lah 60, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 96, 1934 Cr.C. 175; Krishna Shankar, 36 Cr.L.J. 1303, 158 I.C. 16, 1935 O.W.N. 1042, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 16, 1935 O.L.R. 557; Shivalomal, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 304, 172 I.C. 80, 39 Cr.L.J. 59, 10 RS 135, 32 S.L.R. 30; Choithram Menghraj v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 474 (475), 174 I.C. 685, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 70, 10 RS. 259, 32 S.L.R. 684; Emp. v. Kondiba Balaji, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 314, 42 Bom.L.R. 695. But where, in a summary trial, the accused were actually examined, it would be absurd to say that the mere failure to record the examination has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. When the Magistrate has considered the statements of the accused they cannot possibly be prejudiced by the mere fact that he did not reduce those statements to writing in the proper column provided in the summary register—Khan Mohd. v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Pesh. 11. See Notes 867 and 1042A. But according to the Madras High Court, this section does not apply to summary trials of summons cases, as there is no distinction between a summary trial of summons cases and an ordinary trial of summons cases—Dharma Singh, 46 Mad. 755 (F.B.).

This section applies even when the accused does not offer to produce defence—Brij Lal, 37 Cr.L.J. 408, 160 I.C. 489, 1936 O.W.N. 215.

This section does not apply to an inquiry under sec. 117, because the person called upon to give security is not in the position of an accused person within the meaning of sec. 342. Therefore, the omission to examine the person called upon to give security is a mere irregularity curable under sec. 537, and not an illegality vitiating the proceedings—Benode Behari, 50 Cal. 985; Ibrahim, 34 Cr.L.J. 591 (593), 143 I.C. 351, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 49, 1933 Cr.C. 175, Ind Rul. 1933 Sind 128. But see Raghubar, A.I.R. 1934 All. 735 (738) 3 A.W.R. 655. So also, a person proceeded against under sec. 488 is not looked upon as an accused person, and omission to examine him does not vitiate the proceedings. The words "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence" are inappropriate to a proceeding under section 488—Vithaldas, 52 Bom. 768, 29 Cr.L.J. 1051 (1052), 30 Bom.L.R. 957, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 347; Bachai v. Jamuna, 25 Cr.L.J. 1091, 81 I.C. 915, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 339; Mehr Khan, 10 Lah. 406, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 32, 112 I.C. 218, 30 P.L.R. 549, 29 Cr.L.J. 1002 (1003, 1004); Raspin v. Raspin, 36 C.W.N. 380 (381), 1932 Cr.C. 480, 138 I.C. 629, 33 Cr.L.J. 640, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 488; Ponusami v. Ramasami, 74 I.C. 945, 45 M.L.J. 224, 46 Mad 758, 1923 M.W.N. 519, 18 M.L.W. 478, 24 Cr.L.J. 833, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 15 (F.B.); Shadi Khan v. Gul Begum, 101 I.C. 606, 28 Cr.L.J. 478, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 435. But see contra—Demello v. Demello, 27 Cr.L.J. 1000 (1001), 96 I.C. 856, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 667; Bechu Lal v. The Injured Lady, 100 I.C. 377, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 230, 45 C.L.J. 8, 28 Cr.L.J. 294, 51 Cal. 286; Fernandez v. Emp., 59 I.C. 129, 45 Bom. 672, 22 Bom.L.R. 1010, 22 Cr.L.J. 171; Gulam Rasul v. Emp., 61 I.C. 715, 6 P.L.J. 174, 22 Cr.L.J. 427, 2 P.L.T. 390.

Where an accused is examined by the Court before any evidence for the prosecution has been taken and before the commencement of the preliminary enquiry, his examination cannot be said to be under sec. 342, because at that stage there was no evidence for the prosecution recorded against him and no circumstances which he could be called upon to explain. The statement must be taken to have been recorded under sec. 164—Bahawal, 6 Lah. 183, 26 P.L.R. 331, 26 Cr.L.J. 1238.

The Sessions Judge is bound to examine the accused even though he has been examined before the committing Magistrate—Nairamalat, 14 M.L.W. 418, 23 Cr.L.J. 697; Raju, 9 Bom.L.R. 730; Nga Po, 4 Rang. 361, 27 Cr.L.J. 1361; Mohammad Shafi, 26 Cr.L.J. 1576, 90 I.C. 535, A.I.R. 1926 Oudh. 57. In a case which is triable by a Sessions Court it is the latter Court which tries the accused and calls upon him to enter on his defence and, therefore, it is to that Court that the mandatory provision is applicable. That being so, it cannot be said that the omission to examine the accused in the committing Court is a disregard of an express provision of law and therefore illegal—Ajhar Mandal, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 605, 39 C.W.N. 289, 62 Cal. 475, 36 Cr.L.J. 1310, 157 I.C. 1103, 1935 Cr.C. 1022, following Dimu, 26 Cr.L.J. 191, 83 I.C. 895, 16 S.L.R. 201, A.I.R. 1921 Sind. 131.

This section applies only to a case of an original trial, and does not apply where additional evidence is taken by the Magistrate under the direction of an Appellate Court under sec. 428. In such a proceeding it is not necessary to examine the accused about the additional evidence. There might be cases where the accused could properly be questioned by the Magistrate in regard to the additional evidence so taken, but the omission to do so is not an illegality—Narayan, 52 Bom. 699, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 200, 112 I.C. 60, 30 Bom.L.R. 651, 29 Cr.L.J. 972 (973); Mohiuddin, 4 Pat. 488, 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (813), 86 I.C. 459, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 414, 6 P.L.T. 151; Nathu Singh, 41 Cr.L.J. 356 (359). This section does not also apply where trial is held de novo—Marudamuthu v. Raghava, 36 Cr.L.J. 307, 153 I.C. 297, 1934 M.W.N. 1136, 67 M.L.J. 800, 40 M.L.W. 803, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 22.

974. Object and mode of examination:—In this country it often happens that a prisoner is tried in a language which he understands but indifferently well, and for that reason as well as for other equally grave reasons the intention of the statute is that at a certain stage in the case the Court itself shall put aside all counsels, all pleaders, all witnesses, all representatives, and shall call upon each individual accused with the authority of the Court's own voice to take advantage of the opportunity which then arises to state in his own way anything which he may be desirous of stating—Pramathanath, 50 Cal. 518 (522), 27 C.W.N. 389, 24 Cr.L.J. 218.

This section enjoins upon the Court the duty of placing before the accused the circumstances appearing against him in order that the accused may be given an opportunity of explaining them. This is the main object of the section. This section was never intended for the purpose of enabling the accused to give an explanation in the case for the accused in explaining Ahmad v. Emp., 41 Cal. 250.

The object of this section is to see whether the accused can give an innocent explanation of the facts and for that purpose to examine the accused and ascertain what according to them are the facts and what is the explanation they themselves offer. It is not a question of what explanation the ingenuity of lawyers can invent. Such imaginative suggestions are no substitute for the taking of a statement from the accused himself—Chandreshwar Prasad Narain Singh v. Arunendra Mohan Ghose, 38 Cr.L.J. 2

(3), 165 I.C. 931, 9 R.P. 231, 3 B.R. 104, 1936 Cr.C. 1064, 17 P.L.T. 794, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 626.

The real object of the examination is to enable a Judge to ascertain from time to time from a prisoner, particularly if he is undefended, what explanation he may desire to offer regarding any fact stated by a witness, or after the close of the case, how he can meet what the Judge may consider to be damning evidence against him—Husein, 6 Cal 96; Mazhar Ali, 50 Cal. 223, 36 C.L.J. 417; Tani, 48 I.C. 487, 20 Cr.L.J. 12 (Nag.). And in order that the accused may explain all the facts appearing in the evidence against him, it is necessary that his attention should be directed to all the vital parts of the evidence against him, specially if he is an ignorant person who cannot be expected to know or understand what particular parts of the evidence are or are likely to be considered by the Court to be against him—Tani, supra. The Court should not only point out to the accused the circumstances appearing in the evidence which require explanation, but it must, out of fairness to the accused, exercise that power in such a way that the accused may know what points in the opinion of the Court require explanation; and failure or refusal on the part of the accused to give the explanation will entitle the Court to draw an inference against him—Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 522, 29 C.W.N. 231, 26 Cr.L.J. 631.

The object of this section is to enable the accused to explain each and every circumstance appearing in the evidence against him; this cannot be done by such a general question as "what have you to say?" or "what is your defence?" The specific point or points which weigh against the accused must be mentioned; for if this is not done, he cannot be reasonably expected to be able to explain those points—Maung Hman, 1 Rang 689; Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 522, 41 C.L.J. 101, 26 Cr.L.J. 631. Where the Magistrates content themselves by asking the accused a stereotyped question like this, "Have you anything to say? or what is your answer?" this is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of this section—Tahsinuddin Akmad v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 396 (398), 41 Cr.L.J. 563, 188 I.C. 288, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 250. The word "generally" does not limit the nature of the questioning to one or more question of a general nature relating to the case, but it means that the question should relate to the whole case generally and should not be limited to any particular part or parts of it. The word "generally" does not mean that the accused cannot be subjected to a detailed examination by the Court. The law intends that the salient points appearing in the evidence against the accused must be pointed out to him in a succinct form and that he should be asked to explain them if he wished to do so—Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 522 (per M. N. Mukerjee, J.; Newbould, J. contra). The question must be framed in such a way as to enable the accused to know what he is to explain, what are the circumstances which are against him and for which an explanation is needed. A general question as to whether the accused has anything further to say is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section—Bhokari, 5 P.L.T. 445, 25 Cr.L.J. 711, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 971; Udhao, 25 Cr.L.J. 417, 77 I.C. 593, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 301; Durga Ram, 6 P.L.T. 33, 26 Cr.L.J. 716. Where a complicated question has been put to each of the accused without reference to the particular position of each as brought out by the evidence against him, it cannot be said that the procedure did not prejudice or might not have prejudiced the accused. The examination of the accused contemplated by this section is one by the Judge direct, without any intervention of counsel. It is not correct to say that when the accused is represented by counsel it is often in his interest that the Judge should formally comply with this section by asking a general question and then leave the accused's counsel to offer explanation on his behalf in the way most favourable and least dangerous to him—Nana Sadoba v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 283 (285), 1938 N.L.J. 90, 179 I.C. 317, 40 Cr.L.J. 197, disagreeing with Narayana v. Emp., A.I.R. 1933 Mad 233, 1933 Cr.C. 289, 143 I.C. 46, 34 Cr.L.J. 481, 56 Mad. 231, 64 M.L.J. 88. The proper method of applying this section is to bring to the attention of the accused specific matters which appear in the evidence against them and merely questioning them generally as to whether they have anything to say or anything to add to what was said before the committing Magistrate is not a satisfactory method of applying this section—Shamlal, 26 Cr.L.J. 572, 85 IC 716, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 980. Where the case is one of complexity it is not sufficient to put a general question whether the accused has anything to say about the charges or the evidence. When a point arises in the evidence against the accused which the Court considers vital, it is the duty of the Judge to call the accused's attention to the point and to ask for an explanation. A conviction based on the accused's failure to explain what he was never asked to explain is bad in law—Dwarkanath Varma, 14 P.L.T. 305, 37 C.W.N. 514 (516), 1933 Cr.C. 442, 34 Cr.L.J. 322, 64 M.L.J. 465, 142 IC 355, A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 124, 35 Bom.L.R. 507, Ind. Rul. 1933 P.C. 63, 37 M.L.W. 584, 1933 M.W.N. 409, 10 O.W.N. 522, 57 C.L.J. 177, 1933 A.L.J. 645 (P.C.); Baliram, 34 Cr.L.J. 411, 142 IC 785, 15 N.L.J. 116, Ind. Rul. 1933 Nag. 145; Sohan Lal, 34 Cr.L.J. 568, 143 IC 467, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 305, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 174, 1933 Cr.C. 686, 10 O.W.N. 678; Raghubar, A.I.R. 1934 All 735 (738), 3 A.W.R. 655; Klairo v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 995 (998), 170 IC 922, 31 S.L.R. 470, 10 R.S. 77, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 221. In a case of circumstantial evidence it is all the more necessary to perform this duty, because the accused cannot be expected to know, when all the evidence against him is of a circumstantial nature and some of it is important while some of it is not, which are the points on which an explanation from him would be necessary to avoid the inference of his guilt—Kimidi Narasimham, 37 Cr.L.J. 1074, 164 IC 1017, 1936 M.W.N. 521, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 629, 1936 Cr.C. 763; Chinnu, 37 Cr.L.J. 1107, 165 IC 192, 1936 M.W.N. 183, A.I.R. 1936 Mad 628, 1936 Cr.C. 762; Sangama Naicker, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 715, 1936 M.W.N. 613, 44 M.L.W. 52, 59 Mad. 622, 71 M.L.J. 138, 38 Cr.L.J. 45, 165 IC 743, 1936 Cr.C. 818, 9 R.M. 295, not following Panchu Choudry, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 91, 66 IC 73, 23 Cr.L.J. 233, 3 P.L.T. 649. Every piece of circumstantial evidence tending to incriminate the accused should be pointedly brought to his notice either by the committing Magistrate or in the last resort by the trial Judge in the Court of Session and the answers of the accused to these questions recorded, as far as possible, in his own words by the Court—Mohammad Anis v. Emp., 37 Cr.L.J. 955 (957), 164 IC 482, 1936 O.W.N. 691, 1936 O.L.R. 459, 9 R.O. 81, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 405, 1936 Cr.C. 1086. The object of an examination under this section is for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain circumstances which appear against him. If the Judge considers that an explanation is necessary regarding an incriminating matter it is his duty to place the matter before the accused and to ask him whether he wishes to give any explanation. It is extremely unfair for a Judge to rely upon a circumstance as being incriminating without giving the accused person any notice of it and without giving him an opportunity of explaining the circumstance—Jit Lal Bahadur, A.I.R. 1940 Cal 378 (380), 41 Cr.L.J. 783, 189 IC 700. But where the facts of the case are simple, a general question such as "Have you any statement to make?" may be sufficient—Banamali, 6 P.L.T. 39, 26 Cr.L.J. 682.

There is, however, nothing in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, in Dwarkanath Varma, supra, to indicate that every failure to comply strictly with the letter of sec. 342, Cr. P. C., renders the conviction of an accused person illegal. Sec 537, Cr. P. C., has a bearing upon this point. No omission to comply strictly with sec 342 can render a conviction liable to be set aside unless it has in fact occasioned a failure of justice—Annamalai Mudali, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 372 (374), 1940 M.W.N. 93, 51 M.L.W. 206, 1940 M.Cr.C. 33, 1 I.L.R. 1940 Mad. 514, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 69. An omission to put a question necessary by virtue of the provisions of this section is dealt with by sec. 537, Cr. P. C. The question for the Court in every case in which an irregularity of this kind has been committed is whether in fact a failure of justice has been occasioned by reason of the irregularity which has occurred. The consequence of this provision is that the Court must go into the merits of the case before quashing a conviction by reason of such irregularity. It is clear, however, that where the irregularity is such as to deprive an accused person of defending himself upon a point which the trial Judge or the assessors or jury regarded, or may have regarded, as of serious import, it cannot be said with confidence to have been inseparable from a failure of justice. Where the facts show independently of any irregularity which has taken place that the accused has clearly committed an offence, the irregularity which has occurred will not save him from punishment; but if it is impossible for the Appellate Court to say that the trial Court would have been bound to come to the same conclusion if there had been no irregularity, the conviction ought to be quashed—U Damapala, 38 Cr.L.J. 524 (528), 168 I.C. 193, 14 Rang. 666, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 83, 9 R.R. 340 (F.B.).

Where the confession has been made an integral and substantial part of the prosecution case, the failure of the Judge to question the accused about it is clearly a serious omission not covered by the provisions of sec. 537, Cr. P. C.—Raban Lalu Shaikh, 39 Cr.L.J. 618 (620), 175 I.C. 324, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 97, 10 R.S. 296, 32 S.L.R. 709.

When, in examining the accused under this section, nearly two printed pages containing a precis of the evidence against the accused were read out as it were in one breath, and the accused was asked whether he wanted to say anything, the Judge observed the letter of the law and ignored its spirit. This kind of question was one which it was impossible for anyone and least of all for a person accused of murder who had been kept in suspense for 16 months before the trial began, to answer. It was impossible for him to have remembered all the points which he was asked to explain and naturally his answer might not deal with all the points. This is certainly not giving a real opportunity to the accused to explain matters appearing in the evidence against him—In re Kanakasabai Pillai, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 1 (4), 1939 M.W.N. 883, 50 M.L.W. 452, 1939 M.Cr.C. 246, 41 Cr.L.J. 369, 186 I.C. 704.

There is a difference in the wording of the first and the second portions of sub-section (1) of sec. 342, the former being discretionary ('may put questions') and the latter mandatory ('shall question him'). If the Court has put questions to the accused under the first part of sub-section (1), it would be sufficient compliance with the provisions of the second portion if the Court gives to the accused an opportunity, by putting to him one general question (e.g., "Have you got to say anything else?"), to explain the circumstances appearing in the case against him, and in this connection the examination of the accused under the first portion of this sub-section may be usefully looked into—Nasiruddin, 4 Pat 459, 6 P.L.T. 588, 26 Cr.L.J. 954.

The examination of the accused under this section is intended to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing against him and not to elicit answers calculated to supplement the case for the prosecution and to show that he is guilty—Rangi, 10 Mad. 295 (315); Bhola Nath, 51 All. 313, 30 Cr.L.J. 101 (105). The object of the examination is not to make the accused confess his guilt or assist the prosecution by admitting facts which may go to incriminate him—Bhairab, 2 C.W.N. 702; Tufani, 15 C.L.J. 323, 13 Cr.L.J. 283; Veeran, 9 Mad. 224. The Court cannot put questions to the accused as to what took place on the occasion, in order to convict him out of his own mouth—Kamandu, 10 Mad. 121 (123). Nor is it competent for the Court to examine the accused for the purpose of filling up gaps in the evidence for the prosecution—Mohideen Abdul Qadir, 27 Mad. 238 (240); Jeremiah v. Vas, 36 Mad. 457, 12 I.C. 961, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 576, 22 M.L.J. 73; Tahasimuddin Ahmad v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 396 (398), 41 Cr.L.J. 563, 188 I.C. 288, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 250; Mohan Singh, 42 All. 522; Devi Dayal, 4 Lah. 55, 73 I.C. 805, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 225, 24 Cr.L.J. 693; Annavi, 39 Mad. 449; Basanta Kumar, 26 Cal. 49; Yasin, 28 Cal. 689; Raung Gyi, 4 L.B.R. 244, 8 Cr.L.J. 62; Mahadeo, 22 N.L.R. 1, 27 Cr.L.J. 66; Hasham, 37 Cr.L.J. 428, 161 I.C. 344, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 28, 1936 Cr.C. 11; Subba Rao v. Venkatachalapathi, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 904, 178 I.C. 478, 48 M.L.W. 320, 1938 M.W.N. 871, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 397, 1938 M.Cr.C. 169, 40 Cr.L.J. 69. The examination of the accused for this purpose is contrary to law, and the prosecution cannot be permitted to rely on admissions obtained from the accused in these circumstances—Subba Rao v. Venkatachalapathi, supra. Thus, where in a charge of defamation the prosecution is unable to prove that the accused made and published the defamatory matter, it is illegal for the Magistrate to examine the accused for the purpose of supplying this defect in the prosecution evidence—Mohideen, 27 Mad 238; Devi Dayal, supra. The object of the examination is to enable the accused to explain the evidence standing against him; but where the prosecution has not let in evidence implicating the accused in the offence with which he is charged, the Magistrate is not entitled to put questions to him under this section, and the answers to such question are inadmissible in evidence against him—Abibulla Ravuthan, 39 Mad 770, 30 I.C. 447, A.I.R. 1916 Mad 407, 16 Cr.L.J. 623; Devi Dayal, supra; Veeran, 9 Mad 224. No doubt the provisions of this section do not entitle a Magistrate or a Judge to question an accused person so as to get from him an admission of facts which are not proved in the evidence. Nevertheless if an accused person does in fact make such an admission, and it is clear that he has not been intimidated and that the admission was made with a full understanding of what he was saying, there is no reason why it should not be taken into account against him in the same way as any other confession made before a Magistrate can be so taken—Narayanam, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 509 (510), 37 Cr.L.J. 328, 160 I.C. 746, 1935 Cr.C. 1295. Where the question put to the accused were straightforward, as for instance, where the accused were asked whether they had committed the offence and what they had to say, the answers given by the accused could be rightly taken into consideration under sub-section (3) for convicting the accused—Phurlai, 9 Pat. 504, 1930 Cr.C. 926 (927), A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 498, 11 P.L.T. 706. Sections 164, 342 and 364, Cr. P. C., are not exhaustive and do not limit the generality of sec. 21, Evidence Act, as to the relevancy of admissions—Nga Thein Maung, 37 Cr.L.J. 920, 164 I.C. 162, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 350, 1936 Cr.C. 703, following Barindra Kumar, 37 Cal. 467, 7 I.C. 359, 11 Cr.L.J. 453, 14 C.W.N. 1114.

If the accused declines to make any statement and prefers to be reticent, the Court may still put questions to him, provided the questions are not inquisitorial or of a cross-examining character—Profulla Kumar, 57 Cal. 1074, 31 Cr.L.J. 903 (907). But where an accused practically refuses to answer questions, it would be useless for the Court to persist with them—Ramesham v. Emp., A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 147, 1936 Cr.C. 689; Budhulal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 67, 167 I.C. 155, 9 R.N. 168, 38 Cr.L.J. 354, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 228; Nana Sadoba v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 197 (198), 179 I.C. 317, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 283, 1938 N.L.J. 90.

When an accused person in answer to a general question or even one or two questions gives a reply or replies which show that he is well aware of all the circumstances appearing in evidence against him and their implications, and attempts to explain them, the Sessions Judge may be going beyond his province if he questions him further in detail. He may be open to the criticism of cross-examining the accused, and attempting to elicit contradictory answers. This is more particularly the case when the accused is represented by his own counsel. It is not possible to lay down a more general rule than that it is the duty of the Court to be satisfied either by his statements or by his answers to questions or by both that the accused explains or has an opportunity to explain circumstances from which hostile inferences may be drawn against him—Annamalai Mudali, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 372 (375), 1940 M.W.N. 93, 51 M.L.W. 206, 1940 M.Cr.C. 33, I.L.R. 1940 Mad. 514, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 69, 41 Cr.L.J. 858, 190 I.C. 206. In permitting the Court to examine the accused person from time to time, the law does not contemplate that the examination of the accused person is to be conducted in the manner of cross-examination of an adverse witness by a counsel—Hussein, 6 Cal. 96; Hurry Churn, 10 Cal. 140, Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 522 (per Newbould, J.); Tahasinuddin Ahmad v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 396 (398), 41 Cr.L.J. 563, 188 I.C. 288, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 250; Niru Bhagat, 1 Pat. 630, 24 Cr.L.J. 91; Faqir Singh, 10 Lah. 223, 29 Cr.L.J. 769 (770); Umar Din, 2 Lah. 129, 23 Cr.L.J. 388; Panchu, 3 P.L.T. 649, 23 Cr.L.J. 233; Yakub, 5 All. 253; U Ba Thein, 8 Rang. 372, 32 Cr.L.J. 23 (25), A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 351, Ind. Rul. 1930 Rang. 410, 127 I.C. 730, 1930 Cr.C. 1179; Mahadeo, 22 N.L.R. 1, 27 Cr.L.J. 66, 91 I.C. 212, 8 N.L.J. 190, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 403. The questioning of the accused referred to in this section is not meant to be lengthy cross-examination as regards all evidence produced by the prosecution—Jhabwala, 34 Cr.L.J. 967 (972), serious import, it cannot be said with confidence to have been inseparable from a failure of justice. Where the facts show independently of any irregularity which has taken place that the accused has clearly committed an offence, the irregularity which has occurred will not save him from punishment; but if it is impossible for the Appellate Court to say that the trial Court would have been bound to come to the same conclusion if there had been no irregularity, the conviction ought to be quashed—U Damapala, 38 Cr.L.J. 524 (528), 168 I.C. 193, 14 Rang. 666, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 83, 9 R.R. 340 (F.B.).

Where the confession has been made an integral and substantial part of the prosecution case, the failure of the Judge to question the accused about it is clearly a serious omission not covered by the provisions of sec. 537, Cr. P. C.—Rabon Lalu Shaikh, 39 Cr.L.J. 618 (620), 175 I.C. 324, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 97, 10 R.S. 296, 32 S.L.R. 709.

When, in examining the accused under this section, nearly two printed pages containing a precis of the evidence against the accused were read out as it were in one breath, and the accused was asked whether he wanted to say anything, the Judge observed the letter of the law and ignored its spirit. This kind of question was one which it was impossible for anyone and least of all for a person accused of murder who had been kept in suspense for 16 months before the trial began, to answer. It was impossible for him to have remembered all the points which he was asked to explain and naturally his answer might not deal with all the points. This is certainly not giving a real opportunity to the accused to explain matters appearing in the evidence against him—In re Kanakasabai Pillai, A.I.R. 1940 Mad 1 (4), 1939 M.W.N. 883, 50 M.L.W. 452, 1939 M.Cr.C. 246, 41 Cr.L.J. 369, 186 I.C. 704.

There is a difference in the wording of the first and the second portions of sub-section (1) of sec. 342, the former being discretionary ('may put questions') and the latter mandatory ('shall question him'). If the Court has put questions to the accused under the first part of sub-section (1), it would be sufficient compliance with the provisions of the second portion if the Court gives to the accused an opportunity, by putting to him one general question (e.g., "Have you got to say anything else"), to explain the circumstances appearing in the case against him, and in this connection the examination of the accused under the first portion of this sub-section may be usefully looked into—Nasiruddin, 4 Pat. 459, 6 P.L.T. 588, 26 Cr.L.J. 954.

The examination of the accused under this section is intended to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing against him and not to elicit answers calculated to supplement the case for the prosecution and to show that he is guilty—Rangi, 10 Mad 295 (315); Bhola Nath, 51 All. 313, 30 Cr.L.J. 101-(105). The object of the examination is not to make the accused confess his guilt or assist the prosecution by admitting facts which may go to incriminate him—Bhairab, 2 C.W.N. 702; Tufani, 15 C.L.J. 323, 13 Cr.L.J. 283; Veeran, 9 Mad 224. The examination of the accused for this purpose is contrary to law, and the prosecution cannot be permitted to rely on admissions obtained from the accused in these circumstances—*Subba Rao v. The object of the examination is to enable the accused to explain the evidence standing against him; but where the prosecution has not let in evidence implicating the accused in the offence with which he is charged, the Magistrate is not entitled to put questions to him under this section, and the answers to such question are inadmissible in evidence against him—Abibulla Ravuthan, 39 Mad. 770, 30 I.C. 447, A.I.R. 1916 Mad. 407, 16 Cr.L.J. 623; Devi Dayal, supra; Veeran, 9 Mad. 224. No doubt the provisions of this section do not entitle a Magistrate or a Judge to question an accused person so as to get from him an admission of facts which are not proved in the evidence. Nevertheless if an accused person does in fact make such an admission, and it is clear that he has not been intimidated and that the admission was made with a full understanding of what he was saying, there is no reason why it should not be taken into account against him in the same way as any other confession made before a Magistrate can be so taken—Narayanam, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 509 (510), 37 Cr.L.J. 328, 160 I.C. 746, 1935 Cr.C. 1295. Where the question put to the accused were straightforward, as for instance, where the accused were asked whether they had committed the offence and what they had to say, the answers given by the accused could be rightly taken into consideration under sub-section (3) for convicting the accused—Phurlai, 9 Pat. 504, 1930 Cr.C. 926 (927), A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 498, 11 P.L.T. 706. Sections 164, 342 and 364, Cr. P. C., are not exhaustive and do not limit the generality of sec. 21, Evidence Act, as to the relevancy of admissions—Nga Thein Maung, 37 Cr.L.J. 920, 164 I.C. 162, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 350, 1936 Cr.C. 703, following Barindra Kumar, 37 Cal. 467, 7 I.C. 359, 11 Cr.L.J. 453, 14 C.W.N. 1114.

If the accused declines to make any statement and prefers to be reticent, the Court may still put questions to him, provided the questions are not inquisitorial or of a cross-examining character—Profulla Kumar, 57 Cal. 1074, 31 Cr.L.J. 903 (907). But where an accused practically refuses to answer questions, it would be useless for the Court to persist with them—Ramesham v. Emp., A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 147, 1936 Cr.C. 689; Budhulal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 67, 167 I.C. 155, 9 R.N. 168, 38 Cr.L.J. 354, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 228; Nana Sadoba v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 197 (198), 179 I.C. 317, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 283, 1938 N.L.J. 90.

When an accused person in answer to a general question or even one or two questions gives a reply or replies which show that he is well aware of all the circumstances appearing in evidence against him and their implications, and attempts to explain them, the Sessions Judge may be going beyond his province if he questions him further in detail. He may be open to the criticism of cross-examining the accused, and attempting to elicit contradictory answers. This is more particularly the case when the accused is represented by his own counsel. It is not possible to lay down a more general rule than that it is the duty of the Court to be satisfied either by his statements or by his answers to questions or by both that the accused explains or has an opportunity to explain circumstances from which hostile inferences may be drawn against him—Annamalai Mudali, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 372 (375), 1940 M.W.N. 93, 51 M.L.W. 206, 1940 M.Cr.C. 33, I.L.R. 1940 Mad. 514, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 69, 41 Cr.L.J. 858, 190 I.C. 206. In permitting the Court to examine the accused person from time to time, the law does not contemplate that the examination of the accused person is to be conducted in the manner of cross-examination of an adverse witness by a counsel—Hussein, 6 Cal. 96; Hurry Churn, 10 Cal. 140; Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 522 (per Newbould, J.); Tahasinuddin Ahmad v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 396 (398), 41 Cr.L.J. 563, 188 I.C. 288, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 250; Niru Bhagat, 1 Pat. 630, 24 Cr.L.J. 91; Faqir Singh, 10 Lah. 223, 29 Cr.L.J. 769 (770); Umar Din, 2 Lah. 129, 23 Cr.L.J. 388; Panchu, 3 P.L.T. 649, 23 Cr.L.J. 233; Yakub, 5 All. 253; U Ba Thein, 8 Rang. 372, 32 Cr.L.J. 23 (25), A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 351, Ind. Rul. 1930 Rang. 410, 127 I.C. 730, 1930 Cr.C. 1179; Mahadeo, 22 N.L.R. 1, 27 Cr.L.J. 66, 91 I.C. 212, 8 N.L.J. 190, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 403. The questioning of the accused referred to in this section is not meant to be lengthy cross-examination as regards all evidence produced by the prosecution—Jhabwala, 34 Cr.L.J. 967 (972), 145 I.C. 481, 1933 A.L.J. 799, A.I.R. 1933 All. 690, 1933 Cr.C. 1202. The Judge or Magistrate is not to establish a Court of Inquisition, and to force a prisoner to convict himself by making some incriminating admission after a series of searching questions, the exact effect of which he may not comprehend—Hussein, 6 Cal. 96; Anunt, 6 Bom.L.R. 94, 1 Cr.L.J. 105; Umar, 2 Lah. 129, 23 Cr.L.J. 388; Mohiuddin, 4 Pat. 488, 6 P.L.T. 154, 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (814); U Ba Thcin, supra. It is not necessary, nor is it desirable, to examine the accused in great detail or to force him to disclose his defence so as to enable the prosecution to take advantage of it when the witnesses for the accused are examined—Nasiruddin, 4 Pat. 459, 6 P.L.T. 588. Where an accused is undefended, the Magistrate should simply point out to him the elements of the evidence adduced against him, which appear in his own interests to demand his explanation; where the accused is defended by a lawyer, the tribunal should not enter upon a lengthy examination of the accused person, which might easily develop into a recounting of the history of the whole case or into what would be far worse, some sort of cross-examination—Panchu, 3 P.L.T. 649, 23 Cr.L.J. 233. But the mere fact that a large number of questions (viz., 55) were asked does not make the examination inquisitorial, where it appeared that the questions were asked not to elicit statements from the accused for the purpose of supplementing the case for the prosecution, but the object of the greater part of the questions was to ascertain whether the accused (who attempted no defence) admitted the facts stated by the witnesses or wished to offer any explanation, and the examination was not made in the nature of cross-examination—Khudiram, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625.

It is a sufficient compliance with this section if the Court asks the accused generally whether he wishes to offer an explanation of any of the evidence which has been given against him. And although this section also gives the Court power to put specific questions to the accused with regard to any of the evidence adduced for the prosecution, still it is entirely in the discretion of the Judge whether he should, after having put the general question, ask such specific questions on particular points in the evidence—Narayan, 26 Bom.L.R. 109, 25 Cr.L.J. 1127, 81 I.C. 951, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 334.

Joint statement:—If there are several accused, the Magistrate must examine each accused separately: if he records the statements of all the accused collectively, the trial is vitiated and the conviction must be set aside—Ghasiti, 6 Lah. 554, 27 Cr.L.J. 408; Balkrishna, 55 Bom. 356, 32 Cr.L.J. 572, 130 I.C. 577, 33 Bom.L.R. 82, 1931 Cr.C. 180, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 132; Chandu, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 664; Amanat, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 653; Shivalomal, A.I.R. 1937 Sind. 304, 172 I.C. 80, 39 Cr.L.J. 59, 10 R.S. 135, 32 S.L.R. 30. Where the Magistrate recorded the statements of the several accused separately before the charge, but after the close of the prosecution evidence questioned the accused jointly, and recorded a joint statement, the procedure was illegal—Girdhari, 29 P.L.R. 436, 29 Cr.L.J. 469, 109 I.C. 117, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 221, 10 Lah.L.J. 306. When, of two accused persons tried together one has made a statement on a particular point in the case against them, it is not improper for the Magistrate to take another statement from the co-accused under this section—Satya Narayana, 55 Cal. 858, 32 C.W.N. 319 (323), 29 Cr.L.J. 1022, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 675, 112 I.C. 350.

It is the accused himself who should be asked as to whether he would make any statement. Where the pleader of the accused persons (and not the accused themselves) was asked if they wished to make any statement, and the pleader stated that they would not do so, held that this was not a compliance with sec. 342; the accused themselves should have an opportunity of making their statements directly to the Court and not through the intervention of a pleader—Messer Bepari, 29 C.W.N. 939, 26 Cr.L.J. 1032, 87 I.C. 920, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 430.

975. Examination imperative:—The first portion of this section as to putting questions to the accused is an enabling provision, but the second portion as to the examination of the accused is imperative. The word 'shall' shows that the provisions of the latter part of this section as to the examination of the accused after the close of the prosecution evidence are mandatory and not discretionary only—Rameshar, 6

Emp.*, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 44, 100 I.C. 227, 28 Cr.L.J. 259, 51 I.A. 96, 5 Rang. 53 (P.C.), it is now recognized that non-compliance with a mandatory provision of the Code does not necessarily vitiate the proceedings and that the criterion is whether there has been any failure of justice; Kandhai v. Municipal Board, Rae Bareilly, 39 Cr.L.J. 841, 177 I.C. 56, 11 R.O. 16, 1938 A.Cr.C. 82, 1938 O.A. 591, 1938 O.L.R. 365, 1938 O.W.N. 743. But see Nga Po Min, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 190, 141 I.C. 89, 1932 Cr.C. 932 (F.B.). The illegality cannot be waived even by the consent of the accused or their pleaders—Gamadia, 27 Bom.L.R. 1405, 50 Bom. 34, 27 Cr.L.J. 165 (166). The recent view of the Bombay High Court, however, is that if the Court is satisfied that failure to comply with the strict terms of the section has caused no prejudice, the Court should not interfere. There is no reason for holding that the provisions of sec. 537, Cr. P. C., do not cover such a case—Kondiba Balaji, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 314, 42 Bom.L.R. 695.

Failure to comply with the mandatory provisions of this section vitiates the whole trial, and the accused is to be retried—Saileendra, 38 C.L.J. 175; Gangadhar v. Bhangi, 25 Cr.L.J. 1152, 81 I.C. 976, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 147; Sheopal, 1 O.W.N. 833, 26 Cr.L.J. 655; and the retrial should take place from the stage at which the trying Magistrate omitted to examine the accused—Gamadia, 50 Bom. 34, 27 Cr.L.J. 165 (169); Motankhan, 21 S.L.R. 331, 28 Cr.L.J. 417 (418). But where there are many serious defects in the prosecution case, and the chance of conviction seems to be remote, no useful purpose will be served by sending the case back for retrial—Satish Chandra, 51 Cal. 924 (927), 39 C.L.J. 411. It is not expedient in the interests of justice that a petty case should be tried de novo—Amir, 35 Cr.L.J. 1447, 151 I.C. 913, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 415, 1934 Cr.C. 642; Tej Ram, 35 Cr.L.J. 104, 146 I.C. 434, 34 P.L.R. 798, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1002. See also Kundan Lal, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 648, 36 Cr.L.J. 468, 153 I.C. 1034, 35 P.L.R. 173, 1934 Cr.C. 972.

It is not a sufficient compliance with this section if the Sessions Judge merely reads over to the accused a statement made by the latter before the committing Magistrate and recorded by that Magistrate under sec. 364—Fatu Santal, 6 P.L.J. 147, 22 Cr.L.J. 417.

But an insufficient examination of the accused person does not necessarily invalidate the trial if the statements made by the accused indicate that they were not altogether ignorant of some of the salient points appearing in the evidence against them, and endeavoured to explain some of the points—Alimuddi, 52 Cal. 522, 29 C.W.N. 231, 26 Cr.L.J. 631. See also Raghubar, 36 Cr.L.J. 33 (35), 152 I.C. 120, A.I.R. 1934 All. 735, 1934 Cr.C. 936.

Where the Appellate Court thought that some documents which had been marked as exhibits, had not been proved according to law, that the examination of the accused under this section had not been satisfactory and that the accused should be examined afresh, held that in ordering additional evidence to be taken it would be quite proper to direct a further examination of the accused at the same time. The other course is under sec. 423, Cr. P. C., to set aside the conviction and order the accused to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction. Such a re-trial if ordered would be a de novo trial—Sri Krishna Prasad Sinha, 37 Cr.L.J. 906, 164 I.C. 184, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 438, 17 P.L.T. 444, 1936 Cr.C. 699. See also Ramchandra Prasad v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 657 (658), 168 I.C. 979, 3 B.R. 508, 18 P.L.T. 483, 9 R.P. 522, 1937 P.W.N. 519, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 246.

The examination of the accused before framing charge is, however, not compulsory. What sec. 342, Cr. P. C., says is that the accused shall be questioned after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence. The section also says that the Court may at any stage of the trial question the accused, which means that failure to do so before the other examination is no irregularity—Bhanwarsingh v. Sukhramsingh, 41 Cr.L.J. 585 (586), A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 283, 188 I.C. 413, 1940 N.L.J. 410.

976. When examination may be dispensed with:—(1) The examination of the accused is obligatory only in cases where the accused is called on for his defence. If a Magistrate discharges an accused without framing a charge, the non-examination of the accused does not vitiate the proceeding—Varisal Rowther, 46 Mad. 449 (461) (F.B.). (2) When the accused has left the case entirely in the hands of his legal adviser, the Judge need not ask the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him—Gandi Talaiya, 2 Weir 405. (3) Where the accused has been exempted from personal appearance under sec. 205, the Court may also dispense with his examination, and may examine the pleader instead—Jamal, 6 S.L.R. 206, 14 Cr.L.J. 272; Maung Po v. Haka Singh, 4 Rang. 506, 28 Cr.L.J. 226; Jaffar, 35 Cr.L.J. 1035, 149 I.C. 1132, 36 Bom.L.R. 433, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 212. For contra see Ishwar Das v. Bhagwan Das, 35 Cr.L.J. 879, where it has been laid down that the Court should require the personal attendance of the accused for the purpose of making the explanation under this section, even though he was exempted from personal attendance under sec. 205. Where the accused, who was allowed to appear by pleader, himself made no statement and his pleader disclaimed all knowledge of the facts of the case there was no compliance with the provision of this section. This was not an irregularity which could be cured under sec. 537, Cr. P. C., as it was impossible to hold that there was no failure of justice—Hikmat Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 784, 148 I.C. 885, A.I.R. 1934 All 389, 1934 Cr.C. 465. (4) Since the object of the examination is to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, it follows that where the accused has admitted his guilt, and has been examined by the committing Magistrate, it is not necessary for the Sessions Judge to examine the accused again—Khudram, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625. (5) The examination of the accused may be dispensed with in those cases in which owing to the admission or plea of the accused (sec 243) or owing to the weakness of the evidence called in support of the prosecution (secs. 245, 253, 289), the accused can either be convicted on his own plea without the taking of evidence or acquitted or discharged on the evidence—Nabu, 26 Cr.L.J. 1554 (1555), 20 S.L.R. 34 (F.B.).

977. Time for examination:—The accused is to be examined after the evidence for the prosecution has been recorded. He cannot be examined before any prosecution evidence has been heard or recorded because there is nothing which he can be asked to explain at that stage—Veeran, 9 Mad. 224; Sadayan, 5 M.L.T. 216; Bajit, 1883 A.W.N. 238.

It makes no difference whether the examination takes place before or after the frame of charge, provided that the accused is examined after evidence for the prosecution is completely closed—Vishram Narayan, 32 Bom.L.R. 596, 31 Cr.L.J. 743 (745), 124 I.C. 810, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 241. The general practice is to take the examination before the frame of charge—Ibid., dissenting from the view of Patker, J., in Genu Gopal, 31 Bom.L.R. 1134, 31 Cr.L.J. 402, 122 I.C. 424, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 447.

The accused is to be examined after the evidence for the prosecution has been closed and before he is asked to enter upon his defence—Bava, Ratanlal 227; Raghu Bhumji, 5 P.L.J. 430, 21 Cr.L.J. 705; Mazamar Ali, 50 Cal. 223. It is unfair to the accused and contrary to law to examine the accused before the examination of all the prosecution witnesses is completed—Ram Harakh, 1 O.L.J. 238, 15 Cr.L.J. 436; Rameshwar, 2 P.L.T. 741, 22 Cr.L.J. 259. Therefore, where the accused was examined after two prosecution witnesses had given evidence, and then another prosecution witness was examined, held that the procedure offended against this section and the conviction must be set aside, and retrial ordered—Rameswar, supra; Balkeshwar, 3 P.L.T. 322, 23 Cr.L.J. 114; Gulzari Lal, 49 Cal. 1075; Ghaza Ali, 6 Lah.L.J. 618, 27 Cr.L.J. 87; Lachhman, 7 Lah. 564, 27 P.L.R. 427, 27 Cr.L.J. 1007; Bhau Dharma, 30 Bom.L.R. 385, 29 Cr.L.J. 535 (536), 109 I.C. 359, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 140, 10 A.I.Cr.C. 218. But the Allahabad High Court is of opinion that although all the witnesses for the prosecution ought to be examined before the examination of the accused, under the imperative provision of sec. 342, still if the evidence of the witnesses who are examined after the examination of the accused introduces no new matter, the irregularity in procedure does not prejudice the accused, and is curable by sec. 537—Bechu Chaube, 45 All. 124, 20 A.L.J. 874, 24 Cr.L.J. 67; Khacho Mal, 27 Cr.L.J. 405 (406), 93 I.C. 69, A.I.R. 1926 All. 358; Jhabbar, 26 A.L.J. 196, 30 Cr.L.J. 531 (536); Sudaman, 40 All. 551. The Patna High Court has also laid down that if the accused is defended, any violation of any rule as to the stage at which he is to be examined, does not make much difference. If he has not been prejudiced, the error ought not to vitiate the trial—Mohiuddin, 4 Pat. 488, 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (815), 86 I.C. 459, 6 P.L.T. 154, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 414.

The accused should be examined before the evidence for the defence is taken. The examination of the accused after all the prosecution witnesses as well as the witnesses for the defence are examined, vitiates the conviction and sentence, and the trial must be taken up again from the close of the prosecution case, and the accused must be examined before he has entered upon his defence—Surendra v. Isamuddi, 51 Cal. 933 (934), 84 I.C. 325, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 480, 26 Cr.L.J. 261; Ram Charan, 7 P.L.T. 259, 26 Cr.L.J. 1289. But in a more recent Calcutta case it has been laid down that an examination of the accused after the conclusion of the defence evidence is a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537—Tamez Khan v. Rajabali, 31 C.W.N. 337 (338), 28 Cr.L.J. 347 (dissenting from 51 Cal. 933).

Although the Magistrate may under the first part of sub-section (1) examine an accused person before the case for the prosecution is concluded, still this would not absolve the Magistrate from the obligation imposed upon him by the latter part of sub-section (1) to examine the accused after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence—Ramnath, 2 P.L.T. 549, 22 Cr.L.J. 460; Moinuddin, 2 P.L.T. 455, 22 Cr.L.J. 422; Bhokari, 5 P.L.T. 445, 25 Cr.L.J. 711; Hamid Ali v. Sri Kissen, 28 C.W.N. 118, 24 Cr.L.J. 943

The accused must be examined after the examination, cross-examination and re-examination of all the prosecution witnesses are over. It is not enough that the accused has been examined after the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses and before their cross-examination and re-examination. Until the prosecution witnesses have been cross-examined and re-examined, it cannot be said what the exact case that the accused will have to meet is, and if he is forced to disclose his defence before cross-examination, it might very well be that the prosecution witnesses would be on their guard and the value of the cross-examination destroyed. The provision in sec. 342 is for the benefit of the accused; and to enable him to obtain the full benefit of the section it is clear that he must be examined after the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses are over—Mitari Singh, 6 P.L.J. 644 (649), 2 P.L.T. 520, 22 Cr.L.J. 697, 83 I.C. 825, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 158; Kashi Paramanik v. Dasu Paramanik, 27 C.W.N. 28; Jummon, 50 Cal. 308; Mazahar Ali, 50 Cal. 223; Gulzari Lal, 49 Cal. 1075; Fernandez, 45 Bom. 672; Nathu Kasturchand, 50 Bom. 42, 27 Bom.L.R. 105, 26 Cr.L.J. 690; Pramatha Nath, 50 Cal. 518 (523); Dibakanta v. Gour Gopal, 50 Cal. 939 (947); Maria, 20 N.L.R. 174, 26 Cr.L.J. 971 (F.B.); Motan Khan, 21 S.L.R. 331, 28 Cr.L.J. 417; Kundan Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 468, 153 I.C. 1034, 35 P.L.R. 173, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 648, 1934 Cr.C. 972. Therefore, where after some of the prosecution witnesses were examined-in-chief, the Magistrate examined the accused, and then some more prosecution witnesses were examined, and all the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined, but the accused was not examined again, held that there was no substantial compliance with the provisions of this section—Sailendra, 38 C.L.J. 175; Krishnapa, 25 Cr.L.J. 713, 81 I.C. 201, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 51; Muhammad Sadiq, 26 P.L.R. 533, 89 I.C. 458, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 51, 26 Cr.L.J. 1370 (1371); Muhammad Din, 36 Cr.L.J. 407, 153 I.C. 445, 35 P.L.R. 613, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 520. Where the prosecution witnesses are first examined-in-chief, then the accused are examined under this section, and afterwards the prosecution witnesses are cross-examined, the procedure is illegal and the trial is vitiated—Haronath v. Ala Bux, 28 C.W.N. 119, 38 C.L.J. 281. Such non-compliance with the provisions of this section is not an irregularity curable by sec. 537—Ibid.; Mazahar Ali, 50 Cal. 223. Where after the examination of the accused under this section there was not only cross-examination of some of the prosecution witnesses but the investigation officer was examined, held that the accused ought to have been examined further under this section and that there was a great probability of the accused having been prejudiced in consequence of this opportunity not being afforded to him—Ruhan Dodo, 34 Cr.L.J. 161, 141 I.C. 529, A.I.R. 1932 Sind. 165, 1932 Cr.C. 743, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind. 57. See also Jhandu v. Emp., 40 P.L.R. 902. But the Madras High Court holds that the words "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined" mean 'when the prosecution has finished calling evidence' and do not include the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses. Therefore, where in a warrant case the accused does not cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after their examination-in-chief, and then the Magistrate examines the accused and frames a charge, and afterwards at a later stage the accused cross-examines the prosecution witnesses and then the prosecution re-examines them, held that the omission to further examine the accused after the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses does not vitiate the trial—Varisai Rowther, 46 Mad. 449, 24 Cr.L.J. 517, 73 I.C. 163, 44 M.L.J. 567, 17 M.L.W. 722, 32 M.L.T. 385, 1923 M.W.N. 477, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 609 (F.B.), (overruling Maruda Muthu Vannan, 45 Mad. 820). This view of the Madras Full Bench has been followed by the Rangoon High Court—Nga Hla, 3 Rang 139, 89 I.C. 312, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 258, 26 Cr.L.J. 1336; Subbaya Naidu, 7 Rang 470, A.I.R. 1929 Rang 331, 30 Cr.L.J. 1164, 120 I.C. 230, 1929 Cr.C. 507 (509), by the Allahabad High Court—Sudaman, 49 All. 551, 28 Cr.L.J. 399 (400); Hafiz Mohd Rafiq Ahmad v. Emp., 1936 Cr.C. 476, 162 I.C. 758, 37 Cr.L.J. 710, A.I.R. 1936 All 319, 1936 A.L.J. 274, and by the Patna High Court—Mohiuddin v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (813), 4 Pat. 488, 86 I.C. 459, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 414, 6 P.L.T. 154; Ramchandra Prasad v. Emp., A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 64, 110 I.C. 803, 29 Cr.L.J. 771, 10 P.L.T. 429; Sukhdoo Prasad v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 55, 16 Pat. 97, 18 P.L.T. 370, 1937 P.W.N. 353, 173 I.C. 189, 39 Cr.L.J. 321, 4 B.R. 240. See also Bechu Chauhe, 45 All. 124, where the witnesses for the prosecution were examined-in-chief and on the same day the accused were questioned under sec. 342, and afterwards the witnesses for the prosecution were cross-examined; the High Court made no objection to the procedure. The Oudh Chief Court also holds that if the accused has been examined before the framing of the charge, the omission to re-examine him after the frame of charge and the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses does not vitiate the trial, if the cross-examination adds nothing on which it is necessary to further examine the accused—Brij Behari, 28 O.C. 130, 12 O.L.J. 182, 2 O.W.N. 327, 26 Cr.L.J. 1301; Khuman, 2 O.W.N. 378, 26 Cr.L.J. 1374. Although it is incumbent on the trial Judge to examine the accused under this section after the witnesses for the prosecution have been further cross-examined by him subsequent to the framing of the charge, the conviction shall not be quashed on appeal or revision, except where it is shown that prejudice has occurred in consequence of the omission to do so—Hassan, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 211. See also Anargul, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 75, 1934 Cr.C. 1111, 151 I.C. 501, 35 Cr.L.J. 1361; Gurdas Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 832, 40 P.L.R. 589, 179 I.C. 249. But see Jhandu v. Emp., 40 P.L.R. 902, where it has been held that where after further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses a new witness is called and examined for the prosecution, it is the duty of the trying Magistrate to question the accused again under this section and the omission to do so amounts to an illegality vitiating the entire proceedings.

Where the accused has been examined after the prosecution has finished its evidence under sec. 252, but a new and material matter in support of the prosecution case is elicited in cross-examination or re-examination of the prosecution witnesses under sec. 256, it is desirable that the accused should again be questioned on the case under sec. 342 and asked generally to explain the circumstances. So also, if the accused has already been examined before the framing of the charge, and the prosecution calls fresh evidence after the formulation of the charge, the accused must again be examined under sec. 342 on the termination of that evidence—Varisai Rowther, 46 Mad. 449 (457) 24 Cr.L.J. 547, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 609, 73 I.C. 163, 44 M.L.J. 567 (F.B.); Vishram Narayan, 32 Bom.L.R. 596, 31 Cr.L.J. 743 (745); Nataraja v. Devasingamani, 32 Cr.L.J. 757, 131 I.C. 493, 1930 M.W.N. 914, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 241, 1931 Cr.C. 361. But where the accused has been examined by the Magistrate before the charge was framed and after all the prosecution witnesses had been examined and cross-examined at considerable length, and after the charge was framed, most of the witnesses were recalled by the accused (under sec. 256), for a further lengthy cross-examination, it would be unnecessary for the Court to examine the accused again after the further cross-examination, when no fresh circumstances were discovered after the recall and re-cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses—Byrne, 4 Lah. 61, 81 I.C. 337, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 84, 25 Cr.L.J. 801; Thachroth, 45 M.L.J. 279, 25 Cr.L.J. 7; Kazi Karim, 26 Cr.L.J. 1418, 89 I.C. 842, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 154; Nadir, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 371, 116 I.C. 455, 30 Cr.L.J. 625; Pritchard, 30 Cr.L.J. 18 (22), 112 I.C. 850, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 382, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 97; Vishram Narayan, supra; Pitani, 9 O.W.N. 116, 33 Cr.L.J. 811, 139 I.C. 636, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 1130, 1932 Cr.C. 186. The trial of a warrant case should, according to the recent view of the Lahore High Court, be regarded as comprising not merely two stages, prosecution and defence, but stages, prosecution, further cross-examination of prosecution witnesses and defence. If this is so, then it is clear that sec. 342, Cr. P. C., does not lay down any particular moment of time but a period of time within which the examination can be held. If the trial of a warrant case were regarded as having only two stages—prosecution and defence—then sec. 342, Cr. P. C., would have to be interpreted as indicating a particular moment of time, namely that intervening between the close of the first stage and the beginning of the second. If however, as it appears to be the correct view, there are three stages, then the examination under sec. 342, Cr. P. C., can be held either immediately after the close of the first stage or immediately before the beginning of the third stage or for the matter of that at any time between these two points—Mohammad Nawaz v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 543 (545), I.L.R. 1938 Lah. 603, 176 I.C. 678, 11 R.L. 226, 39 Cr.L.J. 781, 40 P.L.R. 850, dissenting from Hafiz Mahommed Rafiq Ahmed v. Emp., A.I.R. 1936 All 319, 1936 Cr.C. 476, 162 I.C. 758, 37 Cr.L.J. 710, 1936 A.L.J. 274 and distinguishing Gian Singh, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 230, 111 I.C. 665, 29 Cr.L.J. 905, Lachman Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 551, 96 I.C. 863, 27 Cr.L.J. 1007, 7 Lah. 564, 27 P.L.R. 427, Girja Nandan Singh v. National Insurance and Banking Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1918 Lah. 302, 44 I.C. 139, 1 P.R. 1918 and Kundan Lal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 648, 1934 Cr.C. 972, 153 I.C. 1034, 36 Cr.L.J. 468, 35 P.L.R. 173.

The accused was examined after the examination and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, and then the Magistrate called upon him to enter upon his defence (sec. 256). Thereupon, the accused applied to the Court for recall of some of the prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination (sec. 257) and the Magistrate granted the application. Held that it was not incumbent upon the Magistrate to further examine the accused after the latter had re-cross-examined the prosecution witnesses under sec. 257. After the accused had entered upon his defence, the stage at which he must be examined under sec. 342 had passed—Obedar Rahaman, 56 Cal. 1157, 1930 Cr.C. 219 (220), 31 Cr.L.J. 406. Where after arguments had commenced a prosecution witness was recalled and some questions were put to him about a plan and the accused were not examined again under this section, held that the fact that the formalities were not gone through asking the accused persons some questions under this section did not vitiate the trial—Dharani Kanta, 35 Cr.L.J. 226, 146 I.C. 1051, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 594, 57 C.L.J. 57, 1933 Cr.C. 958.

Where the Magistrate asked the accused to summon their witnesses before all the witnesses for the prosecution had been examined and to produce them on the day on which some of the prosecution witnesses were to be examined and, on their failure to do so on that date, adjourned the case for arguments and after hearing the arguments fixed a date for delivery of judgment when he examined the accused under this section and delivered the judgment, held that the accused were examined at such a late stage that there was a real danger that the Magistrate had made up his mind before he had examined the accused and that due weight was not given to their statements. In these circumstances it was impossible to hold that the omissions, even if they amounted to irregularities, did not seriously prejudice the accused—Feroze Kazi v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 267, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 295, 186 I.C. 227, 1940 P.W.N. 243.

Where an accused person has been examined under this section after the close of the prosecution case, and the Court examines a person under sec. 540 (whether such person be a prosecution witness or another person), it is not necessary to examine the accused again, especially when the deposition of such person does not disclose any fresh facts, and the accused is in no way prejudiced in not having been examined again—Prayag Gope, 3 Pat. 1015 (1017), 5 P.L.T. 571, 82 I.C. 284, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 764, 25 Cr.L.J. 1276; Fazal Karim, 26 Cr.L.J. 1418 (1419), 89 I.C. 842, 1 Lah. Cas. 270, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 154; Mahadu, 30 Bom.L.R. 1086, 29 Cr.L.J. 1057 (1058), 112 I.C. 561, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 388; Allah Ditto, 23 S.L.R. 1, 29 Cr.L.J. 932 (933); Hidayatullah, 35 Cr.L.J. 1175, 150 I.C. 906, 28 S.L.R. 106, 1934 Cr.C. 636, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 67; Ibrahim, 34 Cr.L.J. 591, 143 I.C. 351, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 49, 1933

Cr.C. 175, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 128; Ramchandra Prasad v Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 657, 168 I.C. 979, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 246, 3 BR 508, 9 RP 522, 18 P.L.T. 483, 1937 P.W.N. 519; Gurbakhsh Singh v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 856, 177 I.C. 298, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 631, 11 R.L. 289, 40 P.L.R. 916. The law does not require that the summoning of a witness by the Court should necessitate a further examination of the accused under this section, and, although in some cases when a prosecution witness is recalled and re-examined under sec. 540, Cr. P. C., such procedure should be followed, the procedure does not apply to a witness not previously before the Court called by the Court itself—Shcoram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 1038 (1060), 171 I.C. 262, 10 R.N. 102, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 541, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 285. See also Kandhai v. Municipal Board, Rae Bareilly, 39 Cr.L.J. 841, 177 I.C. 56, 11 R.O. 16, 1938 A.Cr.C. 82, 1938 O.A. 591, 1938 O.L.R. 365, 1938 O.W.N. 743. But where the witnesses under sec. 540, Cr. P. C., are examined at the end of the case, the Magistrate would exercise a proper discretion if he records the statements of the accused again after examining those witnesses—Beni Madho v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 816. See, however, Hooghly-Chinsurah Municipality v. Keshab, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 347, 56 C.L.J. 583, 1933 Cr.C. 419, 34 Cr.L.J. 549, 143 I.C. 285 where the non-compliance was held to vitiate the trial.

This section does not make it obligatory to again examine the accused after a charge has been added to or altered, when he has already been examined prior to the addition or alteration of the charge—Shamial, 1 Pat. 51, 23 Cr.L.J. 146.

Retrial:—Where a trial was vitiated on the ground that the accused was not examined at the proper stage, a retrial would be ordered, and the retrial should take place not de novo but from the stage at which the Magistrate ought to have examined the accused—Mitarjit, 6 P.L.J. 644 (649), 22 Cr.L.J. 697; Pramatha Nath, 50 Cal. 518 (525), 24 Cr.L.J. 248, 27 C.W.N. 389; *Diba Kanita v. De Novo trial:—The omission to examine the accused for a second time during a de novo trial is not an illegality which vitiates the trial; at the most, it is only an irregularity to which sec. 537, Cr. P. C., applies—Marudamuthu v. Raghava, 36 Cr.L.J. 307, 153 I.C. 297, 1934 M.W.N. 1136, 67 M.L.J. 800, 40 M.L.W. 803, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 22, 58 Mad. 427. But see Akhtar, 29 Cr.L.J. 125, 106 I.C. 717, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 720.

978. Who can examine:—The Court conducting the trial or inquiry is alone authorised to examine the accused person and the counsel or other person conducting the prosecution should not be allowed to take any part in the examination—C. P. Cr. Cr., Part II, No. 24. Section 342 allows the Court, but not the complainant to put questions to the accused—Kamandu, 10 Mad. 121 (123). That is the duty of the Court and it can only be in exceptional circumstances that a Magistrate should find himself obliged to accept any suggestions from the prosecution counsel as to questions to be put under this section—Hari Krishnaji, 35 Cr.L.J. 1457, 151 I.C. 778, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 213, 1934 Cr.C. 984.

A Special Bench constituted under the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XVI of 1908) can examine the accused under this section—Nagendra Nath, 19 C.W.N. 923, 21 C.L.J. 396.

Where the Magistrate who has partly tried the case and examined the accused is transferred, and the accused demands a de novo trial, the succeeding Magistrate is bound to examine the accused again, and failure on his part to do so vitiates the trial. It is the Magistrate who tries the case and decides it who must examine the accused, and it is not sufficient for his predecessor-in-office to have done so—Akhtar Mohammad, 29 Cr.L.J. 125 (126), 106 I.C. 717, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 720.

979. Improper questions:—It is highly objectionable to put questions to the accused for obtaining explanation in regard to matters which he had previously mentioned in his confession and which he had repudiated as untrue, or for " " :

1934 Cr.C. 1110, 152 I.C. 924; Gobinda Naidu, 30 Cr.L.J. 932, 118 I.C. 512, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 285, 1929 M.W.N. 391, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 832. See also Shewakram Issardas v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind. 130, 182 I.C. 464, 40 Cr.L.J. 661; Mahadeo Prasad, 45 All. 323, 76 I.C. 1025, A.I.R. 1923 All. 322, 25 Cr.L.J. 305, 21 A.L.J. 179; Marudamuthu Padayachi, 54 Mad. 788, 134 I.C. 63, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 820, 61 M.L.J. 358, 34 M.L.W. 162, 1931 M.W.N. 886, 32 Cr.L.J. 1099, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 815 (contra—Bali Reddi, 38 Mad. 302, 22 I.C. 157, A.I.R. 1914 Mad. 45, 15 Cr.L.J. 13, 14 M.L.T. 453). Section 30 of the Indian Evidence Act applies only to statements made before and proved at the trial. Section 10 of the Evidence Act refers to things said or done by a conspirator in reference to their common intention. Any statement made by an accused person during the trial can hardly be regarded as a statement by him as a conspirator in reference to the common intention of the persons who were members of the conspiracy. Therefore statements of accused made in the course of the trial under sec. 342, Cr. P. C., are not admissible against the co-accused—Kunihar Sen v. Emp., 34 Cr.L.J. 124 (125), 141 I.C. 192, 9 O.W.N. 1136, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh. 33, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh. 86, 1933 Cr.C. 168, 8 Luck. 286. Thus there is divergence of judicial opinion whether a confession made by an accused in the dock, when examined under this section, can be taken into consideration under sec. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act against the other accused persons. In Motilal v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 158 (162), 185 I.C. 310, the Nagpur High Court thought it unnecessary to go into this question for the purpose of deciding the case. Discussing the rulings mentioned above the same High Court has, however, very recently observed: "In his desperate hour of drowning he may not even scruple to drag others with him. Considerations such as this must have presented themselves to the Legislature when it enacted sub-sec. (3) of sec. 342, Cr. P. C. If the statement under sec. 342, Cr. P. C. is not evidence (in the same criminal proceeding) against the accused who makes it, one fails to see how it can be used against his accomplices in the dock. As that sub-section says, it can only be 'considered against him' and on the principle expressio unius est exclusio alterius it can only mean 'be considered against him and none else'. It is like an admission made in the pleadings in a civil suit, which binds nobody but the party making it"—Sumitra v. Crown, 41 Cr.L.J. 886 (890), 190 I.C. 273, 1940 N.L.J. 343, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 287. But the Magistrate cannot use the statement of the accused against his co-accused. This is certainly not permissible where the statement is not of a confessional nature. The statements made by the accused under this section are to be considered by the Court and the Court should draw such an inference from the answer of the accused or refusal to answer as it thinks just. The Court in some cases may draw even an inference against the accused from his answer or refusal to answer. But the Court is not entitled to draw any inference against a co-accused from the answer of one accused given in response to questions put to him under the provisions of this section—Tahasinuddin Ahmad v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 396 (398), 41 Cr.L.J. 563, 188 I.C. 288, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 250. But if they are tried separately, the prohibition would not apply; and an accused can be examined on oath as a witness against his co-accused—Akhoy Kumar, 45 Cal. 720, 22 C.W.N. 405, 45 I.C. 999, A.I.R. 1919 Cal. 1021, 19 Cr.L.J. 663, 27 C.L.J. 91; Chandra Sekhar Prasad, 36 Cr.L.J. 500 (503), 154 I.C. 387, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 91, 1935 Cr.C. 146, 1 B.R. 302, 7 R.P. 464; Muhammad Yusuf, 58 Cal. 1214, 32 Cr.L.J. 667 (668), 131 I.C. 142, 35 C.W.N. 490, 1931 Cr.C. 405, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 341; Banu Singh, 33 Cal. 1353 (1357); Durant, 23 Bom. 213; Tirbeni, 20 All. 426; Joseph, 3 Rang. 11, 3 Bur.L.J. 265, 26 Cr.L.J. 492 (496). The reason is, that where the trial is separate, the accused in one case is examined in the other case not as an accused person but as a witness, and therefore he can be sworn; otherwise, no man while he stood charged with a criminal offence could possibly be examined as a witness in any criminal trial whatsoever. This is not the intention of the Legislature—Tirbeni, 20 All. 426, 1898 A.W.N. 102.

Where in a joint trial of several persons, one accused pleaded guilty and was convicted on his plea, his trial ended then and there and he ceased to be an and he can be prosecuted in respect of a defamatory matter contained in such statement—Chawla v. Prithe Lal, 24 A.L.J. 329, 27 Cr.L.J. 253. The same view is taken by the Bombay High Court—Est. State v. Urmoo, 50 Bom. 162, 28 Bom.L.R. 1, 27 Cr.L.J. 423 (F.B.).

932. Sub-section (3):—Sub-section (3) lays down that when an accused person has been examined under this section, the answers given by him may be taken into consideration at the trial and proper inferences drawn therefrom: and even in a subsequent trial for any other offence, they may be used for or against him—Baldeo, 6 P.L.J. 241, 22 Cr.L.J. 433. The meaning of the expression 'may be taken into consideration' (which is also used in sec. 30, Evidence Act) is not very clear, but it means at all events that the statement made by the accused person is not to have the force of sworn evidence, and a conviction based on such a statement alone cannot be maintained—Nirmal, 22 All. 445; Akandia, 15 Bom. 66; Bhola Nath, 51 All. 313, 33 Cr.L.J. 101 (112). The Court may take the statement into consideration in order to determine whether the issue of guilt is proved or not, and to that extent it stands practically on the same footing as other evidence, although technically it is not evidence in the case, within the meaning of the Evidence Act, in as much as it is not made on oath—Abdul Geni, 49 Bom. 878, 27 Bom.L.R. 1373, 27 Cr.L.J. 114 (120). The words "taken into consideration" are purposely wide. If the statement of the accused person satisfactorily explains the prosecution evidence, there can be no conviction. If the statement as also the defence (if any) do not rebut the prosecution evidence, and the Court feels justified in acting on the latter, it will convict. But, if the prosecution evidence is vague or insufficient, the Court cannot supplement it by selecting, out of the statement of the accused, passages which might corroborate the prosecution evidence and to reject those passages which go to exonerate the accused. The whole statement must be taken into consideration—Bhola Nath, 51 All. 313, 30 Cr.L.J. 101 (105). See also Krishnappa v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 569 and Note 974.

An admission of incriminating facts made by an accused person to a Magistrate under sec. 164, Cr. P. C., or a statement made to the Court during the course of the trial is admissible in evidence for what it is worth against the person who makes it under secs. 18 to 21, Evidence Act—Allahgarayo Darykhan v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 477 (479), 187 I.C. 576, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 53, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 800.

Where neither the prosecution nor the accused is able to procure direct evidence, and the case hangs upon circumstantial evidence, the accused's statement must be taken into consideration—Abdul Geni, 49 Bom. 878, 27 Bom.L.R. 1373, 27 Cr.L.J. 114 (116).

See also Note 983.

983. Sub-section (4):—No oath can administered to an accused person and therefore he cannot be examined as a witness. Thus, where several accused are tried jointly, one accused cannot be sworn and therefore cannot be examined as a witness against his other co-accused till he is convicted or discharged—Hanmanta, 1 Bom. 610; Asghar Ali, 2 All. 260; Akhoy Kumar, 45 Cal. 720; Dala Jiva, 10 Bom. 190; Alladad, 1906 P.R. 9; Nabi Baksh, 1902 P.R. 12; Nga Ngwe, 20 Cr.L.J. 342, U.B.R. (1918) 4th Qr. 115; Nga Po Min, 10 Rang. 511, 1932 Cr.C. 932 (933) (F.B.). If several accused are tried jointly, the answers given by one accused cannot be taken into consideration against another accused, under the provisions of this section (but can be taken into consideration under sec. 30, Evidence Act)—William Cooper, 51 Bom. 531, 32 Bom.L.R. 747, 31 Cr.L.J. 1137 (1138); Ganpat v. Emp., 134 I.C. 686, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 169, 1931 Cr.C. 830, 32 Cr.L.J. 1222, 27 N.L.R. 163, Ind. Rul. 1931 Nag. 174; *Dial Singh v. Where an accused is being tried jointly with others, any statement made by him before the Court under this section, deprecating his own guilt and seeking to clear himself at the expense of other accused, cannot be taken into consideration under section 30, Evidence Act, or any other provision of the law as against his co-accused. Their conviction cannot be based mainly on his statement under this section and must be set aside—Jogendra, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 724, 1934 Cr.C. 1110, 152 I.C. 924; Gobinda Naidu, 30 Cr.L.J. 932, 118 I.C. 512, A.I.R. 1929 Mad 285, 1929 M.W.N. 391, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 832. See also *Shevakram Issardas v. Section 30 of the Indian Evidence Act applies only to statements made before and proved at the trial. Section 10 of the Evidence Act refers to things said or done by a conspirator in reference to their common intention. Any statement made by an accused person during the trial can hardly be regarded as a statement by him as a conspirator in reference to the common intention of the persons who were members of the conspiracy. Therefore statements of accused made in the course of the trial under sec 342, Cr. P. C., are not admissible against the co-accused—Kunwar Sen v. Emp., 34 Cr.L.J. 124 (125), 141 I.C. 192, 9 O.W.N. 1136, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 33, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 86, 1933 Cr.C. 168, 8 Luck. 286. Thus there is divergence of judicial opinion whether a confession made by an accused in the dock, when examined under this section, can be taken into consideration under sec. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act against the other accused persons. In Motilal v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 158 (162), 185 I.C. 310, the Nagpur High Court thought it unnecessary to go into this question for the purpose of deciding the case. Discussing the rulings mentioned above the same High Court has, however, very recently observed: "In his desperate hour of drowning he may not even scruple to drag others with him. Considerations such as this must have presented themselves to the Legislature when it enacted sub-sec. (3) of sec 342, Cr. P. C. If the statement under sec. 342, Cr. P. This is certainly not permissible where the statement is not of a confessional nature. The statements made by the accused under this section are to be considered by the Court and the Court should draw such an inference from the answer of the accused or refusal to answer as it thinks just. The Court in some cases may draw even an inference against the accused from his answer or refusal to answer. But the Court is not entitled to draw any inference against a co-accused from the answer of one accused given in response to questions put to him under the provisions of this section—Tahasinuddin Akmal v. Emp., 44 C.W.N. 396 (398), 41 Cr.L.J. 563, 188 I.C. 288, A.I.R. 1940 Cal 230. But if they are tried separately, the prohibition would not apply; and an accused can be examined on oath as a witness against his co-accused—Akhoy Kumar, 45 Cal 731, 22 C.W.N. 405, 45 I.C. 999, A.I.R. 1919 Cal. 1021, 19 Cr.L.J. 663, 27 C.L.J. 57; Chandrasekhar Prasad, 36 Cr.L.J. 500 (503), 154 I.C. 387, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 5, 1935 Cr.C. 146, 1 B.R. 302, 7 R.P. 464; Muhammad Yusuf, 58 Cal. 1214, 32 Cr.L.J. 57, 1932 Cr.C. 131 I.C. 142, 35 C.W.N. 490, 1931 Cr.C. 405, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 341, 30 Cr.L.J. 33, 133 Cal 1353 (1357); Durant, 23 Bom 213; Tirbeni, 20 All. 426; Joshi & P. 11, 3 Bur L.J. 265, 26 Cr.L.J. 492 (496). The reason is, that where the accused is examined as a witness, and therefore he can be sworn; otherwise, no man who is charged with a criminal offence could possibly be examined as a witness—any witness whatsoever. This is not the intention of the Legislature—Tripathi, 20 All. 500, A.W.N. 102.

Where in a joint trial of several persons, one accused is convicted on his plea, his trial ended then and there and he is not to be person, even though the Court had deferred passing sentence on him (e.g., where the Court ordered his detention in a reformatory, but said that the period of detention would be fixed later on after receiving medical report as to the age of the accused). He was therefore a competent witness against his other co-accused—Muhammad Yusuf, supra. But it is desirable that the Court should pass sentence on him completely, before taking him as a witness, so that he may give evidence with a mind free of all corrupt influence which the fear of impending punishment and the desire to obtain immunity to himself at the expense of the other prisoners might otherwise produce—Ibid.

The provision in sub-section (4) that no oath can be administered to the accused has reference only to the statement made by him in answers to questions put to him by the Court under this section. It has no reference to any other act of the accused; and therefore the accused can make an affidavit on oath in support of an application for transfer of the case under sec 526—Ghulam Muhammad, 3 Lah. 46, 23 Cr.L.J. 399; Sadasheo, 34 Cr.L.J. 1035, 145 I.C. 445, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 201, 1933 Cr.C. 797, 29 N.L.R. 338; or can file a sworn affidavit in support of a petition for leave to appeal under sec. 449—Gallagher, 54 Cal 52, 28 Cr.L.J. 481 (482).

984. "Accused":—The word "accused" in this section means a person over whom the Magistrate or other Court is exercising jurisdiction; therefore a person who has been discharged by the Police without being brought before a Magistrate is not an accused person, and he can give evidence on oath in a trial of his accomplices—Mona Puna, 16 Bom. 661; Aung Min, 4 L.B.R. 362, 9 Cr.L.J. 370; Banu, 4 Cr.L.J. 145, 10 C.W.N. 962, 33 Cal. 1353; Dawood Kazi, 50 Bom. 56, 93 I.C. 225, A.I.R. 1926 Bom 144, 27 Cr.L.J. 433, 28 Bom.L.R. 79; Har Prasad Bhargava, 45 All. 226, 77 I.C. 961, A.I.R. 1923 All. 91, 25 Cr.L.J. 497, 21 A.L.J. 42; Keshav, 36 Cr.L.J. 937, 156 I.C. 392, A.I.R. 1935 Bom 186, 37 Bom.L.R. 179, 1935 Cr.C. 487, 59 Bom. 355, 7 R.B. 511. But the procedure is extraordinary when an accused was examined as a prosecution witness on oath against the other accused although no pardon was offered to her by any Magistrate under sec. 337, nor was any order of discharge under sec. 169 made in respect of her upon an application by the police—Sohan Lal, 34 Cr.L.J. 568, 143 I.C. 467, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 305, 10 O.W.N. 678, 1933 Cr.C. 686, Ind. Rul 1933 Oudh 174. See also Note 1304.

In a case to which sec. 337, Cr. P. C., had no application the prosecution desired to examine one of the accused person as a witness and prayed that his name should be deleted from the charge-sheet and placed on a separate charge-sheet. The Magistrate allowed the prayer and examined him as a prosecution witness. Held that the Magistrate did not act unjudicially in ordering a separate trial and that he was a competent witness—Karamalli Gulamalli, 40 Cr.L.J. 118, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 481, 40 Bom.L.R. 1092, 178 I.C. 706, I.L.R. 1939 Bom 42.

The word "inquiry" used in sec. 342, Cr. P. C., does not include investigation, and the words "accused person" must mean one over whom the Magistrate is exercising jurisdiction. Therefore when the police refrain from prosecuting a person against whom there is adequate evidence to justify his production for inquiry and trial before a Magistrate under sec. 170, Cr. P. C., he must be held to be a competent witness since there is no provision of law which precludes the Court from administering oath to such a person. It is true that he would suffer from the drawback of testifying under a deep shadow of suspicion that his evidence was procured by threat or promise, but that cannot affect his competency although it is bound to detract from his credibility—Amdumiyar Guljar Patel v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Nag 17 (23), I.L.R. 1937 Nag 315, 38 Cr.L.J. 237, 166 I.C. 582, 9 R.N. 126 (F.B.). Unless a person is an accused person in the trial this section would not render him incompetent to make any statement on oath—Sheoshanker Dhondbaji Mahar v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 697 (701), 188 I.C. 885, 1910 N.L.J. 165, A.I.R. 1910 Nag. 410 (413).

The term "accused" means a person under trial; a person called upon to show cause under sec. 133 is not an accused person within the meaning of this section, and oath can be administered to him—Hanananda, 2 C.L.J. 149. The parties to a proceeding under sec. 145 are not accused persons and they can be examined on oath—Mohammad Ayub v. Sarfaraz, 26 Cr.L.J. 70, 83 I.C. 630, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 286. A person proceeded against under sec. 488 is not an accused person, and is permitted to give evidence on oath on his own behalf, under sec. 340 (2)—Vithaldas, 52 Bom. 768, 29 Cr.L.J. 1501 (1052), 112 I.C. 475, 39 Bom.L.R. 957, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 347. So also, a person against whom the Public Prosecutor has withdrawn the case can be administered oath and examined as a witness—Govind, 18 Bom.L.R. 266, 17 Cr.L.J. 256, A.I.R. 1916 Bom. 229, 34 I.C. 976. An informer is not an accused person and this section does not prevent oath being administered to him—Mal Singh, 1887 P.R. 38. A party to a proceeding under sec. 353 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, for the erection of an unauthorised structure, is not accused person, and is not exempt from the administration of oath under sec. 342. The erection of the unauthorised structure is not an offence; it is only when an order for demolition of the structure is disobeyed that the person is said to commit an offence and becomes an accused—Krishen Doyal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 54 Cal. 532, 31 C.W.N. 506 (508), 28 Cr.L.J. 407.

Explanation:—Where the party says that the provisions of sec. 342, Cr. P. C., were not complied with but the Magistrate in his explanation says that they were complied with, the Magistrate's explanation must be accepted—Sadagar, 49 C.L.J. 261.

343. Except as provided in sections 337 and 338, no influence by means of any promise or threat to induce disclosures or otherwise, shall be used to an accused person to induce him to disclose or withhold any matter within his knowledge.

985. See sec. 24 of the Evidence Act, and compare section 163, ante. Where the case against an accused is withdrawn and he is examined as a witness, any inducement offered to such person should be deemed as offered to him as a witness and not as an accused and does not make his evidence inadmissible, though the credit to be attached to such witness is diminished—Govind, 18 Bom.L.R. 266, 17 Cr.L.J. 256, 34 I.C. 976; Mahadeo, 27 Cr.L.J. 807, 95 I.C. 471, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 426. For instances of inducement, threat and promise, see Notes under sec. 162.

It is not the duty of the accused person to produce his absconding co-accused persons before the Court. A Court of Justice is not justified in exercising any pressure upon an accused person before it with the object of coercing him to produce persons who are fugitives from justice—Fakir, 32 Cr.L.J. 344, 129 I.C. 485, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 953, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 197, 1930 Cr.C. 1049.

344. (1) If, from the absence of a witness, or any other reasonable cause, it becomes necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of, or adjourn any inquiry or trial, the Court may, if it thinks fit, by order in writing, stating the reasons therefor, from time to time, postpone or adjourn the same on such terms as it thinks fit, for such time as it considers reasonable, and may by a warrant remand the accused if in custody:

Power to postpone or adjourn proceedings. Remand. Provided that no Magistrate shall remand an accused person to custody under this section for a term exceeding fifteen days at a time.

(2) Every order made under this section by a Court other than a High Court shall be in writing signed by the presiding Judge or Magistrate.

Explanation.—If sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand, this is a reasonable cause for a remand.

986. Scope of Section:—This section relates to proceedings in inquiries or trials, and has nothing to do with Police investigations. Sec. 167 contemplates a remand to police-custody, whereas sec. 344 contemplates a remand to jail, not to Police custody—Krishnaji, 23 Bom. 32 (34). The custody mentioned in this section is quite different from the custody under section 167. The power to remand under sec. 167 is given to detain prisoners in custody while the police make the investigation, and in a proper case, to commence the inquiry. But the custody under sec. 344 is intended for under-trial prisoners—Nagendra Nath, 51 Cal. 402 (412). After the total period of remand allowed under sec. 167 has elapsed, any further remand under that section becomes illegal. The Magistrate can then only take action under sec. 344; but he cannot remand the accused to police custody. He can either detain the accused in the judicial lock-up, or direct his release on bail—Bal Krishna, 12 Lah. 435, 33 Cr.L.J. 180 (183), 32 P.L.R. 1, 1931 Cr.C. 163, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 99. An accused cannot be in magisterial and police custody at one and the same time, that is to say, he cannot be before a Magistrate in magisterial custody in one case under sec. 344, Cr. P. C., and before a Magistrate in police custody in another case under sec. 167, Cr. P. C.—Dharam Hiranand v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Sind 251 (253), 31 S.L.R. 494, 171 I.C. 737, 39 Cr.L.J. 10, 10 R.S. 124.

This section is applicable to a case even before the issue of process under sec. 204, and the Magistrate is entitled under sec. 344, if there be a reasonable cause for doing so, to postpone any inquiry or trial and to postpone the issue of process, even if the case be a warrant case—Ram Saran v. Nikhad Narain, 6 P.L.T. 477, 26 Cr.L.J. 1179 (1180); Ram Golam v. Sarat, 31 Cr.L.J. 262, 121 I.C. 414, 49 C.L.J. 388, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 281.

Where a Magistrate orders an inquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., he does not deprive himself of jurisdiction and has power under this section to stay the criminal proceedings, which are in fact still pending before him on the application of the accused—Rewatmal v. Sojanmal, 1936 Cr.L.J. 94, 152 I.C. 382, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 143, 1934 Cr.C. 1150.

This section enables a Magistrate to postpone or adjourn the inquiry or trial, but does not entitle him to stay further proceedings in a case on his file—Murugan v. Gutha Rami, 53 M.L.J. 455, 28 Cr.L.J. 849, 104 I.C. 625, 1927 M.W.N. 694, 39 M.L.T. 103, 26 M.L.W. 405, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 851, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 7.

This section enables a Magistrate or Judge to postpone or adjourn any inquiry or trial which is being held in his own Court. There is no provision which gives a District Magistrate the power to stay proceedings in a Criminal Court subordinate to him. Such power can be exercised only by the High Court—Jagannath v. Rajagopalachari, 12 P.L.T. 671, 1931 Cr.C. 999 (1002), A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 411; Krishna Row v. Sesha Subramania, 1923 M.W.N. 251, 25 Cr.L.J. 277, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 688, 76 I.C. 869. But see contra—Nambia v. Sudalimuthu, 44 M.L.J. 642, 25 Cr.L.J. 280, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 595, which holds that the District Magistrate can exercise such powers under sec. 17.

987. Adjournment:—Although it is the policy of law that a Court should proceed to inquire into and try a case as soon as it takes cognizance of a complaint, still he can postpone the inquiry or trial if in his opinion there are sufficient and reasonable grounds for so doing—Ram Saran v. Nikhad Narain, 6 P.L.T. 477, 26 Cr.L.J. 1179 (1180). But adjournments should not be made except upon strong and reasonable grounds. It is most inexpedient for a sessions trial to be adjourned. The trial before a Court of Session should proceed and be dealt with continuously from its inception to its finish. Occasions may arise when it is necessary to grant adjournments, but such adjournments should be granted only on the strongest possible ground and for the shortest possible period—Badri Prasad, 10 A.L.J. 473, 13 Cr.L.J. 861. Magistrates should refrain from granting adjournments save in cases where they are clearly necessitated for the purpose of justice. In a petty criminal case both parties should appear on the first day of hearing, ready for the completion of the entire trial at a single hearing—Narayana Maharana, 9 Pat 113, 31 Cr.L.J. 789. Where a trial is adjourned to a particular date, it is not competent for the Magistrate to accelerate the date of hearing against the wishes of the accused or his pleader. The trial should not be concluded nor judgment pronounced without waiting till that date—Karam Din, 14 P.R. 1898.

It is discretionary with the Court to adjourn the inquiry or trial. But this discretion is to be exercised only if there is reasonable cause for the adjournment. If the Magistrate does not exercise his discretion judicially in postponing a case, the High Court will interfere and set aside the order, but if the discretion is exercised in a sound and judicial manner, it will not be interfered with—Ram Saran v. Nikhad, 6 P.L.T. 477, 26 Cr.L.J. 1179 (1181). If the Magistrate has exercised proper judicial discretion in refusing to adjourn a case, the High Court will not interfere—Ramiah v. Ramiah, 50 Mad. 839, 28 Cr.L.J. 812 (813). When a Magistrate is of opinion that a party before him is unnecessarily wasting time and protracting the case, he has a discretion to refuse an adjournment for bringing fresh witnesses—Ali Sher v. Mir Mohammad, 26 Cr.L.J. 958, 87 I.C. 110, A.I.R. 1924 Sind 315.

The Magistrate should take some evidence before granting adjournment. On an application for adjournment by the prosecution on the ground that it would not be advisable to proceed with the case in the absence of an accused whose appearance had up to the date of the application not been secured, the Magistrate should, before granting the application, require the production of some evidence. But the omission to do thus, in a case in which the Magistrate had recorded some evidence before the issue of warrant, would not by itself entitle the accused to claim to be discharged—Billinghurst v. Meek, 49 Cal. 182, 22 Cr.L.J. 465.

A postponement sine die is not in accordance with the provisions of this section. The correct method is for the Court to postpone the case, not sine die, but for fixed and definite periods, pending the disposal of the connected case—Tarachand, 34 Cr.L.J. 139, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 214, 141 I.C. 179, 1932 Cr.C. 905; Ramchand, 115 I.C. 313, 23 S.L.R. 225, A.I.R. 1929 Sind 115, 1929 Cr.C. 106, 30 Cr.L.J. 399; Dinalshah, 35 Cr.L.J. 517, 147 I.C. 856, 27 S.L.R. 219, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 358, 1933 Cr.C. 1340.

A criminal case once fixed for a future date may be heard at an earlier date provided due notice is given to the accused or his pleader—Roatmal v. Sampat, 29 Cr.L.J. 1092, 112 I.C. 676, 11 N.L.J. 260, A.I.R. 1929 Nag 42.

988. Grounds of adjournment:—The Magistrate may adjourn a trial for the purpose of allowing the accused to secure the attendance of his witnesses—Dinoo Ray, 16 W.R. 21; Totaram, 11 W.R. 15. The fact that the accused's advocate has gone to another place where he is detained in a lengthy criminal case is a reasonable ground for adjournment—Esteves, 4 Bur.L.T. 213, 12 Cr.L.J. 474. The Madras High Court holds that if a person applies for an adjournment owing to the absence of his vakil, the Court may grant an adjournment, but on condition of his paying the costs of the adjournment—Sannasi Kudumbun v. Sivasubramania, 40 Mad. 1130, 33 M.L.J. 366. The accused is entitled to have an adjournment of his case so as to enable him to secure the services of a pleader whom he wants to engage for the purpose of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses—Paras Ram v. Jalal Din, 4 P.W.R. 1916, 17 Cr.L.J. 7. But in a Sessions case in which a number of witnesses have been summoned, the mere fact that the Counsel for one of the accused has for some reason or other to absent himself is no ground for the adjournment of the case—Salag Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 416 (418), 167 I.C. 515, A.I.R. 1937 All. 171, 1937 A.L.R. 201 9 R.A. 550. A Magistrate is justified in adjourning a case till the disposal of the counter case, where point of law raised in the former case can be conveniently decided after the disposal of the latter case—Ram Saran v. Nikhad, 6 P.L.T. 477, 26 Cr.L.J. 1179. Where the counsel for the accused in a capital case applied for permission to cross-examine the witnesses on the day following as he was not prepared to cross-examine them that day, the Court should grant the application—Sadasiv, 41 Cal. 299. According to the provisions of secs. 256 and 257, the accused is entitled as a matter of right to ask for an adjournment, after a charge has been framed against him, to enable him to adduce evidence in support of his defence—Emtaz Ali v. Jagat, 1 C.W.N. 313. Where a Magistrate has once issued process for the attendance of a defence witness, he is bound to enforce his attendance and cannot refuse an adjournment which is asked for by the accused in order that the witness's attendance may be secured—Mihir Lal, 24 Cr.L.J. 370 (Cal.). The pendency of an appeal against the conviction of the accused in a case is a good ground for adjourning the trial of the same accused in a subsequent case—Mantra Kamaraju, 6 M.L.T. 90, 9 Cr.L.J. 495.

What are not good grounds for adjournment :—The Magistrate cannot postpone an inquiry for a reason not contemplated by this section, for instance, his being busy with executive work—Muthooru v. Heera, 17 W.R. 55. The fact that the accused wants time to engage an advocate and prepare his defence is not a sufficient cause for adjourning a trial in ordinary cases, though in complicated and difficult cases an adjournment may be granted on that ground—Taung Bo, 1 L.B.R. 270. But see Paras Ram v. Jalal Din, cited above. A Court is, however, not obliged to pay any attention to a telegram from a pleader asking for adjournment of hearing—Bhanwarsingh v. Sukhramsingh, A.I.R. 1910 Nag. 283, 188 I.C. 413, 1940 N.L.J. 410, 41 Cr.L.J. 585, following Kolhatkar, 6 N.L.R. 129, 8 I.C. 282. Where a number of persons are accused of having committed an offence, the absence of some of them is not a reasonable cause for adjourning the inquiry into the guilt of the rest who have appeared before the Magistrate—Nga Tun, 1 L.B.R. 60. The absence of a co-accused and the desirability of a joint trial are not sufficient reasons for the further postponement of proceedings—Billinghurst v. Meek, 49 Cal. 182.

Counter-cases :—Where two counter cases are filed, one on a complaint and the other on a police-challan, and the complainant in one case is the accused in the other, there is no rule of law that the complaint-case should be postponed till the disposal of the police-challan case. The Court should adopt the procedure which will meet the ends of justice. In a Calcutta case the High Court ordered that the two cases must be tried simultaneously but must be dealt with separately from each other, each on its own merits, and the judgments in both the cases should be pronounced after both the trials are finished—Sheik Bahatar v. Nobadati, 28 C.W.N. 487, 26 Cr.L.J. 65 (66, 67). In a Patna case where it was found that the main question for decisions in one case could be conveniently decided after the disposal of the counter-case, it was held that the Magistrate had acted rightly in postponing the one case till the disposal of the other—Ram Saran v. Nikhad Narain, 6 P.L.T. 477, 26 Cr.L.J. 1179 (1181). See Notes in para 830A.

989. Stay of criminal proceedings pending civil suit :—This section empowers the Criminal Court to adjourn an inquiry or trial for 'any reasonable cause' and the institution of a civil suit between the same parties and in respect of the same property is certainly a reasonable cause for which criminal proceedings should be stayed—Paras Ram v. Jalal Din, 4 P.W.R. 1916, 17 Cr.L.J. 7. See also Ankamma v. Adrikholu, 18 L.W. 236, 24 Cr.L.J. 640; and Periasami, 20 L.W. 514, 35 M.L.T. 99. Ordinarily criminal proceedings should not be started when the same question is also involved in a pending civil litigation. This, however, is not a rule of law but a rule dictated by prudence and its application must depend on the merits of each case—Lorind Singh, 31 Cr.L.J. 1053, 126 I.C. 523, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 802. But there is no hard and fast rule that a criminal case should be stayed pending the disposal of a civil suit in relation to the same subject matter. Each case must be decided upon its own facts—Gopal Chandra, 33 C.W.N. 969 (972); Raj Kumari v. Bama Sundari, 23 Cal. 610 (620); Subramanian Chetti, 2 Weir 415; and the institution of a civil suit is not always a valid ground for adjourning a criminal prosecution, although the issues and evidence in the two cases are practically the same—Mathura v. Durga, 2 Cr.L.J. 798, 2 A.L.J. 747, 1905 A.W.N. 254; Gopal Chandra, supra; Ramiah v. Ramiah, 50 Mad 839, 28 Cr.L.J. 812; Brojobashi, 13 C.W.N. 398, 11 Cr.L.J. 4. But it is highly undesirable that the same dispute should be allowed to be fought out simultaneously in the civil and criminal Courts; and so the criminal proceedings should be stayed pending the decision of the civil suit—Kanhaiyalal v. Bhagwan, 48 All. 60, 23 A.L.J. 956, 26 Cr.L.J. 1485 (1488); Raj Kumari v. Bama Sundari, supra; Shri Nama Maharaj, 16 Bom 729. Although a decision of the Civil Court is not technically binding upon the Criminal Court, still if the Civil Court's decision is in favour of the accused, it creates such a doubt in his guilt that it would almost become impossible for the latter Court not to give him its benefit. Therefore, it is proper for a Criminal Court to adjourn the proceedings till the decision of the civil suit—Paras Ram v. Jalal Din, 17 Cr.L.J. 7, 4 P.W.R. 1916. Where the decision of the civil suit, which has been instituted several months before the criminal case, is likely to throw considerable light upon the dispute in the criminal case, the proceedings of the Criminal Court should be stayed pending the decision of the civil suit—Linton, 28 P.L.R. 103, 28 Cr.L.J. 326 (327). But where the criminal prosecution does not arise directly out of the proceedings in the Civil Court and the decision in the Civil Court will not necessarily affect the decision of the Criminal Court, it would be unreasonable and speculative to order stay of the proceedings in the Criminal Court on the off-chance that there might be some decision in the Civil Court which might have some bearing on the criminal prosecution—U Tha Zan v. U. Pyant, 37 Cr.L.J. 261, 160 I.C. 175, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 487, 1935 Cr.C. 1264. The test in every case would be whether the accused is likely to be seriously prejudiced by the continuance of the criminal proceedings against him, during the pendency of the civil proceedings—Jehangir v. Framji, 30 Bom.L.R. 962, 29 Cr.L.J. 1053 (1056). If the object of prosecuting the criminal proceedings, while a civil suit in relation of the same matter is pending, be in reality to prejudice the trial of the civil suit or to coerce the accused into a compromise of the civil suit on terms to be practically dictated by the complainant, the Magistrate should, as a general rule, postpone the criminal proceedings till the disposal of the civil suit—Subramanian Chetti, 2 Weir 415 (416); Jehangir Pestonji v. Framji, 30 Bom.L.R. 962, 29 Cr.L.J. 1053 (1056). Indirect motive or coercion by way of pressure on the defendants in the civil suit may lead a Court to stay the criminal proceedings—Gopal Chandra, 33 C.W.N. 969 (974). One important test to determine whether the criminal proceedings should be stayed pending the civil suit is whether the criminal prosecution is public or private. If it is public, the Court will not as a rule stay the criminal proceedings; if it is private, there will not be the same reluctance on the part of the Court to interfere with the criminal proceedings—Jehangir v. Framji, supra; Gopal Chandra, 33 C.W.N. 969 (972); Raj Kumari v. Bama Sundari, 23 Cal. 610 (619).

An order staying a criminal trial of the offence of rioting or mischief in which questions of possession will have to be gone into, until a civil suit on a question of title has been disposed of, is not a proper order, because the Civil Court's decision on title will not operate as res judicata on any question of possession to be decided by the Criminal Court—Nambra v. Sudalaimuthu, 44 M.L.J. 642, 25 Cr.L.J. 280, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 595 (596). But in cases arising out of a disputed title in which it is difficult to draw the line between a bona fide claim and criminal trespass, if the title is already the subject-matter of a civil suit before the institution of criminal proceedings, it may be advisable for the Criminal Court to abide the civil trial—Ramiah v. Ramiah, supra.

Though no invariable rule can be laid down, it is ordinarily undesirable to institute criminal proceedings until determination of civil proceedings in which the same issues are involved. It is too well known to need elaboration that criminal proceedings lend themselves to the unscrupulous application of improper pressure with a view to influencing the course of civil proceedings; and beyond that there is the mischief of criminal proceedings being instituted with an imperfect appreciation of the facts where they have not been ascertained in the more searching investigation of a Civil Court—J. M. Lucas v. Assignee of Bengal, 24 C.W.N. 418 (424), A.I.R. 1920 Cal. 624, 21 Cr.L.J. 481, 56 I.C. 577. It is highly undesirable that the same dispute should be allowed to be fought out in two Courts, namely, Criminal and Civil Courts simultaneously—Khanhaiya Lal v. Bhagwan Das, 26 Cr.L.J. 1485 (1488), 89 I.C. 1053, 48 All. 60, A.I.R. 1926 All. 30, 23 A.L.J. 956. Undoubtedly the fact that it is a public prosecution and not a private one is a matter which has to be considered. But that only goes to show that the prosecution may be conducted in good faith and it does not carry the matter much further than that. On the other hand, the important question is whether the issues in the criminal case are likely to be included in the issues in the civil suit and whether in that case there is a risk of a conflict of jurisdiction. Where the civil suit is ripe for hearing the ends of justice will not suffer by postponement of the prosecution in the Criminal Court—Srihsson, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 182, 159 I.C. 964, 37 Cr.L.J. 187, 1935 Cr.C. 1217, following J. M. Lucas v. Assignee of Bengal, supra, and distinguishing Gopal Chandra, 33 C.W.N. 969, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 563, 1929 Cr.C. 202, 121 I.C. 308; Jehangir Pestoji v. Framji, 30 Bom.L.R. 962, 29 Cr.L.J. 1053, 112 I.C. 477 and Chitrala v. Natu Kula, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 778, 104 I.C. 252, 28 Cr.L.J. 812, 50 Mad. 839.

Although, generally speaking, it is not desirable that civil and criminal litigation between the same parties on substantially the same facts should go on simultaneously, the mere fact that a civil case is pending is not by itself a sufficient ground for staying criminal proceedings. The defendant in a civil suit ought not to be allowed to prejudice the trial of such suit by launching and proceeding with a criminal prosecution on the same facts against the plaintiff and his witness. If there are reasons to believe that they had been launched with that object the Court should generally stay criminal proceedings. Conversely, if the Court has reason to believe that a civil suit had been launched with the object of prejudicing criminal proceedings, the Court should not be likely to stay the latter, though the Court should, if necessary, stay the civil suit. In all such cases one of the matters which the Court has to consider is whether the object of the criminal proceedings is to prejudice the trial of the civil suit or to use them as a lever to coerce the accused into a compromise of the civil suit, and in that connection the question whether the criminal complaint or the civil suit was instituted first is always important. The Courts have frequently drawn a distinction between public and private prosecutions and indicated that stronger reasons for staying proceedings should be required in the case of the former than in the case of the latter. But this is not the only test nor is priority in time necessarily conclusive. There is no hard and fast rule in the matter. The Court has to consider the circumstances of each particular case and decide on grounds of justice and expediency whether it is proper that the criminal proceedings should be stayed, or, it may be, that the civil proceedings should be stayed or that both should be allowed to take their course—Louis Phillip Dias v. Mahadev Barik Raut, 35 Cr.L.J. 311 (312), 147 I.C. 230, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 485, 1933 Cr.C. 1589, 58 Bom. 49, 35 Bom.L.R. 1054; Rewatmal v. Sajanmal, 36 Cr.L.J. 94, 152 I.C. 382, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 143, 1934 Cr.C. 1150; Falz Muhammad v. Abbas Jafferati, 36 Cr.L.J. 1350, 158 I.C. 256, 1935 Cr.C. 950, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 187; Ramchandra Babaji Gujjar, 34 Cr.L.J. 900, 145 I.C. 161, 35 Bom.L.R. 384, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 307, 1933 Cr.C. 891.

When it is not known when the suit instituted will be disposed of and when the judgment is given there may be an appeal and even a second appeal, it is undesirable that the complaint should remain undisposed of till the Civil Court has pronounced on the question of title—Dinalshah, 35 Cr.L.J. 517, 147 I.C. 856, 27 S.L.R. 219, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 358, 33 Cr.C. 1340.

When the genuineness of a document, which was the subject of the prosecution, was a question at issue in a civil suit which was brought by the same person who instituted the criminal proceedings, held that the criminal proceedings ought to be stayed because it depended on the prosecutor to have the civil suit determined without delay, and then to take such criminal proceedings as he thought proper—Shashi Bhusan, 38 Cal. 106.

Where the complaint and the civil suit were filed by the same person on the same date and the dispute between the parties in the two matters was practically identical, held that the Civil Court having full seisin of the matter, it was desirable that the Criminal Court should stay its hands—Gopeshwar, 10 C.W.N. ccx.

In Bakeshar Nath v. Ratan Chand, 34 Cr.L.J. 96, 141 I.C. 66, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 61, 33 P.L.R. 1045, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 37, 1933 Cr.C. 117, the Lahore High Court held that the Magistrate was justified in holding that all the prosecution evidence should be recorded before the question of staying the criminal case could be considered. Where a receipt filed in a civil suit was found to be a false one and a complaint was made under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., for prosecution of the party producing it, the same High Court directed the Magistrate to proceed with the hearing of the complaint but not to pass final orders in the case till the civil appeal decided—Sochet Singh, 32 Cr.L.J. 584, 130 I.C. 651, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 331, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 49, 1931 Cr.C. 113, 32 P.L.R. 303. Where a party in a civil suit instituted a criminal case under sec. 500, I. P. C., in respect of certain statements made in an affidavit filed by the other party in the civil suit, held that it was highly expedient that the hearing of the complaint should not proceed until the disposal of the suit and of any application which may follow for the prosecution of the other party for perjury—Katimal v. Kissumal, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 81, 156 I.C. 219, 35 Cr.L.J. 881, 1935 Cr.C. 367.

Where a civil suit was brought on a handnote and after its institution the complainant presented a complaint to the effect that he had gone to the accused (plaintiff of the suit), but the accused had failed to return the pro-note and therefore he had been cheated, criminal proceedings were stayed by the order of the High Court in order that the Civil Court should first decide on the genuineness of the plea of payment and refusal to return the handnote—Banambar Chhotra v. Nata Behara, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 193, 84 I.C. 350, 26 Cr.L.J. 286, 6 P.L.T. 348. Similarly, where the accused instituted a suit on a handnote against the complainant who, after the service of summons of the civil suit on him, lodged a complaint against the accused on the allegation that the accused had forcibly taken his thumb impression on a blank paper rather less than two months before the date of the complaint, the High Court stayed criminal proceedings pending the disposal of the civil suit—Molhu Rai v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 8, 38 Cr.L.J. 264, 166 I.C. 692, 9 R.P. 336, 3 B.R. 215.

The trial of a case under sec. 212, I. P. C., on the allegation that the accused harboured certain persons accused of certain offences should be stayed until the case relating to the main offences, alleged to have been committed by the persons harboured, is finally disposed of—Palani Goundan v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 21.

Who can order stay of proceedings:—There is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code which gives District Magistrate power to stay proceedings in a Criminal Court subordinate to him—Jagannath v. Rajagopala Chari, 33 Cr.L.J. 147 (151), 135 I.C. 513, 12 P.L.T. 671, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 411, 1931 Cr.C. 999, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 33, following Krishna v. Seshasubramania, 76 I.C. 869, 1923 M.W.N. 251, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 688, 25 Cr.L.J. 277 and dissenting from Nambia v. Sudalaimuthu, 76 I.C. 872, 1923 M.W.N. 276, 17 M.L.W. 570, 32 M.L.T. 191, 44 M.L.J. 642, A.I.R. 1923 Mad 595, 25 Cr.L.J. 280.

990. Costs of adjournment:—The words "on such terms as it thinks fit" empower the Criminal Courts to grant an adjournment conditionally on payment of the costs of adjournment—Sannasi Kudumban v. Sivasubramani, 40 Mad 1130; Shuldham, 1904 P.R. 20; Raghunandan v. Ramadin, 2 P.L.W. 218, 19 Cr.L.J. 6. This section clearly entitles a Court to award costs of adjournment to a party who has been put to unnecessary expenses by an adjournment on the application of the other party. A judicious exercise of this power would have the effect of preventing many useless adjournments—Mathura Prosad v. Basant, 28 All. 207. Where the accused asks for an adjournment to which he is not entitled, the Court may make an order of adjournment conditionally on his paying the costs of the other side—Sew Prasad v. Corporation of 9 C.W.N. 18. No doubt the Criminal Courts are empowered to order an he asks for adjournment, to pay costs to the complainant, but this power should not be exercised in such a manner as to place obstacle in the way of the accused properly defending himself—Ishar Singh v. Shama Dusadh, 38 Cr.L.J. 484 (486), 167 I.C. 881, 17 P.L.T. 627, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 131, 3 B.R. 379, 9 R.P. 449.

It is improper to direct the accused to pay the costs of adjournment when he applies under sec. 526 for a transfer, because an adjournment is usually granted in such a case and the accused is entitled to it—Sorabji v. Erachshaw, 56 Bom. 536, 1932 Cr.C. 598 (601), Ind. Rul. 1932 Bom. 509, 139 I.C. 577, 33 Cr.L.J. 802, 34 Bom.L.R. 1106, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 470; Fatta, 1911 P.W.R. 8; Abdul Rahiman, 44 I.C. 342, 19 Cr.L.J. 326, 20 Bom.L.R. 124, 42 Bom. 254; Salek Chand v. Emp., A.I.R. 1936 All. 851, 1936 A.L.J. 1123, 38 Cr.L.J. 142, 166 I.C. 198, 1936 A.L.R. 1015, 1936 Cr.C. 1110, I.L.R. 1937 All. 161, 9 R.A. 369. But it has always been held that sec. 344, Cr. P. C., does justify an order for costs. It was enacted in the year 1932 that nothing contained in sub-sec. 8 or sub-sec. 9 of sec. 526, Cr. P. C., should restrict the powers of a Court under sec. 344; therefore, nothing in those sub-sections can restrict the power of a Court to pass an order for costs under sec. 344. A Court cannot, of course, pass a conditional order of adjournment because it has to pass such an order, but it may, when passing its order for adjournment, direct that the party whose application has necessitated adjournment shall pay costs of the opposite party—Ram Rakshpal v. Ram Nath, 39 Cr.L.J. 352, 173 I.C. 385, A.I.R. 1938 All. 112, 1937 A.L.J. 1356, 1938 A.L.R. 133, 10 R.A. 481, I.L.R. 1938 All. 233, 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1226, 1938 A.Cr.C. 4, distinguishing Salek Chand v. Emp., supra, on the ground that it laid down merely that a conditional order for an adjournment under sec. 526 was not justifiable as a Magistrate was bound to adjourn under sub-sec. 8 of that section. It may be noted that the above mentioned cases of the Bombay High Court and the Punjab Chief Court were decided before the amendment of sec. 526 in 1932.

An order requiring the accused to pay the costs of an adjournment is one which is left to the discretion of the Magistrate, and the High Court will not interfere with such an order if not found to be unreasonable—Sorabji v. Erachshaw, 56 Bom. 536, 34 Bom.L.R. 1106, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 470, 139 I.C. 577, 33 Cr.L.J. 802, 1932 Cr.C. 598 (599). An order for costs will be made only in those cases where the circumstances are exceptional and where for some reason or other the ordinary everyday method of conducting criminal cases must be departed from—Abdul Rahiman, 42 Bom. 254, 20 Bom.L.R. 124, 19 Cr.L.J. 326, 44 I.C. 342. No order for costs should be made where the adjournment is inevitable and there is no other alternative. Thus, where the accused person being absent, the Court cannot proceed with the case, and is bound to adjourn the hearing, it would be entirely opposed to the spirit of this section if the Magistrate under such circumstances passes orders awarding the costs of adjournment against the accused—Browne v. Chandra Singh, 6 P.R. 1906, 4 Cr.L.J. 78; Beedha, 20 A.L.J. 280, 23 Cr.L.J. 243; Gulab v. Inder, 36 Cr.L.J. 101, 152 I.C. 145, 36 P.L.R. 74, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 441, 1934 Cr.C. 669. It is competent to a Magistrate to award costs of the adjournment which is granted on the present occasion, but he cannot award the costs of the adjournment which was granted on previous occasions without any conditions—Sorabji v. Erachshaw, supra.

This section does not apply to proceedings in appeal, and therefore an Appellate Court's order requiring the appellant, who has applied for an adjournment of the appeal, to pay costs of adjournment is improper and ultra vires—Suraj Bhan, 29 P.R. 1919, 21 Cr.L.J. 201, 54 I.C. 985; Rajanna, 1933 M.W.N. 878.

The provisions of this section do not apply to proceedings in revision. So where in a revision application to set aside an order discharging certain accused persons the Sessions Judge granted an adjournment on condition that the applicant should deposit the fee of the Special Public Prosecutor within a week, held that the order must be set aside—Jethanand Thakardas v. Tahilram, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 235, 38 Cr.L.J. 119, 165 I.C. 993, 9 R.S. 115, 30 S.L.R. 357, 1936 Cr.C. 1091.

Who can be ordered to pay costs :—The costs are to be paid by the party applying for the adjournment. Where a criminal case is taken up on a Police charge-sheet filed on information given by a private person and such person engages a Vakil and moves the Court for an adjournment owing to the absence of the Vakil, held that an order for costs can be validly made against that person on granting the adjournment prayed for, even though he may not be a complainant under sec. 200, since an informant is a person recognised in the Code as initiating criminal proceedings as much as a complainant acting under sec. 190—Sannasi Kurumban v Sivasubramania, 40 Mad. 1130, 33 M.L.J. 366. But where the prosecution is wholly conducted by the Police and the adjournment is asked for only for the convenience of the Police, the complainant cannot be ordered to bear the costs of the adjournment—Laxman Natha, 24 Bom.L.R. 380, 23 Cr.L.J. 338, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 239. If an adjournment takes place for which the complainant is solely to blame, then of course an order can be made that the complainant should pay any costs which may have been incurred by the accused for the adjournment—Laxman Natha, supra.

The complainant in a proceeding under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., has no duty to accompany the Court process-server to secure service of summons upon the opposite party. The Court cannot award costs against the complainant under this section for his failure to accompany the process-server—Kazam Khan, 35 Cr.L.J. 457, 147 I.C. 675, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 720, 1933 Cr.C. 941.

991. Remand :—From the language of sub-section (1) it appears that where the Magistrate directs a postponement, he has unfettered discretion to remand the accused to custody. But there must be reasonable cause for the remand, just as there must be reasonable cause for postponement or adjournment. The Explanation describes only one type of reasonable cause for remand, but there may be cases in which there is a reasonable cause for a remand where the circumstances are not those set out in the Explanation. Thus, where the accused was arrested in connection with an Arms Conspiracy case, and in a search his name appeared in certain manuscripts and correspondences, in conjunction with the name of a dangerous revolutionary, with whom he was very intimate, held that the order remanding him to custody was proper—Sundar Ram, 37 C.W.N. 683 (685), 146 I.C. 167, 34 Cr.L.J. 1194, 1933 Cr.C. 1254, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 752. When the accused is at first brought before a Magistrate and remand is desired, it is not necessary to go fully into the charge; it is ordinarily sufficient to show by the evidence of a Police officer that they believe that the accused is concerned in the commission of an offence; and on such proof the accused will be remanded to custody. If the accused is again brought up after a remand, and further remand is asked for, some direct evidence of the guilt of the accused should be required to justify the Magistrate in ordering for further remand; and with each remand the necessity for the production of evidence of guilt becomes stronger—Ponnusami, 6 Mad. 69, Jamini, 36 Cal. 174; Ahmad Ali, 11 N.L.R. 162, 16 Cr.L.J. 705.

The Explanation says that the Magistrate can remand the accused, if sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by such remand—Sooda, 1931 A.L.J. 617, 32 Cr.L.J. 1045 (1049), 133 I.C. 617, 1931 Cr.C. 969, A.I.R. 1931 All. 617; Narendra Lal Khan, 36 Cal. 166 (171). Where evidence was available, but it appeared necessary to the Magistrate to defer the examination of witnesses in order that further evidence might be produced, so that the inquiry when commenced might be continuous, held that the remand of the accused in such a case was justified—Manikam, 6 Mad. 53. But a Magistrate is not justified in postponing an inquiry and remanding the accused when there is no evidence at all which can be the foundation of a charge, and merely on the expectation that after some time on some inquiry being made some evidence may be obtained—Muthoora v. Heera, 17 W.R. 55. Where the accused person had already made a confession and had produced an article stolen from a person, and there was ample evidence before the Magistrate, it was held that the

he asks for adjournment, to pay costs to the complainant, but this power should not be exercised in such a manner as to place obstacle in the way of the accused properly defending himself—Ishar Singh v. Shama Dusatdh, 38 Cr.L.J. 484 (486), 167 I.C. 881, 17 P.L.T. 627, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 131, 3 B.R. 379, 9 R.P. 449.

It is improper to direct the accused to pay the costs of adjournment when he applies under sec. 526 for a transfer, because an adjournment is usually granted in such a case and the accused is entitled to it—Sorabji v. Erachshaw, 56 Bom. 536, 1932 Cr.C. 598 (601), Ind. Rul. 1932 Bom. 509, 139 I.C. 577, 33 Cr.L.J. 802, 34 Bom.L.R. 1106, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 470; Fatta, 1911 P.W.R. 8; Abdul Rahiman, 44 I.C. 342, 19 Cr.L.J. 326, 20 Bom.L.R. 124, 42 Bom. 254; Salek Chand v. Emp., A.I.R. 1936 All. 851, 1936 A.L.J. 1123, 38 Cr.L.J. 142, 166 I.C. 198, 1936 A.L.R. 1015, 1936 Cr.C. 1110, I.L.R. 1937 All. 161, 9 R.A. 369. But it has always been held that sec. 344, Cr. P. (H.C.) 1226, 1938 A.Cr.C. 4, distinguishing Salek Chand v. Emp., supra, on the ground that it laid down merely that a conditional order for an adjournment under sec. 526 was not justifiable as a Magistrate was bound to adjourn under sub-sec. 8 of that section. An order for costs will be made only in those cases where the circumstances are exceptional and where for some reason or other the ordinary everyday method of conducting criminal cases must be departed from—Abdul Rahiman, 42 Bom. 254, 20 Bom.L.R. 124, 19 Cr.L.J. 326, 44 I.C. 342. It is competent to a Magistrate to award costs of the adjournment which is granted on the present occasion, but he cannot award the costs of the adjournment which was granted on previous occasions without any conditions—*Sorabji v. The Explanation says that the Magistrate can remand the accused, if sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence, and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by such remand—Sooda, 1931 A.L.J. 617, 32 Cr.L.J. 1045 (1049), 133 I.C. 617, 1931 Cr.C. 969, A.I.R. 1931 All. 617; Narendra Lal Khan, 36 Cal 166 (171). Where evidence was available, but it appeared necessary to the Magistrate to defer the examination of witnesses in order that further evidence might be produced, so that the inquiry when commenced might be continuous, held that the remand of the accused in such a case was justified—Manikam, 6 Mad 53. But a Magistrate is not justified in postponing an inquiry and remanding the accused when there is no evidence at all which can be the foundation of a charge, and merely on the expectation that after some time on some inquiry being made some evidence may be obtained—Muthoora v. Heera, 17 W.R. 55. Where the accused person had already made a confession and had produced an article stolen from a person, and there was ample evidence before the Magistrate, it was held that the remand of the accused in order to get from him a confessional statement is most improper—Anonymous, 2 Weir 414.

Remands to custody should not ordinarily be ordered under this section without first recording some evidence to show that good grounds exist for believing that the accused has committed a non-bailable offence—Ahmed Ali, 11 N.L.R. 162; if the offence is bailable the accused should be admitted to bail and not remanded to custody—Raghunandan, 8 C.W.N. 779.

An order of remand cannot be passed in the absence of the accused. To remand is to re-commit to custody. The commitment requires the presence of the accused; the re-commitment also requires his presence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 409.

Remand to police custody :—The Magistrate is to remand an accused person to jail, but not to Police custody. See Note 986 above.

Period of detention :—Fifteen days is the longest period for which an accused person may be remanded at a time. See the proviso. An accused person has the right to have the evidence against him recorded as early a period as possible, and the fact that there is or may be a great deal of evidence forthcoming is not a sufficient ground for detention for an inordinate period—Manikam, 6 Mad. 63. But it is very difficult for the Court to set down a definite time limit. In one case, detention of six weeks was held to be unreasonably long—Narendra Lal Khan, 36 Cal. 166 (172), 13 C.W.N. 43. In another case, a period of seven months was not held to be unreasonably long, judging from the circumstances of the case—Sooba, 1931 A.L.J. 617, 32 Cr.L.J. 1045 (1048).

345. (1) The offences punishable under the sections of the Indian Penal Code specified in the first two columns of the table next following may be compounded by the persons mentioned in the third column of that table:—

Offence.	Sections of Ind an Penal Code applicable.	Persons by whom offence may be compounded.
Uttering words, etc., with deliberate intent to wound the religious feelings of any person.	298	The person whose religious feelings are intended to be wounded.
Causing hurt	323, 334	The person to whom the hurt is caused
Wrongfully restraining or confining any person.	341, 342	The person restrained or confined.

Cheating a person whose interest the offender was bound, by law or by legal contract to protect.	418	Ditto.
	419	Ditto.
	420	Ditto.

Offence.	Sections of Indian Penal Code applicable.	Persons by whom offence may be compounded.
Mischief by injury to work of irrigation by wrongfully diverting water when the only loss or damage caused is loss or damage to a private person	430	The person to whom the loss or damage is caused.
House-trespass to commit an offence (other than theft) punishable with imprisonment.	451	The person in possession of the house trespassed upon.
Using a false trade or property mark.	482	The person to whom loss or injury is caused by such use.
Counterfeiting a trade or property mark used by another.	483	The person whose trade or property mark is counterfeited.
Knowing, selling, or exposing or possessing for sale or for trade or manufacturing purpose goods marked with a counterfeit trade or property mark.	486	Ditto.
Marrying again during the lifetime of a husband or wife.	494	The husband or wife of the person so marrying.
Uttering words or sounds or making gestures or exhibiting any object intending to insult the modesty of a woman or intruding upon the privacy of a woman.	509	The woman whom it is intended to insult or whose privacy is intruded upon.

(3) When any offence is compoundable under this section, the abetment of such offence or an attempt to commit such offence (when such attempt is itself an offence) may be compounded in like manner.

(4) When the person who would otherwise be competent to compound an offence under this section is under the age of eighteen years or is an idiot or lunatic, any person competent to contract on his behalf may, with the permission of the Court, compound such offence.

(5) When the accused has been committed for trial or when he has been convicted and an appeal is pending, no composition for the offence shall be allowed without the leave of the Court to which he is committed, or, as the case may be, before which the appeal is to be heard.

(5A) A High Court acting in the exercise of its powers of revision under section 439 may allow any person to compound any offence which he is competent to compound under this section.

(6) The composition of an offence under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused with whom the offence has been compounded.

(7) No offence shall be compounded except as provided by this section.

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 90 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923.

992. Withdrawal and composition:—A withdrawal (Sec 248) must be by intimation to the Magistrate holding the trial, whereas in many cases composition can be effected without the permission of the Court. A withdrawal is permissible in a summons case, whereas most of the compoundable cases are warrant cases. A withdrawal is the result of act of one party only, namely, the complainant, without the consent of the accused, whereas a composition presupposes an arrangement between both parties and implies a consent of the accused—Murray, 21 Cal 103; Bayan Ali, 20 C.W.N. 1209. Permission to withdraw can be given only to the complainant, whereas the right to compound an offence does not always belong to the complainant—Chellum v Ramaswami, 14 Mad 379. On the withdrawal of the complaint the Magistrate can award compensation to the accused (Himmat v. Baktawar, 24 P.R. 1883), but compensation cannot be awarded when a case is compounded—Khushali, 19 P.R. 1888.

A Magistrate has the option to permit the complainant to withdraw or not; but if the offence is compoundable without the leave of the Court, and a petition of compromise is put in, the Magistrate is bound to give effect to it. Whether a petition (e.g., a petition praying that the case be struck off the file) is one of withdrawal or compromise is to be judged from the fact whether the accused consented to it or not. Where it appeared that the accused had never consented to the compromise of the case, the petition was not a petition of compromise under this section, but one of withdrawal, and the Magistrate's refusal to permit withdrawal, and the subsequent proceeding resulting in the trial and conviction of the accused were not illegal—Bayan Ali, 20 C.W.N. 1209, 18 Cr.L.J. 107.

A Railway guard abused and assaulted a passenger, whereupon the latter made a complaint to the police, who instituted a case against the accused. A few days later, the accused offered an apology to the complainant, who thereupon gave a letter to the accused in which he wrote "Mr. John (the accused) came to me and offered an unconditional apology. I beg to withdraw the case against him." This letter was produced by the accused in Court. The Magistrate treated the letter as a withdrawal and not as a compromise, and as withdrawal could only be made in Court by intimation to the Magistrate, he treated the withdrawal as invalid and proceeded with the trial and convicted the accused—Held that the Magistrate was misled by the word 'withdraw' used in the letter; that the case was one of compromise and not of withdrawal, because a withdrawal could be made only by the prosecuting authority (police) in this case, and that the offence having been compounded, the accused must be acquitted—John, 45 All 145 (146, 148), 24 Cr.L.J. 758.

993. Requisites of composition:—In order to amount to a composition, the arrangement must be one by which the parties have settled their differences and not a mere arrangement to settle the disputes in future as the result of some action either by themselves or by third parties. Therefore where the parties signed a muchilika referring their dispute to arbitrators but no arbitration took place and no award was passed, held that the mere signing of the muchilika did not amount to a composition of the offence—Ramalinga v. Varadarajulu, 49 M.L.J. 544, 22 L.W. 390, 26 Cr.L.J. 1594, 90 I.C. 666, 1925 M.W.N. 753, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1211. A mere agreement between the parties to refer the case to arbitration is not a final settlement of the dispute and does not amount to a composition. Where the parties filed a petition of compromise agreeing to be bound by the decision of arbitrators named therein and asked for an adjournment for settlement of their disputes, but after the arbitrators made the award, the complainant refused to abide by that award, held that there was no composition and the Magistrate could proceed with the trial—Shish Chandra v. Abani Nath, 42 C.L.J. 139, 26 Cr.L.J. 1584, 90 I.C. 544, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 266.

Although a composition also signifies that the person against whom the offence has been committed has received some gratification (whether of a pecuniary character or otherwise) as an inducement for his desiring to abstain from a prosecution (Murray, 21 Cal 103), still the passing of such consideration or gratification is not absolutely necessary to effect a valid composition—Hidayat, 1896 P.R. 9. And it is not necessary that the consideration should be of a monetary character—Mahomed Kani v. Pattani, 39 Mad. 946. An apology is a sufficient consideration in cases of defamation or abuse—John, 45 All. 145 (146). If the matter is settled by respectable persons and a compromise entered into, the Court is not concerned to inquire into the nature or value of the consideration; and if the complainant considers that his grievance is redressed by the fact of respectable persons intervening, even though he may not have received any money payment or even a direct apology from the accused, the complainant is at full liberty to compound the prosecution—Lilaram, 2 S.L.R. 16, 10 Cr.L.J. 228.

To constitute a valid composition, it must appear that the parties were free from influence of any kind, and were fully aware of their respective rights—Murray, 21 Cal 103. If the consent of a party is obtained by threat and coercion, there is no valid composition—Hanmant, 31 Bom.L.R. 789, 1929 Cr.C. 322 (323), A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 375.

The offence must be compoundable:—Before allowing a composition, it is the duty of the Magistrate to find upon the evidence that a compoundable offence has been committed. If the evidence disclosed a non-compoundable offence, the Magistrate, upon a petition of compromise, cannot treat the case as a compoundable one, and allow composition and acquit the accused—Ranchhod, 37 Bom. 369; Asmal, 4 Bom.L.R. 718; Guru Prosad v. Ajodhyanath, 20 Cr.L.J. 552 (Pat.). It is contrary to public policy to compound a non-compoundable offence (e.g., criminal breach of trust) and any agreement to that effect is wholly void in law—Majibar v. Muktashed, 40 Cal. 113 (118). The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to allow composition of a non-compoundable offence on the ground that it would be better for the complainant to compromise and that the accused also desires to compromise, and that it is probable that the case might in the end turn out to be a compoundable offence—Hira Singh, 11 P.R. 1907, 6 Cr.L.J. 336. The composition of the offence of trespass cannot have the effect of annulling the object of the unlawful assembly and has not the effect in law of compounding the offence of being members of the unlawful assembly whose common object was the commission of the offence of trespass—Matti Venkanna, 46 Mad. 257. An acquittal of an offence under sec. 325, I. P. C., constitutes no bar to the subsequent trial of the accused on a charge under sec. 147, I. P. Code. If the circumstances require it, the Magistrate can discharge the accused in respect of the accusation under sec. 147, I. P. Code—Jaruali, 26 Cr.L.J. 686, 86 I.C. 62, 26 P.L.R. 35, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 464.

The question of a case being compoundable or not must be decided with reference to the state of the facts existing at the date of the application to compound. It is not possible for a Court to see what the ultimate result of the case will be—Rani v. Jawanti, 26 Cr.L.J. 1428, 89 I.C. 900, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 395.

994. When offence can be compounded:—A case may be compounded at any time before the sentence is pronounced; therefore, a petition of compromise, filed by the parties when the judgment was actually being written should be accepted—Aslam, 45 Cal. 816, 22 C.W.N. 744, 23 C.L.J. 261, 19 Cr.L.J. 752. See also Muhammad Ali, 29 Cr.L.J. 1058, 112 I.C. 562.

An offence falling under sub-section (1), i.e., an offence for the composition of which no permission of the Court is necessary, can be compounded even before a charge of the offence is laid in Court by the person injured. An offence is complete when the acts constituting it have been committed, apart from the question whether a charge or complaint has been laid before the Court or not; and there is nothing in this section to suggest that a composition of an offence to be valid must be effected only after the accused is brought before the Court. A composition made to prevent a case coming into Court is just as much a lawful composition under this section as one made after the case has come into Court—Kumarasami v. Kuppusami, 41 Mad. 685 (687), 19 Cr.L.J. 359; Mrs. Torpey, 49 All. 848, 28 Cr.L.J. 495 (496).

A Magistrate cannot allow composition after the records of the case have been called for by the High Court under sec. 435 with a view to transfer the case. When the records of the case were called for by the High Court, the case was no longer on the file of the Magistrate and his jurisdiction was suspended. But the parties may compound the offence before the Magistrate to whom the case may be transferred by the High Court—Maruti, 49 Bom. 533, 27 Bom.L.R. 350, 26 Cr.L.J. 996

995. Proof:—Although the provisions of the Contract Act may not apply, the proof of the arrangement must be similar to that which the Court requires for the proof of any agreement which is in issue—Murray, 21 Cal 103. Before a composition can be allowed the Court must be satisfied that the composition is legal and valid in law (i.e., not obtained by threat and coercion by the accused)—Hanmant, 31 Cr.L.J. 553, 122 I.C. 118, 31 Bom.L.R. 789, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 375. The burden of proving that the offence has been validly compounded lies upon the accused—Murray, supra. Where an accused person alleges that an offence with which he is charged has been compounded, the onus is on him to show that there is a real and valid composition with the person against whom the offence is committed—Dajaba, 52 Bom. 512, 29 Bom.L.R. 718, 28 Cr.L.J. 581, 102 I.C. 549, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 410.

Proof as to factum of composition—In case of an offence falling under sub-sec. (1), i.e. an offence compoundable without the permission of Court, if one party alleges that the case has been compromised (outside the Court), and the other resiles from the compromise and denies the same, it is competent to the Court, before which the case is pending, to inquire and take evidence concerning the factum of the alleged compromise, and to decide whether a compromise has in fact been arrived at or not; and if it finds that there has been a valid composition, it should pass an order of acquittal—Mahomed v. Pattani, 39 Mad. 946; Kumarasami v. Kuppusami, 41 Mad. 685 (686). It is the obvious duty of the Magistrate to satisfy himself whether the case was compounded or not; and if the Magistrate finds on inquiry that the case has not been compounded he must proceed with the trial—Abdul Jabar, 25 S.L.R. 341, 33 Cr.L.J. 109, 135 I.C. 271, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 7, Ind. Rul. 1932 Sind 31, 1932 Cr.C. 39. It is not possible for any Court to lay down any hard and fast rule as to what the nature and the quantum of the inquiry should be. The inquiry should be such as would enable a Court to decide upon the allegation of the compromise—Mahades, A.I.R. 1934 All. 1025 (1026), 36 Cr.L.J. 328, 153 I.C. 407, 1934 A.L.J. 1061, 1934 Cr.C. 1335. But in cases of offences covered by sub-section (2) which can be compounded only with the permission of the Court, any compromise arrived at by the parties outside the Court is of no legal effect and cannot be recognized by any Court dealing with the offence. Consequently, the Court is not bound (not competent) to order any inquiry into the factum of a compromise alleged by one of the parties and denied by the other—Naurang v. Kidar Nath, 9 Lah. 400, 29 Cr.L.J. 585 (587). See Note 998.

996. Magistrate when bound to allow composition:—If the offence falls under sub-sec. (1), it is compoundable irrespective of the permission of the Court, and so if a petition of compromise is put in, the Court is bound to allow composition and cannot refuse to do so—Ram Gopal, 1886 A.W.N. 167. In a case of such offence, if the composition is proved, the Magistrate must give effect to it and cannot proceed with the trial—Mulo, 6 S.L.R. 284, 14 Cr.L.J. 292. As soon as the parties have arrived at a compromise of an offence falling under sub-sec. (1), the Magistrate has nothing more to do except to record a judgment of acquittal—Naurang v. Kidar, 9 Lah. 400, 29 Cr.L.J. 585 (587). He is not at liberty to call upon the parties to adduce further evidence that the case has been compounded—Ganakrishna, 16 Bom.L.R. 939, 16 Cr.L.J. 88, 26 I.C. 1000; or to fix a date for verification of the compromise—Jhangtoo, A.I.R. 1930 All. 409, 52 All. 254, 1930 A.L.J. 281, 1930 Cr.C. 525, 127 I.C. 420, 31 Cr.L.J. 1215. It is his duty to accept the compromise and to dismiss the case and acquit the accused. He is wrong in ordering the petition to be put up on the record—Kusum v. Bechu, 3 C.W.N. 322; Mahomed Ismail v. Faisuddi, 3 C.W.N. 548. Where the complainant and the accused are willing to compromise, a composition cannot be refused on the ground that the master in whose quarrel the servant (complainant) was injured refuses to give his permission—Lala, 17 O.C. 92, 15 Cr.L.J. 567.

If a charge is framed in respect of a compoundable offence, and the proper person files a petition of compromise, the Magistrate cannot alter the charge into one of a non-compoundable offence, to prevent composition. He must give effect to the petition and acquit the accused—Hasta, 1914 P.R. 29, 16 Cr.L.J. 81 (F.B.). If the offence in respect of which the complaint was made be an offence compoundable without the leave of the Court, and a petition of compromise is made, the Magistrate is bound to give effect to the petition and acquit the accused, even though by mistake he had mentioned a non-compoundable offence in the summons served upon the accused—Kadir Akram, 2 P.L.T. 602, 62 I.C. 189, 22 Cr.L.J. 493. Where a person is prosecuted for offences under secs. 323 (compoundable) and 353 (non-compoundable), I. P. Code, and the complainant applies to have the case under sec. 323 struck off, the Magistrate should allow the composition and proceed only in respect of the other offence—Corrie, 1884 A.W.N. 256.

If the offence is compoundable, it may be compromised, even though the case has been sent up by the Police—Nawab Jan, 10 Cal. 551. See also John, 45 All. 145.

997. Who can compound:—An offence can be compounded only by the person specified in this section, although the complaint might have been made by some other person. It is not competent for the complainant in every case to compound an offence. Thus, where A made a complaint for cheating her husband B, it is the person cheated (i.e., B) who can compound the offence, and not A, although the complaint was filed by A. The composition by A will not have the effect of acquitting the accused—Dajiba, 51 Bom. 512, 29 Bom.L.R. 718, 28 Cr.L.J. 581 (582), 102 I.C. 549, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 410. But in a Sind case, where the wife was the person cheated (under sec. 420, I. P. C.), the husband was permitted to compound the case on behalf of his wife—Mahomed Rafiq, 25 S.L.R. 9, 1931 Cr.C. 734 (735). In John, 45 All. 145, the case was started by the police, but the composition was made by the injured person. The offence of hurt can be compounded only by the person to whom the hurt is caused—Lala, 15 A.L.J. 467, 18 Cr.L.J. 729, 40 I.C. 729. The widow or other relations of such person (that person dying in consequence of the hurt) cannot compound—Gangamma, 2 Weir 418; Rahmat, 37 All. 419, 16 Cr.L.J. 589, 13 A.L.J. 630, 30 I.C. 138; Ramzan Bachal, 7 S.L.R. 200, 15 Cr.L.J. 553. Where hurt was caused to three persons, and one of them died subsequently, the remaining two cannot compromise the offence as regards the deceased—Sultan Singh, 31 All. 606, 10 Cr.L.J. 473, 6 A.L.J. 882, 4 I.C. 24. In other words, where there are several complaints, one complainant can compound the offence committed against himself but not the offence committed against others—Shib Chandra v. Rabbani, 27 C.W.N. 168, 24 Cr.L.J. 578, 37 C.L.J. 254, 73 I.C. 322. The offence of wrongful confinement can only be compounded by the person confined. Where, therefore, more than one person was confined and the charge was framed in respect of the confinement of both, there was no jurisdiction in the Court to acquit the accused when only one of them compounded the offence—Khilawansingh, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 72, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 286, 38 Cr.L.J. 331, 166 I.C. 926, 9 R.N. 154.

The offence of defamation can be compounded only by the person defamed, and not by another person aggrieved by the defamation. Thus, where a charge of defamation for imputing unchastity to a woman is instituted on the complaint of the husband, the husband cannot compound the offence—Chotala v. Nathagai, 25 Bom. 151, 2 Bom.L.R. 665. In such a case the wife is the only person who can compound the offence; and she can do so without the consent or even against the will of her husband. But if the defamatory matter was published with the intention of injuring the reputation of both husband and wife, and the husband instituted the complaint, then no one except the husband could compound—Chellum v. Ramaswami, 14 Mad. 379, 1 M.L.J. 242, 2 Weir 230. An offence under sec. 498, I. P. C., can be compounded only by the husband of the woman. Though a complaint of that offence may be made by any person having the care of the woman during her husband's absence (sec. 199), still such person cannot compound the offence, and an acquittal based upon such composition is illegal—Mahabat, 4 Lah L J 488; Harnam v. Sain Das, 24 Cr.L.J. 120, 71 I.C. 248 (Lah.); Mr Alam, 5 Lah.L.J. 183, 23 Cr.L.J. 690, AIR 1922 Lah 177. A charge of criminal trespass can be compounded by the person who is in actual possession of the property trespassed upon; and he (and not the juridical possessor, e.g., the trustee) is the person who can bring the complaint in respect of the offence. "Otherwise, we might have the juridical possessor (e.g., a trustee) prosecuting for criminal trespass, and the actual possessor compounding the offence, a result which could never have been contemplated by the Legislature"—Tok Gyi, 8 L.B.R. 425, 17 Cr.L.J. 378 (379).

A minor cannot compound an offence—Shub Singh, 1891 P.R. 17; but under sub-section (4) it can be compounded by his guardian with the permission of the Court.

998. Permission of Court:—In respect of the offence mentioned in sub-section (1), no permission of the Court is necessary for compromise, and no petition is therefore required to be presented to the Court for its permission—Mahomed Kani v Pallani, 39 Mad. 946; Ram Gopal, 1886 A.W.N. 167. But in respect of the offences mentioned in sub-section (2) the permission of the Court is essential before the case can be validly compounded. The operation of the composition is necessarily suspended until the Court sanctions it—Kumaraswami v. Kuppuswami, 41 Mad. 685 (687), AIR 1919 Mad. 879, 44 I.C. 583, 19 Cr.L.J. 359, 34 M.L.J. 217. In other words, no effect can be given to a compromise as a plea in bar of conviction in cases covered by clause (2) unless the Court has given its sanction. Without the sanction of the Court, the so-called compromise arrived at between the parties out of Court is of no legal effect and cannot be taken cognizance of by any Court dealing with the offence—Naurang v. Kidar Nath, 9 Lah. 400, 29 Cr.L.J. 585 (587). Composition under sec. 345 (1), Cr. P. C., is an act of the parties which requires no permission. Nor is there any language to restrict its completion to any particular time. Under sec. 345 (2), Cr. P. C., there must be a prosecution pending and the permission of the Court must be given. Any act of the parties done before the prosecution has begun and without reference to any Court cannot be a composition under this sub-section, and whatever may be the civil rights to which it may give rise can have no effect on the trial. The Court may refuse to inquire into the factum of composition alleged by one and denied by the other party in such a case under sec. 345 (2), Cr. P. C.—Ponnuswamy Ayyar, AIR 1937 Mad 825, 1937 M.W.N. 864, 46 M.L.W. 289, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 383. Any arrangement entered into between the complainant and the accused before the case came into Court at all is ineffective when the offence is compoundable with the permission of the Court under sec. 345 (2), Cr. P. C.—Harswarup Chaubey v. Emp., AIR 1938 Nag 37, 20 N.L.J. 244, 172 I.C. 89, 39 Cr.L.J. 59. Such permission can be granted only by the Court, and not by a police officer, because the granting of permission to withdraw is a judicial act—Anonymous, Ratanlal 91. The duty of granting the permission is cast upon the Magistrate trying the case, and that duty cannot be assigned either to the District Magistrate or to the police—Partap Singh, 31 P.L.R. 121, 1930 Cr.C. 304, AIR 1930 Lah 272, 127 I.C. 712, 32 Cr.L.J. 20, 15 A.I.Cr.R. 216. See also Subba Rao v. Ahmad Beari, 1932 M.W.N. 1088; Dhara Singh, Ind Rul 1932 Lah. 649; Sultan, 35 Cr.L.J. 1372, 151 I.C. 532, 35 P.L.R. 329, AIR 1935 Lah 226.

In case of offences falling under sub-section (2), it is the duty of the Magistrate to decide whether he will or will not allow a compromise and the responsibility rests entirely with him. If the compromise is made at an early stage, and the offence is not so serious that punishment is absolutely necessary, the Magistrate should exercise his discretion in allowing the composition. Where the Magistrate refused to allow composition without sufficient reason, the High Court in revision allowed it—Sewa Singh, 1922 P.W.R. 7, AIR 1922 Lah. 138, 23 Cr.L.J. 85, 65 I.C. 437. Before allowing composition of an offence, the Magistrate should take into consideration all the circumstances of the case and should bear in mind that such offence is punishable not only for the satisfaction of the injured person but also to protect society by deterring others from committing similar offences. The degree of prevalence of such offence at any particular place or time may fitly be considered in determining whether composition should or should not be allowed—Kanoo Meah, 1 L.B.R. 349. The Magistrate may refuse to allow composition, if it is arrived at a late stage, and some of the offences are non-compoundable—Hanmant, 31 Bom L.R. 789, 1929 Cr.C. 322 (323), A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 375. In cases falling under sub-section (2), if the parties are nearly related to one another and are willing to patch up their quarrels, the Magistrate should not refuse to allow composition—Aminulla, 26 C.W.N. 536, 72 I.C. 344, 35 C.L.J. 353, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 191, 24 Cr.L.J. 355. Where parties are nearly related to one another and succeed in patching up their quarrels, the Magistrate should do what he can to restore peace and good will and should grant permission to compound in such a case—Bhaiyalal, 30 Cr.L.J. 960, 118 I.C. 681, A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 278, Ind. Rul. 1929 Nag. 281, following Aminulla, supra. In such a case the High Court allowed compromise under sub-cl. (5A) of this section—Hakam Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 579, 147 I.C. 1081, 6 R.L. 482, 35 P.L.R. 257, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 317, 1934 Cr.C. 519. Where the accused was charged with two offences, of which one was compoundable with the permission of the Court, and the other a non-compoundable offence, and the Magistrate after examining the complainant issued summons in respect of the compoundable offence only, it was not illegal for him to grant permission for compounding the case—Muhammad Ismail v. Samad, 20 C.W.N. 946 (947).

The accused was put on his trial on a charge of criminal misappropriation as Secretary of a Co-operative Society. With the permission of the Board of Directors of the Co-operative Society a petition was filed before the Magistrate saying that the matter had been satisfactorily settled out of Court to the benefit of parties and praying for leave to compromise the case. Held that the fact that the accused was a clerk in the touzi department of the Collectorate had no bearing upon the question whether the prosecution should proceed or not and that the Magistrate did not soundly exercise his discretion in refusing the leave which was granted by the High Court—Singheswar v. Ali Hasan, 31 Cr.L.J. 607, 124 I.C. 95, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 512, 11 P.L.T. 492.

Under sec. 345 (2), Cr. P. C., an offence may only be compounded with the permission of the Court before which any prosecution for such offence is pending, that is to say, the Court which is in possession of the case. No reference is permitted by any Subordinate Magistrate to a superior Court on the question whether an offence should be compounded or not; it is the Court itself which has to determine the question; a fortiori the Court is not permitted to refer the question to any outside agency. The opinion of the police in a matter which the Magistrate is by law bound to dispose of in his judicial capacity is entirely irrelevant. Where the Magistrate seeks the opinion of the police officers, his action is particularly reprehensible in that it is bound to give rise to the impression that Magistrates are influenced in their decisions by the opinion of the police who investigate the cases which are brought before them—Pratapsingh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 114, 169 I.C. 33, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 183, 38 Cr.L.J. 689; Harprasad, 39 Cr.L.J. 120, 172 I.C. 352, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 39, 10 R.N. 196. Where, however, after receiving the reply of the police the Magistrate hears arguments on both sides, exercises his own judgment and has not been subservient to the opinion of the police, his action in calling upon the opinion of the police is not illegal—Harswarup Chaubey v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 37, 20 N.L.J. 244, 172 I.C. 89, 39 Cr.L.J. 59. The Magistrate has, however, no right to send the record of the proceedings, which are of a judicial character, before him to the Superintendent of Police for taking his opinion. The proper course for him is to ask the Prosecuting Inspector to take his instructions from the District Magistrate, or may be from the Superintendent of Police, as to the attitude of the Crown towards the proposed compromise—Dharichhan Singh v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 460 (461), 180 I.C. 627, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 141, 19 P.L.T. 840.

Under sub-section (5), when an appeal is pending in respect of the offence, it is the Appellate Court alone which can allow the composition; and the permission of the Appellate Court is necessary even in respect of offences which are ordinarily compoundable without the sanction of the Court.

A compromise petition filed after the hearing of the appeal is not one which comes within the provisions of sub-sec. (5)—J. M. Chatterji, 34 Cr.L.J. 926, 145 I.C. 126, A.I.R. 1933 All. 434, 1933 Cr.C. 740, 1933 A.L.J. 1493.

Where it is found that the accused were acquitted by the trial Court of one of the two offences charged against them, the Appellate Court ought not to refuse to allow composition in respect of the other offence, if it is compoundable, even though the occurrence bore more or less serious aspect—Titan v. Chintan, 55 Cal. 1190, 30 Cr.L.J. 484 (485).

Permission by High Court in revision:—The High Court as a Court of Revision can exercise all the powers of an Appellate Court and can grant permission to compound an offence—Ram Piyari, 32 All. 153; Shiboo, 45 All. 17; Nidhan, 1904 P.L.R. 252; Lalla, 17 O.C. 92, 15 Cr.L.J. 567. In the following cases it was laid down that an offence could not be allowed to be compounded when the case came before the High Court in Revision, when the High Court was sitting neither as a Court of Original Jurisdiction nor as a Court of Appeal—Ram Chandra, 37 All. 127; Naqi, 11 A.L.J. 13; Rambaran, 42 All. 474; Harnam, 1918 P.R. 35, 20 Cr.L.J. 87; Akhoy Rameshwar, 43 Cal. 1143, 20 C.W.N. 1071; Audhi, 3 P.L.T. 458, 23 Cr.L.J. 80; Adhar v. Subodh, 18 C.W.N. 1212; Sankar Rangayya v. Sankar Ramayya, 39 Mad. 604. This latter view has now been rendered obsolete by the new sub-section (5A) of this section which expressly gives the High Court the power to allow composition in revision. The High Court may in revision grant permission to compound an offence and acquit the accused, where such permission has been wrongfully withheld by the Appellate Court—Titan v. Chintan, 55 Cal. 1190, 30 Cr.L.J. 484 (485), 115 I.C. 528, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 96, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 384. See also Kumaran, 1933 M.W.N. 245. Sub-clause (5A) of this section does not mean that the Court of Revision should accept a compromise in every case where there has been not only a conviction by the first Court but that conviction has been upheld by the Court of Appeal—Jumo Sher Khan, 36 Cr.L.J. 210, 152 I.C. 412, 28 S.L.R. 109, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 122, 1934 Cr.C. 963.

Composition on Retrial:—When the accused was charged with and convicted of an offence compoundable without the leave of Court, but on appeal the conviction was set aside and a retrial ordered, and the complainant then offered to compound the case, it was held that it was open to the parties to compound the case in the same manner in which it could be compounded before conviction by the Magistrate, and that no permission of the Court was necessary for the composition—Umrai v. Makbulan, 3 A.L.J. 523, 4 Cr.L.J. 35.

Recording reason:—When allowing composition under sub-section (2), the Magistrate should briefly record his reason for granting sanction, so that, if an appeal is preferred, the Appellate Court may be in a position to judge whether the discretion has been properly exercised—Kanoo Meah, 1 L.B.R. 349.

999. Compromise cannot be withdrawn:—When the parties have filed a petition of compromise, they cannot afterwards be allowed to withdraw the petition and to insist upon the case being tried—Mahomed Kani v. Pattani, 39 Mad. 946, 31 I.C. 819, 2 M.L.W. 1200, 18 M.L.T. 602, 16 Cr.L.J. 803, A.I.R. 1916 Mad. 854; Kumarasami v. Kuppusami, 41 Mad. 685 (686), 44 I.C. 583, 34 M.L.J. 217, 7 M.L.W. 274, 23 M.L.T. 240, 19 Cr.L.J. 659, 1918 M.W.N. 493; Kusum v. Bechu, 3 C.W.N. 322; Hem Chandra v. Girindra, 33 C.L.J. 226; Jhangtoo, A.I.R. 1930 All. 409, 52 All. 254, 1930 A.L.J. 281, 1930 Cr.C. 525, 127 I.C. 420, 31 Cr.L.J. 1215, Ind. Rul. 1930 All. 884; Ram Richpal v. Mata Din, 25 Cr.L.J. 810, 81 I.C. 346, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 159. Once a composition has been effected, it must result in immediate acquittal of the accused; it cannot be withdrawn and the Magistrate cannot proceed with the trial—Madari, 32 P.L.R. 293, 32 Cr.L.J. 1034, 133 I.C. 448, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 784, 1931 Cr.C. 642, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 402. A composition arrived at between the parties is complete as soon as it is made, and the accused is entitled to be acquitted, even though one of the parties later on resiles from the compromise—Hem Chandra v. Girindra, 33 C.L.J. 226, 22 Cr.L.J. 301, 60 I.C.

797, A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 403. The Magistrate is in duty bound to order an acquittal on the filing of the compromise petition signed by both parties in Court for an offence for which no leave of the Court is required, and the complainant cannot, by a subsequent withdrawal of the petition before any order is passed on it, insist upon the case being proceeded with—Dharichhan Singh v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 460 (461), 180 I.C. 627, A.I.R. 1939 Pat 141, 19 P.L.T. 840. If it is proved that the parties signed the document and understood its contents, it is incompetent for any party to it to withdraw from it. Since the compromise has the immediate effect of acquittal so as to deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction to try the case, the subsequent withdrawal from it by any party can neither affect the acquittal nor revive the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed with the case—Rambai v. Chandra Kumari Devi, 41 Cr.L.J. 287 (288), 186 I.C. 370, 1940 N.L.J. 25, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 181.

Where the petition of compromise was filed at a stage when the case was being tried as one which was compoundable with the permission of the Court and no orders were passed at the time, held that the complainant could withdraw her petition for compromise, even when the case was found to be a compoundable one and that the accused was not entitled to an acquittal on the basis of the said petition—Rani v. Jaiwanti, 26 Cr.L.J. 1428, 89 I.C. 900, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 395. Where the complainant alleged that the terms of the compromise had not been carried out and claimed that the case should be revived, held that the accused could not be prosecuted any further for the offences which had already been compounded—Sheikh Basiruddi v. Sheikh Khairat Ali, 17 C.W.N. 948.

999A. Sub-sec. (5A):—It is clear from the language of sec. 439, Cr. P. C., read with sec. 345 (5A) of the Code that the High Court can in certain circumstances allow a compromise to be recorded in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction in the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to its knowledge. The language of sec. 439 is very wide and it does not limit the jurisdiction of the High Court to interfere in revision merely in cases in which the High Court has called for the record of a case on the ground of some alleged illegality or impropriety in the order made by an inferior Criminal Court. The High Court is competent to record the compromise having regard to the provisions of sec. 345 (5A), Cr. P. C., even although there is no impropriety in the order of either of the Courts below and although neither the trial Court nor the Court of the Sessions Judge while they were still in seisin of the case rejected any proposal to the effect that the case should be compromised as one of the objects of the Legislature in enacting sub-sec. (5A) of sec. 345, Cr. P. C., was in suitable circumstances to allow the parties in such cases to compromise their disputes even after the cases in which they were concerned had been heard and determined by the Courts competent to try them. But where the proceedings before the Courts below disclose no irregularity or impropriety the exceptional power which has been conferred upon the High Court by sub-sec. (5A) of sec. 345, Cr. P. C., should not ordinarily be used in a case in which the record indicates that the parties made some attempt to compromise their differences while the matter was still before the trial Court and before that Court passed final orders in the case—Baburahi Sardar v. Kala Chand Bepari, A.I.R. 1939 Cal 728, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 567, 41 Cr.L.J. 125, 185 I.C. 177.

Ordinarily the party who seeks to invoke the jurisdiction of the High Court under sub-sec. (5A) of sec. 345, Cr. P. C., must be the person aggrieved by the offence which has been committed and not an accused person or a person who has been convicted in respect of that offence. In any event it would not be competent for the High Court to allow a compromise to be recorded under sub-sec. (5A) of sec. 345, Cr. P. C., unless the aggrieved persons were actually before the High Court and had expressly recorded their consent to such a compromise being recorded—Baburahi Sardar v. Kala Chand Bepari, supra.

1000. Sub-section (6):—Acquittal:—When the petition of composition is put in, the Magistrate's sole remaining duty is to record a formal order of acquittal and to set the accused person at liberty—Hasta, 29 P.R. 1914, 16 Cr.L.J. 81 (82) (F.B.). The Magistrate is bound to acquit the accused; he acts illegally if he proceeds with the trial and convicts the accused—Hasta, supra; Kora Raman v Kandan, 2 Weir 418; John, 45 All 145 (148). Any sentence that he may pass subsequently is illegal, for the composition of an offence has the effect of an acquittal—Corrie, 1884 A.W.N. 256.

If an offence which is non-compoundable (e.g. house-breaking in order to commit theft) is compromised, and the complainant withdraws the complaint, whereupon the Magistrate discharges the accused, the order of discharge does not amount to an acquittal, and does not prevent the revival of the prosecution—Devrama, 1 Bom. 64 (66).

The High Court in revision can set aside an order of acquittal passed on a petition of compromise, if there has been any material irregularity—Ramzan, 7 S.L.R. 200, 15 Cr.L.J. 553.

Compensation can be awarded under sec. 250 only when the Magistrate himself acquits the accused after trial. But a composition of an offence has in itself the effect of acquittal and no trial is held, and therefore no compensation can be awarded where the offence is compounded under this section—Khushali, 1888 P.R. 19; Sangappa, Ratanlal 957. Proceedings under section 250 are inapplicable to a case where the accused person himself has, by an agreement with the prosecutor, arrived at a settlement and been a party to the compounding of the offence—Harkishandas, 10 Bom.L.R. 1056, 9 Cr.L.J. 186.

A composition has the effect of an acquittal and not a discharge, and is therefore a complete bar to the prosecution of the accused for the same offence—Mulo, 6 S.L.R. 284, 14 Cr.L.J. 292; Harnam, 1910 P.L.R. 22, 11 Cr.L.J. 366. The Magistrate cannot after composition institute proceedings against the accused under sec. 437 (now sec. 436)—Unkar, 1884 A.W.N. 13. A composition has the effect of barring not only a prosecution for the same offence, but also for a cognate offence based on the same facts—Asmal, Ratanlal 519, or for an offence involved in the former offence which has been compounded—Shaikh Basiruddin v Shaikh Khairat Ali, 17 C.W.N. 948. But the compounding of an original charge is not a conclusive answer to a charge made against the complainant under sec. 211, I P. Code—Atar Ali, 11 Cal. 79.

Where there are several accused persons, the composition of an offence with one of them has not the effect of acquittal of all the accused persons but only of the particular accused with whom the composition took place—Muthia Naek, 41 Mad. 323; Alibhai, 45 Bom. 346; Anantia, 5 Lah. 239, 81 I.C. 117, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 595, 25 Cr.L.J. 629; Ram Krishen, 1 Lah. 169; Chandan, 19 A.L.J. 374, 61 I.C. 209; Mohna, 7 Lah. 344, 94 I.C. 144, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 424, 2 Lah. Cas. 329, 27 P.L.R. 493, 27 Cr.L.J. 576; Thiimalai v. Elumalai, 1933 M.W.N. 222. This is now made clear by the words "with whom the offence has been compounded" newly added in sub-sec. (6). In Calcutta and Patna cases, it was held that if a compoundable offence was committed by a number of persons, and the complainant compounded the offence with only one of them, the effect of such compromise was to compound the complaint not only in respect of the persons with whom it was actually compounded, but also in respect of the other persons; and the composition operated as an acquittal of all the accused—Chander Kumar, 7 C.W.N. 176; Shyam Behari v. Sagar, 20 Cr.L.J. 824, 52 I.C. 824, 1 P.L.T. 32; Amar Ali, 2 P.L.T. 584; Suraj Kumar, 4 P.L.T. 107. This view is no longer correct.

Where an accused is charged with two offences, and one offence is compounded, the charge for the other offence does not ipso facto lapse, and the accused is not necessarily acquitted in respect of that other offence especially if that other offence refers to a distinct and independent transaction—Kukum Singh, 1930 A.L.J. 83, 30 Cr.L.J. 1149. See also Jarnali, 26 Cr.L.J. 686, 85 I.C. 62, 26 P.L.R. 35, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 464.

The composition effected under this section would be a complete bar to a civil suit for damages—Mulo, 6 S.L.R. 284, 14 Cr.L.J. 292; Sayamma v. Punamchand, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 413, 35 Bom.L.R. 850, 57 Bom. 678, following Basiruddin v. Khairat Ali, 14 Cr.L.J. 458, 20 I.C. 618; or to a forfeiture of the bond for keeping the peace.

absence of independent evidence that a breach of the peace was committed as a result of commission of the offence which was compounded—Chanda Singh v. Emp., 41 Cr L.J. 359, 186 I.C. 642, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 42.

346. (1) If, in the course of an inquiry or a trial before a Magistrate in any district outside the presidency-towns, the evidence appears to him to warrant a presumption that the case is one which should be tried or committed for trial by some other Magistrate in such district, he shall stay proceedings and submit the case, with a brief report explaining its nature, to any Magistrate to whom he is subordinate or to such other Magistrate, having jurisdiction, as the District Magistrate directs.

(2) The Magistrate to whom the case is submitted may, if so empowered, either try the case himself, or refer it to any Magistrate subordinate to him having jurisdiction, or commit the accused for trial.

1001. When Magistrate should proceed under this section:—(1) The application of this section would be necessary if in the course of proceedings before a Magistrate, it should transpire that the offence committed is apparently one which the particular Magistrate is not competent to try, or one in which it appears that he is in some way personally interested (sec. 556) or which he is declared to be otherwise incompetent to deal with (secs 482, 487)—Prinsep.

(2) Proof of previous conviction against a person accused before a Magistrate will justify his taking action under this section—Chandra Dallal, 1894 A.W.N. 200.

(3) When a Magistrate finds that he has no jurisdiction to try a case, he should not discharge the accused, but should proceed under this section—Munisami, 2 Weir 323. If the offence is within his jurisdiction, he should proceed in the ordinary way, and if it is a Sessions case, commit it to the Sessions; he need not submit the case under this section to a superior Magistrate—Amir Khan, 7 C.W.N. 457.

(4) When the evidence discloses circumstances of aggravation, which make the offence one cognizable by a superior tribunal, it becomes the duty of the trying Magistrate to use the proper procedure for sending the case to the higher Court—Gundya, 13 Bom 502. No tribunal can properly clutch jurisdiction by intentionally ignoring the facts which make the offence really cognizable by a higher tribunal—Anonymous, 2 Weir 21 and 2 Weir 421; Ayyan, 24 Mad. 675. Thus, where a theft is accompanied with violence, it becomes a case of robbery, which is beyond the jurisdiction of a second-class Magistrate, and such Magistrate cannot ignore the fact of violence and try the case as one of theft only—Anonymous, 2 Weir 420 (421).

Framing of charge neither necessary nor illegal:—It is not illegal for a Magistrate of the 2nd or 3rd class to frame a charge, even though at the time of framing the charge he intended to submit the case to a superior Magistrate or to the District Magistrate—Nga Po, 1905 U.B.R. (Cr. P. C.) 33, 2 Cr.L.J. 464. On the other hand, if the inferior Magistrate sends the case to the superior Magistrate, without framing a charge, the superior Magistrate cannot send back the case to the inferior Magistrate, with a direction to prepare a charge under a particular section—Fakira, Ratanlal 499.

1002. Sub-section (2)—Power of the superior Magistrate:—The superior Magistrate to whom the case is submitted may either try the case himself or refer it to any subordinate Magistrate, or commit the accused for trial. But he has no power to send the case back to the subordinate Magistrate who submitted the case for an order of committal, because the Sub-Magistrate's jurisdiction had ceased when he submitted the case to the superior Magistrate, and he cannot, therefore, reassume jurisdiction and commit the accused—Hampanna, 45 Mad. 846, 23 Cr.L.J. 710. But the correctness of this decision has been doubted by a recent Full Bench which have decided that sub-section (2) is sufficiently wide to embrace a reference back to the Magistrate who originally submitted the case—Polur Reddi v. Munnusami, 54 Mad. 16, 59 M.L.J. 308, 31 Cr.L.J. 1010 (1012), 1930 M.W.N. 493, 32 M.L.W. 381, 126 I.C. 495, 1930 Cr.C. 961 (F.B.). But the superior Magistrate cannot send the case back to the Magistrate who submitted the case to him, with a direction to try the case himself, although the latter had no power to try the case—Bahman, 27 Cr.L.J. 545, 43 C.L.J. 214, 93 I.C. 1041. If the superior Magistrate tries the case himself, he must try it de novo; he cannot convict the accused on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate who submitted the case; he must hear the evidence afresh. Failure to do so vitiates the whole trial; and the fact that the accused did not want the witnesses to be recalled and consented to rely upon the evidence recorded by the submitting Magistrate does not cure the illegality. The special provisions of sec. 350 do not apply where a case is submitted under this section by a subordinate Magistrate to a superior Magistrate—Muhammad, 1905 P.L.R. 91, 2 Cr.L.J. 369; Ambica, 19 Cr.L.J. 625 (Pat.); Inayat Husain, 1905 P.L.R. 106; Paravada China Venku Naidu, 17 L.W. 247, 24 Cr.L.J. 413, 72 I.C. 525, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 327; Sher Khan, 34 Cr.L.J. 749, 144 I.C. 231, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 191, 1933 Cr.C. 572, 27 S.L.R. 266, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 173; Budhu, 47 C.L.J. 122, 29 Cr.L.J. 464, 55 Cal. 65; Sasthi Gopal Samni v. Haridas Bagdi, 39 Cr.L.J. 606, 175 I.C. 537, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 415, 42 C.W.N. 503, 10 R.C. 799. Altogether apart from that the ordinary rule is that the Magistrate, who tries the case, is to record the evidence and, unless an exception is definitely provided for by some statute, that ordinary provision should prevail—Sasthi Gopal Samni v. Haridas Bagdi, supra. See sub-sec. (2) of sec. 350 and Note 1017.

But if the superior Magistrate, to whom the case is submitted, commits the case to the Sessions, instead of trying it, he need not take the evidence afresh, but can commit the case upon the evidence recorded by the inferior Magistrate—Kamani v. Fakir, 12 C.W.N. 136, 6 Cr.L.J. 429; Sesha, Ratanlal 472; Ram Prosad, 12 N.L.R. 146, 18 Cr.L.J. 57.

347. (1) If in any inquiry before a Magistrate, or in any trial before a Magistrate before signing judgment, it appears to him at any stage of the proceedings that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session or High Court, and if he is empowered to commit for trial, he shall * * * commit the accused under the provisions hereinbefore contained.

(2) If such Magistrate is not empowered to commit for trial, he shall proceed under section 346.

1003. Change:—The words "stop further proceedings and" have been omitted by sec. 91 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 "This amendment is designed to bring sec. 347 into line with section 208"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

Under the old law, there was a conflict of opinion as to the meaning of the words "stop further proceedings." In Durant, Ratanlal 975, In re Sessions Judge, 17 M.L.T. 83, 15 Cr.L.J. 704 and Phanindra, 36 Cal. 48, 12 C.W.N. 1014, a very restricted meaning was assigned to these words, viz., that as soon as the Magistrate considered that the case was one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session, he should at once stop all proceedings and then and there pass an order of commitment to the Sessions, even though neither the witnesses for the prosecution had been cross-examined nor the defence witnesses examined. In other words, the power of a Magistrate to make commitment absence of independent evidence that a breach of the peace was committed as a result of commission of the offence which was compounded—Chanda Singh v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 359, 186 I.C. 642, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 42.

346. (1) If, in the course of an inquiry or a trial before a Magistrate in any district outside the presidency-towns, the evidence appears to him to warrant a presumption that the case is one which should be tried or committed for trial by some other Magistrate in such district, he shall stay proceedings and submit the case, with a brief report explaining its nature, to any Magistrate to whom he is subordinate or to such other Magistrate, having jurisdiction, as the District Magistrate directs.

(2) The Magistrate to whom the case is submitted may, if so empowered, either try the case himself, or refer it to any Magistrate subordinate to him having jurisdiction, or commit the accused for trial.

1001. When Magistrate should proceed under this section:—(1) The application of this section would be necessary if in the course of proceedings before a Magistrate, it should transpire that the offence committed is apparently one which the particular Magistrate is not competent to try, or one in which it appears that he is in some way personally interested (sec. 556) or which he is declared to be otherwise incompetent to deal with (secs. 482, 487)—Prinsep.

(2) Proof of previous conviction against a person accused before a Magistrate will justify his taking action under this section—Chandra Dallal, 1894 A.W.N. 200.

(3) When a Magistrate finds that he has no jurisdiction to try a case, he should not discharge the accused, but should proceed under this section—Munisami, 2 Weir 323. If the offence is within his jurisdiction, he should proceed in the ordinary way, and if it is a Sessions case, commit it to the Sessions; he need not submit the case under this section to a superior Magistrate—Amir Khan, 7 C.W.N. 457.

(4) When the evidence discloses circumstances of aggravation, which make the offence one cognizable by a superior tribunal, it becomes the duty of the trying Magistrate to use the proper procedure for sending the case to the higher Court—Gundya, 13 Bom. 502. No tribunal can properly clutch jurisdiction by intentionally ignoring the facts which make the offence really cognizable by a higher tribunal—Anonymous, 2 Weir 21 and 2 Weir 421; Ayyan, 24 Mad 675. Thus, where a theft is accompanied with violence, it becomes a case of robbery, which is beyond the jurisdiction of a second-class Magistrate, and such Magistrate cannot ignore the fact of violence and try the case as one of theft only—Anonymous, 2 Weir 420 (421).

Framing of charge neither necessary nor illegal:—It is not illegal for a Magistrate of the 2nd or 3rd class to frame a charge, even though at the time of framing the charge he intended to submit the case to a superior Magistrate or to the District Magistrate—Nga Po, 1905 U.B.R. (Cr. P. C.) 33, 2 Cr.L.J. 464. On the other hand, if the inferior Magistrate sends the case to the superior Magistrate, without framing a charge, the superior Magistrate cannot send back the case to the inferior Magistrate, with a direction to prepare a charge under a particular section—Fakira, Ratanlal 499.

1002. Sub-section (2)—Power of the superior Magistrate:—The superior Magistrate to whom the case is submitted may either try the case himself or refer it to any subordinate Magistrate, or commit the accused for trial. But he has no power to send the case back to the subordinate Magistrate who submitted the case for an order of committal, because the Sub-Magistrate's jurisdiction had ceased when he submitted the case to the superior Magistrate, and he cannot, therefore, reassume jurisdiction and commit the accused—Hampanna, 45 Mad. 846, 23 Cr.L.J. 710. But the correctness of this decision has been doubted by a recent Full Bench which have decided that sub-section (2) is sufficiently wide to embrace a reference back to the Magistrate who originally submitted the case—Polur Reddi v. Munnusami, 54 Mad. 16, 59 M.L.J. 308, 31 Cr.L.J. 1010 (1012), 1930 M.W.N. 493, 32 M.L.W. 381, 126 I.C. 495, 1930 Cr.C. 961 (F.B.). But the superior Magistrate cannot send the case back to the Magistrate who submitted the case to him, with a direction to try the case himself, although the latter had no power to try the case—Bahman, 27 Cr.L.J. 545, 43 C.L.J. 214, 93 I.C. 1011. If the superior Magistrate tries the case himself, he must try it de novo; he cannot convict the accused on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate who submitted the case; he must hear the evidence afresh. Failure to do so vitiates the whole trial; and the fact that the accused did not want the witnesses to be recalled and consented to rely upon the evidence recorded by the submitting Magistrate does not cure the illegality. The special provisions of sec. 350 do not apply where a case is submitted under this section by a subordinate Magistrate to a superior Magistrate—Muhammad, 1905 P.L.R. 91, 2 Cr.L.J. 369; Ambica, 19 Cr.L.J. 625 (Pat.); Inayat Husain, 1905 P.L.R. 106; Pararada China Venku Naidu, 17 L.W. 247, 24 Cr.L.J. 413, 72 I.C. 525, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 327; Sher Khan, 34 Cr.L.J. 749, 144 I.C. 231, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 191, 1933 Cr.C. 572, 27 S.L.R. 266, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 173; Budhu, 47 C.L.J. 122, 29 Cr.L.J. 464, 55 Cal 65; Sasthi Gopal Samni v. Haridas Bagdi, 39 Cr.L.J. 606, 175 I.C. 537, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 415, 42 C.W.N. 508, 10 R.C. 799. Altogether apart from that the ordinary rule is that the Magistrate, who tries the case, is to record the evidence and, unless an exception is definitely provided for by some statute, that ordinary provision should prevail—Sasthi Gopal Samni v. Haridas Bagdi, supra. See sub-sec. (2) of sec. 350 and Note 1017.

But if the superior Magistrate, to whom the case is submitted, commits the case to the Sessions, instead of trying it, he need not take the evidence afresh, but can commit the case upon the evidence recorded by the inferior Magistrate—Kamani v. Fakir, 12 C.W.N. 136, 6 Cr.L.J. 429; Sesha, Ratanlal 472; Ram Prasad, 12 N.L.R. 146, 18 Cr.L.J. 57.

347. (1) If in any inquiry before a Magistrate, or in any trial before a Magistrate before signing judgment, it appears to him at any stage of the proceedings that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session or High Court, and if he is empowered to commit for trial, he shall * * * commit the accused under the provisions hereinbefore contained.

(2) If such Magistrate is not empowered to commit for trial, he shall proceed under section 346.

1003. Change:—The words "stop further proceedings and" have been omitted by sec 91 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "This amendment is designed to bring sec. 347 into line with section 208"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

Under the old law, there was a conflict of opinion as to the meaning of the words "stop further proceedings". In Durant, Ratanlal 975, In re Sessions Judge, 17 M.L.T. 83, 15 Cr.L.J. 704 and Phanindra, 36 Cal 48, 12 C.W.N. 1014, a very restricted meaning was assigned to these words, viz, that as soon as the Magistrate considered that the case was one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session, he should at once stop all proceedings and then and there pass an order of commitment to the Sessions, even though neither the witnesses for the prosecution had been cross-examined nor the defence witnesses examined. In other words, the power of a Magistrate to make commitment under this section was not subject to the provisions of Chapter XVIII, and the Magistrate was not bound to follow the procedure of that Chapter but could commit even though all the evidence on either side had not been taken.

But a more reasonable construction was given to the words "stop further proceedings" in some other cases. Thus, in another Madras case as well as in other cases, the words 'stop further proceedings' were interpreted to mean that the Magistrate should stop proceedings with the case as a trial and should commit the case to the Sessions, and in thus committing he should adopt the procedure laid down in Chapter XVIII. These words did not enable the Magistrate to shorten the proceedings and then and there pass an order of commitment—Kangayya, 36 Mad 321 (324); Channing Arnold, 6 L.B.R. 129, 13 Cr.L.J. 877 (882), 17 I.C. 877; Ulli Bai, 17 S.L.R. 188, 26 Cr.L.J. 148 (F.B.). It was held that the words "under the provisions hereinbefore contained" showed that the Magistrate must make his proceedings conform to the provisions of Chapter XVIII, that sec 347 did not override or dispense with the obligation of following Chapter XVIII, and that before he wrote and signed a committal order, the provisions of that Chapter had to be followed and he could not conform to the mere passing of the committal order under sec 213—Channing Arnold, supra. It was not intended by this section to enable the Magistrate to deprive the accused of any of the rights conferred on him by Chapter XVIII—In re Chinnavan, 15 Cr.L.J. 366, 23 I.C. 734, A.I.R. 1914 Mad. 643; and an order of commitment made without taking all such evidence as the accused was prepared to produce before the Magistrate was invalid—Muhammad Hadi, 26 All 177; Ahmadi, 20 All. 264. In a later case the Calcutta High Court also laid down that though the Magistrate decided to commit the case to the Sessions under sec. 347, he was still bound to follow the procedure of Chapter XVIII and allow the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses (sec 208), where the application to cross-examine was made before the charge was framed and before the Magistrate decided to commit the case to the Court of Session—Jyotsna Nath, 51 Cal. 442 (445); 26 Cr.L.J. 63, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 780, 83 I.C. 591; Damarcha, 62 I.C. 192, 19 A.L.J. 463, 22 Cr.L.J. 496, A.I.R. 1921 All. 148.

This later view will now prevail as a result of the present amendment which has deleted the above ambiguous words ("stop further proceedings"). Section 347 is now controlled by Chapter XVIII. If before an order of commitment is passed, the accused applies for an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and to examine the defence witnesses, the Magistrate cannot decline to allow the examination or cross-examination, but is bound to follow the provisions of sec. 208—Bhat, 33 Bom.L.R. 1192, 1931 Cr.C. 949 (950), 33 Cr.L.J. 68, 134 I.C. 1230, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 517; Asghar, 37 Cr.L.J. 337 (341), 160 I.C. 856, A.I.R. 1936 All. 134, 1936 Cr.C. 134, 1935 A.L.J. 1321 (F.B.). The phrase "under the provisions hereinbefore contained" relates to those provisions in Chapter XVIII which define the procedure to be adopted in the inquiries into cases triable by the Court of Session. So, where the evidence recorded is not read over to each witness in the presence of the accused in accordance with the provisions of sec. 360 read with secs. 207 and 208 of Chapter XVIII, no commitment can be made under sec. 317—Damodaran, 52 Mad. 995, 57 M.L.J. 555, 31 Cr.L.J. 273, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 862, 121 I.C. 618, 1929 Cr.C. 602. If the Magistrate omits to follow the provisions of Chapter XVIII, and the case comes up to the High Court in revision before the order of commitment is made, the High Court will direct the Magistrate to reopen the inquiry de novo, irrespective of the question whether the accused has been prejudiced by the omission or not—Damodaran, supra. But if the case comes up to the High Court in revision after a committal order has been made, the High Court will not quash the commitment on the ground of omission to follow the procedure of Chapter XVIII, if the omission has not caused any prejudice to the accused—Chinnavan, 15 Cr.L.J. 366; Bhat, supra; Fazal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 389, I.L.R. 1940 Lah. 151. But see Paladugu Lawshminarayan v. Tadiboyina, 33 Cr.L.J. 765, 139 I.C. 313, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 502, 1932 M.W.N. 634, 63 M.L.J. 101, 1932 Cr.C. 506, 36 M.L.W. 390, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 667, where the commitment was quashed for the simple reason that the accused had no opportunity of adducing their defence evidence before committal and Nagendra, 33 Cr L.J. 770, 139 I.C. 470, 36 C.W.N. 926, 1932 Cr.C. 636, AIR, 1932 Cal 683, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 628, where a commitment was quashed on the ground that the Magistrate had not before making the order of commitment held an enquiry under Chapter XVIII of the Code.

1003A. Scope:—This section, no doubt authorises a Magistrate at any stage of the trial of a warrant case to commit the accused for trial instead of completing the trial himself. It is clear that the new charge which will then have to be drawn up by the Magistrate will have the effect of cancelling any previous charge framed by him, but this case can only be with respect to the subject-matter of the new charge. So far as this subject-matter is concerned, the previous proceedings before the Magistrate must be regarded as proceedings in an enquiry preliminary to commitment, but this alteration of character cannot be extended to any matter which is not the subject of the new charge. This section does not empower a Magistrate to discharge an accused against whom a charge has been framed. It is only in respect of the offence for which the accused is to be committed to the Court of Session that the proceedings are taken out of Chapter XXI, and the other proceedings of the Magistrate must remain governed by the provisions of that Chapter—Bishambhar Nath, 26 Cr L.J. 520, 85 I.C. 360, 1 O.W.N. 705, AIR. 1925 Oudh 547

1004. Procedure:—It is not intended by this section that if the Magistrate finds that an order of commitment is to be made, proceedings under Chap. XVIII are to be commenced de novo—Chinnavan, 15 Cr L.J. 366 (Mad.); Illahi Bakhsh, 2 All. 910; therefore, if the Magistrate has already completed the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses, it is not necessary for him to take that evidence afresh. Only in respect of the remaining proceedings the provisions of Chapter XVIII should be followed—Illahi Bakhsh, supra. The Magistrate need not start proceedings de novo, but he must not deprive the accused of any right which he might have exercised under Chapter XVIII, if the case had been treated as an inquiry under that chapter from the outset—Ram Ghulam, 1931 A.L.J. 587, 32 Cr L.J. 849 (850), 132 I.C. 47, 53 All. 692, 1931 Cr.C. 706, AIR 1931 All. 434, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 479; Asghar, 37 Cr L.J. 337 (339), 160 I.C. 856, AIR 1936 All. 134, 1936 Cr.C. 134, 1935 A.L.J. 1321 (F.B.). If the accused has already cross-examined all the prosecution witnesses and has produced all the defence evidence that he wanted to produce, the proceedings need not be commenced de novo from sec 208, and the accused has no further right of cross-examination—Ram Ghulam, supra

There is nothing in this section to suggest that where a Magistrate decides to commit under this section he should be required to commence proceedings de novo under Chapter XVIII. To lay down any general rule that a Magistrate, if he decides to commit under this section, should invariably commence proceedings de novo under Chapter XVIII would lead to intolerable delays in the trial of criminal cases without any compensating advantage to the accused or to the prosecution. What is necessary is that as soon as a Magistrate acting under this section has made up his mind to commit, he should be careful not to prejudice the accused by depriving him of the opportunities provided by sec 208 and sec 212, Cr P C., of offering defence evidence; and always provided that the requirements of secs 208, 211 and 212, Cr P C., as well as the formalities required by sec 213, Cr P C., are carefully observed, there is no reason why a Magistrate should be required to take proceedings de novo under Chapter XVIII—Fazal v Emp., AIR 1940 Lah 389 (391), ILR 1940 Lah 151

'Ought to be tried'—See Notes under sec 207 for the meaning of these words. This section is couched in general terms, and gives the Magistrate very wide powers to commit if he is of opinion that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session. The discretion vested in the Magistrate under this section cannot be limited by the provisions of sec 254; that is, there is no suggestion in this section that the only possible reason for a competent Magistrate to commit a case is that he will not be able to pass a sufficiently severe sentence—Ishahat, 3 Rang. 42, 26 Cr L.J. 1329; Bhagatathi, 42 Mad 83 (85), 19 Cr.L.J. 997. The Magistrate's powers of committal to the Sessions are not confined to cases where he considers that he cannot give adequate punishment. Other circumstances may be taken into consideration in deciding the question whether a case should be committed to the Sessions, viz., the gravity of the offence, the punishment prescribed for the offence, the section under which the accused is charged, the special difficulties of the case, its public importance, and the wishes of the parties—Krishnaji, 53 Bom 611, 1929 Cr.C 124, 30 Cr.L.J. 1090 (1095), 119 I.C. 666; Bhimaji, 42 Bom. 172 (178), 19 Cr.L.J. 342, 20 Bom.L.R. 89. If the Magistrate considers, for instance, that a complicated question of law arises or that some connected matter is already before the Court of Session or that the facts are such that a trial with the aid of a jury or with the aid of assessors (who may be chosen from experts in the particular matters involved in the case) would be a satisfactory procedure, the Magistrate should commit the case to the Court of Session under sec. 347—Bhagavathi, supra. Where the editor of a widely circulated newspaper was charged with the offence of sedition, before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and he applied for commitment of the case to the High Court Sessions, held that the case should be committed under sec. 347; the fact that there was a congestion of work in the High Court Sessions was not a sufficient ground for the Magistrate's refusal to commit—Krishnaji, supra, distinguished in Hari Moreswar, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 63, 33 Bom.L.R. 1515, 1932 Cr.C. 87, 56 Bom. 61, 33 Cr.L.J. 262, 136 I.C. 187, where the matter was held to be discretionary with the Magistrate.

If in a case some of the accused persons are charged with an offence which ought to be tried by the Court of Session, and the case against the other accused is a summons case which the Magistrate can try and adequately punish, it is not illegal for the Magistrate to commit all the accused to the Sessions—Ghani Yakub, 14 S.L.R. 85, 21 Cr.L.J. 791.

'Before signing judgment':—The commitment can be made if the judgment has not been given or signed. After signing judgment, no Court can alter or review the same. See sec. 369.

Commitment may be made after framing a charge in the trial as originally commenced—Kudrutoollah, 3 Cal 495 (497); Ram Ghulam, 1931 A.L.J. 587, 32 Cr.L.J. 849 (850).

Quashing:—The concluding words of the section that the Magistrate should "commit the accused under the provisions hereinbefore contained" clearly point to sec. 213 and when applicable to sec. 214, and in the absence of any other provision except sec. 215 for quashing the commitment, it appears that the commitment made under sec. 317 falls none the less within the purview of secs. 213 and 214; and where there is any question of quashing, it can only be done under sec. 215—Ullibai, 26 Cr.L.J. 148 (150), 83 I.C. 708, 17 S.L.R. 188, A.I.R. 1924 Sind 61.

348. (1) Whoever, having been convicted of an offence

Trial of persons previously convicted of offences against coinage, stamp-law or property. punishable under Chapter XII or Chapter XVII of the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment for a term of three years or upwards, is again accused of any offence punishable under either of those Chapters with imprisonment for a term of three years or upwards, shall, if the Magistrate before whom the case is pending is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused, be committed to the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be, unless the Magistrate is competent to try the case and is of opinion that he can himself pass an adequate sentence if the accused is convicted:

Provided that, if any Magistrate in the district has been invested with powers under section 30, the case may be transferred to him instead of being committed to the Court of Session.

(2) When any person is committed to the Court of Session or High Court under sub-section (1), any other person accused jointly with him in the same inquiry or trial shall be similarly committed, unless the Magistrate discharges such other person under section 209.

Change:—The italicised words have been added by sec. 92 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

"If the Magistrate committing the accused"—"This amendment has been made on the lines of sec. 209 (1)"—Report of the Select Committee (1916).

"Is competent to try the case":—We have introduced this amendment to make it clear that the section does not empower the Magistrate to pass sentence in a case which he is not competent to try"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

In the proviso, the words "any Magistrate in the district" have been substituted for the words "the District Magistrate" occurring in the old section. This amendment is merely verbal.

Sub-section (2):—"This clause provides that when any person is committed to the Court of Session under sec 318, any other person accused jointly, whom the Magistrate believes to be guilty, shall be similarly committed. Identical treatment will thus be accorded to all the accused"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

Sections 348 and 349:—If the accused is an old offender, the Magistrate should act under this section, and refer the case to a superior Magistrate under sec. 319—Dasari Ramudu, 2 Weir 423. That section (sec 349) does not apply to a case where the accused is an old offender—Po Thwe, 4 LBR 282, 2 CrLJ 478. If a Magistrate instead of proceeding under this section erroneously sends up the case under sec 349, it is open to the District Magistrate to take the case on his own file or to transfer it to some other first class Magistrate—Mari Naicken, 2 Weir 422.

1005. Procedure:—The Magistrate must first of all determine either as a preliminary matter or at any rate before framing a charge, whether there has been a previous conviction; if a previous conviction is proved, the Magistrate will then have to consider whether in the circumstances of the case his powers enable him to try and pass adequate sentence. If he thinks they do not permit, he should not try but commit the case to the Sessions (but he should not discharge the accused); if they do permit, he may try the case himself. If he commit the case to the Sessions, he ought not to find the accused guilty, but should frame a charge under sec 210, and commit the case for trial under Chapter XVIII—Kora Sellandhi, 38 Mad. 552.

Commitment not imperative—The words "unless convicted" did not exist in the Code of 1882 or in the earlier Codes, and, therefore, it was imperative on the Magistrate to commit if a previous conviction was proved, and he could not try the case himself—Gaudasing, Ratanlal 704. But the 1893 Code gives a discretion to the Magistrate to try the case himself if he is competent to pass adequate sentence.

1006. Powers of District Magistrate:—Under the proviso to this section, if the District Magistrate is invested with powers under sec 30, the case may be transferred to him instead of being committed to the Sessions. In such a case the District Magistrate need not try the case de novo. He can, under sec 350, act on the evidence already recorded by the Magistrate, who transferred the case. See Notes under sub-sec. (3) of sec. 350.

If the District Magistrate considers that the case should be committed to the Sessions, he should himself commit, and not send back the case to the Subordinate Magistrate with a direction to commit—Veeranna, 9 Mad. 377. If the District Magistrate commits the case, instead of trying it, he can, it seems, act upon the evidence recorded by the Subordinate Magistrate, and need not commence the inquiry de novo. See Shesha, Ratanlal 472 and Kamani v. Fakira, 12 C.W.N. 136 cited in Note 1002 under sec. 346.

349. (1) Whenever a Magistrate of the second or third class, having jurisdiction, is of opinion, after hearing the evidence for the prosecution and the accused, that the accused is guilty, and that he ought to receive a punishment different in kind from, or more severe than, that which such Magistrate is empowered to inflict, or that he ought to be required to execute a bond under section 106, he may record the opinion and submit his proceedings, and forward the accused, to the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom he is subordinate.

(1A) When more accused than one are being tried together and the Magistrate considers it necessary to proceed under sub-section (1) in regard to any of such accused, he shall forward all the accused who are in his opinion guilty to the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate to whom the proceedings are submitted may, if he thinks fit, examine the parties and recall and examine any witness who has already given evidence in the case, and may call for and take any further evidence, and shall pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit, and as is according to law:

Provided that he shall not inflict a punishment more severe than he is empowered to inflict under sections 32 and 33.

Change:—Sub-section (1A) has been added by sec 93 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. This is similar to sub-section (2) of section 348.

1007. Application of section:—The provisions of this section are subject to the express provision of sec 348. Therefore, where the accused is an old offender, a second class Magistrate should commit him to the Sessions under sec. 348, and not submit the case to the superior Magistrate under this section—Dasari Ramudu, 2 Weir 423; Po Thwe, 4 L.B.R. 282, 8 Cr.L.J. 478.

The procedure prescribed by this section is unsuited to cases tried summarily—Jalal Khan, 4 L.B.R. 277, 8 Cr.L.J. 475.

1008. Reference to Superior Magistrate:—Who can refer:—Only the second or third class Magistrate can refer. A first class Magistrate is not competent to submit the case under this section—Q.-E. v. Pershad, 7 All. 414.

This section does not authorise any Bench of Magistrates to refer a case for higher punishment—Jalal Khan, supra.

Reference discretionary:—Whether a case ought to be referred to the superior Magistrate or not is within the discretion of the subordinate Magistrate, and the District Magistrate cannot direct the subordinate Magistrate to send up the case under this section. If he so directs, his order is ultra vires—Anonymous, 2 Weir 427.

To whom case can be referred:—The case can be referred to the District Magistrate or to the Magistrate to whom the referring Magistrate is subordinate, and to no other Magistrate—Vinayak, 38 Bom. 719, 16 Cr.L.J. 273. See also Rajaram, 28 Cr.L.J. 489, 101 I.C. 665, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 209.

When reference can be made :—This section authorises a reference to the superior Magistrate when the subordinate Magistrate considers that the accused should receive a severer sentence than he himself is competent to inflict. If the punishment which the subordinate Magistrate proposed was one which he himself could inflict, the reference was improper and the Magistrate should himself try the case—Phulla, 1881 A.W.N. 99. When a case was sent to the District Magistrate not because the referring Magistrate was not competent to pass a severe sentence but on the ground that it was advisable that the matter should be dealt with by the District Magistrate, it was held that the transfer was neither under sec. 349 nor under sec. 192, and, therefore, the conviction made by the District Magistrate was illegal and must be set aside—Radhe, 12 All. 66.

Under this section the Magistrate can make a reference to a superior Magistrate if he considers that the accused should receive a severer punishment than he can inflict; it does not apply where the Magistrate thinks that the accused should be dealt with under sec. 562, because an order under sec. 562 directing release upon probation of good conduct is not a punishment—Baba, 24 Cr.L.J. 738 (Nag.). But see proviso to sub-sec. (1) of sec. 562.

1009. Powers and duties of referring Magistrate:—If the subordinate Magistrate submits the case to the higher Magistrate for severer punishment, he cannot convict the accused; the conviction and sentence are reserved for the higher Magistrate. The referring Magistrate is only required to state his opinion that the accused is guilty, but he cannot convict—Mahadu, Ratanlal 387; Prayag Gope, 3 Pat. 1015 (1017), 5 P.L.T. 571, 25 Cr.L.J. 1276. If the subordinate Magistrate not only records his opinion that the accused is guilty (as he is required to do) but also convicts the accused, the conviction will be treated as a mere surplusage or as a legal nullity, and the Magistrate to whom the case is sent can proceed with it without a reference to the High Court for the purpose of having the conviction formally quashed—Narayan, 52 Bom. 456, 30 Bom.L.R. 620, 29 Cr.L.J. 904 (905). The referring Magistrate can frame a charge if he likes, and the framing of charge is not illegal—Po Yin, 17 Cr.L.J. 201 (Bur.); Hla Gyi, 2 L.B.R. 285; Kondi, Ratanlal 948.

If the subordinate Magistrate sends the case for the purpose of binding down the accused under sec. 106, the Magistrate should neither convict nor pass sentence himself. The conviction, sentence and the order for security are all to be passed by the superior Magistrate—Mahmudi Sheikh v. Ali Sheikh, 21 Cal. 622; Rohmuddi, 35 Cal. 1093.

'Forward the accused' —The reason of forwarding the accused is that the accused has a right to be present at the proceedings held before the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred, such proceedings being a continuation of the proceedings before the referring Magistrate—Gunesh, 7 W.R. 38. The right exists even though the superior Magistrate does not examine the parties or recall and re-examine the witnesses, and the accused will be at liberty to contend before that Magistrate that there is no sufficient case made out against him, and the Magistrate, if he thinks so, may discharge or acquit him—Ragha, 7 B.H.C.R. 31.

Sub-section (1A):—It was held under the old section that where several accused were charged before the subordinate Magistrate, he could convict some of them and send up the others to the superior Magistrate; such a procedure was not improper nor the conviction illegal, but in such a case it was more advisable to forward all the accused to the superior Magistrate instead of convicting some of the accused—Raghatia, 2 Weir 128, Nachian, 2 Weir 429. The new sub-section (1A) now makes it imperative on the Magistrate, under such circumstances, to forward all the accused to the superior Magistrate. See Dodo, 18 S.L.R. 216, 26 Cr.L.J. 1363; Murugesu, 29 Cr.L.J. 624, 109 I.C. 816, 1928 M.W.N. 72.

But if there are several accused, and the Magistrate finds only one of them to be guilty, he should not send all the accused to the superior Magistrate, but should acquit the accused whom he finds not guilty and send that accused alone whom he considers guilty—Sultan Md., 21 A.L.J. 80, 26 Cr.L.J. 1630, 90 I.C. 926, 24 A.L.J. 80, A.I.R. 1926 All 176.

1010. Sub-section (2):—Powers and duties of the Superior Magistrate:—When a case is referred to a superior Magistrate, the whole case is opened up for him to deal with it according to his own discretion—Bapuda, Ratanlal 350. In dealing with the case, he should not confine himself to considering whether the decision of the subordinate Magistrate was plainly and manifestly opposed to the evidence, but he should find on the evidence the facts which he considers proved and pass judgment accordingly—Appaji, Ratanlal 636; Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 43. If the superior Magistrate convicts the accused for an aggravated form of the offence, he must commence the trial afresh for such offence and cannot act on the evidence already recorded—Anonymous, 2 Weir 21 (22); Anonymous, 2 Weir 428. So also, if the offence is one which is beyond the jurisdiction of the subordinate Magistrate to try, the superior Magistrate cannot act upon the evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate—Sitaram, 1 Bom.L.R. 27. The Magistrate to whom a case is transferred is competent to pass 'such judgment, sentence or order as he thinks fit'. He is free to deal with the case according to his own discretion, and he can, if he thinks fit, order a commitment to the Court of Session—Chinnappa, Ratanlal 945; Chinnimarigadu, 1 Mad. 289; Viranna, 9 Mad. 377; Abdul Wahab v. Chandia, 13 Cal. 305; Abdulla, 4 Bom. 240. He has to make up his mind whether the accused are guilty or not and exercise his own independent judgment in the case, and to write a judgment conformable to the requirements of sec. 367. He cannot simply pass sentence on the accused without writing any judgment—Karupppa, 1920 M.W.N. 120, 54 I.C. 404, 21 Cr.L.J. 52. It is not sufficient for a superior Magistrate, to whom a case has been referred under sec. 349, Cr. P. C., to accept the finding of the inferior Magistrate making the reference and he should form his own independent judgment and write a judgment according to the provisions of sec. 367, Cr. P. Code—Lallu Ram v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 1005, 178 I.C. 173, 1938 A.Cr.C. 125, 1938 O.W.N. 1051, 1938 O.A. 802, 1938 A.W.R. (C.C.) 87, 1938 O.L.R. 468, 11 R.O. 91, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 35. See Note 1050A.

If the case was originally tried by the subordinate Magistrate summarily, the nature of the trial is not altered by reason of the reference under this section, and the superior Magistrate, if he acts on the evidence recorded by the subordinate Magistrate without hearing the case anew, cannot pass a heavier sentence than what is allowed in a summary trial under sec. 262 (2)—Gopal, 1932 Cr.C. 595, 33 Cr.L.J. 472, 137 I.C. 208, A.I.R. 1932 All. 507, 1932 Cr.C. 595, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 320. But the case would have been otherwise if the superior Magistrate had heard the case de novo at full length, in accordance with the regular procedure—Ibid.

The superior Magistrate to whom the case is referred has no power to send back the case to the subordinate Magistrate upon any ground whatsoever. He must dispose of it himself by acquitting or convicting the accused or by committing him for trial—Thakur Dayal, 26 All. 344; Chinnappa, Ratanlal 945; Dula v. Bhagirat, 6 C.L.R. 276; and even if the case is sent back to the subordinate Magistrate, the latter cannot take up the case; after he has referred the case his jurisdiction over it ceases, and any order passed by him would be illegal—Dula v. Bhagirat, supra; Hava, 10 Bom. 196. If the superior Magistrate thinks that a commitment to the Sessions is necessary, he himself should make the commitment; he cannot send back the case to the referring Magistrate with a direction to commit the case to the Sessions—Viranna, 9 Mad. 377. If, however, the reference is defective, e.g., if the referring Magistrate has omitted to record in writing the statement of the accused as required by section 364, the superior Magistrate can return the case with a direction to supply the defect; and the subordinate Magistrate in such a case is also competent to come to a fresh and different conclusion as to the guilt of the accused and acquit some of them—Anonymous, 2 Weir 426.

Moreover, the Magistrate to whom a case is referred cannot refer the case to another Magistrate for inquiry—Anonymous, 6 M.H.C.R. App. 2; Anonymous, 4 Mad. 23;

Ponnusamy, 36 Mad. 470; Nga Po, 1905 U.B.R. (Cr. P. C.) 33, 2 Cr.L.J. 464. A case once referred under this section cannot be referred to another Magistrate for inquiry or trial—Vinayak, 38 Bom. 719. Even if the superior Magistrate thinks that the reference by the inferior Magistrate was incorrect or illegal, he can report it for orders under sec. 438, but himself cannot quash the reference and order retrial by another Magistrate—Jaiind Singh, 1900 P.R. 14.

The superior Magistrate can act upon the evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate and is not bound to hold a de novo trial under sec. 350—Raghava, 2 Weir 428 (429). That is now made clear by the amendment made in sub-sec. (2) of sec. 350 which lays down that the section does not apply to proceedings submitted under sec. 349. See Doda, 18 S.L.R. 216, 26 Cr.L.J. 4363, 89 I.C. 451, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 48. See Sasthi Gopal Samui v. Haridas Bagdi, in Note 1017.

350. (1) Whenever any Magistrate, after having heard and recorded the whole or any part of the evidence in an inquiry or trial, ceases to exercise jurisdiction therein, and is succeeded by another Magistrate who has and who exercises such jurisdiction, the Magistrate so succeeding may act on the evidence so recorded by his predecessor, or partly recorded by his predecessor and partly recorded by himself; or he may resubmit the witnesses and recommence the inquiry or trial:

Provided as follows:—

- (a) in any trial the accused may, when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and reheard;
- (b) the High Court, or in cases tried by Magistrates subordinate to the District Magistrate, the District Magistrate may, whether there be an appeal or not, set aside any conviction passed on evidence not wholly recorded by the Magistrate before whom the conviction was held, if such Court or District Magistrate is of opinion that the accused has been materially prejudiced thereby, and may order a new inquiry or trial.

(2) Nothing in this section applies to cases in which proceedings have been stayed under section 346 or in which proceedings have been submitted to a superior Magistrate under section 349.

(3) When a case is transferred under the provisions of this Code from one Magistrate to another, the former shall be deemed to cease to exercise jurisdiction therein, and to be succeeded by the latter within the meaning of sub-section (1).

Change:—The italicised words have been added by sec. 94 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below in their proper places.

1011. Object and scope of section:—The general principle is that a case must be decided by the Magistrate who heard the evidence. But if this principle has to be strictly observed, it will follow that in every case of transfer, the succeeding Magistrate will have to try from the beginning all cases which have been partly heard by his predecessor-in-office, and there will be endless delay in trials. And this section is obviously intended to meet such cases—Hardwar v. Khega, 20 Cal. 870; Janglal, 19 Cr.L.J. 657 (Nag.). In view of the frequent changes in the office of Magistrates, the Code provides specially that a Magistrate may pronounce judgment on evidence recorded by his predecessor or on evidence partly recorded by his predecessor and partly by himself—Tarada, 3 Mad. 112.

This section applies not only where one Magistrate is succeeded by another but also where the second Magistrate is in his turn succeeded by another Magistrate. The third Magistrate can act on evidence recorded by his two predecessors. This section is not confined to a case where there is only a single occurrence of one Magistrate succeeding another—Govindan v. Krishnam, 45 M.L.J. 808, 47 Mad. 245. See also Moti v. Keshrichand in Note 1014.

This section gives the succeeding Magistrate jurisdiction to decide the case on evidence recorded by his predecessor, but it cannot give him jurisdiction to deliver a judgment written by his predecessor. Where the Magistrate who heard the evidence and tried the case was transferred to another district, and from that place he sent a written judgment which was pronounced by his successor at the place where the case was tried, held that there was no jurisdiction to do so and the conviction and sentence so passed were illegal and that the accused must be retried—Baisnab Chandra v. Amin Ali, 50 Cal. 664, 38 C.L.J. 202, 24 Cr.L.J. 489; Jagatbandhu v. Jagabandhu, 38 C.L.J. 201, 25 Cr.L.J. 192, 76 I.C. 432, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 192, following Anand Sarup, 3 All. 563; Mahomed Rafique, 43 C.L.J. 100, 27 Cr.L.J. 406. A judgment having been written and signed by the Sessions Judge as an Appellate Court when he had ceased to have jurisdiction in the district is ultra vires and illegal and cannot be delivered by his successor—Jogesh v. Surendra, 35 C.W.N. 838. But the Allahabad and Madras High Courts and the Oudh Chief Court hold that the succeeding Magistrate can sign and pronounce the judgment written by his predecessor and thus adopt it as his own—Nur Muhammad Khan, A.I.R. 1923 All. 276, 71 I.C. 525, 24 Cr.L.J. 173, 21 A.L.J. 137; Savarimuthu, 40 Mad 108, 33 I.C. 646, A.I.R. 1917 Mad. 340, 17 Cr.L.J. 166, (1916) 1 M.W.N. 372, 32 M.L.J. 81; Chandika, 28 O.C. 109, 11 O.L.J. 775, 25 Cr.L.J. 1075, 81 I.C. 899; Sankara Pillai, 18 M.L.J. 197, 7 Cr.L.J. 459; and the accused are not entitled to a de novo trial—Bhogole Chinta Somaija, 34 Cr.L.J. 117, 141 I.C. 174, 36 M.L.W. 881, Ind Rul. 1933 Mad 84, 1933 M.W.N. 95, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 251, 1933 Cr.C. 365, following Public Prosecutor, Madras v. Chockalingam, 52 Mad. 355, 30 Cr.L.J. 908, 118 I.C. 274, 29 M.L.W. 108, 1929 M.W.N. 60, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 201.

In virtue of sec. 350, Cr. P. C. it is quite possible that the succeeding Magistrate may take the judgment left by his predecessor and compare it with the evidence recorded in the case and discover that it expresses what he himself would have decided on the case. In that case there is no reason why if there is no demand for a new trial on that part of the accused he should not deliver that judgment as his own. In fact by so doing it becomes his own judgment. The defect in such a case amounts only to an irregularity which can be cured by sec. 537, Cr. P. C. But where the succeeding Magistrate did not sign the judgment himself nor did he date and there was nothing to show that he even read it though probably he pronounced the sentence, delivering it not as his own judgment but as that of his predecessor, the defect in the delivery of judgment went beyond a mere irregularity curable under sec. 537, Cr. P. C. It is not contemplated in the Code that a Magistrate shall deliver any judgment other than his own and if he does so, it is not an irregularity in the form of delivery; it is not delivering judgment at all—Chinnayar v. Maung Mya Thi, 40 Cr.L.J. 829, 183 I.C. 216, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 249, 1939 Rang.L.R. 570.

Where, on the date fixed for arguments, the Magistrate wrote out the judgment in the case convicting the accused and added a sentence at the end of it, "As the accused is not present to-day and I am under orders of transfer, I keep this judgment on the file and leave this for my successor to pronounce it when the accused appears in Court," and it was contended that the successor in office of that Magistrate could not pronounce an order written by him without giving the accused an opportunity to claim a de novo trial, held that the contention was based on sec. 350, Cr. P. C., but there was no applicability of sec. 350 to the case and therefore the objection could not succeed. According to the law as laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code, the case was over as soon as the judgment had been delivered. Once the Magistrate had signed his judgment, he had delivered it within the meaning of sec. 366 (3), Cr. P. C., and the trial was then over. His action in putting it in a closed envelope for somebody else to pronounce was unnecessary and redundant. The trial was completed and all that remained was for judgment to be executed against the accused—Gian Singh v. Amar Singh, AIR 1939 Lah 21, ILR 1938 Lah 567, 40 P.L.R. 996, 179 I.C. 990, 40 Cr.L.J. 288. Where the succeeding Magistrate delivered the judgment written by his predecessor, with the note "As I am under order of transfer from this place and it is expected that I will be relieved before the date fixed for announcement of judgment in this case, I leave it to my worthy successor to announce the above judgment on the date fixed for announcement," without adopting it as his own and did not give an opportunity to the accused under this section to have a de novo trial, the irregularity, if any, in the case was covered by sec. 537, Cr. P. C.—Harnam Singh v. Emp., AIR 1940 Lah. 289, 42 P.L.R. 240, 41 Cr.L.J. 808, 189 I.C. 826. The Lahore High Court thus preferred to follow the view of the Allahabad and Madras High Courts.

See also Note 1044

1012. Application of section:—This section applies to an enquiry under Chapter VIII; therefore, where a Magistrate holding an inquiry under sec. 107 is transferred after the examination of some prosecution witnesses and is succeeded by another, the person called upon to shew cause why he should not give security may under proviso (a) insist upon the re-summoning and re-examination of those witnesses—Buroda v. Karimuddin, 4 C.L.R. 452; Venkatachinnayya, 43 Mad 551, 1920 M.W.N. 280, 38 M.L.J. 370, 27 M.L.T. 178, 21 Cr.L.J. 402, 56 I.C. 50 (F.B.); Baij Nath, 25 Cr.L.J. 1380, 83 I.C. 340, 27 O.C. 323, AIR 1925 Oudh 228. Whether the inquiry is under secs. 107, 108, 109 or 110, Cr. P. C., makes no difference because sec. 117, cl. (2) applies equally to an enquiry under any of these sections—Mahatab Singh, AIR 1937 All 438, 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 382, 1937 A.L.J. 373, 169 I.C. 833, 1937 A.L.R. 598, 38 Cr.L.J. 804, 1937 A.I.C.R. 29.

This section is applicable to proceedings under sec. 145. Where in the course of such proceedings one Magistrate is transferred, the succeeding Magistrate can act upon the evidence already recorded—Ali Mahomed v. Tarak, 13 C.W.N. 420, 9 Cr.L.J. 278, 1 I.C. 336; Anu v. Jitu, 37 Cal 812; even though one of the parties demanded a de novo hearing—Sondi Singh v. Govind Singh, 5 P.L.T. 237, 25 Cr.L.J. 89, 76 I.C. 25, AIR 1924 Pat. 786, 2 Pat.L.R. 108; Syed Sadek v. Sachindra, 37 C.L.J. 128, 24 Cr.L.J. 569, 73 I.C. 265.

This section applies to inquiries preliminary to commitments. The succeeding Magistrate can commit the case to the Sessions on evidence recorded by his predecessor-in-office—Malinga, 31 Mad 40; Nanhuna, 36 All. 315, 15 Cr.L.J. 354; Ghulam Jannat, 7 Lah 70, 27 Cr.L.J. 627. See also Ashutosh Sen Gupta v. Emp., in Note 1015. Where the proceedings are in the nature not of a trial but merely of an enquiry preparatory to commitment the necessity of any provision for a de novo trial does not exist. This principle of law applies even when a case, which was originally proceeded with on the footing that it was a trial of a warrant case, but was subsequently converted into an enquiry preparatory to commitment under sec. 349, Cr. P. C., was inquired into by a Magistrate who succeeded another when a part of the evidence had been recorded by the latter—Panchanan, 32 Cr.L.J. 243, 129 I.C. 182, AIR 1930 Cal. 666, 1930 Cr.C. 1058, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 134.

This section does not apply to cases tried by Benches of Magistrates—Damri v. Bhowani, 23 Cal 194; Basappa, 18 Mad 394; Haridwar v. Khaga, 20 Cal. 870; Girdhari,

2 Lah. 237; Abdul Ghani, 1922 P.L.R. 1, 22 Cr.L.J. 511; Itala, 9 Bur.L.T. 203, 18 Cr.L.J. 96. Even the new sec. 350A does not apply where one Magistrate of a Bench is replaced by another; that section contemplates cases wherein all the Magistrates constituting the Bench have heard the proceedings throughout. When a case was heard by a Bench consisting of two Magistrates and, on the dissolution of the Bench, it was transferred for trial to one of those two Magistrates, held that sec. 350, Cr. P. C., did not in terms apply to a case like this and that the accused could not claim a de novo trial—Abdul Hakim v. Fozu Mia, 36 Cr.L.J. 857, 155 I.C. 1003, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 287, 39 C.W.N. 57, 62 Cal. 266, 1935 Cr.C. 392. See Note 1019 under that section

This section does not, coming as it does in the chapter relating to 'inquiries and trials', apply to a preliminary enquiry as contemplated in sec. 202, Cr. P. C. Where, therefore, the Sessions Judge directed further enquiry into a complaint by a Magistrate other than the Magistrate who dismissed it under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., and, thereupon, the District Magistrate transferred the case to another Magistrate who dismissed the case again under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., on the basis of the evidence partly recorded by himself and the evidence already on record, held that the Magistrate had power to do so, not under this section, but under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., which does not say that the Magistrate dismissing the complaint must have himself recorded the evidence in the preliminary enquiry—Virumal Manghanmal v. Muhammad Khan, 37 Cr.L.J. 1086, 164 I.C. 1020, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 146, 30 S.L.R. 217, 1936 Cr.C. 862.

When a case is remanded for the taking of further defence evidence to a trial Court and where it is found that when the case returns to the trial Court, the Magistrate or the Officer trying the case has been transferred and a new judicial officer has taken his place, the provisions of this section immediately come into operation and the accused are entitled to a de novo trial—Daroga, 27 Cr.L.J. 1125, 97 I.C. 645, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 5, 8 P.L.T. 181.

This section applies only to Magistrates but not to Sessions Judges. A Sessions Judge is not competent to pronounce judgment on evidence recorded by his predecessor, or on evidence partly recorded by his predecessor and partly by himself—Ramdoyal, 21 W.R. 47; Durga Charan, 8 C.L.J. 59, 8 Cr.L.J. 121; Tarada, 3 Mad. 112; Badri Prasad, 35 All. 63, 13 Cr.L.J. 861. Even the consent of the accused would not enable the Sessions Judge to do so and validate such procedure—Sakharam, 3 Bom.L.R. 558, 26 Bom. 50; Bhuta Singh, 1890 P.R. 1; Salamut, 23 W.R. 59. See also Darabji, 28 Cr.L.J. 402, 101 I.C. 178, 29 Bom.L.R. 204, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 161.

This section refers to cases where one Magistrate is succeeded by another Magistrate, and does not apply where the Magistrate remains the same and his official designation is merely changed, e.g., where a Head Assistant Magistrate is appointed to the office of a Deputy Magistrate in another place in the same District; in such a case he can proceed to try the case from the point at which he had arrived as Head Assistant Magistrate prior to his becoming Deputy Magistrate, and the accused cannot demand a de novo trial under proviso (a)—Karuppana v. Akobolamatam, 22 Mad. 47.

This section does not apply where a case is originally tried by a Magistrate (or Bench) in the summary way, and then is transferred to a Magistrate who is not invested with summary powers. In such a case, the second Magistrate cannot act on the evidence recorded by the first Magistrate, for that would amount to his virtually trying the case summarily, which he is not empowered to do. The second Magistrate must try the case de novo and in the ordinary way—Nannier v. Desaler, 55 Mad. 795, 62 M.L.J. 738, 1932 Cr.C. 509 (510), 33 Cr.L.J. 653, 138 I.C. 581, 1932 M.W.N. 244, 35 M.L.W. 760, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 505.

This section, which gives a Magistrate jurisdiction to continue a trial begun by his predecessor, is not applicable to cases tried in a summary manner. Therefore, a Magistrate acted without jurisdiction when he continued in a summary manner the trial of the accused whose trial in a summary manner had been commenced by his predecessor. This section relates to jurisdiction and an error in jurisdiction is not a mere irregularity—Hemandas, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 40, 37 Cr.L.J. 455, 161 I.C. 267, 1936 Cr.C. 230.

The Nagpur High Court could not agree with this view in Durgaprasad, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 239, 41 Cr.L.J. 782, 189 I.C. 689, 1940 N.L.J. 321, where Gruer, J., observed: "Sec. 350, Cr. P. C., does not in terms exclude summary trials from its operation. It applies to all enquiries or trials conducted by a Magistrate in which the whole or any part of the evidence has been heard and recorded. The learned Advocate-General who opposes the reference argues, and I think correctly, that it depends on the way in which the evidence has been recorded in each case whether sec. 350 would apply or not. In trying a case summarily it is enough if scanty notes of the evidence are made, and these need not be kept on the record at all. Where such notes are allowed to remain, it would obviously be improper for the Magistrate to rely on such inadequate material. But in the present case one finds that the prosecution evidence was recorded by the first Magistrate in extenso in narrative form, at least quite as fully as it would have been in a summons case where by sec. 355, Cr. P. C., a memorandum of the substance is enough. It could not be urged that sec. 350 would not apply to such evidence if recorded in a summons case."

1014. 'Recommence the inquiry or trial':—The resummoning of the witnesses is not tantamount to re-commencing the enquiry. Therefore, when the Magistrate re-summoned the witnesses and contemplated recommencing of the enquiry, he is not precluded from changing his mind before he recommences the enquiry—Komma Hari Chandra Reddi, 39 Cr.L.J. 828, 176 I.C. 879, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 742, 1938 M.W.N. 587, 48 M.L.W. 136, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 222, 11 R.M. 189. If the succeeding Magistrate chooses to recommence the trial, he must recommence by re-summoning and re-examining the witnesses. But he cannot go to any stage previous to that. He cannot refer the case to the Police under sec. 202 for inquiry and report—Sadappachariar v. Raghavachariar, 9 Mad. 282. If the succeeding Magistrate examines some of the witnesses, he cannot go back to the stage of procedure of Chap. XVI, and cannot dismiss the complaint under sec. 203. He can pass an order of discharge—Gokul Chand v. Mahabir, 11 A.L.J. 451, 14 Cr.L.J. 412.

Reading sub-sec. (1) and proviso (a) together it appears clear that the right of the accused is not to demand a re-trial as such, but simply that any or all of the witnesses should be re-summoned and re-heard. Subject to giving effect to that right the option lies with the Magistrate to start the inquiry or trial all over again, or not—Tukaram, 37 Cr.L.J. 983 (984), 164 I.C. 744, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 153, 1936 Cr.C. 708, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 92. Whereas the accused's right under sub-sec. (1), proviso (a), arises only when the case is at the stage of trial, the Magistrate is not so bound and may recommence the case under sec. 350 (1), even when it has not reached the stage of trial—Ganpat, 38 Cr.L.J. 15, 165 I.C. 830, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 220, 1936 Cr.C. 937.

If a charge has already been framed by the preceding Magistrate, the succeeding Magistrate cannot cancel the charge—Sriramulu v. Veerasalingam, 38 Mad. 585, A.I.R. 1915 Mad. 23, 15 Cr.L.J. 673, 25 I.C. 1001, 1914 M.W.N. 646; Nathu, 1903 P.R. 14; Simhadri v. Sitaram, 2 L.W. 1244, 17 Cr.L.J. 1. The principle is, that if the proceedings before the preceding Magistrate have developed into the stage of a trial by the frame of a charge, the succeeding Magistrate cannot go beyond the stage of trial and transform the trial-proceedings into an inquiry by cancellation of the charge—Sriramulu v. Veerasalingam, supra; A. Ramanna, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 841, 1933 M.W.N. 94, 146 I.C. 523, 65 M.L.J. 791, 35 Cr.L.J. 79, 38 M.L.W. 995, 1933 Cr.C. 1518. The accused are entitled to have any of the witnesses re-called and re-heard, and that is the extent of their right

2 Lah. 237; Abdul Ghani, 1922 P.L.R. 1, 22 Cr.L.J. 511; Itala, 9 Bur.L.T. 203, 18 Cr.L.J. 96. Even the new sec. 350A does not apply where one Magistrate of a Bench is replaced by another; that section contemplates cases wherein all the Magistrates constituting the Bench have heard the proceedings throughout. When a case was heard by a Bench consisting of two Magistrates and, on the dissolution of the Bench, it was transferred for trial to one of those two Magistrates, held that sec. 350, Cr. P. C., did not in terms apply to a case like this and that the accused could not claim a de novo trial—Abdul Hakim v. Fozu Mia, 36 Cr.L.J. 857, 155 I.C. 1003, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 287, 39 C.W.N. 57, 62 Cal 266, 1935 Cr.C. 392. See Note 1019 under that section.

This section does not, coming as it does in the chapter relating to 'inquiries and trials', apply to a preliminary enquiry as contemplated in sec. 202, Cr. P. C. Where, therefore, the Sessions Judge directed further enquiry into a complaint by a Magistrate other than the Magistrate who dismissed it under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., and, thereupon, the District Magistrate transferred the case to another Magistrate who dismissed the case again under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., on the basis of the evidence partly recorded by himself and the evidence already on record, held that the Magistrate had power to do so, not under this section, but under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., which does not say that the Magistrate dismissing the complaint must have himself recorded the evidence in the preliminary enquiry—Virumal Manghanmal v. Muhammad Khan, 37 Cr.L.J. 1086, 164 I.C. 1020, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 146, 30 S.L.R. 217, 1936 Cr.C. 862.

When a case is remanded for the taking of further defence evidence to a trial Court and where it is found that when the case returns to the trial Court, the Magistrate or the Officer trying the case has been transferred and a new judicial officer has taken his place, the provisions of this section immediately come into operation and the accused are entitled to a de novo trial—Daroga, 27 Cr.L.J. 1125, 97 I.C. 645, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 5, 8 P.L.T. 181.

This section applies only to Magistrates but not to Sessions Judges. A Sessions Judge is not competent to pronounce judgment on evidence recorded by his predecessor, or on evidence partly recorded by his predecessor and partly by himself—Ramdoyal, 21 W.R. 47; Durga Charan, 8 C.L.J. 59, 8 Cr.L.J. 121; Tarada, 3 Mad. 112; Badri Prasad, 35 All. 63, 13 Cr.L.J. 861. Even the consent of the accused would not enable the Sessions Judge to do so and validate such procedure—Sakharam, 3 Bom.L.R. 558, 26 Bom. 50; Bhuta Singh, 1890 P.R. 1; Salamut, 23 W.R. 59. See also Darabji, 28 Cr.L.J. 402, 101 I.C. 178, 29 Bom.L.R. 204, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 161.

This section refers to cases where one Magistrate is succeeded by another Magistrate, and does not apply where the Magistrate remains the same and his official designation is merely changed, e.g., where a Head Assistant Magistrate is appointed to the office of a Deputy Magistrate in another place in the same District; in such a case he can proceed to try the case from the point at which he had arrived as Head Assistant Magistrate prior to his becoming Deputy Magistrate, and the accused cannot demand a de novo trial under proviso (a)—Karuppana v. Ahobolamatam, 22 Mad. 47.

This section does not apply where a case is originally tried by a Magistrate (or Bench) in the summary way, and then is transferred to a Magistrate who is not invested with summary powers. In such a case, the second Magistrate cannot act on the evidence recorded by the first Magistrate, for that would amount to his virtually trying the case summarily, which he is not empowered to do. The second Magistrate must try the case de novo and in the ordinary way—Nannier v. Desolier, 55 Mad. 795, 62 M.L.J. 738, 1932 Cr.C. 509 (510), 33 Cr.L.J. 653, 138 I.C. 581, 1932 M.W.N. 244, 35 M.L.W. 760, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 505.

This section, which gives a Magistrate jurisdiction to continue a trial begun by his predecessor, is not applicable to cases tried in a summary manner. Therefore, a Magistrate acted without jurisdiction when he continued in a summary manner the trial of the accused whose trial in a summary manner had been commenced by his predecessor. This section relates to jurisdiction and an error in jurisdiction is not a mere irregularity—Hemandas, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 40, 37 Cr.L.J. 455, 161 I.C. 267, 1936 Cr.C. 230.

The Nagpur High Court could not agree with this view in Durgaprasad, A.I.R. 1940 Nag 239, 41 Cr.L.J. 782, 189 I.C. 689, 1940 N.L.J. 321, where Gruer, J., observed: "Sec. 350, Cr. P. C., does not in terms exclude summary trials from its operation. It applies to all enquiries or trials conducted by a Magistrate in which the whole or any part of the evidence has been heard and recorded. The learned Advocate-General who opposes the reference argues, and I think correctly, that it depends on the way in which the evidence has been recorded in each case whether sec. 350 would apply or not. In trying a case summarily it is enough if scanty notes of the evidence are made, and these need not be kept on the record at all. Where such notes are allowed to remain, it would obviously be improper for the Magistrate to rely on such inadequate material. But in the present case one finds that the prosecution evidence was recorded by the first Magistrate in extenso in narrative form, at least quite as fully as it would have been in a summons case where by sec. 355, Cr. P. C., a memorandum of the substance is enough. It could not be urged that sec. 350 would not apply to such evidence if recorded in a summons case."

1014. 'Recommence the inquiry or trial':—The resumption of the witnesses is not tantamount to re-commencing the enquiry. Therefore, when the Magistrate re-summoned the witnesses and contemplated recommencing of the enquiry, he is not precluded from changing his mind before he recommences the enquiry—Komma Hari Chandra Reddi, 39 Cr.L.J. 828, 176 I.C. 879, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 742, 1938 M.W.N. 587, 48 M.L.W. 136, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 222, 11 R.M. 189. If the succeeding Magistrate chooses to recommence the trial, he must recommence by re-summoning and re-examining the witnesses. But he cannot go to any stage previous to that. He cannot take the case to the Police under sec. 202 for inquiry and report—Sadappachariar v. Raghavachariar, 9 Mad. 282. If the succeeding Magistrate examines some of the witnesses, he cannot go back to the stage of procedure of Chap. XVI, and cannot dismiss the complaint under sec. 203. He can pass an order of discharge—Gokul Chand v. Mahabir, 11 A.L.J. 451, 14 Cr.L.J. 412.

Reading sub-sec. (1) and proviso (a) together it appears clear that the right of the accused is not to demand a re-trial as such, but simply that any or all of the witnesses should be re-summoned and re-heard. Subject to giving effect to that right the option lies with the Magistrate to start the inquiry or trial all over again, or not—Tukaram, 37 Cr.L.J. 983 (984), 164 I.C. 744, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 153, 1936 Cr.C. 708, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 92. Whereas the accused's right under sub-sec (1), proviso (a), arises only when the case is at the stage of trial, the Magistrate is not so bound and may recommence the case under sec. 350 (1), even when it has not reached the stage of trial—Ganpat, 38 Cr.L.J. 15, 165 I.C. 830, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 220, 1936 Cr.C. 937.

If a charge has already been framed by the preceding Magistrate, the succeeding Magistrate cannot cancel the charge—Sriramulu v. Veerasalingam, 38 Mad. 585, A.I.R. 1915 Mad. 23, 15 Cr.L.J. 673, 25 I.C. 1001, 1914 M.W.N. 646; Nathu, 1903 P.R. 14; Simhadri v. Sitaram, 2 L.W. 1244, 17 Cr.L.J. 1. The principle is, that if the proceedings before the preceding Magistrate have developed into the stage of a trial by the frame of a charge, the succeeding Magistrate cannot go beyond the stage of trial and transform the trial-proceedings into an inquiry by cancellation of the charge—Sriramulu v. Veerasalingam, supra; A. Ramanna, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 841, 1933 M.W.N. 94, 146 I.C. 523, 65 M.L.J. 791, 35 Cr.L.J. 79, 38 M.L.W. 995, 1933 Cr.C. 1518. The accused are entitled to have any of the witnesses re-called and re-heard, and that is the extent of their right —A. Ramanna, supra. And since the succeeding Magistrate cannot cancel the charge, an order subsequently passed letting off the accused is one of acquittal and not one of discharge—Simhadri v. Sitaram, supra; Sriramulu v. Veerasalingam, supra. This case was dissented from in Sheorajsai v. Dani, 32 Cr.L.J. 603, 130 I.C. 825, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 39, 27 N.L.R. 13, 1931 Cr.C. 223, Ind. Rul. 1931 Nag. 73, where the succeeding Magistrate having dismissed the complaint under sec. 204 (3), the second trial on a fresh complaint was held to be not barred on the principle of autrefois acquit although a charge was framed against the accused before de novo trial was claimed by them on the transfer of the Magistrate. This view was also adopted by the Peshwar Court in Abdul Hakim v. Haji Abdul Aziz, 35 Cr.L.J. 170, 146 I.C. 443, A.I.R. 1933 Pesh. 78, 1933 Cr.C. 1311. After reviewing all the cases on the subject the Nagpur High Court has held that in some cases to which this section applies the previous charge is blotted out and in some cases not. It depends on which option the Magistrate adopts. The accused can in no case insist on a clean slate; and the Magistrate cannot ignore although he may amend the previous charge, if he desires to make use of any of the evidence previously recorded; but if he decides to wipe out that previous evidence the former charge is also wiped out—Tukaram, 37 Cr.L.J. 983 (1986), 164 I.C. 744, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 153, 1936 Cr.C. 708, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 92, 19 N.L.J. 115. See also Kunwar Sen v. Emp., in Note 1015 under the heading "Framing of charge". The Bombay High Court has taken the same view and has held that "trial" has always been understood to mean the proceeding which commences when the case is called on with the Magistrate on the Bench, the accused in the dock and the representatives of the prosecution and defence, if the accused be defended, present in Court for the hearing of the case—Dagdu Govindset Wani v. Punja Vedu Wani, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 55, 9 R.B. 247, 38 Bom.L.R. 1189, 166 I.C. 598, 38 Cr.L.J. 250, I.L.R. 1937 Bom. 211, 1937 A.I.Cr.R. 70, following Gomer Sirda v. Queen-Emp., 25 Cal. 863, 2 C.W.N. 465, Sahib Din v. Emp., A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 49, 66 I.C. 826, 3 Lah. 115, 23 Cr.L.J. 330, Fakhruddin v. Emp., A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 435, 95 I.C. 63, 27 Cr.L.J. 735, 6 Lah. 176 and Labhsingh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1934 Sind 106, 1934 Cr.C. 831, 151 I.C. 213, 35 Cr.L.J. 1261, 28 S.L.R. 239 and dissenting from Sriramulu v. Veerasalingam, supra. The Allahabad High Court has, however, followed the view of the Madras High Court—Raza Husain, 36 Cr.L.J. 912, 156 I.C. 186, 1935 A.L.R. 548, 7 R.A. 1057, A.I.R. 1935 All. 834, 1935 Cr.C. 980, 1935 A.L.J. 1022. See also Gajju v. Emp., in Note 1015.

If a trial is commenced de novo by the succeeding Magistrate, he must observe all the procedure of the trial and cannot omit any part of the procedure. Where in a de novo trial the Magistrate omitted to examine the prosecution witnesses (who had already been examined by the preceding Magistrate) but allowed them to be cross-examined by the defence, it was held that the trial was not in due compliance with this section and ought to be set aside—Sobh Nath, 6 Cr.L.J. 431, 12 C.W.N. 138; Sidik, 20 S.L.R. 50, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 158, 92 I.C. 748, 27 Cr.L.J. 332. The Magistrate holding a de novo trial must examine all the witnesses for the prosecution. He cannot examine only some of them and decline to examine the others—Gokul v. Mahabir, supra. A de novo trial means a trial from the beginning of the case. The object of granting a de novo trial is to enable the Magistrate who hears the case to see the way in which the witnesses give evidence before him, to mark their demeanour and thereby to be in a position to judge of their credibility. This object is lost if the witnesses are not examined again but are only allowed to be cross-examined by the accused. Such a procedure is not a de novo trial, and the conviction of the accused must be set aside—Narayana v. Enumula Bojamma, 90 I.C. 668, 1925 M.W.N. 652, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1280, 49 M.L.J. 423, 26 Cr.L.J. 1596. Similarly, where the Magistrate holding the de novo trial merely read over to the accused the deposition of the prosecution witnesses (recorded by the preceding Magistrate) though he allowed them to be cross-examined the procedure was held to be illegal—Hnin v. Than Pe, 19 Cr.L.J. 321, 9 L.B.R. 92, 44 I.C. 337; Mangal Singh, 1919 P.W.R. 16; Mangal Singh, 22 Cr.L.J. 119 (Lah.). When the Magistrate noted the accused's claim for a de novo trial and ordered the witnesses to be re-summoned, he must be deemed to have directed a de novo trial (including inquiry). If so, the failure to examine the witnesses-in-chief was a manifest illegality which vitiated the trial—Purushothamrao Bhanji Berde v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 73, 178 I.C. 465, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 493, 1938 N.L.J. 309. The accused is not estopped from raising the plea of the illegality of the trial by reason of his acquiescence in the procedure adopted by the Magistrate—Ibid. A Magistrate proceeding to recommence the inquiry or trial cannot rely upon the previously recorded evidence—Kartar, 28 Cr.L.J. 302, 100 I.C. 382, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 238 Cf. Rangaswami, 52 Mad. 73, 30 Cr.L.J. 183 (184). The accused asked that the prosecution witnesses might be resummoned and reheard. When they appeared, he said he would be content to cross-examine them. The witnesses were not examined-in-chief but were cross-examined by the accused. Held that the procedure was not illegal—Arulay, 27 Cr.L.J. 659, 94 I.C. 707, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 815. When the accused have demanded that the witnesses be recalled, they are at liberty in respect of particular witnesses, if it suits their purpose to waive their examination or part of it. A decision based on evidence recorded partly by one Magistrate and partly by another is legal so long as the accused do not object to it—Ibrahim, 36 Cr.L.J. 41, 152 I.C. 236, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 209, 1934 Cr.C. 980, 7 R.N. 80.

The discretion given to a Magistrate by sec. 350 (1), Cr. P. C., to act or not to act upon the evidence recorded by his predecessor is not absolute but is controlled by proviso 1 to that section and it is solely left to the accused whether to claim the right to have the witnesses already examined by the previous Magistrate recalled and re-examined by the succeeding Magistrate. But it is equally clear from the language of the proviso that this right has to be exercised by the accused only at the time "when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings." Where, therefore, after the transfer of the Magistrate who first tried the case, four accused wanted all the prosecution witnesses and all the Court witnesses resummoned and reheard, while the remaining accused wanted a de novo trial which was granted and, later on, all accused did not desire to have certain Court witnesses and defence witnesses resummoned and re-examined, held that the exercise of the option given to the accused could be exercised only once and they having definitely exercised the same in a particular manner and the fresh trial having proceeded on that basis none of the accused had any right to change the course of the trial as they wished to do by their subsequent joint application in which they stated that they did not desire to have certain Court witnesses and defence witnesses resummoned and re-examined—J. B. Sane, A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 59, 160 I.C. 416, 31 Cr.L.J. 110, Ind. Rul. 1930 Nag. 48. But see Moti v. Keshrichand, infra.

Section 350 (1) (a), Cr. P. C., does not require that even a witness on whom the prosecution does not rely and whom it does not wish to produce though produced before the first Court should also be produced in the second Court. Where the trial in the Court of the second Magistrate is de novo, the proceedings taken in the first Court should be ignored. That being so, the prosecution are at perfect liberty to produce whichever witness they like and they cannot be compelled to produce at the instance of the accused a witness on whose evidence they do not rely. Of course the Court will consider the effect of the prosecution not producing a witness previously examined by them and if he should happen to be one named in the first information report the circumstance will go against the prosecution; but sec. 350 (1) (a), does not appear to authorise an accused to compel the prosecution to produce a witness whom they do not wish to produce—Sheo Ram v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 854, 177 I.C. 200, 1938 O.L.R. 399, 1938 A Cr.C. 95, 11 R.O. 35, 1938 O.A. 661, 1938 O.W.N. 881, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 212.

Framing of charge:—Where a trying Magistrate does not act suo motu but on the request of one of the accused under sec. 350 (1) (a), Cr. P. C., the trial does not become a fresh trial but all that is intended is that the prosecution witnesses should be resummoned and re-heard. The Legislature did not intend that the charge already framed should be wiped out—Kunihar Sen v. Emp., A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 86, 141 I.C. 192, 9 O.W.N. 1136, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 33, 34 Cr.L.J. 124, 1934 Cr.C. 168, 8 Luck. 286. This means that in a case governed by sec. 350 (1) (a), that is to say where the accused demands that the prosecution witnesses or any one of them be re-summoned and re-heard, it is not necessary for the Magistrate to frame a new charge at the request of the accused. If, however, he does frame a new charge, the accused can have no cause for grievance. Under sec. 227 (1), Cr. P. C., a Court can alter or add to any charge at any time before judgment—Gajju v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 849, 177 I.C. 193, 1938 O.W.N. 898, 11 R.O. 34, 1938 O.L.R. 391, 1938 A.Cr.C. 96, 1938 O.A. 658, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 247. See also Note 1015.

Transfer of case to the third Magistrate:—Each transfer gives an accused a fresh opportunity of exercising his right under the proviso to sec. 350, Cr. P. Code. The word 'predecessor' shou'd be taken to mean 'predecessors' where there is more than one. It could not mean that a third Magistrate could act only on the evidence recorded by his predecessor, the second Magistrate and not also on the evidence recorded by the first Magistrate who handled the case. Where, therefore, the first Magistrate examined some witnesses and, on transfer of the case to the second Magistrate, the accused claimed a de novo trial before which the case was again transferred to the third Magistrate who decided the case on the evidence recorded by the first Magistrate accepting the waiver made by the defence counsel, held that the third Magistrate could act on the evidence recorded by the first and that the accused were entitled to a second choice and they exercised it, and even if they had not been entitled in law to change their minds, the irregularity would not be a fatal one as no prejudice was caused—Moti v. Keshrichand, 39 Cr.L.J. 815, 176 I.C. 808, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 288, 1938 N.L.J. 96, 11 R.N. 80, I.L.R. 1939 Nag. 79, following Govindan Nair v. Krishnan Nair, 47 Mad. 245, 81 I.C. 54, 1923 M.W.N. 815, 45 M.L.J. 808, 18 M.L.W. 949, 33 M.L.T. 189, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 227, 25 Cr.L.J. 566.

Transfer of Magistrate to his original place:—Before the conclusion of a trial, the trying Magistrate was transferred. Thereupon the case was transferred to the file of a superior Magistrate who began to try it de novo. Afterwards the original Magistrate was re-transferred to his original place, and the superior Magistrate transferred the case to him with a direction to proceed from where he had originally left it. It was held that the inferior Magistrate must try the case de novo, and could not proceed from where he had originally left the case, because all that had taken place before the inferior Magistrate originally had been superseded—Daroga Choudhury, 20 Cr.L.J. 638 (Pat.); Jago Singh, 20 Cr.L.J. 820 (Pat.); Anand Sarup, 3 All. 563. But see Naddeem Sahib v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 1245, where it has been held that the refusal of the Magistrate to re-summon and re-hear the witnesses already examined by him before is only an irregularity.

Transfer of case to the original Magistrate:—A Magistrate was transferred after he had finished the major portion of the trial of a case. The succeeding Magistrate granted a de novo trial. But the District Magistrate was of opinion that as only a small amount of work remained to be done in the case it could be best done by the Magistrate who had tried the case, and so he (Dt Magistrate) transferred the case to the original Magistrate. Held that even the original Magistrate to whom the case was thus transferred could not take up the case from the point at which he had left it, but that he must start the case de novo, because as soon as he was transferred all the proceedings which had previously taken place before him were wiped out—Sardar Khan Saheb v. Attaulla, 47 M.L.J. 926, 26 Cr.L.J. 510, 85 I.C. 254, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 174, 20 M.L.W. 847; Ramalingam, 35 Cr.L.J. 1363, 57 Mad. 1019, 1934 M.W.N. 369, 1934 Cr.C. 801, A.L.R. 1934 Mad. 530, 151 I.C. 309, 40 M.L.W. 832, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 475, 67 M.L.J. 293. See also Ganpat, 38 Cr.L.J. 15, 165 I.C. 830, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 220, 1936 Cr.C. 937. In another case it has been held that the District Magistrate cannot transfer the case to the original Magistrate (who has no longer jurisdiction to proceed with the case), but that the new Magistrate who has taken up the case de novo must proceed with the trial—Sriranga v. Subramania, 24 L.W. 640, 28 Cr.L.J. 23 (21), 99 I.C. 55, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 81, 38 M.L.T. 137.

The Allahabad High Court has taken a different view. According to it there are two Magistrates contrasted by this section. The first Magistrate has two qualifications: (1) he must have heard and recorded the whole or any part of the evidence, and (2) he must have ceased to exercise jurisdiction. The second Magistrate is contrasted with the first as "another Magistrate". The word "another" means that the second Magistrate should differ from the first, both on point (1) and point (2). Where, therefore, the Magistrate is transferred from the district after examining the prosecution witnesses, recording the statement of the accused, framing the charge and cross-examining the prosecution witnesses and the case is then transferred to another Magistrate in whose Court no further proceedings take place and is again transferred to the original Magistrate when he is re-posted to the district, he cannot be considered "another Magistrate" within the meaning of sec 350 (1), Cr P. C., because he does not fulfil the two points of difference from the first Magistrate. Therefore he does not come under sec. 350 at all. As he has heard all the evidence for the prosecution, there is no power in this section for him to re-hear it even if he desired to do so. The accused also has no right to demand a re-hearing—Shyama Pado Deb v. Sunder Das, 39 Cr.L.J. 978, 117 I.C. 978, I.L.R. 1938 All 794, 1938 A Cr.C. 74, 1938 A.L.R. 801, 1938 A.L.J. 767, 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 492, A.I.R. 1938 All. 536, 11 R.A. 241.

1015. Proviso (a):—Right of Accused—Under the proviso (a), the accused has a right to demand that the witnesses or any of them shall be resummoned or reheard. The policy of the law is that an accused should be able to claim a right not to be convicted by a Magistrate who has not himself heard the whole evidence—Sahib Din, 3 Lah. 115, 23 Cr.L.J. 330. The accused cannot claim re-trial as such, but can only demand that any or all of the witnesses should be re-summoned and re-heard—Tukaram, 37 Cr.L.J. 983 (1984), 164 I.C. 744, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 92, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 153, 1936 Cr.C. 708, 19 N.L.J. 115. The accused has an absolute statutory right to claim a de novo trial and the Magistrate has no authority to limit that right by imposing any condition on its exercise (e.g., payment of any process-fees and expenses of the witnesses)—Maung Chit Tay v. Maung Tun Nyun, 36 Cr.L.J. 953, 156 I.C. 441, 13 Rang 297, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 108, 1935 Cr.C. 317. The accused can exercise his right under the proviso (a) in case of a trial only; where a preliminary inquiry before commitment is transferred before frame of charge, the accused is not as of right entitled to an inquiry de novo—Palaniandy, 32 Mad. 218; Nathu, 1903 P.R. 14. Where it is an enquiry and not a trial, the case does not come under the proviso (a) of sub-section (1) of sec. 350, Cr. P. Code. The Magistrate has, however, got a discretion to exercise whether he will act on the evidence recorded by his predecessor, or he will resummon any of the witnesses before he frames a charge against the accused. The Magistrate, if he is so satisfied, can resummon witnesses examined by his predecessor, in the exercise of his discretion as provided for in section 350, sub-section (1), Criminal Procedure Code—Ashutosh Sen Gupta v. Emp., 42 C.W.N. 224. Proceedings in a warrant case before a charge is framed are merely an inquiry and not a trial, and if a case is transferred at that stage, the accused cannot demand a fresh examination of witnesses to be made by the succeeding Magistrate—Ramanathan, 46 Mad. 719; Lakshmireddy v. Munireddy, 54 Mad 512, 32 Cr.L.J. 635, 131 I.C. 5, A.I.R. 1931 Mad 488, 33 M.L.W. 336, 1931 M.N.W. 179, 60 M.L.J. 524, 1931 Cr.C. 552, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad 469; Tukaram, 19 N.L.J. 115, 37 Cr.L.J. 983 (1985), 164 I.C. 744, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 92, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 153, 1936 Cr.C. 708; Ganpat, 38 Cr.L.J. 15, 165 I.C. 830, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 220, 1936 Cr.C. 937; Komma Hari Chandra Reddi, 39 Cr.L.J. 828, 176 I.C. 879, A.I.R. 1938 Mad 742, 1938 M.W.N. 587, 46 M.L.W. 136, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 222, 11 R.M. 189. But the accused is not altogether without a remedy, because as soon as the charge is framed by the succeeding Magistrate, he can under sec. 255 recall all the prosecution witnesses whose evidence has been taken, and thus he has a right equivalent to that of demanding a de novo trial—Palaniandy, 32 Mad 218 (219). But according to the Calcutta High Court a trial commences as soon as the case is called on with the Magistrate on the Bench, the accused on the dock, and the representatives of the prosecution and for the defence are present in Court for the hearing of the case. The proper time for the accused to ask for resumption and rehearing of the witnesses is as soon as the trial commences before the second Magistrate—Gomar Sirdar, 25 Cal. 863, 2 C.W.N. 465. In trials of summons cases and in summary trials, the time when the accused is to demand that the witnesses shall be resummoned and reheard is when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings—Sahib Din, 3 Lah. 115, 23 Cr.L.J. 330, 66 I.C. 826, A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 49, 10 P.W.R. 1922 (Cr.); Labhsing, 35 Cr.L.J. 1261, 151 I.C. 213, 28 S.L.R. 239, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 106, 1934 Cr.C. 831, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 116; J. B. San, 31 Cr.L.J. 282, 121 I.C. 646, A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 59, 1930 Cr.C. 147.

According to the Calcutta High Court, this proviso applies only to a trial and does not apply to an inquiry under sec. 145; consequently, a Magistrate has power to proceed with the inquiry of a case under sec. 145, where a portion of the evidence has been recorded by his predecessor, and he is not bound to resummon the witnesses on the application of the accused—Syed Sadek v. Sachindra, 37 C.L.J. 128; Sondi Singh v. Gobind, 5 P.L.T. 237, 25 Cr.L.J. 89. But a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has laid down that the proviso (a) applies to an inquiry under sec. 117, because such inquiry, according to sub-sec. (2) of sec. 117, is made in the manner prescribed for conducting "trials" in summons or warrant cases and in fact has all the features of a trial—Venkata Chinnaya, 43 Mad 511 (525, 527) (F.B.). This is also the view of the Oudh Court—Baij Nath, 27 O.C. 323, 25 Cr.L.J. 1380; and the Allahabad High Court—Mahatab Singh, A.I.R. 1937 All. 438, 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 382, 1937 A.L.J. 373, 169 I.C. 833, 1937 A.L.R. 598, 38 Cr.L.J. 804, 1937 A.I.Cr.R. 29; Govinda v. Emp., 20 N.L.J. 117. See also Note 288.

But this proviso does not apply to a further inquiry which is held according to the direction of a Sessions Judge under sec. 436. Therefore, where an inquiry was at first held by a Magistrate which ended in an order of discharge, but the Sessions Judge ordered a further inquiry under sec. 436 and returned the case to the original Court, but in the meantime the former Magistrate had been succeeded by another Magistrate, held that this new Magistrate was entitled to go on with the case and frame a charge without re-examining the witnesses previously examined, and the accused had no right to demand that the witnesses be re-summoned and re-examined—Lakshmireddy v. Muni Reddy, 54 Mad 512, 60 M.L.J. 524, 32 Cr.L.J. 635 (636), 131 I.C. 5, 1931 M.W.N. 179, 33 M.L.W. 336, 1931 Cr.C. 552, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 488. For contra—see Ramaswami v. M. Subban, 32 Cr.L.J. 226, 129 I.C. 79, 1930 M.W.N. 911, 32 M.L.W. 782, A.I.R. 1930 Mad 983, 1930 Cr.C. 1199, Ind. Rul 1931 Mad. 223. But the Allahabad High Court holds that proceedings on further inquiry must start de novo—Hasnu, 6 All. 367.

The discretion given to a Magistrate by sec. 350 (1), Cr. P. C., to act or not to act upon the evidence recorded by his predecessor is not absolute but is controlled by the first proviso to that section and it is solely left to the accused whether to claim the right to have the witnesses already examined by the previous Magistrate re-called and re-examined by the succeeding Magistrate—J. B. San, 31 Cr.L.J. 282, 121 I.C. 646, A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 59, 1930 Cr.C. 147. It is true that this section does enable a Magistrate to re-summon the witnesses and recommence the enquiry or trial, but that right of the Magistrate is subject to the proviso that the accused may, when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be resummoned and reheard. It follows, therefore, as a corollary from this that if the accused does not wish to have a fresh trial, he can insist upon his case being decided upon the evidence already recorded by the first Magistrate—Manzoor Ali v. Abdul Salam, 35 Cr.L.J. 1147, 150 I.C. 857, 11 O.W.N. 825, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 324. This view of law was apparently not followed by the Calcutta High Court in Ref. No. 5 of 1937—(Serajuddin Sheikh v. Sashi Bhusan, unreported case decided on the 8th February, 1937). The Nagpur High Court also disagreed with the view taken in Manzoor Ali v. Abdul Salam, supra. It has laid down that the accused has no right to insist that there shall not be a de novo trial or inquiry, or that the Magistrate is acting without jurisdiction in beginning the proceedings anew when the accused does not so desire. Section 350, Cr. P. C., lays down that one Magistrate succeeding another may either act on the evidence partly recorded by his predecessor or he may re-summon the witnesses and re-commence the inquiry or trial. The discretion is in the Magistrate and his action is only limited in the trial by proviso (a) There is no proviso that the accused may demand that witnesses examined by the Magistrate who has ceased to exercise jurisdiction shall not be re-summoned and re-heard. It is clearly desirable for the proper administration of justice that normally the Magistrate who passes the final order should be the Magistrate who has heard all the evidence, and in order that there should be no prejudice to the accused; it is expressly provided that, in cases where the Magistrate does not propose to follow this procedure, the accused is entitled to demand that this procedure shall be followed—Sardaril v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 697, 169 I.C. 47, 9 R.N. 295, 1 I.R. 1937 Nag. 538, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 147. The Madras High Court has also held that the Magistrate as well as the accused has a privilege under this section. If he does not like the idea of giving judgment on evidence partly or wholly recorded by his predecessor, he may decide to re-summon the witnesses, re-commence the inquiry or trial. If he exercises that option it is clear that the accused cannot object to the examination afresh of any witness—Mudda Verrappa, 36 Cr.L.J. 1265, 157 I.C. 1020, 1935 M.W.N. 179, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 318, 1935 Cr.C. 381, 8 R.M. 203. In a very recent case the Oudh Chief Court also accepted the view of the Nagpur and Madras High Courts as mentioned above and refused to follow the decision in Manzoor Ali v. Abdus Salam, supra. It has laid down that it does not appear on a consideration of the wording of sec. 350, sub-cl (1) that the proviso has any application in a case in which the second Magistrate decides to re-summon the witnesses and re-commence the inquiry or trial. The proviso gives the accused a right at the time of the commencement of the proceedings before the second Magistrate to demand that the witnesses or any one of them be re-summoned and re-heard, and it does not give him any other right. It would be difficult to say that there can in any judicial sense be prejudice to the interest of the accused by the Magistrate who is to try the case, re-summoning the witnesses and re-commencing the trial. It may be that the effect of such an order will be that the trial will be protracted somewhat longer than it might otherwise have been, and it may be that the Magistrate may decide to frame further charges in addition to the charge or charges, if any, framed by the first Magistrate, but that is a matter which would have been within his competence in any case under the provisions of sec. 227, Cr. P. Code—Gur Dayal v. Sheo Dularey, 39 Cr.L.J. 858, 177 I.C. 250, 1938 A.Cr.C. 86, 11 R.O. 37, 1938 O.L.R. 402, 1938 O.A. 652, 1938 O.W.N. 841, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh. 218. See also Tukaram, 19 N.L.J. 115, 37 Cr.L.J. 983, 164 I.C. 744, 1 I.R. 1936 Nag. 92, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 153, 1936 Cr.C. 708 and Ganpat, 38 Cr.L.J. 15, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 220, 1936 Cr.C. 937.

The Magistrate is not bound to ascertain from the accused whether he wishes to exercise the right conferred by this proviso. This section confers the right on the accused to demand, and does not prescribe that the Magistrate shall ask the accused whether he will exercise the right or not—Nga Po, U.B.R. (1912) 151, 14 Cr.L.J. 175. The Magistrate is not bound to have the accused brought before him to ascertain whether he wishes to exercise this right—Kesram, 1884 P.R. 6. An omission on the part of the Magistrate to ask the accused whether he wants evidence to be reheard is a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537. In Baruchi, 10 Bur.L.T. 73, 17 Cr.L.J. 401, however, it has been held that it is necessary for the Magistrate to acquaint the accused with the fact that he is entitled to have the witnesses re-called and re-examined, and that there are many cases in which it is desirable that the Magistrate who passes judgment should have the opportunity of seeing the witnesses. But see Chinnayar v. Maung Ma Thi, 40 Cr.L.J. 829 (831), 183 I.C. 216, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 249, where it has been laid down that a duty is cast upon the accused to demand a new trial, if they desire it, and not upon the Magistrate to offer it.

But there is no doubt that if the accused wants the evidence to be reheard, the Magistrate must recommence the trial—Hyin v. Than Pe, 9 L.B.R. 92, 19 Cr.L.J. 321; and the refusal of the Magistrate to do so would be an illegality not curable by sec. 537—Amir Khan, 1903 P.R. 3; Gomer Sirdar, 25 Cal. 863.

That proviso does not mean that if the second Magistrate re-summons the witnesses at the request of the accused, the trial necessarily commences de novo, necessitating the framing of a fresh charge. The second Magistrate can legally convict the accused on the charges framed by his predecessor—Kunwar Sen, 9 O.W.N. 1136, 1933 Cr.C. 168, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 86, 8 Luck. 286, 34 Cr.L.J. 124, 141 I.C. 192. Cf. Sriramulu v. Veerasalingam, 38 Mad 585. What is called a trial de novo is not strictly speaking a new or fresh trial. All that it means is that the accused has the right to have all or any of the witnesses re-summoned and re-heard by the new Magistrate. It does not mean that when the accused claims this privilege of re-summoning and re-hearing the witnesses what has taken place before is completely wiped out or that he should renew every application which he had made before he claimed that privilege—D. M. Venkatanarayana, 38 Cr.L.J. 537, 168 I.C. 291, 45 M.L.W. 240, 1937 M.W.N. 173, 9 R.M. 559, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 448, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 338.

Where the accused claims under this section to have the witnesses re-examined by the succeeding Magistrate, the witnesses should be re-summoned without the payment of any fees—Ehas v. Ezakiel, 8 Bur.L.T. 43, 15 Cr.L.J. 687. See also Maung Chit Tay v. Maung Tun Nyun, 36 Cr.L.J. 953, 156 I.C. 441, 13 Rang. 297, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 108, 1935 Cr.C. 317.

Under this clause, it is the duty of the Magistrate, on the desire of the accused, to re-summon the witnesses. But the Magistrate can re-summon only those witnesses who are available. If any witness dies in the meantime, and the evidence which he gave before the previous Magistrate is proved and relied upon, and the other witnesses are re-summoned, the procedure is quite in accordance with law—Lekal, 8 Lah. 570, 28 Cr.L.J. 451, 101 I.C. 483, 28 P.L.R. 199, A.I.R. 1927 Lah 332, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 83.

Where the demand of the accused under this proviso was satisfied by the Magistrate by re-summoning the witnesses and rehearing the evidence, the accused cannot claim a further opportunity of re-summoning prosecution witnesses for the purpose of cross-examining them inasmuch as such a right is not recognised under this section—Edward Philbert, A.I.R. 1935 Mad 258, 1934 M.W.N. 1357, 37 C.L.J. 150, 159 I.C. 663, 1935 Cr.C. 332.

Under proviso (a) to sec. 350, Cr. P. C., the right given to an accused person is the right of demanding that the prosecution witnesses or any one of them be re-summoned and re-heard, and it rests on the accused to say who should be re-summoned and re-heard and the complainant has no such right and cannot claim a de novo trial from the beginning—Vadigalapudigadu, 85 I.C. 366, 20 M.L.W. 916, A.I.R. 1925 Mad 317, 26 Cr.L.J. 526.

In a de novo trial the prosecution can examine witnesses in the order in which it desires—Ibrahim, 36 Cr.L.J. 41, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 209, 1934 Cr.C. 980.

Where, during the hearing of an application for transfer, the petitioners' Advocate gave an undertaking that his clients would not ask for a de novo trial, held that, in the improbable event of the petitioners declining to honour their Advocate's undertaking, the powers of the High Court are not such that it would be impossible for it to pass a suitable order—Hemanta Kumar v. Nanda Kumar, 41 C.W.N. 188 (192).

Witness examined on commission:—The words 're-summoned and re-heard' used in proviso (a), sec. 350, Cr. P. C., pre-suppose that the witnesses have already been summoned and heard. Those words can not therefore apply to a witness who had neither been summoned to the Criminal Court nor heard therein but had been examined on commission. Apart from this interpretation of the wording, it is obvious that sec. 350, Cr. P. C., is inserted in order that an accused should not be prejudiced by a Magistrate relying on evidence which he did not himself record, and that in case of witnesses examined by interrogatories there would be no point whatever in the second Magistrate issuing a further commission for interrogatories—Kaura Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 748 (749), 169 I.C. 44, 9 R.Pesh. 131, A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 67. Where a de novo trial is demanded and granted, it is not necessary that a fresh set of interrogatories should be issued, nor does it appear that the interrogatories which have already been answered can be excluded from evidence in the case. The object of re-summoning witnesses who have already been examined is that the Magistrate may see their demeanour in the witness box. This does not apply in the case of interrogatories. The answers given to the interrogatories before the de novo trial can therefore be considered as evidence against the accused in the case during de novo trial—Roshan Lal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Pesh. 17, 41 Cr.L.J. 681, 188 I.C. 770.

The purpose of this section clearly is to provide that the Magistrate should, if the circumstances so require, decide the case only on evidence that he has himself recorded, upon the evidence of witnesses that he has been. In a trial de novo by the succeeding Magistrate the purpose which governs this section cannot be assisted by the cross-examination upon commission of a witness whose evidence has been recorded upon commission during the proceedings before the first Magistrate and whom the Magistrate has never seen. A demand of re-summoning and re-hearing cannot apply to a case of a witness who has never been summoned, never been heard by the Court and whose evidence has only been taken upon commission—Sukhranddas v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Sind. 193.

Effect of contravention:—See Hyjin v. Than Pe, supra, Amir Khan, supra and Gomer Sirdar, supra.

A contravention of the provisions of section 350 (1) (a), Criminal Procedure Code, will vitiate the trial only when there is a refusal on the Magistrate's part to re-summon and re-hear the witnesses or when the evidence of witnesses examined against the provisions of clause (a) is relied upon by the Court. It is undoubtedly a breach of sec. 350 (1) (a), Cr. P. C., when a witness is only cross-examined in the second Magistrate's Court. But if his evidence is discarded on account of the witness not being examined-in-chief in the Court of the second Magistrate, no prejudice can be caused to the accused by the omission of the prosecution to examine him and the defects of procedure which do not cause any prejudice to the accused do not vitiate the trial—Shco Ram v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 854, 177 I.C. 200, 1938 O.L.R. 399, 1938 A.Cr.C. 95, 11 R.O. 35, 1938 O.A. 661, 1938 O.W.N. 881, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh. 212.

The Madras High Court has, however, held that non-compliance with the demand of the accused to re-summon and re-hear witnesses is not an irregularity which vitiates the trial. Where all the witnesses were further cross-examined before the Magistrate who decided the case, the accused cannot, therefore, be said to have been prejudiced by the refusal of the Magistrate to re-summon and re-hear the witnesses and the conviction cannot be set aside on this ground—Pedda Ramamuni Reddi, 39 Cr.L.J. 932, 177 I.C. 598, 48 M.L.W. 248, 1938 M.W.N. 820, 11 R.M. 358, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 724, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 41. See also Naddeem Sahib v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 1245.

1016. Proviso (b):—A District Magistrate can under proviso (b) set aside a conviction passed by a first class Magistrate in the district though no appeal lies from his order to the District Magistrate—Pirya Gopal, 9 Bom. 100; Opendra v. Dukhini, 12 Cal. 473; Laskari, 7 All. 853; Padmanabha, 8 Mad. 18.

1017. Sub-section (2):—The procedure laid down in this section does not apply to proceedings stayed under sec. 346—Muhammad, 91 P.L.R. 1905, 2 Cr.L.J. 369. Thus, where a Magistrate trying a case was of opinion that the accused deserved a severer punishment than he could inflict, and stayed the proceedings and submitted the case to the District Magistrate under sec. 346, it was held that the District Magistrate could not convict the accused on the evidence recorded by the referring Magistrate even though the accused did not want the evidence to be re-heard—Muhammad, supra;

Ambika, 19 Cr.L.J. 625 (Pat.); Paravada China Venku, 17 L.W. 247, 24 Cr.L.J. 413. See also Note 1002.

This sub-section as now amended further lays down that the procedure of this section does not apply to sec. 349. Even prior to this amendment it was held that the superior Magistrate to whom a case had been transferred under sec. 349 could act upon the evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate and was not bound to hold a de novo trial—Raghava, 2 Weir 428. This is now made clear by the present amendment. See Dodo, 18 S.L.R. 216, 26 Cr.L.J. 1363.

The first part of this sub-section refers to proceedings which have been stayed under sec. 346. Manifestly, it relates to the power given to a Magistrate by sub-sec. (1) of sec. 350 of acting upon evidence recorded either wholly or partly by his predecessors. It is abundantly clear that the first part of sub-sec. (2) was intended to provide that where proceedings had been stayed under sec. 346 the Magistrate by whom the case is subsequently taken up is to hold a de novo trial. The only reasonable construction to put upon second part of the sub-section would be to say that where proceedings have been submitted to a superior Magistrate under sec. 349, the accused may not insist upon a de novo trial—Sasthi Gopal Samui v. Haridas Bagdi, 39 Cr.L.J. 606, 175 I.C. 537, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 415, 42 C.W.N. 508, 10 R.C. 799.

1018. Sub-section (3):—Transfer of proceedings:—Sub-section (1) applies where the Magistrate is transferred from one place to another, the case remaining in the same Court. But does that sub-section apply where a case is transferred from one Magistrate to another, under sec. 528, the Magistrate remaining in the same post? In other words, does that sub-section apply to transfer of cases as well, or is it confined only to transfer of Magistrates only? There was some difference of opinion under the old section as to this question. In the following cases, it has been held that this section covers cases where proceedings are transferred by sec. 528 from the Court of one Magistrate to that of another, because as soon as a case is transferred from one Magistrate to another the former 'ceases to exercise jurisdiction' in the case within the meaning of this section. Consequently, on a transfer of a case from one Magistrate to another, the latter Magistrate can decide the case on evidence recorded by the Magistrate from whom the case has been transferred, or on evidence partly recorded by that Magistrate and partly by himself—Mokesh Chandra, 35 Cal. 457; Kudrutulla, 39 Cal. 781; Palaniandy, 32 Mad. 218; Barachi, 10 Bur.L.T. 73, 17 Cr.L.J. 401; Chandra Kishore, 21 C.W.N. 755; Ramdas, 40 All. 307; Nanhua, 36 All. 315; Akbar Ali, 20 Cr.L.J. 41 (Nag); Ganga Chetty, 20 Cr.L.J. 496; Rupa Singh, 22 Cr.L.J. 82, 1 P.L.T. 679. But the contrary view was taken in the following cases—Angru, 1889 A.W.N. 139; Upendra Kumar, 12 C.W.N. 140, 6 Cr.L.J. 431 (438); La Tok, 1 L.B.R. 301; Radhe, 12 All. 66; Basir, 14 All. 346; Larya, 1 N.L.R. 187.

To remove this conflict of opinion, sub-sec. (3) has been added, adopting the former view. "There has been some difference of opinion as to the position when cases are transferred from one Magistrate to another otherwise than from a predecessor to a successor in office. The Amendment provides that the Magistrate from whom the case is transferred shall be deemed to cease to have jurisdiction within the meaning of this section"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

350A. No order or judgment of a Bench of Magistrates
 Changes in constitution of Benches shall be invalid by reason only of a change having occurred in the constitution of the Bench in any case in which the Bench by which such order or judgment is passed is duly constituted under sections 15 and 16, and the Magistrates constituting the same have been present on the Bench throughout the proceedings.

This section has been added by sec. 95 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

"We have added a new section after sec. 350 which in our opinion gives effect to the law as laid down by the High Court. Briefly, it provides that a judgment of a Bench shall be valid when the Bench is duly constituted at the time of passing the judgment and the judgment is passed by Magistrates all of whom have heard the proceedings throughout."—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

1019. All Magistrates must be present throughout:—This section lays down that all the Magistrates who take part in the judgment must have been present throughout the proceedings. If, therefore, any member of the Bench is not present on any hearing, no properly constituted Bench can be said to have been in existence. A conviction in such trial is unsustainable—Chiteswar, 1932 A.L.J. 42, 33 Cr.L.J. 200 (201), 135 I.C. 835, 1932 Cr.C. 152, A.I.R. 1932 All 127. See also 20 Cr.L.J. 823, 53 I.C. 823, 10 M.L.W. 366. Four Magistrates A, B, C and D, commenced the trial. But A was absent during a part of the trial, but eventually he, with the three other Magistrates who had been sitting throughout the trial, signed the order convicting the accused. Held that the trial was vitiated, as A was absent during part of the proceedings, even though the three Magistrates sat throughout the proceedings and formed quorum according to rules. It is wrong that a Magistrate who has been absent during a part of the trial should express an opinion on evidence which he has not heard and very possibly influence his fellow Magistrates, although they are in a better position than he is to decide the case—Gangappa, 23 Bom.L.R. 833, 22 Cr.L.J. 615, 63 I.C. 151 (152); Ram Khelawan v. Sheo Nandan, 54 All 413, 1932 Cr.C. 207 (208), 140 I.C. 122, 33 Cr.L.J. 885, 1932 A.L.J. 166, A.I.R. 1932 All 191; Shumbhu v. Ram Komul, 13 C.L.R. 212; Nago v. Shankar, 28 N.L.R. 190, 1932 Cr.C. 447, 138 I.C. 175, 33 Cr.L.J. 559, 15 N.L.J. 1, A.I.R. 1932 Nag 95.

This section is intended to apply to only such cases where one or more members drop out altogether and the remaining Magistrates who constitute the Bench which passes the order or judgment have been present on the Bench throughout the proceedings. There can be no doubt that if any of the Magistrates constituting the Bench which pronounces the judgment or the order has not been present throughout the proceedings, then sec. 350A is not complied with. In such a case there would be an irregularity, and not an illegality vitiating the trial—Dasrath Rai, 36 Cr.L.J. 38, 152 I.C. 158, 56 All 599, 1934 A.L.J. 376, A.I.R. 1934 All 144, 1934 Cr.C. 210. See also Mathura, 34 Cr.L.J. 701, 144 I.C. 123, A.I.R. 1933 All 355, 1933 A.L.J. 547, 1933 Cr.C. 628, Ind Rul 1933 All 379, 55 All 459. It is an irregularity for an Honorary Magistrate to sign a judgment if he has not been present throughout the proceedings. This is an irregularity which would not necessarily vitiate the trial. Where the Honorary Magistrate, who had not been present on all the hearings, was present on the date when the judgment was delivered and inadvertently signed it and had taken no real part, held that no failure of justice had taken place and that the trial was not liable to be set aside—Jafar Khan, 36 Cr.L.J. 907, 156 I.C. 101, 1935 A.L.R. 545, 7 RA 1056, A.I.R. 1935 All 814, 1935 Cr.C. 916, 1935 A.L.J. 969. But see Rameshwar v. Bharath, 35 Cr.L.J. 417, 147 I.C. 516, A.L.R. 1934 Oudh 75, 1934 Cr.C. 255, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 85, 11 O.W.N. 75, where the Oudh Chief Court, having come to the conclusion that all the members of the Bench were not present throughout, held the trial to be wholly irregular and illegal and set aside the conviction. See also Atla Veeraswamy Reddi v. Gunisetty Venkataswamy, 39 Cr.L.J. 680, 175 I.C. 874, 1938 M.W.N. 591, 48 M.L.W. 149, 11 R.M. 1, where it has been held that a conviction is illegal if the Magistrates who signed the judgment did not hear all evidence.

This section practically lays down that sec. 350 does not apply to trials before Benches of Magistrates; that in such trials the case should be decided by the Magistrates who have heard the whole of the evidence—Damri v. Bhowani, 23 Cal 194; Hardwar v. Khega, 20 Cal. 870; Itala, 8 L.B.R. 463, 18 Cr.L.J. 96; Girdhari, 2 Lah. 237 (238); Abdul Ghani, 1922 P.L.R. 1, 22 Cr.L.J. 511, 62 I.C. 335. Where the evidence for the prosecution was taken before two Honorary Magistrates A and B and on a subsequent day the evidence for the defence was taken and judgment delivered by B and C, held that as C was not present throughout the proceeding, the trial was bad. The High Court set aside the decision and ordered a new trial—Hardwar v. Kheda, 20 Cal. 780 (873); Basappa, 18 Mad. 391. Where the evidence for the prosecution was heard by three Magistrates A, B and C, and on a subsequent day four different Magistrates, D E. F and G, none of whom had previously attended, recorded the evidence for the defence and acquitted the accused, held that the trial must be set aside—Ram Sundar v. Rajab, 12 Cal. 558 (559); Itala, 8 L.B.R. 463, 18 Cr.L.J. 96. Where the trial of the accused was commenced before a Bench of four Magistrates who heard part of the evidence, and continued before the same four Magistrates and another, who joined as the fifth, and all the five Magistrates delivered judgment, held that the trial was vitiated and there must be a retrial—Subramania, 38 Mad. 304 (305), 16 Cr.L.J. 489, 29 I.C. 329; Damri v. Bhowani, 23 Cal 194 (195). Where only three Magistrates heard the evidence and tried the case and the judgment was signed by seven, this is illegal and in case of conviction this illegality vitiates the trial. Even in case of acquittal the nature of illegality is such as would warrant interference in revision in the interests of the public—Pichu Kudamban v. Sarvaikara Thevan, A.I.R. 1931 Mad 494, 1930 M.W.N. 770, 3 M.Cr.C. 221, 1931 Cr.C. 558, 133 I.C. 4, 32 Cr.L.J. 971. In an Allahabad case a trial was partly held before J and N who heard the prosecution evidence, and the case was adjourned and on the next day was heard by J and P, before whom the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined and defence evidence was taken; the case was again adjourned and on the third day J and N proceeded to deliver judgment. Held that the judgment ought to have been delivered by J and P who had heard the major portion of the evidence—Mathura, 41 All. 116 (125). This case was decided with reference to certain rules framed by the U. P. Government as to the constitution of Benches, and also with reference to the circumstances of the case. But it is no longer good law in view of the present section 350A, because the Magistrate P was not present throughout the proceedings.

Where out of three Magistrates constituting a Bench, only one is present on all hearings throughout the trial, sitting sometimes with one, sometimes with the other, and sometimes with both, the trial is bad as contravening the provisions of this section, even though the quorum consisted of two—Banwari, 7 Lah. 122, 27 Cr.L.J. 463, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 304. Thus, a Bench of Magistrates consisted of A, B and C. A and B began the trial and recorded a portion of the evidence. B and C sat at the next two hearings, and all the three sat at the subsequent hearings and signed the judgment. Held that the trial was bad as it contravened the provisions of this section, even though the quorum required was only two—Sutaj Bai, 4 O.W.N. 1240, 29 Cr.L.J. 310 (311), A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 212, 107 I.C. 875; Brij Bhukhan v. Ram Kirat, 10 O.L.J. 614, 25 Cr.L.J. 198, A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 163 (165). In order that the conviction should be legal, it must be by a quorum of Magistrates required under the rules, each of whom has heard the whole evidence—Nihchal, 13 S.L.R. 166, 53 I.C. 609, 20 Cr.L.J. 769.

1020. Absence of unnecessary Magistrates:—Where a trial was begun before a Bench of seven Magistrates, and when the judgment was pronounced, only five out of the seven were present, and these five members constituted a legal Bench, it was held that the mere circumstance that two out of the seven Magistrates were absent on the day on which the accused was convicted did not affect the legality of the conviction, as the other five Magistrates who legally constituted the Bench attended the trial from beginning to end—Karuppana v. Chairman, 21 Mad. 246. Where two Magistrates who decided a case sat throughout the trial and constituted the quorum of the Bench, the trial would not be vitiated by the mere fact that two other Magistrates who were not necessary to the quorum and who were present at the time of the commencement of the inquiry were not on the Bench at the time of the decision of the case—Venkatrama v. Swaminatha, 38 Mad. 797, 15 Cr.L.J. 549; Balbhadri v. Tirubhan, 6 Cr.L.J. 43, 3 N.L.R. 67; Khuda Baksh, 15 A.L.J. 463, 18 Cr.L.J. 749. But if by reason of the absence of a member, the remaining members did not legally constitute the Bench, the trial could not proceed. Thus, where a Bench consisted of A, B and C, but

A was absent on the first day of trial when the witnesses were examined and also on the day of judgment, it was held that the conviction of the accused by B and C alone was bad and that there must be a retrial—Tantravali Bapiraju, 36 M.L.J. 362, 20 Cr.L.J. 823, 53 I.C. 823 (824).

Want of quorum:—Where a Bench of Magistrates established by the local Government is, under the notification establishing it, to consist of not less than two members, one member of the Bench cannot alone adjudicate upon a case—Lado, 1902 A.W.N. 148. Where a case was tried by a Bench of Magistrates, one of whom recorded the evidence while the other was sitting close by and going on with another case, held that as the hearing took place practically before only one of the Honorary Magistrates, the order must be set aside and the case tried de novo—Sultan v. Shamser, 25 O.C. 182, 23 Cr.L.J. 696, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 21. Where the rules relating to a Bench of Magistrates provide that two members shall constitute the quorum, the evidence recorded by a Magistrate sitting singly is not evidence recorded in a Court, and the mere reading over to the Bench, when properly constituted, of the statements so recorded would not render those statements admissible as evidence—Gulu, 20 S.L.R. 134, 27 Cr.L.J. 542 (543), 93 I.C. 1038, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 192. Similarly, a trial by two members of a Bench which according to rules must consist of not less than three members, is bad in law—Muthia, 16 Mad. 410. Thus, where a Bench of three Magistrates constituted under the rules commenced a trial and heard the prosecution evidence but afterwards one member of the Bench was absent, and the remaining two Magistrates went on with the trial, heard the defence evidence and convicted the accused, held that the trial having been in contravention of the rules was void. The trial ought to have been adjourned till the absent member was present, or it should have been held afresh before a different set of Magistrates—Mohideen, 44 Bom. 400, 21 Cr.L.J. 369. See also 36 M.L.J. 362, supra.

351. (1) Any person attending a Criminal Court, although Detention of offenders not under arrest or upon a summons, may attending Court be detained by such Court for the purpose of inquiry into or trial of any offence of which such Court can take cognizance and which, from the evidence, may appear to have been committed, and may be proceeded against as though he had been arrested or summoned

(2) When the detention takes place in the course of an inquiry under Chapter XVIII or after a trial has been begun, the proceedings in respect of such person shall be commenced afresh, and the witnesses reheard.

1021. This is a self-contained section and the cognizance which a Magistrate takes under this section in respect of an offence is independent of the provisions of sec. 190 (c). The accused against whom cognizance is taken under this section has full information as to the source and particulars of the materials upon which the Magistrate acts. He is thus not placed under a disability to combat the effect of the suspicious circumstances operating upon the mind of the Magistrate and influencing his judgment as in the case of a proceeding arising under clause (c) of sec. 190. Consequently, the provisions of sec. 191 are inapplicable where a Magistrate takes cognizance under this section—Sakhia, 5 N.L.R. 113 (144), 10 Cr.L.J. 303 (306), 3 I.C. 568. Sec. 190 finds place in a chapter which relates to the initiation of proceedings; whereas sec. 351 deals with a matter arising during the course of a proceeding already initiated—Sakhia, supra. Therefore, if a Magistrate who has already taken cognizance of a case on a complaint or a police report, joins as a co-accused in the case any person attending the Court (e.g., a prosecution witness) who seems to be implicated in the offence under trial, he acts under this section and not under sec. 190 (c)—Lalu, 4 S.L.R. 258, 12 Cr.L.J. 399, 11 I.C. 583; Sakhia, supra (dissenting from Khudiram, 1 C.W.N. 105); Intaz Khan, 35 Cr.L.J. 1312, 151 I.C. 406, 1934 Cr.C. 887, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 193, following Nga Chan Tha, 73 I.C. 55, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 31, 24 Cr.L.J. 519, 11 L.B.R. 398 (F.B.).

352. The place in which any Criminal Court is held for the purpose of inquiring into or trying any offence shall be deemed an open Court, to which the public generally may have access, so far as the same can conveniently contain them:

Provided that the presiding Judge or Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, order at any stage of any inquiry into, or trial of, any particular case, that the public generally, or any particular person, shall not have access to or be or remain in, the room or building used by the Court.

1022. Court to be open:—Jail trial:—This section does not necessarily make a trial in a jail invalid where there is nothing to show that admittance was refused to any one who desired it or that the prisoners were unable to communicate with their friends or counsel. But it is undesirable to hold trials in a jail, because it is difficult to get counsel to appear in jail—Sahai Singh, 1917 P.W.R. 21, 18 Cr.L.J. 852.

Trial in jail:—The Magistrate must pass a formal order directing that the trial should be held in the jail premises. Such a formal order must invariably be passed, as otherwise, if accused persons consider that they have a grievance in any matter it would be difficult for them, in the absence of any formal order, to have recourse to higher authority for redress. It is as well to point out here that it is ordinarily for the trying Magistrate to take the initiative in these matters if he considers that the trial should not be held in his court-house. If, however, the Magistrate, who is responsible for law and order in his district, wishes to take the initiative in such matters himself, his proper course is not to move the Local Government himself straightway in the matter, but to instruct the Public Prosecutor to make an application to the Magistrate asking that the trial shall be held elsewhere. It is then for the Magistrate to pass formal orders as to whether he considers it desirable to hold a trial in the Court or outside it. If the Magistrate then wishes to try the case in a place other than his Court, he will do so after obtaining the permission of the necessary authorities who are in control of the premises in which the Magistrate desires to hold the trial—U Khemein, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 72 (73), 41 Cr.L.J. 497, 187 I.C. 640, 1940 Rang. 122.

Trial in Camera:—Where a Magistrate conducted a trial in camera in the exercise of his own discretion under the proviso to this section and no objection to this course was made, the proceedings of the Magistrate cannot be upset on that ground unless the applicant can show that he was in fact prejudiced by the case being tried not in open Court—W. E. Gardner v. U Kha, 38 Cr.L.J. 48, 165 I.C. 596, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 471, 1936 Cr.C. 961.

Trial in the Magistrate's private room:—A trial is not illegal when it is held in the Magistrate's private room without objection by the parties—Narayanaswamy, 12 Bur.L.R. 59, 3 Cr.L.J. 433.

Evidence of pardanashin lady:—The evidence of a Ghosha woman should be taken behind a purdah at a private place where she can come, in the presence of the accused only, the Judge taking such precaution as he can to secure her identity—Anonymous, 2 Weir 432.

Exclusion of police officers:—A police-officer who has investigated into a case should not be allowed to be present before a Magistrate when he records a confession made by the accused—Ramananda, 1885 A.W.N. 221.

This section gives power to the Court of ordering that any particular person shall not remain in the room used by the Court. It makes no exception in the case of a Police-officer. When the accused person objects to the presence of a Police-officer or other person, the Magistrate has to decide whether the accused's fear of prejudice to his case is reasonable, considering the intelligence and susceptibilities of the class to which he belongs, and not merely whether the presence is convenient or helpful to the Court or the prosecution. It is not advisable that a Police-officer interested in the case proceeding before the Magistrate should receive exceptional treatment, as a seat on a dais, as it is calculated to breed suspicion in the mind of the accused as to the independence of the Magistrate—Nathu Singh, 8 N.L.J. 95, 26 Cr.L.J. 1130, 88 I.C. 362.

CHAPTER XXV.

OF THE MODE OF TAKING AND RECORDING EVIDENCE IN INQUIRIES AND TRIALS.

353. Except as otherwise expressly provided, all evidence taken under Chapters XVIII, XX, XXI, XXII and XXIII shall be taken in the presence of the accused, or, when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his pleader.

1023. Scope of section:—This section lays down that all evidence shall be taken in the presence of the accused; and it includes both the evidence for the prosecution as well as for the defence. Where, after all the prosecution witnesses were examined, the accused absconded, and the witnesses named by him were examined in his absence and he was convicted, the conviction was held to be illegal—Nga Po Shian, U.B.R. (1912) 4th Qr. 152, 14 Cr.L.J. 287, 19 I.C. 719.

If the witnesses are examined in the absence of the accused, and there is nothing to show that his personal attendance has been dispensed with, the trial is invalid and the conviction will be set aside. The fact that the Mukhtar of the accused was present and raised no objection and cross-examined the witnesses, cannot cure the illegality—Bigan, 6 Pat. 691, 29 Cr.L.J. 260, 107 I.C. 530. An order against a person is wholly illegal if it is based on evidence which was recorded behind his back at a time when he was not a party to the proceeding—Narayan v. Chandrabhaga Bai, 26 Cr.L.J. 1289, 89 I.C. 153, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 457. When a pardanashin lady was examined in a passage screened from the direct view of the Court and her voice could be perfectly heard in the Court and by the accused, and he made no objection, it was held that the evidence was virtually heard in the presence of the accused—Hassan Khan, 1887 P.R. 41. But pardanashin ladies should not be generally summoned to appear in Court to give evidence but may be examined on commission—Huro Sundery, 4 Cal. 20; Basant Bibi, 12 All. 69; Faridunnissa, 5 All. 92 (93).

Two trials were held of two sets of accused who were the opposite parties in a fight; in each the accused wanted the evidence for the prosecution in the cross-case to be treated as defence evidence, and the Sessions Judge did so. Held that in such a case the defence evidence being one given by the prosecution in the other case, was obviously one given in the absence of the accused. This was a violation of the provisions of this section and was not only irregular but illegal—Allu, 4 Lah. 376; Muhammad, 25 Cr.L.J. 551, 81 I.C. 39, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 149. Following this case it is laid down that it is illegal to read out the depositions of the witnesses, as they come into the witness-box, made on a previous occasion, to put a few more questions to them and then to tender them for cross-examination—Lyene, 25 Cr.L.J. 377, 77 I.C. 425, 4 Lah. 382, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 17. See Note 830A. Where a charge was framed and evidence taken against the accused by the committing Magistrate, when he was incapacitated from attending the Court by a gunshot wound, held that the commitment made on evidence taken in the absence of the accused was void, and the subsequent trial and conviction must be set aside—Khanan, 1913 P.L.R. 260. Where the evidence of witnesses taken in the absence of the prisoner at a former trial was read out to them and put in as evidence at the present trial, it was held that the proceeding was irregular and prejudicial to the prisoner, and that such witnesses should have been subjected to a fresh oral examination in the presence of the prisoner—Bishonath, 12 W.R. 3. See also Nund Ram, 9 All. 609; Buldev, Ratanlal 24.

The Magistrate should not only take the evidence in the presence of the accused, but his record must show on the face of it that he had done so. The Magistrate should, by the use of a few apt words on the face of the deposition, make it apparent that he had taken the evidence in the presence of the accused—Pohop Singh, 10 All. 174.

Where depositions of witnesses in the previous trial were exhibited without actually examining them de novo before a succeeding Judge who decided to hold the trial de novo, held that the procedure was contrary to law, even when it was adopted with the consent of the accused—Umar Hajee, 46 Mad. 117. But where the defence witnesses were called and examined in the presence of the accused and they swore to the truth of their previous statements made by them as prosecution witnesses in the counter-case, which were then filed with their consent to save them, held that there was nothing illegal or irregular in the procedure—Krishnayya, A.I.R. 1930 Mad 505, 53 Mad. 775, 58 M.L.J. 547, 1930 M.W.N. 410, 127 I.C. 289, 31 Cr.L.J. 1191, 1930 Cr.C. 577.

When his personal attendance is dispensed with :—See sec. 205. The presence of an accused person may be dispensed with on ground of his ill-health—King, 14 Bom.L.R. 236, 13 Cr.L.J. 464, 15 I.C. 96. A respectable pardanashin woman should not ordinarily be compelled to appear in person in the first instance unless and until there is a strong likelihood of the charge being proved—Habbo, 1909 P.W.R. 5, 9 Cr.L.J. 158; Kandamani, 45 Mad. 359; and where her presence is dispensed with, the evidence may be recorded in the presence of her pleader—Prem Kaur v. Mai Sham, 1908 P.W.R. 20; Kandamani, 45 Mad 359, 23 Cr.L.J. 266.

In a summary trial an accused appeared when some of the prosecution witnesses had already been examined in the case against the co-accused. They were not recalled or not examined in his presence. Held that the trial of the case against the accused was legally bad and his conviction could not be supported—Chhotey Lal, 28 Cr.L.J. 756, 103 I.C. 836, 1 Luck. Case 265, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 353.

354. In inquiries and trials (other than summary trials)

under this Code by or before a Magistrate (other than a Presidency Magistrate) or Sessions Judge, the evidence of the witnesses shall be recorded in the following manner.

355. (1) In summons cases tried before a Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate, and in cases of the offences mentioned in sub-section (1) of section 260, clauses (b) to (m), both inclusive, when tried by a Magistrate of the first or second class, and in all proceedings under section 514 (if not in the course of a trial), the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as the examination of the witness proceeds.

(2) Such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate with his own hand, and shall form part of the record.

(3) If the Magistrate is prevented from making a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of his inability to do so, and shall cause such memorandum to be made in writing from his dictation in open Court, and shall sign the same, and such memorandum shall form part of the record.

1024. Scope of section:—In summons cases, the deposition may be recorded in the form of a memorandum; but it is not necessary that the recorded deposition should be read over to the accused, and an omission to do so cannot be regarded as a fatal defect—Anonymous, 2 Weir 433

In cases referred to in sec. 260, if they are tried summarily, only the substance of the evidence must be embodied in the judgment, as well as the particulars mentioned in sec. 264. If those cases are tried regularly, instead of summarily, the procedure of this section is to be followed—Kuchi, 3 LBR 3, 2 CrLJ. 375. There are certain offences which a Magistrate may try summarily under the provisions of sec 260, Cr. P. C. If he does so try them he is not required to make any memorandum of the evidence at all. If he does not try them under the provisions of sec 260, Cr P C, but tries them in the ordinary course, he is required, under this section, to make a memorandum of evidence. He is not required to record the evidence in the language of the Court or have it so recorded—Mohammad Rafiq Ahmad, 37 CrLJ 710, 162 IC 758, AIR. 1936 All 319, 1936 ALJ 274, 1936 CrC 476. The language of sec 354 ("other than summary trials") shows that sec 355 does not apply to a summary trial, and in such a trial, the Magistrate need not make any memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness. Even if he makes such a memorandum, the notes do not form part of the record and need not and should not be kept on the record; the Magistrate is at liberty to destroy the notes if he pleases—Mantoo, 49 All 261, 25 ALJ. 140, 28 CrLJ 97 (dissenting from Satish Chandra, 48 Cal 280, 61 IC. 846, 32 CLJ. 451, 22 CrLJ 462); Ismail, 25 ALJ 346, 28 CrLJ. 442, 101 IC 474. Following the Allahabad High Court it is laid down that in summary cases the recording of evidence is governed by secs 263 and 264 and that sec. 355 has no application at all to summary cases—Tippanna, 35 Cr.L.J. 841, 148 IC. 1006, 36 BomLR. 212, A.I.R. 1934 Bom 157, 58 Bom. 298. See Note 864 under sec. 263. This section applies to offences coming within clauses (b) to (m) of sec. 260, but not to offences falling under sec. 261. Therefore, in a trial of an offence specified in sec 261, the Magistrate is not bound to make any memorandum of evidence. Even if he takes down rough notes of evidence in such a trial they do not form part of the record and may be destroyed by him—Chimanlal, 29 BomLR. 710, 28 CrLJ. 537 (538), 102 IC. 345, Maung Po Saw, AIR 1935 Rang. 106, 36 Cr.L.J. 892, 156 IC. 183, 13 Rang. 225, 1935 CrC 315.

In proceedings under Chapter XXXVI (maintenance proceedings) the evidence ought not to be recorded as in summary trials, but in the manner provided by this section—Kalidasi v. Durga Charan, 20 Cal. 351.

There is no provision as to the language in which the memorandum is to be recorded. But there is also no provision which renders it illegal for an Indian second class Magistrate to record the memorandum in English. Such a procedure is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the trial, unless a failure of justice has been occasioned thereby—Gopal, 19 Mad. 269, 6 MLJ. 134.

Under sub-section (2) the Magistrate must sign the record; if he omits to do so, the illegality vitiates the trial—Balkeshwar, 3 P.L.T. 322, 23 Cr.L.J. 114, A.I.R. 1922 Pat 5, 65 IC. 546. This view has not been followed by the same High Court in a recent case where it has been held that the failure of the Magistrate merely to sign his memorandum cannot be regarded, since the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul Rahman v. King-Em, 5, Rang. 53, 100 IC. 227, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 44, 31 C.W.N. 271, 25 A.L.J. 117, 1927 M.W.N. 103, 38 M.L.T. 64, 8 P.L.T. 155, 4 O.W.N. 283, 28 Cr.L.J. 259, 6 Bur.L.J. 65, 52 M.L.J. 585, 29 Bom.L.R. 813, 45 C.L.J. 441 (P.C.), as sufficient by itself, to vitiate the conviction—Mohsin v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 283, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 272, 1940 P.W.N. 93, 186 I.C. 312.

Under sec. 355 as well as under sec. 356, Cr. P. C., a Magistrate is obliged to make a memorandum of the substance of evidence with his own hand, unless he records valid reason for not doing so. It cannot possibly be conceded that a Magistrate is entitled to attend to other work during the hearing of a case, and to plead that other work as the reason of his inability to comply with the requirements of the Cr. P. C., with regard to the recording of evidence. The irregularity is clearly of much more than a technical nature and it vitiates the trial—Jagmohan Singh, 38 Cr.L.J. 150, 165 I.C. 224, 1936 O.L.R. 728, 9 RO 294, 1937 O.W.N. 56, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 126, 1937 A.Cr.C. 5.

writing by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge, he shall, as the examination of each witness proceeds, make a memorandum of the substance of what such witness deposes; and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge with his own hand, and shall form part of the record.

(4) If the Magistrate or Sessions Judge is prevented from making a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of his inability to make it.

Change:—Sub-section (2A) has been added by section 96 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reason is thus stated: "Section 356 does not provide for evidence being taken down in any other language than that of the Court or, if the language of the Court is not English, in English. The result is a certain loss of accuracy whenever evidence is given in a third language, as it has to be translated into, and taken down, in the language of the Court or in English. The object of the amendment is to secure greater accuracy and to avoid waste of time in translation"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921).

The words "or cause it to be taken superintendence" in sub-section (2A) are intended "to meet the case of a Magistrate or Judge who does not know the language in which the evidence is given. In such cases it will be necessary for the Magistrate or Judge to have the statement recorded in the language in which the evidence is given"—Legislative Assembly Debates, 7th February 1923, page 2035.

1025. Record of evidence:—It was held in some cases that the provisions of this section were imperative, and omission to record the evidence in the mode prescribed by this section was a material irregularity sufficient to set aside the proceedings—Janki Prosad, 19 Cr L.J. 235, 43 I.C. 827 (Pat.); Barmajit, 1891 A.W.N. 145; and so where a Magistrate made no vernacular record of the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses, the procedure was held to be illegal—Matai v. Anant Ram, 1890 A.W.N. 161; Udit Narain, 17 A.L.J. 1146, 21 Cr L.J. 28, 54 I.C. 172. But the authority of these decisions is now shaken by the pronouncement of the Privy Council in Abdul Rahman, 5 Rang 53 (P.C.). See this case cited in Note 1029 under sec. 360. And so, where in a proceeding under sec. 145, the Magistrate recorded the evidence of the witnesses in English, but no vernacular record of the evidence was made either by the Magistrate or by any other person in his presence and hearing, as required by sub-section (1), held that it was a mere irregularity curable by the provisions of sec. 537. The mere fact that an imperative statutory rule of procedure has been broken is not enough to vitiate the trial or proceeding. The Court should consider the gravity of the irregularity or omission, and whether it might have worked actual injustice to the accused. In this case, the evidence of the witnesses was recorded fully and accurately, consequently it could not be said that the irregularity prejudiced the accused in any way—Kallu v. Bashiruddin, 53 All. 172, 1930 A.L.J. 1504, 1931 Cr C. 3 (6), 129 I.C. 269, 32 Cr.L.J. 372, A.I.R. 1931 All 3; Sankatha v. Biswanath, 32 Cr L.J. 368, 129 I.C. 265, A.I.R. 1931 All 2, 1931 Cr C. 2, Ind Rul 1931 All 137; Natho Khan, 34 Cr L.J. 216, 141 I.C. 628, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 145, 26 S.L.R. 353, 1932 Cr C. 681, Ind. Rul 1933 Sind 67. The evidence was not taken down in writing by the Judge himself. He did not make a memorandum of the substance of what the witnesses deposed, as required by cl. (3) of this section. The evidence was taken down in the presence and hearing and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge and the depositions of the witnesses were read over and interpreted to them in the presence of the accused and their pleader and admitted to be correct. Held that the omission or irregularity was cured by the provisions of sec. 537, Cr. P. C., as the accused were not prejudiced in any way—Nayab Shahana, 35 Cr L.J. 1479, 152 I.C. 44, 38 C.W.N. 659, 61 Cal. 399, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 636, 1934 Cr.C. 929, A.I.R. 1935 Cal 579.

The provisions of sub-sec. (1) are imperative, and the entire evidence must be recorded fully either by the Magistrate himself, or by somebody else under the direction of the Magistrate. In the latter case (i.e., where the evidence is recorded by any person other than a Magistrate), the Magistrate should under sub-sec. (3) make a memorandum of the evidence. But sub-sec. (3) does not override the provisions of sub-sec. (1) but is merely supplementary to it. In other words, the fact that the Magistrate is making a memorandum of the evidence does not do away with the necessity of the evidence being fully recorded by some other officer of the Court. Where a Magistrate, in a proceeding under sec. 145, neither recorded the evidence fully in his own hand, nor caused it to be recorded fully by anybody else, but simply made a memorandum of the evidence, purporting to act under sub-sec. (3), it was held that the provision of sub-sec. (1) not being complied with, the whole proceedings must be set aside—Sadananda v. Krishna Mandal, 42 Cal 381, 19 C.W.N. 124, 16 Cr.L.J. 192. See also Natho Khan, 32 Cr.L.J. 216, 141 I.C. 628, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 145, 26 S.L.R. 353, 1932 Cr.C. 681, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 67.

If the Court consists of more than one Judge (e.g., a Tribunal of three Commissioners constituted under the Defence of India Act), it is not necessary that all the Judges should sign the deposition. It is sufficient if the Presiding Officer alone signs it—Taj Mahmud, 29 P.L.R. 14, 29 Cr.L.J. 212 (214), 107 I.C. 100, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 125, 15 Lah. 407.

Where there is a discrepancy in a material part of the evidence of the principal prosecution witnesses between the record in the vernacular in which that witness gave evidence and the record in English, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt created thereby. Generally speaking, the evidence as recorded in the vernacular in which the witnesses deposed is entitled to a greater weight and is more reliable than the record made in the English language, but where the Magistrate who made the English record was an experienced Magistrate fully conversant with the vernacular in which the witness gave his evidence, the English record is also reliable; but all the same, the accused is entitled to the benefit of any doubt caused by the discrepancy between the two records—Sadhu Singh, 24 Cr.L.J. 624 (Lah.).

Where the evidence was taken in the language of the Court by the Magistrate's recorder, the omission on the part of the Magistrate to make a memorandum of the evidence under sub-sec. (3) did not vitiate the proceedings, where it appeared that the Magistrate carefully heard the evidence, clearly appreciated its gist, took considerable care in sifting the evidence and arrived at a correct conclusion. But still the Magistrate ought to have followed the provisions of sub-sec. (3) and ought not to have ignored them—Sumran, 4 O.W.N. 1200, 29 Cr.L.J. 70.

357. (1) The Provincial Government may direct that in any Language of record of district or part of a district, or in proceedings before any Court of Session, or before any Magistrate or class of Magistrates the evidence of each witness shall, in the cases referred to in section 356, be taken down by the Sessions Judge or Magistrate with his own hand and in his mother-tongue, unless he is prevented by any sufficient reason from taking down the evidence of any witness, in which case he shall record the reason of his inability to do so and shall cause the evidence to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court.

(2) The evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Sessions Judge or Magistrate and shall form part of the record:

Provided that the Provincial Government may direct the Sessions Judge or Magistrate to take down the evidence in the English language, or in the language of the Court, although such language is not his mother-tongue.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1026. The authority conferred on an officer by this section is personal to that officer and remains in force only so long as he remains in the particular district in which it has been conferred—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 9. Therefore, where a Magistrate empowered to record the deposition in his own handwriting while in district B did the same when he was transferred to another district, under the belief that the authority previously given to him in the district B was personal to him and still remained in force, and committed the accused for trial, it was held that the Magistrate's proceeding was irregular; but since the accused was not prejudiced thereby, his commitment was not set aside—Chattandiyil Kalu Nair, 2 Weir 434 (435).

The plea of the accused need not be recorded in the words of the very language in which it is made; when it is a foreign language, the record must be in the language in which it is interpreted to the Court—Vaimbilee, 5 Cal 826.

358. In cases of the kind mentioned in section 355, the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, take down the evidence of any witness in the manner provided in section 356, or, if within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Magistrate the Provincial Government has made the order referred to in section 357, in the manner provided in the same section.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1027. The ordinary and proper and convenient way of recording evidence is to take it down in the first person, exactly as spoken by the witness—Zoolfikar, 16 W.R. 36. The Judge should in taking down evidence adhere as far as possible to the words actually used either in the question or in the answer given by the witness. The provisions of law will not be complied with by recording a more or less accurate paraphrase of the evidence given by a witness—Nga Saw, 11 Bur L.R. 8. The Judge is not bound to make a verbatim record of any particular questions and answers. It is left to the discretion of the Judge, if either side specially requests him to do so—Ibid.

359. (1) Evidence taken under section 356 or section 357 shall not ordinarily be taken down in the form of question and answer, but in the form of a narrative.

(2) The Magistrate or Sessions Judge may, in his discretion, take down, or cause to be taken down, any particular question and answer.

360. (1) As the evidence of each witness taken under section 356 or section 357 is completed, it shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused, if in attendance, or of his pleader, if he appears by pleader, and shall, if necessary, be corrected.

(2) If the witness denies the correctness of any part of the evidence when the same is read over to him, the Magistrate or Sessions Judge may, instead of correcting the evidence, make a memorandum thereon of the objection made to it by the witness, and shall add such remarks as he thinks necessary.

(3) If the evidence is taken down in a language different from that in which it has been given and the witness does not understand the language in which it is taken down, the evidence so taken down shall be interpreted to him in the language in which it was given, or in a language which he understands.

1028. Object and Scope of section:—The object of this section is to give an opportunity to the witnesses to explain or correct the statements made by them—Ramdhari, 4 P.L.W. 44, 19 Cr.L.J. 169. This section is enacted for the protection of witnesses; it provides that a witness in order to satisfy himself that the evidence which has been taken down is correct may have it interpreted to him, if he desires it, in a language which he understands—In re Okhoy, 7 CLR. 393.

This section applies to evidence recorded under sec. 356 or 357, but not to evidence recorded in summons cases under sec. 355. Where the evidence in a summons case is recorded in the form of a memorandum, under sec. 355, it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to read over the memorandum of the deposition to the witness—Ramdhari, 4 P.L.W. 44, 19 Cr.L.J. 169; and omission to do so is not fatal to the conviction—Anonymous, 2 Weir 433.

In an inquiry under sec. 107, the evidence must be recorded as in a summons case (see sec. 117), i.e., it must be recorded in the manner prescribed in sec. 355, and not as laid down in sec. 356 or sec. 357. Sec. 360 does not apply to a case in which the evidence is recorded under sec. 355 and hence in an inquiry under sec. 107 it is not necessary that the deposition should be read over to the witness in the presence of the accused—Legal Remembrancer v. Jafar, 52 Cal 668, 26 Cr.L.J. 1456.

But in an inquiry in a good behaviour case, the provisions of sec. 360 will apply, and failure to comply with those provisions would vitiate the inquiry or trial—Sanatan, 52 Cal. 632, 41 C.L.J. 352, 26 Cr.L.J. 1240; Nawab Ali, 52 Cal. 470, 26 Cr.L.J. 1233.

This section applies to proceedings under sec. 145, and the evidence of each witness must be read over to him in the presence of the accused, the term "accused" being applicable to persons proceeded against under Chap. XII. Even if the term "accused" does not apply to such persons, still this section would cover the proceedings under Chap. XII, because sec. 356 (which is referred to in this section) expressly mentions Chap. XII—Ram Narain v. Dhontai, 3 P.L.T. 291, 23 Cr.L.J. 125; Aswini Kumar v. Puti, 52 Cal 437, 29 C.W.N. 474, 26 Cr.L.J. 914. But a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has laid down that the parties to the proceedings under sec. 145 are not 'accused' persons, and that, therefore, the provisions of sec. 360 apply to proceedings under sec. 145 only to this extent that the evidence of each witness must be read over to that witness; and that the attendance of the parties at the reading over is not necessary—Narendra v. Sabarati, 52 Cal 721, 29 C.W.N. 701, 41 C.L.J. 479, 26 Cr.L.J. 1191 (F.B.). This decision practically overrules the case of Ishan Chandra v. Hriday, 29 C.W.N. 475, 26 Cr.L.J. 915, where it was held that the word 'accused' not being applicable to the parties in a proceeding under Chap. XII, sec. 360, had no application at all to such a proceeding, and it was not obligatory to read over the deposition to the witnesses. In a later Patna case, it has been held that even an omission to read over the evidence to the witness is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate an order under sec. 145—Sondhi Singh v. Sri Govind, 5 P.L.T. 237, 25 Cr.L.J. 89.

A Tribunal constituted under the Defence of India Act is bound to follow the provisions of this section. Even though the Commissioners forming the Tribunal are authorised to make only a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness, instead of recording the evidence fully, still the memorandum must be read over to the witness under this section—Taj Mahmud, 29 P.L.R. 14, 29 Cr.L.J. 212 (215), 15 Lah. 407, 107 I.C. 100, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 125, 9 A.I. Cr.R. 505.

1029. Deposition must be read over to witness:—The Calcutta High Court held that the provisions of this section are obligatory and not merely directory. It is incumbent on the Judge to read over the deposition to each witness, even though such a procedure should occupy considerable time—Anrita Lal, 42 Cal. 957; Jyotish Chandra, 36 Cal. 955, 4 I.C. 416, 14 C.W.N. 82, 10 Cr.L.J. 581. And a departure from such a practice might lead to considerable embarrassment and place a serious impediment in the administration of justice—Jyotish Chandra, supra. The object of this section is to ensure the accuracy of the record, and omission to comply with the provisions of this section is an illegality which vitiates the trial, irrespective of whether the accused have been prejudiced or not, and is not a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537—Haronath v. Sonar, Mta, 28 C.W.N. 119, 38 C.L.J. 281, 25 Cr.L.J. 289; Hiralal, 28 C.W.N. 968, 52 Cal. 159, 83 I.C. 905, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 889, 26 Cr.L.J. 201, 41 C.L.J. 224. It is not a sufficient compliance with this section if the Magistrate merely hands over the recorded deposition to the witness to read it for himself and the witness reads it himself, 'because the section requires that the deposition must be read over in the presence, i.e., in the hearing of the accused, in order that the accused should have an opportunity of correcting any mistake in it—Jogendra, 42 Cal. 240; Sahorati, 26 Cr.L.J. 951, 87 I.C. 103, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1120; Muhammad Yasin, 88 I.C. 602, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 782, 26 Cr.L.J. 1178, 52 Cal. 431, 29 C.W.N. 650. It is not a sufficient compliance with this section if the deposition is read by a witness himself, and afterwards it is explained by the Judge to the accused in the absence of the witness—Jessarat, 29 C.W.N. 526, 87 I.C. 833, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 729, 26 Cr.L.J. 1009. But the Patna High Court holds that even though a deposition is not read over to the witness, according to the provisions of this section, but is read by the witness himself, still the deposition is legal evidence. In other words, non-compliance with this provision of the section does not vitiate the trial if the accused has not been prejudiced—Jagwa Dhanuk, 5 Pat. 63, 7 P.L.T. 396, 27 Cr.L.J. 484. See also Mohuddin, 4 Pat. 488, 6 P.L.T. 154, 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (815); Abdul Rahman, 27 Cr.L.J. 669, 4 Bur.L.J. 213; Mayeth, 3 Rang. 612, 27 Cr.L.J. 857. And the same view has recently been taken in the Privy Council case of Abdul Rahman, 5 Rang. 53, 31 C.W.N. 271, 28 Cr.L.J. 259 (P.C.), in which Lord Phillimore observed "Although it is regrettable that such an irregularity should creep in, and though it might be taken into account with other elements of objections to the satisfactory character of the trial, it would not by itself be a ground sufficient for quashing a conviction. The bare fact of such irregularity, unaccompanied by any probable suggestion of any failure of justice having been thereby occasioned, is not enough to warrant the quashing of a conviction, which may be supported by the curative provisions of sec. 537." Their Lordships disapproved of the ruling in the Calcutta case of Hiralal, 52 Cal. 159 (cited supra). The Privy Council ruling has since been followed by the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts in Fatiar, 31 C.W.N. 691, 28 Cr.L.J. 751, 103 I.C. 799, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 575; Jiwan v. Sheodan, 28 Cr.L.J. 514, 102 I.C. 210, A.I.R. 1927 All. 764; Bajai v. Ram Sarup, 28 Cr.L.J. 596, 102 I.C. 772, A.I.R. 1927 All. 757; Sher Mohammad v. Bihari, 28 Cr.L.J. 606, 102 I.C. 782, A.I.R. 1927 All. 755. The contrary view taken in the several Calcutta cases cited above as also in Mirabux v. Emp., 18 N.L.R. 192, 68 I.C. 36, 23 Cr.L.J. 500, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 39; Nabab Ali Sarkar, 51 Cal. 236, 81 I.C. 803, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 705, 25 Cr.L.J. 1027, Kamatchinanathan, 28 Mad. 308, 2 Cr.L.J. 756, Chenchiah, 42 Mad. 561, 50 I.C. 987, 36 M.L.J. 296, 9 M.L.W. 349, (1919) M.W.N. 183, 25 M.L.T. 356, 20 Cr.L.J. 379, A.I.R. 1919 Mad. 45, In re Kuppa Mudaliar, 49 Mad. 71, 49 M.L.J. 121, 26 Cr.L.J. 1587, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1206, 90 I.C. 659, 22 M.L.W. 339, 1925 M.W.N. 795 and Taj Mahmud, 15 Lah. 407, 107 I.C. 100, 29 P.L.R. 14, 29 Cr.L.J. 212, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 125, A.I.C.R. 505, must now be deemed as overruled—Sheoshankar Dhondbaji v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 410 (412), 11 Cr.L.J. 697, 188 I.C. 885, 1940 N.L.J. 165.

Depositions of witnesses which have not been read over to the witnesses are nevertheless admissible under sec. 145, Evidence Act, to contradict the witnesses in a subsequent trial—Fazlur Rahman, 6 Pat. 478, 28 Cr.L.J. 772.

This section lays down that the evidence of each witness shall be read over to him as it is completed, and this procedure should be strictly followed. It is not a sufficient compliance with this section to read out each sentence of the statement of a witness as it is being recorded—Wadhawa, 22 Cr.L.J. 669 (Lah.). The evidence of a witness is 'completed' when he has been examined-in-chief, cross-examined, and, if necessary, re-examined. Therefore, it is not improper, if the whole deposition is read over to the witness after his cross-examination is over. Thus, where a witness was examined on 18th November, and cross-examined on a subsequent day (on the 9th December) and then the Magistrate read over to him the whole of his deposition including his examination-in-chief on that day (9th December), the procedure was not illegal—Kamini Kumar, 33 C.W.N. 664, 1929 Cr.C. 26, 31 Cr.L.J. 373, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 390, 122 I.C. 209. But it is improper for the Magistrate to examine a number of witnesses and ask them to be in a room and then the deposition read over to them at the end of the day's work. Such a procedure is not merely an irregularity but an illegality vitiating the trial—In re Kuppa Mudalier, 49 Mad. 71, 49 M.L.J. 421, 26 Cr.L.J. 1587, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1206, 90 I.C. 659, 22 M.L.W. 339, 1925 M.W.N. 795; Abdul Bari, 42 C.L.J. 585, 27 Cr.L.J. 375, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 157; Shamserali, 53 Cal. 129, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 563, 27 Cr.L.J. 688.

There is nothing in the section to indicate the exact time when the deposition should be read over, and if the deposition is read over at the close of the cross-examination, it fulfils the requirements and objects of the section—Ramdhari, 4 P.L.W. 44, 19 Cr.L.J. 169.

'In the presence of the accused' :—The deposition must be read over to the witness, in the presence of the accused, so as to give the accused an opportunity to challenge the correctness of the record—Rameshar, 6 P.L.T. 493, 26 Cr.L.J. 927, 86 I.C. 991, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 723. It is improper to have the deposition of the witness read over to him by a clerk in the verandah of the Court-house, though both the witness and the clerk were in view in the accused. Such a deposition cannot be admitted in evidence—Nga San, U.B.R. (1912) 1st Qr. 123, 13 Cr.L.J. 569. If the accused is in attendance, the deposition must be read over in the presence of the accused, and not in the presence of his pleader. It is only when the accused appears by a pleader (i.e., when his personal attendance has been dispensed with) that the reading over of the evidence in the presence of the pleader is sufficient—Kasim Ali v. Sarad Kripa, 30 C.W.N. 336, 27 Cr.L.J. 509, 93 I.C. 973. But in a recent Calcutta case it has been held that the words "if he appears by pleader" in this section are not restricted to cases where the personal attendance of the accused has been dispensed with, but that a deposition may be read over in the presence of the pleader during a temporary absence of the accused—Hari Narayan, 46 C.L.J. 368, 29 Cr.L.J. 49 (53), 106 I.C. 545. Where the accused persons appear by pleaders, the deposition of a witness may be read over in the presence of a pleader of one of several accused—Rakkhal Chandra, 36 Cal. 808, 13 C.W.N. 942.

The object of reading over a deposition to a witness is to obtain an accurate record from him of what he really means to say, and to give him an opportunity of correcting the words which the Magistrate or his clerk has taken down. It is not to enable the accused or his advocate to suggest corrections. No doubt, the evidence has to be read over in the presence of the accused or his pleader. He is entitled to be sure that it has been read over, and that the witness has had an opportunity of correcting the written word. But the accused is not entitled to convey any suggestion to a witness in the form of a correction which would make him alter his evidence, though the accused may call attention to obvious slips. The primary object of this section is to fix the witness and to enable him to protect himself against any inaccuracy in the words taken down from his lips—Abdul Rahman, 5 Rang. 53, 31 C.W.N. 271, 25 A.L.J. 117, 28 Cr.L.J. 259 (262), 29 Bom.L.R. 813, 100 I.C. 227, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 44, 1927 M.W.N. 103, 38 M.L.T. 64, 8 P.L.T. 155, 4 O.W.N. 283, 6 Bur.L.J. 65, 52 M.L.J. 585, 45 C.L.J. 441 (P.C.); Sheeshanker Dhondbaji Mahar v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 697 (700), 188 I.C. 885, 1940 N.L.J. 165.

While the evidence of one witness is being read over to that witness, it is highly improper to proceed with the evidence of the next witness. Such a procedure is a violation of the provisions of this section, and vitiates the inquiry or trial—Manik, 41 C.L.J. 393, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 933, 88 I.C. 1043, 26 Cr.L.J. 1267; Adiladdi, 26 Cr.L.J.

1016 (Cal.); Singhi Eradu, 2 Weir 435; Darghai, 52 Cal. 499, 26 Cr.L.J. 1213. The Rangoon High Court holds that such a procedure does not vitiate the trial but is a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537—Abdul Rahaman, 4 Bur.L.J. 213, 27 Cr.L.J. 669. A similar view has been taken in Muthu Kumara, 21 M.L.J. 411, 12 Cr.L.J. 44. This view has since been affirmed by the Privy Council in Abdul Rahman, 5 Rang 53 (P.C.).

Perjury—When a deposition is not read over to a witness in the presence of the accused according to the provisions of sub-sec. (1), the witness cannot be prosecuted for perjury—Mavadeb, 6 Cal 762; Jyotish Chandra, 36 Cal 955; Mahendra, 12 C.W.N. 845, 8 Cr.L.J. 116; Ram Narain v. Dhanrai, 3 P.L.T. 291, 23 Cr.L.J. 125; Brahmadeo, 2 P.L.T. 380; Kartar Singh, 1917 P.R. 12, 18 Cr.L.J. 607 (608), 39 I.C. 847, 15 P.W.R. 1917 (Cr.); Kadir, 18 Cr.L.J. 966, 11 Bur.L.T. 202; Kamatchinathan, 28 Mad. 308, 2 Cr.L.J. 756; Nelluri, 42 Mad 561; Jogendra, 42 Cal. 240, 18 C.W.N. 1242; Kesar v. Sultan-ul-Mulk, 28 Cr.L.J. 651, 103 I.C. 107; Taj Mahmud, 29 Cr.L.J. 212 (215), 107 I.C. 100, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 505, 15 Lah. 407, A.I.R. 1928 Lah 125, 29 P.L.R. 14. But according to the Burma High Court a witness can be prosecuted for perjury in spite of the fact that his deposition has not been read over to him in the presence of the accused; the deposition should not be treated as a nullity merely because of the irregularity; it can be proved by other evidence, e.g., by evidence that the witness admitted it to be correct when it was read over to him, and by the evidence of the Judge or Magistrate who recorded it—Tunya, 12 Bur.L.T. 167, 20 Cr.L.J. 506, 51 I.C. 666. This section is intended to protect the accused as well as the witnesses. Where the accused in the case in which the witness is examined takes no objection of his deposition as recorded by the Court, it must be inferred that he is in no way prejudiced by the irregularity, if any. So far as the witness himself is concerned, no prejudice in any case is caused to him when he admits to the Court that his deposition has been read out to him and that it has been clearly recorded. Therefore, in a trial for an offence of perjury his deposition is admissible in evidence—Shroshanker Dhondaji Mahar v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 697 (700), 188 I.C. 885, 1940 N.L.J. 165, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 410 (413). So also it has been held in In re Bogra, 8 M.L.T. 117, 11 Cr.L.J. 482, 7 I.C. 414, 1910 M.W.N. 435, 20 M.L.J. 943, 34 Mad 141, that evidence read over to the witness in the absence of the accused may not be used as evidence against the accused but may be the basis of a prosecution of the witness for perjury. See also Rakhal, 36 Cal 808 (815), and Ramesh, 46 Cal. 895, where the Calcutta High Court seems also to have been taken the contrary view. It should, however, be noted that the decision in Ramesh, is with reference to O. XVIII, r. 5, C. P. Code.

Under this section, the Magistrate is not required to record a memorandum at the end of each deposition that the deposition was read over in the presence of the accused, though it is much better to do so in order to prevent complaints as to his not having done so—Rameshwar, 6 P.L.T. 493, 86 I.C. 991, A.I.R. 1925 Pat 723, 26 Cr.L.J. 927; Bhagwat Singh, 4 Pat. 231, 6 P.L.T. 73, 26 Cr.L.J. 939. The absence of such a memorandum does not prove that the deposition was not read over—Bhagwat, supra; Arjun Kurmi, 8 P.L.T. 166, 28 Cr.L.J. 77 (79). But the essential feature in verifying that this has been done is the certificate signed by the presiding officer of the Court. This is a statutory provision. Any initialling by the Reader prior to the signature by the Judge is unessential and is merely done for the Reader's own convenience or for the more certain satisfaction of the Judge; but when the Judge has certified that the evidence has been read over to the witness, it must be presumed until the contrary is shown that this has been done—Vithoo Raghaji v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 487 (490), 1938 N.L.J. 285.

An objection on the ground that the provisions of sec. 360 have not been observed should be taken at once. Where no such contention has been raised in the Courts below, it is not competent for the accused to put forward this objection for the first time in revision before the High Court—Arjun Kurmi, supra.

1030. Deposition may be corrected:—Before a deposition is closed, a witness should be given an opportunity of explaining and correcting any contradictions which it may contain, and the statement which the witness finally declares to be the true one must be taken to be that which he intended to make—Balkrishna, Ratanlal 51. An honest witness who wishes to alter or correct a statement he has once made, should be allowed to do so, and should not be deterred from doing so by the fear of a criminal charge—Habibulla, 10 Cal. 937.

If the Court instead of allowing the correction to be made, proceeds to make a memorandum according to sub-sec. (2), such memorandum must be appended to the deposition and care should be taken that the practice and the form prescribed by law are exactly adhered to—Komurooddee, 13 W.R. 17.

1031. Language:—If the deposition is recorded in a language which the witness does not understand, it must be interpreted to the witness in the language which he understands. If the deposition is read over to the witness in a language which is neither understood by the accused nor by the witness, it is an illegality which materially prejudices the accused—Issur Raut, 8 W.R. 63. But if the witnesses did not require their depositions to be interpreted to them in their own language, the reading over the depositions to them in a language which they did not understand, would not afford any ground for the accused to have his conviction set aside—In re Okhoy, 7 C.L.R. 393.

The distinction between sec. 360 and sec. 361 is very marked. Under the latter section if evidence is given in a language not understood by the accused or his pleader, it is to be interpreted in their language, while under sec. 360 when it is read over, it is to be interpreted to the witness in his own language, but there is no provision for its being interpreted to the accused. Thus, if the depositions are taken down in English, and the language of the accused is Hindee, and the language of the witness is Burmese, the depositions will have to be taken by getting the witness's answer in Burmese, having them interpreted to the Court so that they may be taken down in English, and further interpreted to the accused so that he may understand them in Hindee. When, however, the deposition comes to be read over, as it will be in English, it will be interpreted to the witness in Burmese, but not to the accused in Hindee; and if the accused neither knew English nor Burmese, he will be none the wiser—Abdul Rahman, 5 Rang. 53, 31 C.W.N. 271, 52 M.L.J. 585 (P.C.).

Sub-section (3) of this section does not mean that the deposition recorded in English should first be read over to the witness as recorded in English, and shall then be translated into the language in which the witness has deposed—Hari Narayan, 46 C.L.J. 368, 29 Cr.L.J. 49 (52), 106 I.C. 515.

361. (1) Whenever any evidence is given in a language not understood by the accused, and he is present in person, it shall be interpreted to him in open Court in a language understood by him.

Interpretation of evidence to accused or his pleader.

(2) If he appears by pleader and the evidence is given in a language other than the language of the Court, and not understood by the pleader, it shall be interpreted to such pleader in that language.

(3) When documents are put in for the purpose of formal proof, it shall be in the discretion of the Court to interpret as much thereof as appears necessary.

1031A. If the accused appears by a pleader who understands the language in which the evidence is given by the witness, the omission to interpret the evidence to the accused is not a material defect—Bhoobun, 24 W.R. 50; Arjun Kurmi, 8 P.L.T. 166, 28 Cr.L.J. 77 (79). When witnesses give evidence in English it should be translated to the accused ignorant of English. The omission is, however, a mere irregularity, cured by sec. 537, Cr. P. Code—Annai Errappa, 31 Cr.L.J. 827, 125 I.C. 253, 1929 M.W.N. 898, A.I.R. 1930 Mad 186, 31 M.L.W. 386, 1930 Cr.L.J. 186.

Under sub-sec. (3), it is not necessary to interpret formal documents such as Government Gazettes at length; that would be merely wasting time. It would be enough if the prisoner were made to understand what they were and for what purpose they were used—Ametrooddeen, 15 W.R. 25.

362. (1) In every case tried by a Presidency Magistrate in which an appeal lies, such Magistrate shall either take down the evidence of the witnesses with his own hand, or cause it to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court. All evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Magistrate and shall form part of the record.

Record of evidence in Presidency Magistrate's Courts.

(2) Evidence so taken down shall ordinarily be recorded in the form of a narrative, but the Magistrate may, in his discretion, take down, or cause to be taken down, any particular question or answer.

(2A) In every case referred to in sub-section (1), the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the examination of the accused. Such memorandum shall be signed by the Magistrate with his own hand, and shall form part of the record.

(3) Sentences unless they are sentences of imprisonment ordered to run concurrently passed under section 35 on the same occasion shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered as one sentence.

(4) In cases other than those specified in sub-section (1), it shall not be necessary for a Presidency Magistrate to record the evidence or frame a charge.

Change:—The opening words of sub-sec. (1) have been amended, the italicised words in sub-section (3) have been inserted; and sub-sections (2A) and (4) have been newly added, by sec 99 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below.

1032. Scope:—Summary trials:—The provisions as to summary trials do not apply to trials before Presidency Magistrates. A warrant case must be tried by them in the manner laid down in Chap XXI, subject to the provisions of this section as to the recording of evidence—Abdul, Ratanlal 539.

Reference under sec. 123 (2):—In cases where the Presidency Magistrate makes a reference to the High Court under sec. 123 (2), he must duly record the evidence, but it is not necessary that he should record it as fully as a Mofussil Magistrate—Nepal, 13 C.W.N. 318, 10 Cr.L.J. 122, 9 C.L.J. 430, 2 I.C. 651.

Sub-section (1):—The opening words of sub-sec. (1) were:—"In every case in which a Presidency Magistrate imposes a fine exceeding two hundred rupees or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months, he shall either", etc. "We think that the opening words of sub-sec. (1) of sec. 362 require amendment. As the section stands, it seems to imply that a Presidency Magistrate, before he commences his inquiry, must make up his mind as to the maximum limit of the sentence which he will impose. We think that the sub-section would read better as amended by us; compare the wording of sec. 261"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

But even this amendment does not improve the position, because in order to ascertain whether an appeal will lie from his sentence, the Presidency Magistrate will have to make up his mind whether he will pass a sentence of over six months' imprisonment or a fine exceeding two hundred rupees (sec. 411). The Joint Committee (1922) in confirming the above amendment has also admitted it :—

"We are inclined to agree with those critics who point out that the re-draft proposed in sub-sec. (1) of sec. 362 does not get rid of the difficulty that a Magistrate has to make up his mind as to the sentence he will impose before he begins trying the case. We do not see how this difficulty can be got rid of; but we think that the amendment proposed has the advantage of bringing the language of this section into conformity with the language of secs. 263 and 264, and we would, therefore, retain this sub-clause.

"In order to meet difficulties that have arisen, we have introduced a sub-sec. (2A) laying down that Presidency Magistrates, in cases subject to appeal, shall make a memorandum of the substance of the examination of the accused, and we have introduced a new clause making a consequential amendment in sub-sec. (4) of sec. 364."

Where a Presidency Magistrate sentences an accused person to imprisonment for more than 6 months, he is bound to record the evidence of witnesses, even though the sentence is imposed for the purpose of the detention of the accused in a reformatory—Md Roshan, 26 Bom.L.R. 1232, 26 Cr.L.J. 151, 85 I.C. 131.

A party is entitled to certified copies of the notes of the Presidency Magistrate—Beni Madhab v. Sailendra, 15 C.W.N. 770.

1033. Sub-section (2):—Mode of recording evidence :—Evidence should be recorded in the form of direct narration. Where a Presidency Magistrate, in contravention of the provisions of this section, recorded the evidence of some more or less formal witnesses in the form of an indirect narration, it was held that such irregularities in the mode of recording evidence, where no failure of justice had been occasioned thereby, were cured by sec. 537, and the trial was not on that account vitiated—Gulab Chand, 18 Cr.L.J. 336 (Mad.).

It is the duty of the Magistrate, in recording evidence under this section, to take a note of all the material facts, whether they appear in the course of the examination-in-chief or in the course of the cross-examination—Ah Foong, 46 Cal. 411, 22 C.W.N. 831, 20 Cr.L.J. 24.

This section lays down that when a Presidency Magistrate is going to pass an appealable sentence he shall ordinarily record the evidence in the form of a narrative. He may also at his discretion take down the evidence in the form of questions and answers. What is required is not merely the opinion of the Magistrate regarding the evidence given by the witnesses but a correct record of the evidence given by the witnesses. It is for the High Court to decide whether the evidence corroborates or contradicts the other evidence which can be done only if the evidence is before it. Where, therefore, in recording the evidence in chief of two witnesses the Magistrate merely records the following words, "corroborates P. W. 1," the provisions of sec. 362, Cr. P. C., are not complied with and the conviction cannot stand—Ghulam Dastgir Khan v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 623.

Sub-section (2A):—Record of examination of accused in non-appealable cases :—Sub-section (2A) provides for a memorandum of the substance of the examination of an accused person being kept by the Presidency Magistrate, signed by the Magistrate with his own hand in appealable cases only. Section 364 does not apply to a record made by a Presidency Magistrate of an examination of an accused person in the course of a trial held by him [see sub-sec. (4) of sec. 364]. The result is, that the Legislature has made no provision for the record of examination of the accused in non-appealable cases. But it may be inferred that, when the Legislature has expressly taken away the necessity to record the evidence and to frame a charge in non-appealable cases, by enacting sub-sec. (4) of sec 362, they have not certainly contemplated that the examination of an accused person in non-appealable cases should be recorded in full. It will be sufficient if the substance of the examination of the accused in non-appealable cases is recorded in the form provided under sec 370—Sadagar, 56 Cal. 1067, 33 C.W.N. 545, 30 Cr.L.J. 526, 49 CLJ 261. See also Ismail, 27 Cr.L.J. 110, 91 I.C. 542, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 692, cited under sec. 370.

Sub-section (3):—"Unless concurrently" —"It is provided that when sentences in excess of one are passed which are ordered to run concurrently, it is the heaviest sentence which determines the applicability of sec 362"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

1034. Sub-section (4):—"It is intended by this sub-section to remove the uncertainty which at present exists regarding the duties of a Presidency Magistrate in recording evidence and framing a charge in petty cases"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1915).

Sub-section (1) provides that the evidence must be fully recorded in cases where the Presidency Magistrate passes appealable sentences; and there is no obligation on the Magistrate to record evidence in non-appealable cases—Emaman, 31 Cal. 983; Shaikh Babu, 33 Cal. 1036, 4 Cr.L.J. 368. In a Bombay case it was held, prior to the present Amendment, that although the Magistrate had a discretion in cases not falling under this section to take down the evidence or not, still this discretion should be exercised judiciously in a reasonable spirit and not arbitrarily, and there should be a record of the evidence, so that the High Court in Revision could judge of the propriety or legality of the order passed by him—Harris Chandra, 10 Bom.L.R. 201, 7 Cr.L.J. 194. The new sub-sec. (4) now totally dispenses with the necessity of recording evidence in non-appealable cases, and practically over-rules the above Bombay case. Under the present sub-section, the Presidency Magistrate is not bound to record the evidence in non-appealable cases; if he likes to record any evidence, he may do so, but the High Court cannot compel him to record the evidence—D'Souza, 56 Bom. 200, 34 Bom.L.R. 286, 1932 Cr.C. 239 (240), 33 Cr.L.J. 404, 137 I.C. 188, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 180, Ind. Rul. 1932 Bom. 236, 1932 Cr.C. 239. The evidence in a proceeding held under sec 488 is to be recorded in the manner prescribed in the trial of summons-cases. See sec. 488 (6). But as summons-cases tried by Presidency Magistrates are not appealable (see sec. 411), a case under sec 488 tried by a Presidency Magistrate falls under sub-sec. (4) of sec. 362, and the Presidency Magistrate is not required to record any evidence—Chhogan Hargavan, 34 Bom.L.R. 276, 1932 Cr.C. 238. See also Hanifbai, 32 Bom.L.R. 1499, 1931 Cr.C. 190 (191), 32 Cr.L.J. 276, 129 I.C. 339, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 142, Ind. Rul. 1931 Bom. 147, where it has been laid down that when it appears to a Presidency Magistrate that he cannot finish the case at one hearing and he finds that he is obliged to put off the decision for a considerable time, he should, in the exercise of his wide discretion, make notes so as to enable him at the time of judgment to remember what evidence has been recorded and he should give his reasons for his decision in such detail as to make it clear to the parties as well as to the High Court that his judgment is based on a proper consideration of the evidence which has been given in the case.

It is only in non-appealable cases that a Presidency Magistrate is excused under this clause from framing a charge; in an appealable warrant case he is bound to frame a charge in accordance with sec. 254—Raghubir, 36 C.W.N. 791 (792), 33 Cr.L.J. 828, 55 C.L.J. 448, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 651, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 865, 1932 Cr.C. 889.

363. When a Sessions Judge or Magistrate has recorded the evidence of a witness, he shall also record such remarks (if any) as he thinks material respecting the demeanour of such witness whilst under examination.

Remarks respecting demeanour of witness.

1035. The object of this section is to give the Appellate Court some aid in estimating the value of the evidence recorded by the Magistrate—Rasoo Kullah, 12 W.R. 51. But though in criminal cases the Appellate Court should be guided by the remarks made under this section as to the demeanour of witnesses, yet it is bound to independently consider the facts of the case—Moula Balsh, 1898 P.R. 6. But where a Sessions Judge of experience had in the most emphatic manner stated that the demeanour of the witnesses was evasive, that they inspired him with no confidence, and that no man could be convicted on their testimony, the Appellate Court before accepting their testimony must be assured in the most positive and convincing manner that there was no ground for the Sessions Judge's criticism. Where the evidence is all oral, and its credibility is a mere matter of opinion, the opinion of the Court which heard the witnesses and noticed their demeanour must be treated as almost conclusive—Bishen Singh, 1914 P.L.R. 125, 15 Cr.L.J. 203.

It is always unsafe for a Judge or a Magistrate to pronounce an opinion as to the credibility of a witness, until the whole of the evidence has been taken. A Magistrate may note the demeanour of the witness, but except there is very clear proof afforded by his own statements that the witness is unworthy of credit, it is unsafe to assume that he is so, till the evidence has been exhausted—Palani Nandan, 2 Weir 435 (436). It is one thing to record a remark about the demeanour of the witness, and it is quite a different thing to make or record any remark or opinion as to the substance of the deposition of that witness. The parties are entitled to claim that the Magistrate shall not prejudice their cases or form an opinion about the respective merits of their cases or about the depositions of their witnesses, until they have been fully and finally presented to the Magistrate by the counsel in their concluding arguments and after the entire evidence has been recorded. Any opinion formed and expressed by the Magistrate at an earlier stage of the case is bound to be prejudicial to the party concerned, and he may apply for a transfer of the case to some other Magistrate—Sikandar Lal, 10 Lah. 778, 30 Cr.L.J. 129 (131), 113 I.C. 321, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 975, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 163, 31 P.L.R. 87.

This section, no doubt, empowers a Magistrate to record such remarks, if any, as he thinks material, respecting the demeanour of a witness whilst under examination. But a remark "the witness falters and from his demeanour it appears that he has not told the truth", shows that the witness has been altogether disbelieved by the Magistrate while recording the deposition of the witness and it is desirable that the case should be transferred to the file of some other Magistrate—Golam v. Yar Ali, 26 Cr.L.J. 852, 86 I.C. 708, 29 C.W.N. 316, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 180.

The Sessions Judge should not record his opinion that the accused looked like a murderer. The opinion of the Magistrate, who recorded the accused's confession, that his demeanour showed that he had done something wrong or seen something wrong being done and was suffering from a guilty conscience is not admissible—Naval, 30 Cr.L.J. 967, 118 I.C. 757, 6 O.W.N. 545, A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 381, Ind. Rul. 1929 Oudh 453.

364. (1) Whenever the accused is examined by any Magistrate, or by any Court other than a High Court established by Royal Charter or the Chief Court of Oudh, the whole of such examination, including every question put to him and every answer given by him, shall be recorded in full in the language in which he is examined, or, if that is not practicable, in the language of the Court or in English: and such record shall be shown or read to him, or, if he does not understand the language in which it is written, shall be interpreted to him in a language which he understands, and he shall be at liberty to explain or add to his answers.

(2) When the whole is made conformable to what he declares is the truth, the record shall be signed by the accused and the Magistrate or Judge of such Court, and such Magistrate or Judge shall certify under his own hand that the examination was taken in his presence and hearing and that the record contains a full and true account of the statement made by the accused.

(3) In cases in which the examination of the accused is not recorded by the Magistrate or Judge himself, he shall be bound, * * * * * as the examination proceeds, to make a memorandum thereof in the language of the Court, or in English, if he is sufficiently acquainted with the latter language; and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Judge with his own hand, and shall be annexed to the record. If the Magistrate or Judge is unable to make a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of such inability.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to the examination of an accused person under section 263, or in the course of a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate.

Change:—The words "Chief Court of Oudh" have been added by the Oudh Courts Act, XXXII of 1925. The italicised words at the end of sub-sec. (4) have been added and the words "unless he is a Presidency Magistrate" which occurred in sub-sec. (3) have been omitted, by the Criminal Procedure Code Second Amendment Act, XXXVII of 1923. The object of this amendment is "to make it clear that in cases where an appeal lies, the Presidency Magistrate shall take down a memorandum of the examination of the accused person as already provided in the new sub-sec. (2A) of sec. 362, and that in non-appealable cases no record of the examination of the accused need be made"—Statement of Objects and Reasons, (Gazette of India 1923, Part V, page 242). See also 56 Cal. 1067 cited in Note 1033 under sec. 362.

1036. Scope and application of section:—The rules laid down in this section are applicable to the examination of the accused under sec. 342—Nagar, 4 Bom L.R. 461. They are also applicable to confessions taken under sec. 164, in the course of an investigation. See sec. 164 (2). This section does not compel a Magistrate proceeding under sec. 164 to put a series of questions. Such procedure is ordinarily to be deprecated. The confessing person should be left to narrate his story, as a whole, without any unnecessary interference and allowed to give all the details that he remembers and wishes to describe—Ghena, 33 Cr.L.J. 414, 137 I.C. 95, 33 P.L.R. 16, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 180, 1932 Cr.C. 179, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 294. See also Pahlean, 31 Cr.L.J. 533, 123 I.C. 540, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 454.

This section does not apply to a summary trial. See sub-sec. (4). See also sec. 354 ('other than summary trials'). If a case is tried summarily, the Magistrate need not record the full statement of the examination of the accused in the form under sec. 364; i.e., he need not record the questions and answers in detail. It is sufficient if he makes a brief note of the examination on the record—Bhawani, 3 O.W.N. 946, 28 Cr.L.J. 76; Parsootim, 6 Pat. 504, 8 P.L.T. 757, 28 Cr.L.J. 1037, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 369. In a summary trial the Magistrate is not required to record the statement of the accused made in pursuance of an examination under sec. 342, Cr. P. C., in full and in the language in which it was made as sec. 364, Cl. (1), Cr. P. C., does not apply to summary trials. Where, therefore, after the close of the prosecution case the accused persons were examined and their statements were recorded by the Magistrate in English and were signed by them, held that there was sufficient compliance with the law—Banka Nath v. Abdul Kadir, 37 Cr.L.J. 1098, 165 I.C. 154, 39 C.W.N. 1306.

This section applies to the record of statement made by the accused. A person against whom no process has been issued is not in the position of an accused person, and if such person is examined in an inquiry under sec. 202, his statement cannot be regarded as having been recorded under this section—Sat Narain, 32 Cal. 1085.

This section does not apply where there has been no examination of the accused. The Magistrate only examines the accused when he thinks it necessary for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstance appearing in the evidence against him. The examination of an accused prior to commitment is in the discretion of the Magistrate. If the Magistrate does not examine the accused, if the accused is unwilling to submit to an examination, it is sufficient for the Magistrate to make a note of the fact and record it as a reason for not examining the accused—Dosu, 11 S.L.R. 52, 18 Cr.L.J. 913.

Where question put to the accused elicited a statement of a confessional nature, such examination is wholly inadmissible under this section—Tufani, 15 C.L.J. 323. See also Haidar Ali, 17 C.W.N. 354 (357).

1037. Record of questions and answers:—Where the Judge asked the accused person as to whether they would make any statement or not, and they replied in the negative, the Judge should record what the exact questions were that were put to the accused. Where in such a case there was no record made of the questions and answers and the only indication of it was to be found in the order sheet wherein the Judge made the following remark. "The accused declined to make any statement in this Court and on being asked whether they would adduce evidence they replied in the negative;" held that the provisions of sec. 364 were violated, and the trial having been vitiated by such omission, the accused should be retried—Nani Mandai, 52 Cal. 403, 41 C.L.J. 50, 26 Cr.L.J. 761; Sarat Chandra, 52 Cal. 446, 26 Cr.L.J. 1244, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 821; Messer Bepari, 29 C.W.N. 939, 26 Cr.L.J. 1032, 87 I.C. 920. Every question put to the accused and every answer given by him must be recorded in full. Where a man is on his trial for his life, he must be allowed a certain amount of latitude. He may not be very intelligent and may make a long rambling statement; but everything that he wishes to say must be recorded—Mata Din, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 166, 32 Cr.L.J. 854, 132 I.C. 232, Ind. Rul. 1931 Oudh 244, 8 O.W.N. 224, 1931 Cr.C. 438; Bhagwan Din, 35 Cr.L.J. 915 (917), 149 I.C. 195, 11 O.W.N. 444, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 151, 1934 Cr.C. 495.

Where the confession of the accused was recorded in a simple narrative form instead of in the form of questions and answers as required by this section, and there was nothing to show that the accused was prejudiced thereby, it was held that the irregularity did not affect the admissibility of the statement in evidence and was cured by sec. 533—Deo Dat, 45 All. 166; Anta, 1892 A.W.N. 60; Munshi, 8 Cal. 616; Fekoo, 14 Cal. 539; Khudiram Bose, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625. For contra see Ramsukhia, 36 Cr.L.J. 447 (449), 153 I.C. 922, 15 P.L.T. 586, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 651, 1934 Cr.C. 1322. Where the Magistrate has not recorded the necessary preliminary questions, the confession is admissible provided the omission has not injured the accused in his defence on the merits. The defect is not a fatal one and can be cured under sec. 533, Cr. P. C. But if the questions were not put at all, the confession was not duly made. But it is not necessarily irrelevant. The Court may satisfy itself that there was no inducement, etc., and so fulfil the requirements of sec. 24 of the Evidence Act. It may have to take evidence to satisfy itself on this point—Mohammad Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 385 (389), 147 I.C. 300, 1933 A.L.J. 1551 (F.B.). Although it is of great importance to record the questions put to the accused (because sometimes a statement made in answer to a question put may have a different meaning if considered without such question) still if the omission to record the questions does not affect the sense and meaning of the prisoner's statement, the omission will not make the statement inadmissible in evidence—Sagambar, 12 C.L.R. 120; Nawab, 28 Cr.L.J. 341 (342), 100 I.C. 821, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 562, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 285; Titu Afiah, 8 Cal. 618 (foot-note). In cases where the accused person makes some statement during the course of the trial which is interpreted as a plea of guilty, the Court should record the exact words used when a statement is made in answer to a question put by the Court under this section—Sailabala, 62 C.L.J. 260, 36 Cr.L.J. 1460, 158 I.C. 761, 1935 Cr.C. 881, 62 Cal. 1127, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 489, 39 C.W.N. 940. Where the accused begins by saying that he is guilty but the body of the statement shows fairly clearly that what he means is that he is not guilty of the crime, the statement should not be taken as a confession of guilt—Hem Chandra, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 681, 37 Cr.L.J. 69, 159 I.C. 31, 1935 Cr.C. 1073, 40 C.W.N. 64.

Record need not be in Magistrate's handwriting—There is nothing in this Code which necessitates a Magistrate to take down the examination of the accused in his own hand. It is enough if he appends a certificate that the examination was conducted in his presence and contains accurately all that was said by the accused—Lucky Narain, 20 W.R. 50.

Although the terms of secs 164 and 364 are imperative, still if the Magistrate, instead of recording the confession himself, employed a clerk to do so, it was held that the irregularity would be cured by sec 533 by examining the Magistrate—Badan Singh, 1909 P.R. 2.* See Notes in para 516.

1038. Language:—The law requires that ordinarily the statement of the accused must be recorded in the language in which it was made, the object being to represent the very words and expressions used so as to ensure accuracy and prevent misrepresentation and misconstruction of what was said—Sagal, 21 Cal. 642; Nani Mandal, 52 Cal. 403, 41 C.L.J. 50, 26 Cr.L.J. 761; Jagannath Sah v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 169, 166 I.C. 280, 1937 O.L.R. 7, 9 R.O. 300, 1937 O.W.N. 37 A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 425. This rule of law ought not to be deviated from unless it is shown that it was impracticable to write the statement in the language in which it was made. If the answers were not taken down in the language in which they were given, the irregularity cannot be cured by section 533—Nimadhab, 15 Cal. 595; Jai Narayan, 17 Cal. 862; Bawa, 10 O.C. 112, 6 Cr.L.J. 94. Section 364 lays down that the confession is to be recorded in the language in which it was made, or if that is not practicable, in the language of the Court or in English. And it would be for the prosecution to establish the impracticability of recording the statement in the language in which it was made—Jai Narayan, 17 Cal. 862; Nimadhab, 15 Cal. 595; Bawa, 10 O.C. 112, 6 Cr.L.J. 94. Where the accused was examined by the Magistrate in Marathi and gave his answers in Marathi, the statements should be recorded in Marathi. It is illegal to record them in English—Surmal, Ratanlal 633; Visram Babajee, 21 Bom. 495. If, however, it is not practicable to record the statement in the language in which it is made, the law directs that the statement shall be recorded in the language of the Court or in English—Sagal, 21 Cal. 642. Thus, where the confession of the accused person made in Bengali was recorded by the Magistrate in English, because he could not write Bengali well and there was no mohurrer with him at the time, it was held that there was no illegality—Razai Mian, 22 Cal. 817. See also Khudiram Bose, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625. Where the confession was not taken down in the language it was made but in English and it was not signed or thumb-marked, held that these irregularities could not be considered to be material in view of the evidence given by the Magistrate in Court, which went to show that the confession was made voluntarily and correctly recorded—Nanak Chand, 32 Cr.L.J. 1036, 133 I.C. 545, 32 P.L.R. 792, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 73, Ind. Rul 1931 Lah 785. Where the Magistrate recorded the confession of the accused on a holiday, and since he could not get the service of any one to write Hindustani, he recorded the confession in English, translated it in Urdu to the accused who admitted it to be correct, held that the confession was properly recorded in accordance with the provisions of this section—Bachanna, 1891 A.W.N. 55. Where a confession made in Hindustani was recorded by a Muhammadan Magistrate in Bengali, the language of the Court, the High Court held that it could not be presumed that the Magistrate must have had sufficient acquaintance with Urdu so as to be able to record the statement in that language, and that in the absence of any evidence it should be presumed that the Magistrate found it impracticable to record the statement in Urdu—Lal Chand, 18 Cal. 549 (dissenting from Jai Narayan, 17 Cal. 862). So also, in Deo Dat, 45 All. 166,

A.I.R. 1923 All. 90, 71 I.C. 54, 24 Cr.L.J. 6, 20 A.L.J. 915, Anta, 1892 A.W.N. 60, Vistram Babaji, 21 Bom. 495, Ratti Ram, 1899 P.R. 7, Nawab, 28 Cr.L.J. 341 (342), 100 I.C. 821, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 562, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 285, and Kommoju Brahman, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 163 (165, 170), 1939 P.W.N. 915, 41 Cr.L.J. 533, 188 I.C. 57, 19 Pat. 301. although it was practicable for the Magistrate to record the statement in the language in which it was made, still an English record was held to be good, if it was translated to the accused in his own own language, and no prejudice was caused to him, the irregularity being cured by sec. 533. See also Fernand, 4 Bom.L.R. 785. Where the Magistrate was a Bengalee, and the accused was a Bengalee, but the accused made his confession partly in Bengali and partly in English, and he understood English well and he read through his statement and corrected it, held that the Magistrate did not act illegally in recording the confession in English—Nilmadhab, 5 Pat. 171, 27 Cr.L.J. 957.

When a Magistrate is unable to record a confession in the language in which it is made, he should not employ a police officer to write it down. The employment of a police-officer even as a scribe in recording a confession is objectionable—Khudiram Bose, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625.

If the confession of the accused is made in a foreign language, unknown to the Court or Magistrate, the Code does not require that it should be recorded in that language. In such a case, the record of the confession should be in the language in which it is conveyed to the Court by the interpreter—Vaimbilee, 5 Cal. 826. Where a statement was made by the accused in Manipuri and communicated to the Magistrate by an interpreter in Bengali, and the Magistrate recorded it in English, and there was also a record in Manipuri, but the two records differed, it was held that the record in Manipuri should be regarded as the proper record and the only evidence in the case—Sagal, 21 Cal. 642.

1039. "Shown or read over to accused," etc. :—Before a statement can be admitted in evidence, it is necessary to see that such statement has been deliberately made and recorded, and that after being recorded, it has been shown or read over to the accused so that he might be assured that his words have been correctly taken down—Narain, 7 W.R. 49. It is not sufficient for the Sessions Judge merely to read over to the accused the statement recorded by the committing Magistrate, but the Judge should record any explanation or statement, the accused may make at the time. Merely recording in the judgment of the Sessions Judge that the statement or examination of the accused as recorded by the committing Magistrate was put in and read out to him is not enough—Fatu, 6 P.L.J. 147. Where there was nothing to show that the record of the confessional statement made by the accused before the committing Magistrate was shown or read over to the accused, such statement cannot be used as evidence against him—Dewan Kahar, 4 P.L.T. 186, 24 Cr.L.J. 497. This section requires that the record shall be shown or read over to the accused, and if he does not understand the language in which it is written, it must be interpreted in a language which he understands. Where a Magistrate showed or read a confession recorded in English to the accused who did not understand English, the provisions of this section were not complied with—Bheebeekee, 4 N.W.P. 16.

Where the statement of the accused under sec. 342, Cr. P. C., was not read over to him and his signature taken immediately after the close of the prosecution but, when it was brought to the notice of the Magistrate, he was given an opportunity of making a further statement although it was not asserted that the original statement was not correct, held that there was no ground for interference—Jogendra Nath v. Rabindra Nath, 37 Cr.L.J. 1089, 165 I.C. 150, 40 C.W.N. 863, 64 C.L.J. 7.

1040. Sub-section (2) :—Record must be signed :—The record of confession must be signed by the accused. A record which does not bear the signature of the accused is not admissible in evidence until the defect is cured in the manner provided by sec. 533—Gajadhar, 1883 A.W.N. 243. Where the signature or mark of the accused was not taken to the record of the statement made by him to a Magistrate, the defect can be cured by examining the Magistrate as a witness to prove that the statement recorded was duly made—Chedda, 1896 A W N 161; Raghu, 23 Bom. 221. Where the signature of the accused was not taken by the committing Magistrate, and no objection was raised before the Sessions Court by his pleader on the ground of absence of signature, and no prejudice was caused to the accused, it was held that, under the circumstances of the case, the irregularity was not a sufficient ground for reversing the judgment—Dera Dayal, 11 B H.C.R. 237. The signature of the accused to his confession is taken as a voucher of the authenticity of the statement, and not as an admission of its correctness. Therefore, where the signature is not taken at the time the confession is made, but is taken the next day, and the Magistrate swears of the authenticity of the confessional statement, there is no such illegality or irregularity as would affect the admissibility of the statement in evidence—Khudiram Bose, 9 C.L.J. 55, 3 I.C. 625. Where, through an oversight, the Magistrate did not take the signature of the confessing accused, and the latter refused to affix his signature when he was subsequently asked to do so, but at the trial the Magistrate and his clerk were examined as to the confession having been duly made by the accused, held that the defect was cured by sec. 553, and the confession was admissible in evidence—Ba Yin, 7 Rang. 759, 31 Cr.L.J. 297, A.I.R. 1930 Rang 53, 121 I.C. 782, 1930 Cr.C. 245. A confession which bore neither the signature of the Magistrate nor of accused would be one not in strict accordance with the provisions of this section. But the fact that it had been duly made by the accused can be proved by further evidence under sec. 533, Cr. P. C., and except, perhaps, in cases which are not easily conceivable, the accused is not likely to be injured in his defence on the merits on account of such an omission. Such a confession would, therefore, be certainly admissible in evidence—Mohammad Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 385 (29), 147 I.C. 390, 1933 A.L.J. 1551 (F.B.). The record must be signed by the accused himself in his own handwriting; it cannot be signed by another person for the accused. If so signed, it is inadmissible in evidence—Daya Anand, 11 B H.C.R. 41; but see sec. 533.

If the accused is unable to write, his mark or thumb impression (45 All. 155) is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section. But if he can write, his thumb-impression is not sufficient—Sadananda, 32 Cal. 550.

The signature of the accused must be taken in the presence of the Magistrate. To take it in an adjoining room in the presence of a clerk and not in the presence of the Magistrate is not a proper compliance with provisions of this section—Bhika, Ratanlal 687.

The Magistrate is required to record the examination, and if there is no signature by the accused, the record presumably will only contain the questions put to the accused and a note that the accused had refused to answer the questions. If the questions have been properly completed in this way by the Court, the law requires that the Magistrate shall sign it in order to show that it is conformable to what he saw and heard.

Khan, 39 All. 399, where Imperatrix, 4 Bom. 15 was distinguished.

1041. Certificate:—The absence of the certificate in the record is not necessarily fatal to its admissibility—Vijaya, 1931 Cr.C. 104. Though a Magistrate omitted to certify a confession as required by sec. 553, Cr. P. C., and did not record the whole of the questions put to the accused, the High Court held that the confession was admissible where no prejudice resulted to the accused—Kamalagadu, 2 W.L.R. 104. The certificate to be attached by a Magistrate to the examination of the accused is cured only by taking evidence that the accused duly made the confession, and that it was taken by examining the Magistrate or some other person who was present when the confession was recorded. It cannot be cured by examining a witness to the confession. The confession must be down in the handwriting of the Magistrate himself—Balan, 1931 Cr.C. 104, 3 C.W.N. 387; Peradi, 2 B.H.C.R. 397; Anga Valajan, 22 All. 104.

Badan, 1909 P.R. 2, 9 Cr.L.J. 297. It cannot be cured by the addition of the certificate at the direction of the District Magistrate after an appeal is disposed of—Vyankatrao, 7 B.H.C.R. 50.

This section does not prescribe any particular form of the certificate. When a confession bore a certificate of the Magistrate containing the words "taken by me" but did not say that the confession was made in his hearing, it was held that the certificate substantially complied with the requirements of this section—Noshai, 5 Cal. 958.

The entire certificate need not be in the handwriting of the Magistrate; it is sufficient if it is signed by the Magistrate—Rezza Hosain, 8 W.R. 55.

See Note 519.

1042. Non-compliance with the section:—The rule laid down in this section should be strictly followed—Gajadhar, 1883 A.W.N. 243. Magistrates should in all cases be careful to observe all the provisions of section 164 and this section, for although various defects can be cured, the value of the confession may be very much diminished by non-compliance with the strict letter of the law—Ratti Ram, 1899 P.R. 7.

Non-compliance with the formalities of this section may be remedied by sec. 533 by oral evidence (of the Magistrate who recorded it) that the accused duly made the statement recorded—Raghu, 23 Bom. 221; Lal Chand, 18 Cal. 549; Bala, 35 Cr.L.J. 1382, 151 I.C. 745, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 18, 1934 Cr.C. 36; Nga Po Dwe, 35 Cr.L.J. 823, 148 I.C. 1002, 1934 Cr.C. 401, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 78, A.L.R. 1934 Rang. 169. Where the confession though signed by the accused was not recorded in the manner prescribed by this section, and there was no certificate showing that the record contained in full the statement made by the accused, it was admitted in evidence in spite of these defects, and held to be proved by its production—Ahmed Din, 1881 P.R. 20; Sher Singh, 1881 P.R. 21. Where, although sec. 164 or sec. 364 requires that certain things should be recorded by a Magistrate and he has omitted to do so, the Court can admit the statement by calling oral evidence to prove that the statement had in fact been 'duly made'. But there is a safeguard in the section and a statement which has not been recorded in accordance with law cannot be taken in evidence if the error has injured the accused as to his defence on the merits. Cases of this kind may arise where the statement has been taken down in a language different from that in which the accused made his statement and which was not intelligible to him, or where only part of his statement had been recorded and not the whole of it—Mohammad Ali, 35 Cr.L.J. 385, 147 I.C. 300, 1933 A.L.J. 1551 (F.B.).

But sec. 533 does not apply and cannot make a confession admissible, where no attempt has been made to conform to the provisions of this section. Thus, where the confessions were neither recorded in the language of the accused, nor were signed by the accused, nor certified by the Magistrate, held that there was a total non-compliance with the provisions of this section, and sec. 533 would not cure such grave irregularities—Viran, 9 Mad. 224. Where no record whatever has been made of a confession; such confession cannot be proved merely by oral evidence. Section 533 deals with errors in the record and does not apply where no record whatever has been made of such a confession—Gulaba, 35 All. 260, 14 Cr.L.J. 221. See also Nani Mandal, 52 Cal. 403 cited in Note 1037 ante.

See Notes under sec. 164, Cr. P. C. especially Note 511, where the point has been fully discussed.

1042A. Sub-section (4):—In a summary trial the Magistrate is not required to record the statement of the accused made in pursuance of an examination under sec. 342, Cr. P. C., in full in the language in which it was made as sec. 364, cl. (1), does not apply to summary trials. Where the records of the statements made and recorded in English by the Magistrate were made at the time when the prosecution closed its case, there was a sufficient compliance with the law—Banka Nath v. Abdul Kadir, 39 C.W.N. 1306, 37 Cr.L.J. 1098, 165 I.C. 154. The provision of this section are not applicable to summary trials but this only means that the examination of the accused person need not be recorded in full, including every question and every answer as laid down in this section, but it is clear that some notes must be made of the examination of an accused person in a summary trial if he is examined—Krishna Shankar, 36 CrLJ 1303, 158 I.C. 16, 1935 O.W.N. 1042, AIR 1936 Oudh 16, 1935 O.L.R. 557.

See Notes 867 and 973.

365. Every High Court established by Royal Charter may from time to time, by general rule, prescribe the manner in which evidence shall be taken down in cases coming before the Court, and the Judges of such Court shall take down the evidence or the substance thereof in accordance with the rule (if any) so prescribed.

365. Every High Court established by Royal Charter, and the Chief Court of Oudh shall from time to time, by general rule, prescribe the manner in which evidence shall be taken down in cases coming before the Court, and the evidence shall be taken down in accordance with such rule.

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 99 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "The word 'shall' would make it compulsory upon High Courts to prescribe by rules the manner in which evidence should be taken down. The section will not of course limit the discretion of the High Court as to what form the rules should take"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

"We do not think it necessary that the Judges of the Court should take down the evidence themselves. But we are of opinion that there should certainly be some record"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

The words "and the Chief Court of Oudh" have been added by the Oudh Courts Act, XXXII of 1925.

CHAPTER XXVI.

OF THE JUDGMENT.

366. (1) The judgment in every trial in any Criminal Court of original jurisdiction shall be pronounced, or the substance of such judgment shall be explained,—

- (a) in open Court either immediately after the termination of the trial or at some subsequent time of which notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders, and
- (b) in the language of the Court, or in some other language which the accused or his pleader understands:

Provided that the whole judgment shall be read out by the presiding Judge, if he is requested so to do either by the prosecution or the defence.

(2) The accused shall, if in custody, be brought up, or, if not in custody, be required by the Court to attend to hear judgment delivered, except where his personal attendance during the trial has been dispensed with and the sentence is one of fine only or he is acquitted, in either of which cases it may be delivered in the presence of his pleader.

(3) No judgment delivered by any Criminal Court shall be deemed to be invalid by reason only of the absence of any party or his pleader on the day or from the place notified for the delivery thereof, or of any omission to serve, or defect in serving, on the parties or their pleaders or any of them, the notice of such day and place.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit in any way the extent of the provisions of section 537.

The requirements of sections 366 and 367 are not mere matters of form. The provisions of these sections are based upon good and substantial grounds of public policy, and whether they are or not, the Sessions Judges must obey them and not be a law of themselves—Hargobind, 14 All 242.

This section has, however, no application to appeals and specifically to an appeal disposed of summarily whether by a District Magistrate or a Sessions Judge or a High Court—Jodha v. King-Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 711 (713).

1043. Judgment:—Judgment means the expression of opinion of the Judge or Magistrate arrived at after due consideration of the evidence and of the arguments—Damu v. Sridhar, 21 Cal 121. Judgment, though not defined anywhere in the Code, is usually taken to mean an order of conviction or acquittal containing the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision—Madho Singh v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 725 (726), 189 I.C. 258, 1940 O.W.N. 607, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 396, 1940 O.L.R. 420. An order of dismissal of a complaint under sec. 203 is not a judgment—Chinna, 29 Mad. 126. An order dismissing a case for default of appearance of the complainant is not a judgment—Ratanchand, 5 N.L.R. 76, 9 Cr.L.J. 553; Bibhuti v. Dasimoni, 10 C.L.J. 80, 10 Cr.L.J. 287. Judgment means a judgment of conviction or acquittal, but not an order of discharge under sec. 209 or 253—Dwarka v. Benimadhab, 28 Cal. 652, 5 C.W.N. 457; Mir Ahmad v. Md. Askari, 29 Cal 726; Maheshwari, 31 Mad. 543; Nabi, 9 Bom.L.R. 250, 5 Cr.L.J. 255. An order dismissing the complaint for default either under sec. 203 or under sec. 259, Cr. P. C., or discharging the accused is not a judgment and the word 'judgment' indicates some final determination of the case which would end it once for all, such as an order of conviction or acquittal—Harbai v. Raya Premji, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 193 (195), 40 Cr.L.J. 745, 183 I.C. 283 (F.B.). On the other hand, if the Magistrate after taking some evidence, however incomplete the evidence may be, enters into the merits of the complaint and makes an order of discharge, such an order is a judgment—Dwarka v. Benimadhab, 28 Cal 652. The final order of acquittal on a petition of composition is not a judgment—Hasta, 1914 P.R. 29, 16 Cr.L.J. 81, because such an order is made without any consideration of the evidence. This section does not apply to an order under sec. 195, Cr. P. Code—Nagappa, 6 Bom.L.R. 897; or under sec. 476 Cr. P. Code—Jagat Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 318, 166 I.C. 915, 9 R.A. 469, 1936 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1125, 1936 A.Cr.C. 235, 1937 A.L.R. 112, 1936 A.L.J. 1199, A.I.R. 1937 All. 76.

Neither under the English nor the Indian Law the term 'judgment' in a criminal case includes an interlocutory order. In sec 205 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo V, Ch. 42), the word 'judgment' does not occur by itself but is used in conjunction with final order. When both the terms judgment and final order are used together in one expression, they undoubtedly connote different and distinct meanings, and judgment cannot be interpreted as embracing even interlocutory orders, which would make the category 'final order' wholly superfluous and unnecessary. Therefore the order of the High Court directing a re-hearing of the criminal appeal by the Sessions Court is not a judgment within the meaning of sec. 205 of the Government of India Act—Dr. Hari Ram Singh v Emp, 40 Cr L.J. 468 (473), 1939 M.W.N. 497, A.I.R. 1939 F.C. 43, 181 I.C. 317, 1939 O.L.R. 366, 1939 P.W.N. 429, 1939 M.Cr.C. 148, 50 M.L.W. 95, 20 P.L.T. 539, (1939) 2 M.L.J. Sup. 23, 43 C.W.N. 50, 41 P.L.R. 680.

One judgment should not be given in respect of three cases—Chandu, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 664.

In this section "judgment" is referred to apparently as part of the trial—Jalal, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 22 (23), 38 Cr L.J. 350, 167 I.C. 75, 30 S.L.R. 456.

1044. Delivery of Judgment:—The delivery of judgment and the passing of sentence is an integral part of the criminal trial and must be done by the Judge himself. It is not a mere formality, and a deliberate breach of this express provision of law is not a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537. Where on the date fixed for delivery of the judgment, the Judge being ill, he signed and dated his judgment and sent it to be translated to the accused by the interpreter, the Judge himself not being present in Court, and the judgment was so translated by the interpreter, it was an illegality and a retrial must be ordered—Rambit, 24 Cr.L.J. 584, 1 Bur.L.J. 122, A.I.R. 1923 Rang 41. But the Allahabad High Court takes a more liberal view and holds that where a Magistrate wrote out a judgment, signed and dated it, but owing to physical incapacity had it read out by another Magistrate, it was at the most an irregularity which was covered by sec. 537—Nur Md. Khan, 21 A.L.J. 137, 24 Cr.L.J. 173. A judgment which is not delivered is no judgment. Where a Judge after writing his judgment but before delivering it, dies or leaves the Bench, his written judgment cannot be considered as a judgment, but it is merely an opinion. A judgment though written and signed, is inoperative until it is pronounced, and till then must be taken merely as an expression of opinion—Ramdhan, 11 A.L.J. 745, 14 Cr.L.J. 562.

The judgment must be delivered in open Court—Damu v. Sridhar, 21 Cal. 121.

Sections 366 and 367 read together require that a judgment shall be (1) written, (2) signed, (3) dated and (4) pronounced in open Court—the latter three must take place on the same occasion. Till all these formalities have been gone through the judgment is not delivered; and there is nothing to prevent the officer who wrote it from tearing it up and writing another—Savarimuthu, 40 Mad. 108 (109).

The judgment must be pronounced by the Judge or Magistrate who held the trial. The duty of signing and delivering the judgment cannot be delegated by the presiding officer to another person. The officer who delivers the judgment and thus makes himself responsible for the judgment must be the officer who had considered the evidence and heard the arguments. He must be responsible for the reasons of the decision. Therefore, where a Magistrate, after holding trial in one district, went away to another district and thence sent his judgment to the Magistrate of the former district to be delivered, and the District Magistrate delivered it, the trial was set aside and retrial ordered—Jogesh Chandra v. Surendra, 35 C.W.N. 838 (810), 1931 Cr.C. 837, 134 I.C. 1265, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 637; Mahomed Rafique, 43 C.L.J. 100, 27 Cr.L.J. 406, 93 I.C. 70, A.I.R. 1926 Cal 537; Jhingur Raut, Ind Rul. 1931 Pat. 481, 134 I.C. 625, 32 Cr.L.J. 1224, A.I.R. 1931 Pat 386, 12 P.L.T. 647, 1931 Cr.C. 914; Jia Lal, 1889 A.W.N. 181; Baisnab Charan v. Amin Ali, 50 Cal. 664, 38 C.L.J. 202, 24 Cr.L.J. 489. A Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction to deliver judgment after handing over charge to his successor and after vacating his office—Ram Ratan, A.I.R. 1932 All. 582, 1932 A.L.J. 753, 1932 Cr.C. 700, 141 I.C. 31, 34 Cr.L.J. 112. But the Madras High Court and the Oudh

Chief Court are of opinion that the delivery of the judgment by the successor of the Magistrate who wrote it is not illegal—Sankara Pillai, 18 M.L.J. 197, 7 Cr.L.J. 459; Bhogole, 34 Cr.L.J. 117, 141 I.C. 176, 36 M.L.W. 881, Ind. Rul. 1933 Mad. 84, 1933 M.W.N. 95, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 251, 1933 Cr.C. 365; Chandika, 28 O.C. 109, 25 Cr.L.J. 1075, 11 O.L.J. 725. See also Savarimuthu, 40 Mad. 108, where it has been held that the succeeding Magistrate can date, sign and pronounce a judgment written by his predecessor, and thus adopt it as his own. See Note 1011 where the recent rulings have been inserted.

The judgment must be pronounced in the presence of the accused. Where the accused having absconded, the Magistrate passed sentence in his absence, and upon his re-arrest pronounced the judgment again, it was held that the Magistrate should not have pronounced his previous judgment in the absence of the accused—Ghotiram, Ratanlal 325; Sardar, 1917 P.R. 36. If, however, the judgment is one of acquittal or of fine only, it may be passed in the absence of the accused, under sub-section (2)—Jamal Khatun, 6 S.L.R. 206, 14 Cr.L.J. 272.

The judgment in a criminal case must be passed without undue delay, as delay is not only unjust to the accused, as it prevents them from appealing at once, but is opposed to the principles of law—Baldea, 5 C.P.L.R. 24. In a trial by jury, it is not necessary, under sec. 367, to record a judgment, but only the heads of charge to the jury should be recorded; and these should be written out as soon as possible after the charge to the jury has been actually delivered, when the facts of the case are fresh in the mind of the Judge—Fanindra, 36 Cal. 281; Jagmohan, 52 All. 207, 30 Cr.L.J. 1146 (1147); Rupan Singh, 4 Pat. 626, 27 Cr.L.J. 49 (53).

It is not necessary that the whole of the judgment should be read. It is sufficient if the substance of the judgment is delivered. Omission to read a portion in the judgment is a mere irregularity covered by sec. 537—Venkataramanayya, 2 Weir 711; Kamakshamma, 38 Mad. 498, 14 Cr.L.J. 595.

1045. Conviction or acquittal before judgment:—The judgment must always be written and delivered before sentence is passed. It is illegal to pronounce a sentence at the termination of the trial and to postpone the writing of the judgment to a future occasion—Punjab Circ., p. 239. In as much as the sentence in a case of conviction, and the direction to set the accused at liberty in a case of acquittal, can only follow on the decision and cannot precede it, and in as much as the decision must be contained in the written judgment, it necessarily follows that the sentence is illegal if there is no written judgment when it is passed—Hargobind, 14 All. 242. Where the judgment was written and delivered some days after the prisoners were convicted and sentenced, it was held that this was a violation of the express provisions of this section and was more than a mere irregularity; and the conviction and sentence must be set aside—Bandana Atchayya, 27 Mad. 237.

In some cases, however, it has been held that such an irregularity does not vitiate the whole proceedings unless there has been a failure of justice; such irregularity will be cured by sec. 537—Tilak Chandra v. Baisagomoff, 23 Cal. 502; Moriokhan, 5 S.L.R. 131, 12 Cr.L.J. 610; Thave Issaji, 12 Cr.L.J. 457, 13 Bom.L.R. 635; Damu v. Sridhar, 21 Cal. 121; Kamakshamma, 38 Mad. 498; Sankaralinga v. Narayan, 45 Mad. 913 (F.B.); Mad. Hayat Mulla, 7 Rang. 370, 1930 Cr.C. 203 (204), A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 77, 30 Cr.L.J. 1166, 120 I.C. 225; Ata Muhammad, 25 Cr.L.J. 705 (Lah.); Dhonda v. Sitaram, 34 Cr.L.J. 1036, 145 I.C. 664, A.I.R. 1933 All. 660, 1933 A.L.J. 1244, 1933 Cr.C. 1143, 55 All. 886; Ata Mohammad, 81 I.C. 193, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 137, 25 Cr.L.J. 705. But the Patna High Court took a different view in Jhari Lal, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 148, 8 Pat. 904, 1930 Cr.C. 90, 11 P.L.T. 195, 31 Cr.L.J. 416, 122 I.C. 531. Section 497 (4) now provides for acquittal of the accused before judgment on taking a bond from him for appearance on the day of judgment.

Where a Magistrate died after pronouncing the sentence but before writing the judgment, the High Court reversed the conviction and sentence and ordered a retrial—Kamthia, 1 Bom.L.R. 160. But in 2 Weir 438, where the Magistrate died after passing sentence but before recording a judgment, it has been held that a conviction on a trial regularly held will not be set aside merely because the Magistrate had been unavoidably prevented from recording a judgment, and the right of appeal of the accused would not be taken away by the absence of a complete judgment.

Loss of judgment :—This section only imposes the condition that the judgment must be pronounced in open Court and imposes a few other conditions but such conditions do not include the condition that the record should not have been lost. In cases where the judgment has been lost, the appropriate course for a Judge is to re-write the judgment from memory and from the materials on record, and place it on record—Kamakshamma, 38 Mad. 498

The procedure of recording an order of acquittal on the order-sheet is to be deprecated. Magistrates should ordinarily write regular judgments except in very simple cases—Gena Lai v. Turantlal, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 495 (496), 158 I.C. 332, 36 Cr.L.J. 1375.

367. (1) Every such judgment shall, except as otherwise expressly provided by this Code, be written by the presiding officer of the Court or from the dictation of such presiding officer in the language of the Court, or in English; and shall contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision, and shall be dated and signed by the presiding officer in open Court at the time of pronouncing it, and where it is not written by the presiding officer with his own hand, every page of such judgment shall be signed by him.

(2) It shall specify the offence (if any) of which, and the section of the Indian Penal Code or other law under which the accused is convicted, and the punishment to which he is sentenced.

(3) When the conviction is under the Indian Penal Code, and it is doubtful under which of two sections, or under which of two parts of the same section, of that Code the offence falls, the Court shall distinctly express the same and pass judgment in the alternative.

(4) If it be a judgment of acquittal, it shall state the offence of which the accused is acquitted and direct that he be set at liberty.

(5) If the accused is convicted of an offence punishable with death, and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death, the Court shall in its judgment state the reason why sentence of death was not passed:

Provided that, in trials by jury, the Court need not write a judgment, but the Court of Session shall record the heads of the charge to the jury.

(6) For the purposes of this section, an order under section 118 or section 123, sub-section (3), shall be deemed to be a judgment.

1046. Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 100 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

Under the old section it was held that the judgment must be written by the Magistrate himself; he could not get it written by a clerk—Lakshmibai, Ratanlal 545; Subramanya, 6 Mad. 396; and that if the judgment was written at the dictation of the Magistrate, and the Magistrate merely signed it, the procedure was illegal—Manik Lal Mullick v. Corporation of Calcutta, 4 C.L.J. 411, 4 Cr.L.J. 394. The present Amendment in sub-section (1) will now allow such procedure.

Scope:—Sections 366 and 367 do not apply to a High Court. There is no provision which requires that the High Court, after pronouncing a judgment in open Court, should date and sign the same. As a matter of fact all that sec. 425 requires is that the judgment should be certified to the Court below. This may be done by the Chief Justice when a Judge of the High Court dies after delivering judgment in open Court but before signing the fair copy made by his judgment writer—Pragmadho, 34 Cr.L.J. 703, 144 I.C. 149, 55 All. 132, Ind. Rul. 1933 All. 396, 1933 A.L.J. 13, 1933 Cr.C. 51, A.I.R. 1933 All. 40. The intention of the section is that the Magistrate should direct his own attention to every material question of fact or law to which he would be required to apply his mind—Gul Shera, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 180, 1932 Cr.C. 795.

The provision of this section applies to an appeal under sec. 476B, Cr. P. Code—Nitya Gopal v. Nani Gopal, 32 Cr.L.J. 1045, 133 I.C. 672, 35 C.W.N. 650, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 454, 1931 Cr.C. 606, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 736.

This section has however no application to appeals and specifically to an appeal disposed of summarily whether by a District Magistrate or a Sessions Judge or a High Court—Jodha v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 369 (371), 1940 O.L.R. 408, 189 I.C. 83, 1940 O.W.N. 594, 41 Cr.L.J. 711.

Language of judgment:—Under this section, the judgment should be written in the language of the Court or in English. Where an Honorary Magistrate wrote his judgment in Urdu instead of in Hindi, the language of the Court, it was held to be irregular; but such irregularity was curable by sec. 537—Dhanukdhari v. Harikar, 4 C.L.J. 232, 4 Cr.L.J. 162. The language of a judgment should not be factious—Public Prosecutor v. Diraviya, 1931 M.W.N. 1152.

In cases which have assumed communal aspect the proceedings in Courts and the language of their judgments should not themselves promote the feelings of enmity, the promotion of which by others it is their duty to punish under the law—Ala Ullah Shah, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 429 (433), 1936 Cr.C. 464, 162 I.C. 624, 38 P.L.R. 638, 37 Cr.L.J. 661.

1047. Contents of judgment:—The judgment in a criminal case should commence with a statement of the facts in respect of which the accused is charged and not with circumstances which might be held to provide a motive for the offence—Bala, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 81 (85), 17 N.L.J. 274. It is the duty of the Judge presiding at the trial to do more than merely collect in his judgment the statements of witnesses who give evidence before him. A careful analysis and appraisal of the evidence is absolutely essential in the interests of justice—Ramhit, 35 Cr.L.J. 919 (925), 149 I.C. 210, 6 R.A. 872, A.I.R. 1934 All. 776. But a judgment is not required to be a resume or reproduction of all the evidence on record; a Court is entitled to and should select such important evidence as it considers necessary to support a decision on material points arising for consideration—Jitendra Nath Gupta v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 818 (828), 169 I.C. 977, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 99, 10 R.C. 69. It is not necessary that a judgment should contain everything recorded in the evidence: when an appeal is heard, the evidence is read. The judgment should contain as much of the evidence as is necessary to ascertain the facts deposited to, and deal with the importance of and the value to be attached to the evidence of the witnesses, and the reasoning based on this evidence on which the Judge founds his decision and his sentence; to put more than this into a judgment is merely to confuse—Nga Then v. The King, 40 Cr.L.J. 871 (874), 184 I.C. 78, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 263. The judgment must be self-contained and nothing should be left out. If any material finding is left out in the judgment, the defect cannot be cured by the Magistrate's subsequent explanation to the Appellate Court—Jurakhan, 7 C.L.J. 238, 7 Cr.L.J. 312; Abhay v. Fuller, 25 Cal. 625, 2 C.W.N. 289. The judgment should show that the Court had considered the evidence and had found in a case of conviction that the facts proved to the satisfaction of the Court brought an offence home to the accused person whom the Court convicted—Pandeh Bhat, 19 All. 506 (F.B.). Where a judgment, though not a long and elaborate one, affords a clear indication that the Court duly considered the evidence, it is a good judgment—Kasimuddi, 1 C.W.N. 169. But if the judgment is so meagre that it is impossible to form an opinion as to the merits of the case or to say whether there has been a miscarriage of justice or not, the judgment must be set aside—Rupa Mandal v. Keshab, 5 C.L.J. 452, 5 Cr.L.J. 349. Where the judgment consists of a few notes on the arguments of Counsel and a somewhat vague conclusion, it does not comply with the provisions of this section—Mahomed Baksh, 32 Cr.L.J. 252, 129 I.C. 223, 31 P.L.R. 1017, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1054, 1930 Cr.C. 1230, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 159.

The Judge should first discuss the prosecution evidence and come to an independent finding on the truth or falsity of the story related by them and should then examine the statement of the accused and criticize it in the light of the circumstances brought on the record. After having weighed the prosecution evidence and the statement of the accused he would then be justified in formulating his conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused—Ghulam Nabi v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 185, 179 I.C. 237, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 850, 40 P.L.R. 265.

Where an Appellate Court finds that the Magistrate has not written a judgment in conformity with the provisions of sec. 367, the correct procedure is to accept the appeal and to remand the case for hearing de novo. The Appellate Court cannot retain the appeal on its file and ask for a judgment which the Magistrate has failed to record—Karuppiah, 1920 M.W.N. 120, 21 Cr.L.J. 52.

Points for determination :—"The attention of all Criminal Courts is invited to the necessity of very strictly observing the provisions of the latter portion of clause (1) of sec. 367, which declares that the judgment must contain the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision"—Cal. G.O. & C.O., p. 36. Where the Sessions Judge convicted the accused without stating the facts of the case or the points for determination or even the section under which the accused was convicted, the judgment was set aside—Ektar Khan, 9 C.W.N. xxiii. The accused person is entitled to have an independent judgment of the trying Court, and such judgment must be prepared in accordance with, and must contain the particulars required by sec. 367. Otherwise it is no judgment at all. Where a second class Magistrate thinking that a severer punishment should be inflicted on the accused than what he was authorised to award, recorded his opinion and forwarded the proceedings to the Sub-divisional Magistrate, and the latter in convicting the accused wrote the following judgment: "I agree with the finding arrived at by the learned trying Magistrate and convict all the accused for the offence of unlawful assembly as stated in the charge"; held that this was not a judgment at all—Thakur Singh, 20 Cr.L.J. 414 (Pat.). Where the Magistrate has given strong and legal reasons for his decision, his omission to refer to the minute details of the case does not vitiate his judgment—Durga Singh, 24 Cr.L.J. 181 (Pat.). Where the judgment showed that the Judge had appreciated the points which the prosecution had to establish, and that he had clearly in view the points for determination, viz., the credibility of the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution, and he expressed his opinion on that point, it was held that the judgment was good and should not be set aside—Rohimuddi, 20 Cal. 353.

In a case of mischief, the question of legal title to the property is a point for determination. It is the duty of the Criminal Court to determine what was the intention of the alleged offender and whether he was not acting in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right—Budh Singh, 2 All. 101. In a case of dacoity, the Judge should at first give a general outline of the case, of the investigation and the arrest of the various accused and then the case for and against each accused should be dealt with in detail, and the Judge should arrive at a conclusion with regard to each individual accused—Nga Mu, 2 Bur.L.J. 199, 76 I.C. 573, 25 Cr.L.J. 205, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 67. In a case of unlawful assembly and riot, the judgment should contain as one of the points for determination a statement as to the existence of the elements constituting the unlawful assembly—Ram Lal v. Haricharan, 37 Cal. 194. It is the duty of the Judge to determine, where several alternative common objects of the unlawful assembly are alleged in the charge, which of the common objects is made out—Manaruddi, 35 Cal. 718; Dasarathi v. Raghu, 36 Cal. 158. In a charge of theft, the point for determination is the dishonest intention, especially if a bona fide claim is set up—Ram Lal v. Hari Charan, 37 Cal. 194, 11 C.L.J. 410, 5 I.C. 999.

Where there were six several prisoners accused of no less than seven separate offences and the Judge framed only one point for decision as to whether they or any one of them were guilty of the offences with which they were charged, held that such a compliance with the provisions of this section was perfunctory and perilous—Mitho, 26 Cr.L.J. 53, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 89, 28 S.L.R. 12, 151 I.C. 976, 1934 Cr.C. 748. The judgment should show that the mind of the assessors and the mind of the Judge himself has been distinctly directed to each and every one of the points which must be decided before a conviction can safely be recorded—Ditto, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 23, 28 S.L.R. 295, 36 Cr.L.J. 504, 154 I.C. 138, 1935 Cr.C. 118.

In a case under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., the judgment should contain discussion of how the evidence affects each individual among the accused. The evidence of general repute should be considered in detail by the trying Magistrate and it must be seen whether this evidence is to be regarded in any way rebutted by the evidence of repute which has been given on behalf of the defence—Dhaju, 35 Cr.L.J. 177 (178), 146 I.C. 934, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 112, 1933 Cr.C. 261. See also Kalu Mirza, 37 Cal. 91.

'Decision thereon':—Where there are several accused, the case of each accused should be dealt with in detail, and the Judge should arrive at a decision with regard to each individual accused—Nga Mu, 2 Bur.L.J. 199; Dakshinamurti, 1918 M.W.N. 129, 19 Cr.L.J. 200.

Reasons for decision:—Every judgment must contain the reasons for decision; a judgment which states merely the offence and the punishment and contains no statement of the reasons for conviction is insufficient and invalid—Kana, Ratanlal 310. Even in a summary trial, the law requires under sec. 263 that the Magistrate should give a brief statement of the reasons for his finding. A judgment in a single line is not a judgment in accordance with law—Jankey Rai, 20 Cr.L.J. 431 (Pat.). In a proceeding under sec. 145, the Magistrate should, in the final order, sufficiently state the reasons therefor, so that the High Court may in revision determine whether or not the Magistrate has directed his mind to the consideration of the effect of the evidence adduced before him and has complied with sub-sec. (4) to sec. 367—Bhuban Chandra v. Nibaran, 49 Cal. 187, 25 C.W.N. 887, 62 I.C. 323, 34 C.L.J. 125, 22 Cr.L.J. 499, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 82; Motaherali v. Esha-Que, 25 Cr.L.J. 1115, 81 I.C. 939, 39 C.L.J. 366, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 848. An order of discharge under section 253 is not a judgment, and the writing of reasons is not necessary. But it is desirable that the Magistrate should record his reasons for the discharge, although it is not compulsory—Nabi Fakira, 9 Bom.L.R. 250.

Remarks and comments:—The testimony and conduct of police-officers examined in a criminal trial may be commented upon in the judgment in the same degree as those of any other material witnesses, but no further—Budri, 23 W.R. 65. Comments on the conduct of witnesses and parties should not go beyond what is really necessary for the elucidation of the case. Any humorous remarks or ridicule on strangers should be avoided—Ma Kyn v. Kin Kat, 12 Cr.L.J. 464, 4 Bur.L.T. 173; Baldeo, 5 C.P.L.R. 24. The language of a judgment should be temperate and sober, and not satirical. A judgment should not admit irrelevant matters to the record, but should confine itself to a consideration of the issues before the Court, together with a fair and legitimate comment on any errors or irregularities that may be disclosed in the course of the trial—Thomas Pelloka, 5 Bur.L.T. 20, 13 Cr.L.J. 259. See also 1931 M.W.N. 1152 cited in para. 1046.

A judgment should not contain remarks about the accused to the effect that he was a person of wealth and influence and had prevented truth from appearing, unless such conduct of the prisoner is established by evidence—Dhurum, 8 W.R. 13. The judgment should not contain any damaging remarks regarding a witness in a criminal trial—Mallik Umar, 1910 P.W.R. 2, 11 Cr.L.J. 178, or regarding the conduct of a counsel when such counsel's conduct was not at all objectionable—Lachchu, 1 O.L.J. 141, 15 Cr.L.J. 420; or regarding a person who is not a party or witness in the proceeding—Benarsi Das, 6 Lah. 166, 26 Cr.L.J. 1326, 89 I.C. 270, A.J.R. 1925 Lah. 392. No disparaging or libellous remarks should be made upon any person who has had no opportunity to defend himself and who has not even appeared in the witness-box—Tejumal, 34 Cr.L.J. 367, 142 I.C. 587, 27 S.L.R. 13, 1933 Cr.C. 219, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 91, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 105. The Magistrate is not bound to confine himself merely to a finding that the accused is not proved guilty. Such a verdict often leaves the accused with a stain on his character in the public estimation though not in law and it is the duty of a Magistrate if he considers that the prosecution case is not only not proved but was deliberately false and concocted to give such a finding in favour of the accused so that the accused should leave the Court without a stain on his character. It is also obvious that the Judge must be at liberty to make remarks on the character or conduct of witnesses for otherwise he can not arrive at proper findings. The witnesses have every chance of explaining their statements and if the Court finds those statements unbelievable in its judgment then unless it can be shown that the judgment is due to bias or perverse there is no reason why the Courts should be muzzled in expressing their opinion on the character of the witnesses who have appeared to support a case which the Court considers was false and fabricated—Karamat Ullah v. Emp, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 42 (43), 41 Cr.L.J. 380, 186 I.C. 799. An appellate judgment should not contain any imputations about the motives of the trying Magistrate—Yaccob, 2 Weir 535. The High Court has power to expunge any objectionable remarks from the lower Court's judgment; see Notes 1214 and 1433A.

Specification of offence :—See sub-section (2). The offence of which the accused is convicted must be specified in the judgment with the same precision as in the charge—Taik Pyn, 5 L.B.R. 21, 2 I.C. 619; Manaruddi, 35 Cal. 718.

Sentence :—Under this section, the sentence is a part of the judgment, and when an accused person is convicted, it is incumbent upon the Court to pass a formal sentence of even a single day's imprisonment or any other punishment to make the record legally complete—Kalua, 1884 A.W.N. 219.

As to the legality of passing sentence before judgment, see Note 1045 under sec. 366.

1048. Signing :—This section requires that the judgment must be signed. But if the judgment is written entirely in the hand of the Magistrate, or partly written by his own hand and partly written by another at his dictation, it does not become inoperative by reason of the fact that he forgot to sign and date it. The irregularity does not affect the merits of the case, and is cured by sec. 537—Ram Singh, 47 All. 284, 23 A.L.J. 8, 26 Cr.L.J. 688; Md. Hayat Mulla, 7 Rang 370, 1930 Cr.C. 203 (204), A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 77, 30 Cr.L.J. 1166, 120 I.C. 225

The signature should be made with a pen and not with a stamp. There are obvious reasons why judicial documents should be authenticated in such a manner that their authenticity may admit of proof. But the affixing of a signature with a stamp would be no more than a mere irregularity—Subramanya, 6 Mad. 396. But mere initialling is not signing—Nanhu, O.S.C. 192.

The signature of the Magistrate must be appended to the judgment at the time of pronouncing it in open Court—Ganpat, Ratanlal 429; In re Saravimuthu, 40 Mad. 108. But omission to date and sign the judgment at the time of pronouncing it is an irregularity covered by sec. 537—Venakataramanayya, 2 Weir 711 (712). The judgment must be pronounced by the Judge in open Court, and the dating and signing must take place at the time of pronouncing. Where the Judge signed and dated the judgment, but being too ill to attend the Court, sent the judgment to the Chief Clerk to deliver it, held that the judgment was not legally pronounced, and the conviction must be set aside—Rambit, 1 Bur.L.J. 122, A.I.R. 1923 Rang 44.

The dating and signing of the judgment must be done by the presiding officer of the Court; it cannot be delegated to anybody else—Jia Lal, 1889 A.W.N. 181. Where a Magistrate who has tried a case and written out the judgment is succeeded by another before he has actually pronounced the same, it is not obligatory on the succeeding Magistrate to pronounce the same, and much less can he be compelled to do so, though he may, if he chooses, date, sign and pronounce it, in which case he will be adopting it as his own—In re Savarimuthu, 40 Mad. 108. Quære, whether it will be legal for the Magistrate to date, sign and pronounce the judgment written by his predecessor, when the accused demands a de novo trial (under sec. 350)?—Ibid.

Sub-section (3):—Judgment in the alternative:—The 'doubt' in sub-section (3) is the same as referred to in sec. 236, i.e., a doubt as to the application of law to the facts proved and not a doubt as to whether the accused had committed any offence. See Notes under sec. 236. Where the judgment did not state in express terms that the Court was in doubt as to the question under which of two sections the offence fell, it was held that this was at most an irregularity and did not vitiate the judgment—Boya Takirugadu, 2 Weir 440. Where a case falls neither under sec. 236 nor sec. 367 (3), Cr P. C., the conviction in the alternative is not in accordance with law—Rangoon Electric Tramway and Supply Co. Ltd., 34 Cr.L.J. 1040 (1043), 11 Rang 162, 145 I.C. 710, 1933 Cr.C. 477, A.I.R. 1933 Rang 70. See paragraphs 4 and 5, Note 762.

Sub-section (4):—Judgment of acquittal:—Under sub-section (4) if the judgment is one of acquittal, the accused is entitled to be discharged from custody immediately on the judgment of acquittal being pronounced, and his further detention becomes unlawful. No formal warrant of release addressed by the Court to the Superintendent of the Jail is necessary; it is for the jail authorities (in whose custody the accused had remained) to satisfy themselves of the result of the trial—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 2. In a charge of murder it is desirable that the Judge should raise as one of his points for decision the question whether the accused is guilty of murder. If he decides to acquit, he should specifically record a judgment of acquittal—Fateh Mahomed, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 139, 1934 Cr.C. 1070, 152 I.C. 376, A.L.R. 1934 Sind 148, 36 Cr.L.J. 83.

1049. Sub-section (5):—Judgment in capital cases:—Where the Judge convicts the accused of murder and passes on him the alternative sentence of transportation for life, he should state his reasons for not passing the capital sentence—Dwarka, 4 O.W.N. 977, 28 Cr.L.J. 980 (982); Mewa, 36 Cr.L.J. 1001, 156 I.C. 786, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 337, 1935 Cr.C. 571; Naresh, 36 Cr.L.J. 524, 154 I.C. 691, 1935 O.W.N. 321. A person convicted of murder should ordinarily be sentenced to death. To justify the passing of a sentence of transportation for life, there should be really extenuating circumstances, and not a mere absence of aggravating circumstances—Nga Myat, 18 Cr.L.J. 113 (Bur.); Nga Tha, 1 L.B.R. 216 (F.B.); Mi She Yi, 1 Rang. 751, 25 Cr.L.J. 1121, 81 I.C. 945, 2 Bur.L.J. 277, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 179; Local Government v. Sitrya, reasons have been given barring the remark that there had been a dispassionate consideration of all the circumstances, it is not sufficient reason in the eye of law to justify the lesser penalty—Mianji Khan v. Emp, A.I.R. 1940 Pesh 49 (51). The fact that the assessors gave their opinion that the accused was not guilty is no reason for passing the lesser sentence. The responsibility for the sentence rests with the Judge and the Judge alone, and, having once made up his mind to differ from the assessors as regards conviction, he should not let their opinion weigh with him with regard to sentence—Local Government v. Sitrya, supra. The fact that the crime was committed without premeditation in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel is not an extenuating circumstance—Nga Myat, 18 Cr.L.J. 113. The reasons justifying the infliction of the lesser penalty under sec. 357 (5) must be such as are in accordance with established legal principles. The drunkenness of the accused is not a sufficient reason for not inflicting capital sentence. Unless drunkenness amounts to unsoundness of mind so as to enable insanity to be pleaded by way of defence, or unless the degree of drunkenness is such as to establish incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime, drunkenness is neither a defence nor a palliation and is not a reason for inflicting a sentence of transportation for life instead of death sentence—Waryam, 7 Lah 141, 27 Cr.L.J. 764. Where the murder was brutal and cold-blooded, (a murder of a little boy of six for his ornaments), a sentence of death should be passed, and it is not a sufficient ground for passing a sentence of transportation on the ground that the accused is a youthful offender (18 or 19 years of age) and may reform. It is not for the Legislature to reform murderers, and youth may be a consideration only in those cases where the accused has not reached years of discretion or has been influenced by other persons—Bhagwandin, 7 O.W.N. 787, 1930 Cr.C. 965 (966), A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 89, 128 I.C. 80, 32 Cr.L.J. 83.

There is no rule of law that if there be no eye-witness to the murder the accused could not be sentenced to death—Tulsi, 34 Cr.L.J. 395, 142 I.C. 613, 14 P.L.T. 96, Ind Rul 1933 Pat. 165, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 180, 1933 Cr.C. 511.

The fact that the accused murdered his victim merely to escape from custody is not a sufficient reason for imposing the lesser sentence of transportation. But where the case rests entirely on circumstantial evidence, and it is open to question whether the injuries to the head of the deceased would have caused his death had he not been drowned, these may be reasons for inflicting the lesser punishment—Munnun, 4 O.W.N. 754, 28 Cr.L.J. 860 (861). The fact that the accused is a woman is not a sufficient ground for passing a sentence of transportation instead of one of death—Nibbia, 1888 A.W.N. 134; Mt She, 1 Rang 751, 25 Cr.L.J. 1121. The fact that the accused is a pregnant woman is not a sufficient ground for commutation of sentence—Janhee, 15 W.R. 66; in such a case the execution is to be deferred till after delivery; see sec. 382. The fact that the body of the murdered man has not been found is not a sufficient ground—Bhagirath, 3 All 383; Sadhu, 1882 A.W.N. 160; Rogi, 1881 A.W.N. 112; but see Contra—Buduroddcen, 11 W.R. 20.

It is clear from sub-sec. (5) that when a person is found guilty of murder, the sentence of death must be the normal sentence and the sentence of transportation for life is provided only as an abnormal sentence, in passing which reasons must be given as to why the capital sentence is not passed—per Cuming, J., in Dukari, 33 C.W.N. 1226 (1230), 31 Cr.L.J. 817, 125 I.C. 305. But S. K. Ghosh, J., is of opinion (p. 1232) that sec. 367 (5) should not be interpreted in this way, for such a construction would make the sentence of transportation an exception in murder cases. But this is not true, for in actual practice, capital sentence is sparingly inflicted. Section 367 (5) has nothing to do with the measure or degree of punishment in murder cases, but simply lays down a matter of procedure, namely, that reasons should be recorded if a capital sentence is not passed. The sentence of death is not to be taken as a normal sentence, but the Court must look to the circumstances of the case in deciding the sentence to be passed. Therefore in fixing the measure of punishment one is to be guided not by sec. 367, Cr. P. C., but by various other matters, for instance, the enormity or otherwise of the offence and the particular circumstances under which the accused committed it. They will go back to the facts of the case. But in the case of the death penalty the Courts have gone so far as to consider matters which are not relevant to the crime, e.g., mere delay in passing judgment—a circumstance bringing into play humanitarian grounds. C. C. Ghose, J., to whom the matter was referred under sec. 429, Cr. P. C., has laid down that if in any case of murder sec. 302, I. P. C., one finds two Judges of the High Court are in disagreement over the question of sentence, one favouring the death penalty and the other recommending that the transportation for life would meet the ends of justice, that in itself is a sufficient ground for holding that the death penalty should not be inflicted.

Where the Sessions Judge feels reasonable doubt whether a sentence of death would be the proper penalty, the doubt, like all other doubts, should be given in favour of the accused, and a sentence of transportation should be passed. In such a case, it is highly improper for the Sessions Judge to pass a sentence of death and to have the responsibility to the High Court of commuting the sentence, if necessary—Shive Cho, 3 L.B.R. 111, 3 Cr.L.J. 25 (dissenting from 1 L.B.R. 216). See also Note 71.
